Reg. No. 33652 Shelf No. Ref

LAWRENCE PUBLIC LIBRARY

INDUSTRIA

FOUNDED 1845.

ESTABLISHED
1872.

From the collection of the

Prelinger Library

San Francisco, California
2008

THE

LITERARY WORLD

A FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW OF CURRENT LITERATURE

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

VOLUME XXV

JANUARY — DECEMBER, 1894

BOSTON
E. H. HAMES & COMPANY
1894

Reg. No. 33,652
Ref

INDEX TO VOLUME XXV

AARON, E. M., Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees, 425
Abbott, C. C., The Birds About Us, 373; Travels in a Tree-Top, 117
Acting and Actors: Elocution and Elocutionists, A. Ayres, 221
Action in Art, W. H. Beard, 44
Acts of the Apostles, H. C. Vedder, 284; The New, A. T. Pierson, 373
Adam, G. Mercer, Sandow on Physical Training, 187
Adams, C. F., Yawcob Strauss Series, 452
Adams, Francis, A Child of the Age, 470
Adams G. B., Civilization During the Middle Ages, 86
Adams, W. H., Davenport, Childhood and Girlhood of Remarkable Women, 430
Adderly, James, Stephen Remarx, 26
Addison, D. D., Lucy Larcom, 451
Addresses, Dean Hole, 203
Administrative Law, Comparative, F. J. Goodnow, 7
Æsop's Fables, 452
Æsthetic Element in Morality, The, F. C. Sharp, 108
Africa, The Story of South, G. M. Theal, 331
Afterglow, F. A. Hinckley, 76
Aged Poor in England and Wales, Charles Booth, 331
Aim of Life, P. S. Moxom, 26
Alabama Claims, Mr. Fish and the, J. C. Bancroft Davis, 27
Alden, Mrs. G. R., Wanted, 266
Aldrich, T. B., Poem, C. W. Stevenson, 468; Story of a Bad Boy, 451; Unguarded Gates and Other Poems, 388
Alexander, Mrs., Broken Links, 171; A Ward in Chancery, 91
Allardyce, A., Earlscourt, 106
Allegretto, Gertrude Hall, 11
Allen, Grant, A Poet's Wife, Poem, 232; The Lower Slopes, 109
Allingham, W., Varieties in Prose, 250
Alma-Tadema L., The Wings of Icarus, 197
A. L. O. E., 14
Altar of Earth, An, Thymol Monk, 372
America, To, Poem, Richard Garnett, 248; The Humour of, 140
America's Godfather, V. W. Johnson, 452
American Authors, M. Rutherford, 251
American Girl at College, The, Rose McCabe, 74
American Government, Practical Essays on, A. B. Hart, 7
American Peeress, An, H. C. Chatfield Taylor, 26
Americans, Domestic Manners of the, Mrs. Trollope, 418
Amicis, E. de, Holland, 423
Andes of the Equator, Travels Among the, Edward Whymper, 353
Andrews, E. B., Wealth and Moral Law, 268
Anne, Reign of Queen, Mrs. Oliphant, 417
Another Girl's Experience, Leigh Webster, 425
Anthropology at the World's Fair, 261
Anti-Higher Criticism, L. W. Munhall, 59
Apollo in Paris, Poem, Theodore Watts, 280
Apologia pro Scriptis Suis, Poem, Austin Dobson, 248
Apostolic Age of the Christian Church, C. von Weizsäcker, 248
Appearance and Reality, F. H. Bradley, 107
Apprentices to Destiny, Lily A. Long, 25
Apthorp, W. F., Musicians and Music Lovers, 466
Arbitration and Conciliation, Industrial, Josephine Shaw Lowell, 6
Arctic Service, Three Years of, A. W. Greely, 353
Armazindy, James Whitcomb Riley, 429
Arnold, Sir Edwin, Wandering Words, 418
Arran, Studies of Nature on the Coast of, G. Milner, 393
Artful Anticks, Oliver Herford, 455
Art for America, W. O. Partridge, 140
Art in Theory, G. L. Raymond, 140
Arts, Some Minor, A. H. Church and Others, 44
Artists at the Fair, Some, F. D. Millet and Others, 12
As We Go. Charles Dudley Warner, 28
Ascent of Faith, The, A. J. Harrison, 59
Ascent of Man, The, Henry Drummond, 200
Ashley, W. J., English Economic History and Theory, 108
Asiatic Breezes, Oliver Optic, 454
Astronomy, The Dawn of, J. N. Lockyer, 149
Atherton, Gertrude, Before the Gringo Came, 352
Athletics for Physical Culture, T. C. Knauffe, 222
Atkinson, J. L., Prince Siddartha, the Japanese Buddha, 20
Austen, Jane, Pride and Prejudice, 422
Austin, Alfred, The Garden That I Love, 263
Austin, Jane Goodwin, 111
Australasia, The Story of, Greville Tregarthen, 132
Australia and New Zealand, History of, A. and G. Sutherland, 132; As It Is, A Clergyman, 132; On the Wallaby, Guy Boothby, 196
Authors and Their Public in Ancient Times, G. H. Putnam, 154
Ayres, Alfred, Acting and Actors, 221; The Mentor, 203; The Orthoëpist, 60

BACH, F. W., How to Judge a Horse, 45
Badenoch, L. N., Romance of the Insect World, 27
Bad Boy, Story of a, T. B. Aldrich, 451
Bad Lot, A, Mrs. Lovett Cameron, 372
Bailey, J. M., 94
Bailey Martin, Mr., Percy White, 150
Bailiff of Tewksbury, C. E. D. Phelps and Leigh North, 25
Baker, Sir S. W., 14
Baker, W. S., Early Sketches of George Washington, 332
Baker, Mrs. Woods, Pictures of Swedish Life, 446
Balder, The Poet, G. H. Stockbridge, 267
Balestier, Wolcott, Benefits Forgot, 90
Ballade to a Bookman, Poem, F. H. Williams, 450
Ballads, Border, 451; Old English, F. Gummere, 219
Ballou, M. M., The Pearl of India, 373
Balzac, H. de, Catherine de' Medici, 371; Memoirs of Two Young Married Women, 19; The Village Rector, 101
Bamford, M. E., Jessie's Three Resolutions, 267
Bancroft, H. H., The Book of the Fair, 22, 423
Bandello, Matteo, Novelle, 470
Bangs, J. K., Philosophic Obscurity, Poem, 88; Three Weeks in Politics, 234
Banners, Irene E. Jerome, 451
Baptists in History, G. C. Lorimer, 45; in New England, H. S. Burrage, 277
Barbary Coast, The, H. M. Field, 36
Baring-Gould, S., Cheap Jack Zita, 167; The Queen of Love, 166
Barlow, Jane, Kerrigan's Quality, 163
Barr, Amelia E., Girls of a Feather, 5; The Lone House, 171
Barrett, Frank, Woman of the Iron Bracelets, 70
Bartlett, John, Concordance to Shakespeare, 328
Bates, C. F., Continued Companionship, Poem, 120
Battershall, F., A Daughter of the World, 4
Bax, E. B., Mediæval German Society, 388
Bayard, Martha Pintard, Journal of, 267
Baylor, F. C., Claudia Hyde, 218
Baynes, T. S., Shakespeare Studies and Other Essays, 172
Bayou Folk, Kate Chopin, 121
Beard, W. H., Action in Art, 44
Because I Love You, A. E. Mack, 472
Becket, Alfred Tennyson, 422
Beekman, Ernst, Pax and Carlino, 71
Beddoes, Thomas Lovell, Letters of, 154
Bedouin Girl, The, Mrs. S. J. Higginson, 139
Beeching, H. C., A Paradise of English Poetry, 44
Beers, H. A., A Suburban Pastoral, 219
Beginner, A, Rhoda Broughton, 139
Bell, Mackenzie, Spring's Immortality, 45
Belle-Plante and Cornelius, Claude Tillier, 281
Benefits Forgot, Wolcott Balestier, 90
Bennett, W. H., Books of Chronicles, 268
Benson, E. T., The Rubicon, 171
Bent, J. T., Sacred City of the Ethiopians, 135
Bergerat, A Wild Sheep Chase, 26
Best Books of 1893 8
Bible, Our, Canon Talbot, 429
Bibliographica, 155
Bierce, Ambrose, Can Such Things Be? 59
Bigelow, John, Principles of Strategy, 123
Biology, Introduction to Elementary Practical, C. W. Dodge, 60
Bird-Lover in the West, Olive Thorne Miller, 140
Birds About Us, The, C. C. Abbott, 373
Birds in a Village, W. H. Hudson, 74
Birrell, Augustine, Men, Women and Books, 44
Bishop, Isabella B., Among the Tibetans, 466; Six Months Among the Sandwich Islands, 466
Bishop, W. H., A Pound of Cure, 266; Writing to Rosina, 393
Björnson, B., A Gauntlet, 234; Pastor Sang, 3
Black, William, Highland Cousins, 327
Blackmore, R. D., Perlycross, 181
Blackwell, A. B., Philosophy of Individuality, 107
Blake, Mrs. E. V., The Universal Name, 268
Blake, James V., More Than Kin, 59
Blake, Lillie Devereux, A Daring Experiment, 42
Blanchard, Amy E., Two Girls, 425
Blomidon to Smoky, From, Frank Bolles, 393
Blue Ribbon, The, A. R. Kimball, 472
Blümner, H., Home Life of the Ancient Greeks, 261
Bohemia, Out of, G. C. Fosdick, 352
Boldrewood, Rolf, A Modern Buccaneer, 171
Bolles, Frank, From Blomidon to Smoky, 393; Obituary, 7
Bolton, C. K., On the Wooing of Martha Pitkin, 430; Saskia, the Wife of Rembrandt, 45
Bolton, S. K., Famous Leaders Among Men, 472
Bonham, John M., Secularism, 182
Bon-Mots of Sidney Smith and R. Brinsley Sheridan, 76; of Charles Lamb and Douglas Jerrold, 76
Bonner, John, Child's History of Spain, 453
Bonney, T. G., Story of Our Planet, 220
Bonnie Brier Bush, Beside the, Ian Maclaren, 448
Book-binding, Gold-tooled, H. B. Horne, 141
Book of Song, A, Julian Sturgis, 282
Books and Plays, Allan Monkhouse, 282
Booth, Charles, Aged Poor in England and Wales, 331
Booth, Edwin, Recollections of, E. B. Grossmann, 447
Booth, Newton, Speeches and Addresses, 327
Boothby, Guy, On the Wallaby, 196
Borgeaud, C., Rise of Democracy in Old and New England, 234
Botta, Anne C. L., Memoirs of, 122
Bouvé, E. T., Centuries Apart, 392
Bower, H., Journey Across Tibet, 212
Boyd, Mrs. O. B., Cavalry Life in Tent and Field, 332
Boyesen, H. H., Commentary on the Writings of Henryk Ibsen, 37; Zuleika, 424
Boyle, Virginia F., The Other Side, 5
Boynton, G. M., Pilgrim Pastor's Manual, 187
Boys, Our, William Stoddard, 60
Braddon, M. E., The Christmas Hirelings, 453
Bradlee, C. D., Sermons for the Church, 222
Bradley, F. H., Appearance and Reality, 107
Bradshaw, John, Sir Thomas Munro, 154
Bramhall, Mae St. John, Wee Ones of Japan, 153
Brave Lads and Bonnie Lasses, F. M. Colby, 75
Break o' Day Tales, F. W. Rollins, 233
Brearley, W. H., Wanted, a Copyist, 249
Breath of Avon, The, Poem, Theodore Watts, 168
Bridges, Robert, Humours of the Court, 27; Nero, Part II, 372
Bridges, Robert, Overheard in Arcady, 132
Briggs, C. A., Messiah of the Gospels, 471; Trial of, 91
Bright, William, Waymarks in Church History, 202
Brine, M. D., Margaret Arnold's Christmas, 424
Briscoe, Margaret S., Links in a Chain, 166
Briton E., Vincent, The Face of Death, 5
Broken Links, Mrs. Alexander, 171
Broken Sword, His, W. L. Taylor, 186
Brooke, Stopford A., Tennyson, 163
Brooks, E. S., Century Book for Young Americans, 424
Brooks, Noah, Tales of the Maine Coast, 231
Brooks, Phillips, Essays and Addresses, 421
Brother Against Brother, Oliver Optic, 454
Brough, William, Natural Law of Money, 170
Broughton, Rhoda, A Beginner, 139
Brown, Alice, Three Heroines of New England Romance, 419; Trilby, Poem, 370; Wood-Longing, Poem, 136
Brown, H. F., Life on the Lagoons, 115
Brownies Around the World, The, Palmer Cox, 424
Browning, Robert, Asolando and Notes, 450; The Poetical Works of, 450
Bruce, A. B., Saint Paul's Conception of Christianity, 470
Brugsch, H. K., 336
Bryant, Sophie, Short Studies in Character, 73
Bryant, William Cullen, Poem, Julia Ward Howe, 264; Centennial, 270
Buckland, A. R., The Heroic in Missions, 429
Building of the City Beautiful, The, Joaquin Miller, 38
Bulfinch, Thomas, Age of Fable, 430
Bundle of Life, A, John Oliver Hobbes, 57
Burgo's Romance, T. W. Speight, 139
Burial of the Guns, Thomas Nelson Page, 455
Burne-Jones Head, A, C. S. Rollins, 219
Burnham, C. L., Sweet Clover, 371
Burnett, F. H., Piccino and Other Child Stories, 452
Burr, F. M., The First American Wood Engraver, 220
Burrage, H. S., Baptists in New England, 277
Burroughs, John, Riverby, 428
Burton, E. De W., Harmony of the Gospels, 221
Business, A. R. Wells, 472
Butler, W. A., Mrs. Limber's Raffle, 282
Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees, E. M. Aaron, 425
Butterworth, H., Great Composers, 453; Patriot Schoolmaster, 424

CABLE, G. W., John March, Southerner, 466
Cadet Days, Charles King, 186
Caine, Hall, The Manxman, 280
Cairns, Principal, Christ the Central Evidence of Christianity, 73
California, Mountains of, John Muir 393
Cambridge, Ada, A Marriage Ceremony, 91
Cameron, Mrs. Lovett, A Bad Lot, 372; A Tragic Blunder, 90
Cameron, Verney Lovett, 125
Camp, Maxime Du, 62
Camp, Walter, Football Facts and Figures, 374
Campbell, Helen, Women Wage-Earners, 6
Campbell, J. D., S. T. Coleridge, 60
Campbell-Praed, Mrs., Christina Chard, 41; Outlaw and Lawmaker, 231
Camp-Fire Musings, W. C. Gray, 44
Can Such Things Be? Ambrose Bierce, 59
Canty Chiel, To a, Poem, E. A. Church, 104
Capitalism, The Evolution of Modern, J. A. Hobson, 277
Captain's Boat, The, W. O. Stoddard, 454
Carlotta's Intended, Ruth McEnery Stuart, 233
Carman, Bliss, Low Tide on Grand Pré, 11; Songs from Vagabondia, 345
Carnegie, Andrew, Triumphant Democracy, 75
Carpathians, Castle of the, Jules Verne, 469
Carpenter, Esther B., 375
Carpenter, W. Boyd, The Son of Man Among the Sons of Men, 43
Carroll, Lewis, Sylvie and Bruno Concluded, 59
Cary, Rosa N., The Old, Old Story, 372
Castlemon, Harry, Sailor Jack, the Trader, 453
Catharine Furze, Mark Rutherford, 35
Catherine II, R. Waliszewski, 21
Catherine de' Medici, Balzac, 371
Cathell, Edith E., Only a Guardroom Dog, 42
Catherwood, M. H., The Chase of Saint-Castin, 351
Cavalry Life in Tent and Field, Mrs. O. B. Boyd, 332
Cave and Cliff Dwellers, In the Land of, F. Schwatka, 26
Cawein, M., Imitations of the Beautiful, 428
Celtic Romances, Old, P. W. Joyce, 266
Celtic Twilight, The, W. B. Yeats, 195
Centuries Apart, E. T. Bouvé, 392
Century Book for Young Americans, E. S. Brooks, 424
Century Cyclopedia of Names, 447
Century of Painters of the English School, Richard Redgrave, 74
Champney, E. W., Six Boys, 25; Witch Winnie at Shinnecock, 424
Change of Air, A, Anthony Hope, 282
Chanute, O., Progress in Flying Machines, 331
Chaperoned, 267
Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs, Anne Thackeray Ritchie, 464
Character, Short Studies in, Sophie Bryant, 73

Chase of Saint-Castin, M. H. Catherwood, 351
Chasing a Yacht, James Otis, 454
Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, A. W. Pollard, 373
Chaucer, Geoffrey, Complete Works, W W. Skeat, Editor, 147, 219, 268, 373
Chautauqua Home Reading, 472
Cheap Jack Zita, S. Baring-Gould, 167
Cherbuliez, Victor, A Phidian Horse, 42
Chicago, If Christ Came to, W. T. Stead, 141
Child Amy, The, Julia Magruder, 454
Child of the Age, A, Francis Adams, 470
Child, Theodore, Wimples and Crisping-Pins, 422
Childhood in Literature and Art, H. E. Scudder, 368
Childhood and Girlhood of Remarkable Women, W. H. Davenport Adams, 430
Childs, George W., 46
Chile, History of, A. U. Hancock, 73
Chinese Characteristics, A. H. Smith, 429
Chipiez, Charles, History of Art in Primitive Greece, 420
Chittenden, L. E., An Unknown Heroine, 12
Chopin, Kate, Bayou Folk, 121
Chorus of Faith, J. L. Jones, 73
Chris the Model-Maker, W. O. Stoddard, 426
Christ as Represented in Art, Life of, F. W. Farrar, 419; the Central Evidence of Christianity, Principal Cairns, 73; the Patron of all True Education, C. F. Hoffman, 108; The Reasonable, George E. Merrill, 12
Christian Ministry, Theodore C. Pease, 198
Christian Recovery of Spain, H. E. Watts, 84
Christian Society, G. D. Herron, 170
Christian, Sydney, Sarah: a Survival, 249
Christianity, The Claims of, W. S. Lilly, 300; and Evolution, James Iverach, 283; in the Home, T. L. Cuyler, 353
Christina Chard, Mrs. Campbell-Praed, 41
Christmas Hirelings, The, M. E. Braddon, 453
Chronicle of Small Beer, John Reid, 70
Chronicles, Books of, W. H. Bennett, 268
Church, History of the Christian, W. Moeller, 45; H. C. Sheldon, 471
Church, English, in the 19th Century, J. H. Overton, 102
Church, The Old, in the New Land, C. E. Smith, 471
Church, A. H., Some Minor Arts, 44
Church, A. J., Pictures from Greek Life and Story, 44
Church, E. A., Minerva in Boston, Poem, 72; To a Canty Chiel, Poem, 104
Church, S. H., Oliver Cromwell, 247
Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic, J. L. Strachan-Davidson, 467
Civil War, Famous Adventures and Prison Escapes of the, 92
Clark, F. T., On Cloud Mountain, 352
Claudia Hyde, F. C. Baylor, 218
Clegg, J. T., David's Loom, 281
Cleopatra, Georg Ebers, 213
Cleveland L., Lotus Life, 60
Clifford, Mrs. W. K., A Flash of Summer, 385
Close of St. Christopher's, Emma Marshall, 58
Cloud Mountain, On, F. T. Clark, 352
Clough, Arthur Hugh, Selections from, 221
Cobban, J. Maclaren, A Soldier and a Gentleman, 167
Cobbe, Francis Power, Life, by Herself, 326
Cock Lane and Common Sense, Andrew Lang, 248
Cœur d'Alene, Mary H. Foote, 372
Coign of Vantage, A, J. S. Wood, 5
Colby, F. M., Brave Lads and Bonnie Lasses, 75
Cole, G. A. J., The Gypsy Road, 220
Coleridge, S. T., J. D. Campbell, 60
Collier, Price, Mr. Picket-Pin, 268
Collings, Harold, Transgression of Terence Clancy, 5
Collins, W. A., At Long and Short Range, 12
Colmore, G., A Daughter of Music, 233
Colonial Cavalier, The, M. W. Goodwin, 467
Columbus and the Jews, M. Kayserling, 213
Comfort, E. M., Grizzly's Little Pard, 233
Common Mistake, A, J. M. Howell, 219
Common Sense Applied to Woman Suffrage, Mary P. Jacobi, 251
Commons, J. R., The Distribution of Wealth, 170
Companions of Jehu, A. Dumas, 348
Composers, The Great, H. Butterworth, 453
Conan Doyle, A., Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes, 106; Round the Red Lamp, 419
Congregationalists in America, A. E. Dunning, 230
Constitution of the United States, Sources of, C. E. Stevens, 234
Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, Criticisms on, R. H. Hutton, 232
Continued Companionship, Poem, C. F. Bates, 120
Cook and the Captive, The, Charlotte M. Yonge, 455
Coolidge, Susan, Not Quite Eighteen, 424
Cooper, Edward M., Richard Escott, 58
Co-operative Production, Benjamin Jones, 348
Corinthians, Second Epistle to the, James Denney, 235
Corner of Cathay, A, A. M. Field, 373
Corsican Brothers, A. Dumas, 348
Cosmopolis City Club, W. Gladden, 6
Cossa Luigi, Introduction to the Study of Political Economy, 6
Costly Freak, Maxwell Gray, 121
Costume of Colonial Times, A. M. Earle, 373
Cotes, Sara J. Duncan, A Daughter of To-day, 179
Cotterell, Constance, Tempe, 139
Countess Radna, W. E. Norris, 133
Courage, C. Wagner, 187
Cox, Palmer, Brownies Around the World, 424
Cox, Samuel, The Hebrew Twins, 141
Coxe, Brinton, Judicial and Unconstitutional Legislation, 76
Craddock, C. E., His Vanished Star, 212
Crandall, C. H., Wayside Music, 59
Crawford, F. Marion, Katherine Lauderdale, 104; The Upper Berth, 186
Criticism, Studies in the Evolution of English, Laura J. Wylie, 172
Croker, B. M., A Third Person, 25
Crockett, S. R., The Lilac Sunbonnet, 455; Mad Sir Uchtred, 302; The Raiders, 133
Cromwell, Oliver, S. H. Church, 247
Cross, On the, W. von Hillern, 5
Crumbling Idols, Hamlin Garland, 164
Crusades, Short History of, J. I. Mombert, 172
Cuckoo Songs, K. T. Hinkson, 153
Cumberer of the Ground, Constance Smith, 282
Cunningham, Sir H. S., Sibylla, 470
Curtis, George T., 111
Curtis, G. W., From the Easy Chair, Third Series, 331; Orations and Addresses, 3, 74, 155
Cuyler, T. L., Christianity in the Home, 353
Czar and Sultan, Archibald Forbes, 425

Dana, Mrs. W. S., According to Season, 203
Dancing Fawn, The, Florence Farr, 233
Dante, The Comedy of, in English Prose, Sir Edward Sullivan, 39; Companion to, G. A. Scartazzini, 39; Inferno, A Commentary, D. J. Snider, 39; Readings on the Inferno of, W. W. Vernon, 182; A Volume of, Poem, C. W. Fellows, 184
Danvis Folks, R. E. Robinson, 365
Daring Experiment, Lillie Devereux Blake, 42
Daughter of Music, G. Colmore, 233
Daughter of the World, F. Battershall, 4
Daughter of To-day, Sara J. Duncan Cotes, 179
David's Loom, J. T. Clegg, 281
Davidson, John, Plays, 121; Random Itinerary, 74
Davies, J. C., Cruising in the Netherlands, 259
Davis, J. C. Bancroft, Mr. Fish and the Alabama Claims, 27
Davis, John D., Genesis and Semitic Tradition, 388
Davis, John P., The Union Pacific Railway, 170
Davis, Richard Harding, Our English Cousins, 106; The Exiles and Other Stories, 199; The Rulers of the Mediterranean, 12
Dawson, D. L., The Seekers in the Marshes, 75
Dawson, W. H., Germany and the Germans, 53
Dean, Mrs. Andrew, Lesser's Daughter, 352
Dean, Conquest of, Abbot Kinney, 332
Decatur and Somers, M. E. Seawell, 453
Defoe, Daniel, Life of, T. Wright, 465
Deland, Margaret, Philip and His Wife, 445
Democracy in Old and New England, Rise of, C. Borgeaud, 234
Denney, J. V., Paragraph Writing, 155
Dennis, John, The Age of Pope, 430
Dependent, Defective and Delinquent Classes, C. R. Henderson, 170
Devoted Couple, J. M. Masterman, 171
Dexter, Morton, The Story of the Pilgrims, 393
Dickens, Charles, A Tale of Two Cities, 451
Dickens, M. A., A Valiant Ignorance, 171
Dickinson, Emily, Letters, 445
Dictionary on Historical Principles, New English, 221; of National Biography, Vol. XXXVII, 123; Standard, I. K. Funk, 102
Dillmann, A., 254
Dillon, J. F., Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America, 220
Dimbovitza, The Bard of the, 184
Direst Peril, In, David C. Murray, 70
Discipleship: the Scheme of Christianity, 268
Distribution of Wealth, J. R. Commons, 170
Dixon, Ella H., Story of a Modern Woman, 202
Dobson, Austin, Apologia pro Scriptis Suis, 248; Eighteenth Century Vignettes, 467
Dr. Janet of Harley Street, Arabella Kenealy, M. D., 233
Documents, Manual of the Study of, Persifor Frazer, 235
Dodd, Anna B., Struthers and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians, 234
Dodge, C. W., Introduction to Elementary Practical Biology, 60
Dodge, M. M., The Land of Pluck, 423; When Life Was Young, 423
Doge's Farm, Days Spent on a, Margaret Symonds, 53
Doreen, Edna Lyall, 164
D'Orsey, A. J. D., Portuguese Missions, 43
Dostoievsky, F., Poor Folk, 233
Doudney, Sarah, When We Two Parted, 41
Dozy Hours, In the, Agnes Repplier, 467
Drake, S. A., Making of the Ohio Valley States, 430
Drama in Dutch, Z. Z., 372
Drawing-Room Duologues, F. M. Stimpson, 267
Dress, History of English, G. Hill, 55
Drolls from Shadowland, J. H. Pearce, 167
Drysdale, W., Mystery of Abel Forefinger, 91
Du Maurier, George, Trilby, 299
"Duchess, The," Peter's Wife, 282
Dumas, Alexandre, Companions of Jehu, 348; Corsican Brothers, 348; Napoleon, 420; She-Wolves of Machecoul, 348; Three Musketeers, 420; Whites and the Blues, 348
Dunn, George, Red Cap and Blue Jacket, 202
Dunning, A. E., Congregationalists in America, 230

Earle, A. M., Costume of Colonial Times, 373
Earlscourt, A. Allardyce, 106
East and West, E. F. Fenollosa, 38
Easter Vacation, Moira O'Neill, 266
Eastern Customs in Bible Lands, H. B. Tristram, 374
Eastern War, Literary Phase of, W. E. Griffis, 264
Eastman, E. V., Musical Education, 172
Easy Chair, From the, Third Series, G. W. Curtis, 331
Ebb Tide, The, R. L. Stevenson and L. Osbourne, 244
Ebers, Georg, Cleopatra, 213
Eckstein, Ernst, Monk of the Aventine, 352
Eclipses of the Sun, Total, Mabel L. Todd, 172
Economic History and Theory, English, W. J. Ashley, 108
Economic Legislation of the States, Charles E. Everett, 85
Economics, Outlines of, R. T. Ely, 6; Principles of G. P. Osborne, 108
Edged Tools, With, H. S. Merriman, 202
Edwards, G. W., P'tit Matinic', 456
Egerton, George, Keynotes, 42
Egleston, Thomas, Life of John Paterson, 230
Egypt, Life in Ancient, A. Erman, 465
Eight Hours for Work, John Rae, 229
Eighteen, Not Quite, Susan Coolidge, 424
Eighteenth Century Vignettes, Austin Dobson, 467
Elections, Primary, D. S Remsen, 230
Ellis, E. S., Great Cattle Trail, 426
Ellis, Havelock, Man and Woman, 211
Elson, Louis C., European Reminiscences, 76; The Realm of Music, 76
Ely, R. T., Outlines of Economics, 6; Socialism and Social Reform, 195; The Universities and the Churches, 76
Emigrant Ship, W. Clark Russell, 5
Endeavor Chris', I. T. Hopkins, 454
England, Social, H. D. Traill, 117
Englishman at Home, E. Porritt, 154
English Cousins, Our, R. H. Davis, 106
English Peasant, Richard Heath, 6
Engraver, First American Wood, F. M. Burr, 220
Episcopalian Church, George Hodges, 109
Erasmus, Life and Letters, J. A. Froude, 365
Erman, A., Life in Ancient Egypt, 465
Eschstruth, N. von, Princess of the Stage, 122
Essays, Speculative and Suggestive, J. A. Symonds, 21
Esther Waters, George Moore, 196
Esthonia, The Hero of, W. F. Kirby, 450
Ethics of Literary Art, M. Thompson, 11
Ethics of Success, W. M. Thayer, 109
Ethiopians, Sacred City of the, J. T. Bent, 135
Eugénie, Empress, P. de Lano, 394
Europe, 476–918, C. W. Oman, 220; 1598–1715, H. O. Wakeman, 220
European Reminiscences, Louis C. Elson, 76
Evans, E. E., Story of Louis XVII of France, 180
Evans, M. A. B., In Various Moods, 59
Evening Dress, W. D. Howells, 26
Everett, C. E., Economic Legislation of the States, 85
Every Inch a Soldier, J. S. Winter, 266
Exchange, A Policy of Free, Thomas Mackay, Editor, 169
Exile, In, Mary Hallock Foote, 139
Exiles and Other Stories, R. H. Davis, 199
Eyes Like the Sea, Maurus Jókai, 301

Fable, Age of, T. Bulfinch, 430
Face of Death, E. V. Briton, 5
Fact versus Fiction, C. W. Ernst, 109
Fair, Book of the, H. H. Bancroft, 22, 423; Some Artists at the, F. D. Millet and others, 12
Fair Jewess, B. L. Farjeon, 171
Fairbairn, A. M., Religion in History, 140
Fairies' Festival, J. W. Randall, 451
Fairy Tales, 454; of a Parrot, A. C. Stephen, 70
Family Dilemma, L. C. Lillie, 470
Farjeon, B. L., Fair Jewess, 171
Farmer's Boy, Clifton Johnson, 416
Farr, Florence, Dancing Faun, 233
Farrar, F. W., Life of Christ as Represented in Art, 419; Second Book of Kings, 222
Fasnacht, G. E., Specimens of Great French Writers, 235
Faust, Goethe's, 423
Federal Government in Greece and Italy, E. A. Freeman, 91
Félise, A. C. Swinburne, 452
Fellows, C. W., A Volume of Dante, Poem, 184
Fenn, G. M., First in the Field, 425; The Vast Abyss, 453
Fenollosa, E. F., East and West, 38
Ferrier, S. E., Novels, 470
Fewkes, J. W., Snake Dance of the Moquis, 221
Fiction, How to Write, 448
Field, A. M., Corner of Cathay, 373
Field, Eugene, The Holy Cross, 106
Field, H. M., Barbary Coast, 36
Field, M., Walter Pater, Poem, 280
Fields, Mrs. J. T., Shelf of Old Books, 416
First Book, My, J. K. Jerome, and others, 367
First in the Field, G. M. Fenn, 425
First Supper and Other Episodes, 5
Fiske, John, E. L. Youmans, 150; History of the United States, 283
Fitch, Clyde, Pamela's Prodigy, 42
Fitzgerald, E., Letters of, 179
Flash of Summer, Mrs. W. K. Clifford, 385
Fletcher, W. I., Library Classification, 222; Public Libraries in America, 155
Flight of the "Swallow," E. M. Morgan, 218
Flint, Robert, Historical Philosophy in France, 67
Florentine Life During the Renaissance, W. Scaife, 116
Florida Sketch-Book, B. Torrey, 387
Flower of Forgiveness, The, F. A. Steel, 201
Flower of France, M. E. Ryan, 303
Flute-Player, The, F. H. Williams, 428
Flying Machines, Progress in, O. Chanute, 331
Following the Greek Cross, T. W. Hyde, 369
Folk-Song and Popular Poetry, Studies in, A. M. Williams, 428
Football Facts and Figures, W. Camp, 374
Foote, H. W., Insight of Faith, 76
Foote, Mary H., Cœur d'Alene, 372; In Exile, 139
Forbes, A., Czar and Sultan, 425
Ford, J. L., Third Alarm, 41
Ford, P. L., Honorable Peter Sterling, 469
Forman, Emily S., Wild-Flower Sonnets, 422
Forrester, Mrs., Light of Other Days, 249
Forster, Francis, Major Joshua, 233
Fortier, Alcée, Louisiana Studies, 68
Fosdick, G. C., Out of Bohemia, 352
Fouard, C., Saint Paul, 464
Found and Lost: a Sermon at Notre-Dame, Mary P. Jacobi, 353
Fourth Time of Asking, For the, 70
Francis of Assisi, Saint, P. Sabatier, 245
Francis, H. R., Junius Revealed, 186
Frappan, Ilse, God's Will, 70
Frazer, P., Manual of the Study of Documents, 235
Frederic, Harold, Marsena, 302
Freeman, E. A., History of Federal Government, 91
French Court, Glimpses of the, L. E. Richards, 122
French Revolution, History of, L. A. Thiers, 420
French Writers, Select Specimens of Great, G. E. Fasnacht, 235
Frost, W. H., Wagner Story Book, 452
Froude, J. A., Life and Letters of Erasmus, 365; Obituary, 376
Fuller, Anna, Peak and Prairie, 352
Fungi and Fungicides, C. M. Weed, 222
Funk, I. K., Standard Dictionary, 102
Fur Seal's Tooth, Kirk Munroe, 320

Gale, Norman, Orchard Songs, 27
Gallery, Little English, Louise I. Guiney, 385
Gamble, Eliza B., Evolution of Woman, 119
Gander's Melodies, Father, A. F. Samuels, 455
Garden That I Love, A. Austin, 263
Gardens, Italian, C. A. Platt, 43
Gardner, S. M. H., Quaker Idyls, 233
Garland, Hamlin, Crumbling Idols, 164; Prairie Songs, 26
Garnett, E., An Imaged World, 472
Garnett, R., To America, Poem, 248
Garrick's Pupil, 25
Gasper, Howland, Complete Sportsman, 45
Gauntlet, A., B. Björnson, 234
Genesis and Semitic Tradition, John D. Davis, 388
Genetic Philosophy, D. J. Hill, 107
George Mandeville's Husband, C. E. Raimond, 281
Gerard, Dorothea, Lot 13, 106; The Rich Miss Riddell, 186
German Society, Mediæval, E. B. Bax, 388
Germany and the Germans, W. H. Dawson, 53
Germany in the Middle Ages, E. F. Henderson, 283
Gestefeld, U. N., Modern Catechism, 76
Gibson, C. D., Drawings by, 449
Gibson, F. M., Amateur Telescopist's Handbook, 203
Gilkes, A H., Thing That Hath Been, 249
Girls of a Feather, A. E. Barr, 5
Gladden, W., Cosmopolis City Club, 6
God Is Love, Aubrey L. Moore, 73
God's City, H. S. Holland, 202
God's Will, Ilse Frappan, 70
Gods of Olympos, A. H. Petiscus, 91
Godfrey, E. K., Island of Nantucket, 268
Goethe, Reviewed After Sixty Years, J. R. Seeley, 69
Golden House, C. D. Warner, 464
Goodnow, F. J., Comparative Administrative Law, 7
Goodwin, M. W., Colonial Cavalier, 467
Gordon, Julien, Poppæa, 470
Gospels, Harmony of the, W. A. Stevens and E. DeW. Burton, 221
Gosse, Edmund, Leconte de Lisle, Poem, 330; The Jacobean Poets, 91; The Poet, Poem, 468
Government, Good City, 187
Graetz, H., History of the Jews, III, 123
Graham, George R., 237
Grand, Sarah, Our Manifold Nature, 138
Grandee, The, A. P. Valdés, 216
Grant, A. J., Greece in the Age of Pericles, 141
Gray, W. C., Camp-Fire Musings, 44
Gray Eye or So, F. F. Moore, 42
Great Cattle Trail, E. S. Ellis, 426
Greater Glory, The, Maarten Maartens, 83
Greece, History of Art in Primitive, G. Perrot and C. Chipiez, 420
Greece in the Age of Pericles, A. J. Grant, 141
Greek Life and Story, Pictures from, A. J. Church, 44
Greek Lines, H. Van Brunt, 22
Greek Poets, Studies of the, J. A. Symonds, 21
Greek Tragedy, Specimens of, Goldwin Smith, 250
Greeks, Home Life of the Ancient, H. Blümner, 261
Greely, A. W., Three Years of Arctic Service, 353
Green, Anna K., Miss Hurd: an Enigma, 352
Green, Mrs. J. R., Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, 148
Green Bay, Historic, Ella Hoes Neville, S. G. Martin, Deborah Beaumont Martin, 42
Green Carnation, The, 346
Greenwood, F., Lovers' Lexicon, 44
Greer, D. H., From Things to God, 43
Griffis, W. E., Brave Little Holland, 122; Literary Phase of the Eastern War, 264
Gringo Came, Before the, Gertrude Atherton, 352
Grizzly's Little Pard, E. M. Comfort, 233
Grossmann, Edwina B., Edwin Booth, 447
Guiney, Louise I., Little English Gallery, 385; Roadside Harp, 92; Three Heroines of New England Romance, 419
Gypsy Breynton, E. S. Phelps-Ward, 455
Gypsy Road, The, G. A. J. Cole, 220
Gypsying Beyond the Sea, W. B. Lent, 43

Hafiz, Ghazels from the Divan of, J. H. McCarthy, 260
Haggard, H. Rider, People of the Mist, 455
Halevy L., Parisian Points of View, 91
Hall, Edward H., Discourses, 75
Hall, Gertrude, Allegretto, 11
Hall, Tom, When Hearts Are Trumps, 171
Hamerton, Philip Gilbert, 396
Hamlin, Cyrus, My Life and Times, 4
Hampton Institute, Twenty-two Years' Work of, 108
Hancock, A. U., History of Chile, 73
Hardinge, E. M., With the Wild Flowers, 203
Hardy, Thomas, Life's Little Ironies, 131
Hare, A. J. C., Story of Two Noble Lives, 83
Harland, Henry, Mademoiselle Miss, 26
Harland, Marion, Mr. Wayt's Wife's Sister, 58
Harraden, Beatrice, In Varying Moods, 167; Ships That Pass in the Night, 70; Things Will Take a Turn, 455
Harris, Joel C., Little Mr. Thimblefinger, 455
Harris, Theodore, To Omar Khayyam, Poem, 40
Harris, A. J., The Ascent of Faith, 59
Hart, A. B., Practical Essays on American Government, 7
Harte, Bret, A Protegée of Jack Hamlin, 70
Hawthorne, Hildegarde, Fairest of the Fair, 284
Hazard, Caroline, Narragansett Ballads, 429
Hazell's Annual, 28
Healy, G. P. A., Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter, 471
Hearn, Lafcadio, Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan, 347
Heart-Beats, P. C. Mozoomdar, 28
Heath, Richard, The English Peasant, 6
Hebrew Twins, Samuel Cox, 141
Helmholtz, H. L. F. von, 336
Help of Angels, With the, W. Woolam, 352
Hemenway, Mary, 71
Henderson, C. R., Dependent, Defective and Delinquent Classes, 170
Henderson, E. F., History of Germany in the Middle Ages, 283
Henry of Navarre, P. F. Willert, 3
Henty, G. A., In the Heart of the Rockies, 454; When London Burned, 425; Wulf the Saxon, 426
Hepworth, G. H., The Life Beyond, 221; They Met in Heaven, 107
Herbert, George, The Temple, 59
Herford, Brooke, Sermons of Courage and Cheer, 220
Herford, Oliver, Artful Anticks, 455
Herron, G. D., The Christian Society, 170; The New Redemption, 73
Her Provincial Cousin, Edith E. Wood, 58
Higginson, S. J., The Bedouin Girl, 139
Highland Cousins, William Black, 327
Hill, D. J., Genetic Philosophy, 107
Hill, Georgiana, History of English Dress, 55
Hill-Top Summer, A, A. Y. Keith, 455
Hillern, W. von, On the Cross, 5
Hinckley, F. A., Afterglow, 76
Hinkson, K. T., Cuckoo Songs, 153
Hinsdale, B. A., How to Study and Teach History, 43
Historical Philosophy in France, R. Flint, 67
History for Ready Reference, J. N. Larned, 329
History, How to Study and Teach, B. A. Hinsdale, 43
Hittell, J. S., Mental Growth of Mankind, 122
Hobbes, J. O., Bundle of Life, 57
Hobhouse, L. T., Labour Movement, 6
Hobson, J. A., Evolution of Modern Capitalism, 277
Hodges, George, Episcopalian Church, 109
Hoffman, C. H., Christ the Patron of All True Education, 108; The Library a Divine Child, 108
Hoffman, F. S., Sphere of the State, 234
Holden, M. E., String of Amber Beads, 76
Holdsworth, A. E., Joanna Traill, Spinster, 167
Hole, Dean, Addresses, 203
Holland, E. de Amicis, 423
Holland, The Humour of, 59
Holland, Brave Little, W. E. Griffis, 122
Holland, J. G., Mrs. H. M. Plunkett, 116
Holland, H. S., God's City, 202
Holmes, Eleanor, Price of a Pearl, 139
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 350; Walter Jerrold, 268; The Last Leaf, 422; At Fifty, Poem, J. R. Lowell, 350; Obituary, 355
Holy Cross, The, E. Field, 106
Home Pets, Our, Olive Thorne Miller, 222
Honor and Life, For, W. Westall, 167
Honorable Peter Sterling, The, P. L. Ford, 469
Hope, Anthony, A Change of Air, 282; The Prisoner of Zenda, 167
Hope Benham, Nora Perry, 424
Hopkins, I. T., Endeavor Chris', 454
Horace Chase, Constance F. Woolson, 85
Horne, H. B., Gold-tooled Book Bindings, 141
Hornung, E. W., The Unbidden Guest, 278
Horse, How to Judge a, F. W. Bach, 45
Horsemanship, Art of, Xenophon, 45
Hours in a Library, L. Stephen, 186
House in Bloomsbury, Mrs. Oliphant, 392
House of Life, D. G. Rossetti, 60
Hovey, R., Songs from Vagabondia, 345
Howe, Julia Ward, W. C. Bryant, Poem, 264
Howell, J. M., A Common Mistake, 219
Howells, W. D., Evening Dress, 26; Five O'clock Tea, A Likely Story, The Mouse Trap, 231; Traveller from Altruria, 201; Their Wedding Journey, 422
Hudson, T. J., Law of Psychic Phenomena, 107
Hudson, W. H., Birds in a Village, 74; Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer, 250
Humour of Holland, A. Werner, 59
Humour of America, James Barr, 140
Humours of the Court, R. Bridges, 27
Hunt, Violet, The Maiden's Progress, 259
Husband of No Importance, "Rita," 252
Husband of One Wife, Mrs. Venn, 302
Hutton, Laurence, Portraits in Plaster, 449
Hutton, R. H., Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, 232
Huxley, T. H., Collected Essays, 36
Hyde, T. W., Following the Greek Cross, 369
Hymns, Annotations upon Popular, C. S. Robinson, 123
Hyne, C. J. C., Recipe for Diamonds, 25
Hypatia, Charles Kingsley, 415

Ibsen, Commentary on, H. H. Boyesen, 37
Imaged World, An, Edward Garnett, 472
Imaginotions, Tudor Jenks, 452
Immortality, The Argument for, P. S. Moxom, 76
India, Pearl of, M. M. Ballou, 373
Indian Epics, Great, J. C. Oman, 250
Individuality, Philosophy of, A. B. Blackwell, 107
Initial Experience, Charles King, 267
Insight of Faith, The, H. W. Foote, 76
Inspiration, W. Sanday, 117
Interloper, An, Frances M. Peard, 218
Intimations of the Beautiful, M. Cawein, 428
Invocation, Poem, W. R. Thayer, 422
Iota, A Yellow Aster, 116
Irish Folk-Tales, West, W. Larminie, 166
Irving, Washington, Sketch Book, 417
Iverach, J., Christianity and Evolution, 283

Jacobean Poets, E. Gosse, 91
Jacobi, Mary P., Common Sense Applied to Woman Suffrage, 251; Found and Lost, A Sermon at Notre-Dame, 353
James, Henry, Theatricals, 202
James, W. P., Romantic Professions, 140
Jamison, Mrs. C. V., Toinette's Philip, 424
Janvier, T. A., In Old New York, 325
Japan, David Murray, 87; Glimpses of Unfamiliar, L. Hearn, 347; On Short Leave to, G. J. Younghusband, 328; Wee Ones of, Mae St. John Bramhall, 153; Without a Guide, A. Leffingwell, 393
Jefferies, R., H. S. Salt, 69
Jefferson, J., Life and Art of, W. Winter, 385
Jefferson, Thomas, Writings of, 123
Jeffrey, Francis, Selections from the Essays of, 155
Jenks, Tudor, Imaginotions, 452
Jenness, T. R., Piokee and Her People, 453
Jerome, Irene E., Banners, 451
Jerome, J. K., John Ingerfield, 90; My First Book, 367
Jerrold, Walter, O. W. Holmes, 268
Jersey, Countess of, Maurice, 452
Jesse, J. H., Memoirs of King Richard the Third, 332
Jessie's Three Resolutions, M. E. Branford, 267
Jesuits, Footprints of the, R. W. Thompson, 267
Jesus and Modern Life, Minot J. Savage, 75; The Boy, W. M. Taylor, 13; The Life and Teachings of, A. K. Rogers, 220
Jesus Christ, Unknown Life of, Nicolas Notovitch, 220
Jewish Question, 139
Jewish Women's Congress, Papers of, 154
Jewries, Old European, D. Philipson, 429
Jews, History of, III, H. Graetz, 123
Joanna Traill, Spinster, A. E. Holdsworth, 167
Johannine Theology, G. B. Stevens, 327
John Ingerfield, J. K. Jerome, 90
John March, Southerner, G. W. Cable, 466
Johnson, Bradley E., General Washington, 228
Johnson, Clifton, the Farmer's Boy, 416
Johnson, V. W., America's Godfather, 452
Johnston, James, Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa, 51
Johnston, R. M., Little Ike Templin, 453
Jókai, Maurus, Eyes Like the Sea, 301; Timar's Two Worlds, 325
Jolly Good Times To-Day, M. P. W. Smith, 453
Jones, Benjamin, Co-operative Production, 348
Jones, J. Lloyd, Chorus of Faith, 73
Journalism, Steps Into, E. L. Shuman, 250
Joyce, P. W., Old Celtic Romances, 266
Judaism at the World's Parliament of Religions, 221
Jungle Book, Rudyard Kipling, 201
Junius Revealed, H. R. Francis, 186
Jusserand, J. J., Piers Plowman, 197

Karoly, Karl, Raphael's Madonnas, 416
Katherine Lauderdale, F. Marion Crawford, 104
Kayserling, M., Christopher Columbus and the Jews, 213
Keats, Monument to, 207
Keep Your Mouth Shut, F. A. A. Smith, 76
Keith, Alyn Y., Hill-Top Summer, 455; A Spinster's Leaflets, 37
Keith, Leslie, Lisbeth, 121
Kendall, May, Songs from Dreamland, 275
Kendrick, A. C., Moral Conflict of Humanity, 235
Kenealy, Arabella, Dr. Janet of Harley Street, 233
Kennedy, Walker, In the Dwellings of Silence, 54
Kensington Palace, Emma Marshall, 470
Kerrigan's Quality, Jane Barlow, 163
Kettle, Rosa M., Rose, Shamrock and Thistle, 58
Key of the Grave, W. R. Nicoll, 73
Keynotes, George Egerton, 42
Kidd, Benjamin, Social Evolution, 101, 238
Kimball, A. R., The Blue Ribbon, 472
King and the Kingdom, The, 76
King of Schnorrers, The, Zangwill, 138
King, Charles, Cadet Days, 186; Initial Experience, 267; Waring's Peril, 166
King, J. H., The Supernatural: Its Origin, Nature and Evolution, 108
King, Moses, Handbook of New York City, 123
Kingdom of God, Leo Tolstoi, 104
Kingdom of the White-Woman, The, M. M. Shoemaker, 202
Kings, Second Book of, F. W. Farrar, 222
Kingsley, Charles, Hypatia, 415
Kingsley, Henry, Ravenshoe, 470
Kinney, Abbot, Conquest of Death, 332
Kipling, Rudyard, Jungle Book, 201
Kirby, W. F., Hero of Esthonia, 450
Kirk, Ellen Olney, Story of Lawrence Garthe, 46
Kirkland, Joseph, 237
Knauffe, T. C., Athletics for Physical Culture, 222
Knight, Francis A., By Moorland and Sea, 140
Knox, T. W., Boy Travellers in the Levant, 454

Labour Movement, L. T. Hobhouse, 6
Ladd, G. T., Psychology, 262
Lady Rotha, My, Stanley J. Weyman, 351
Lafenestre, G., The Louvre, 75
Lagoons, Life on the, H. F. Brown, 115
Land of Pluck, M. M. Dodge, 423
Land of Poco Tiempo, Charles F. Lummis, 51
Lane-Poole, S., Life of Sir Harry Parkes, 131
Lang, Andrew, Cock Lane and Common Sense, 248; Prince Ricardo of Pantouflia, 25; St. Andrews, 67; The Tournay of the Heroes, 152
Lano, Pierre de, The Empress Eugénie, 394
Larcom, Lucy, D. D. Addison, 451
Larminie, W., West Irish Folk-Tales, 166
Larned, J. N., History for Ready Reference, 329
Larrabee, W., The Railroad Question, 108
Last Leaf, The, O. W. Holmes, 422
Last Year's Literature, 8
Latimer, E. W., Russia and Turkey in the Nineteenth Century, 74
Lawrence, Eugene, 285
Lawrence Garthe, Story of, Ellen O. Kirk, 469
Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America, J. F. Dillon, 220
Layard, A. H., 238
Leaders Among Men, Famous, S. K. Bolton, 472
Leaflets for Lent, W. P. Tilden, 45
Leconte de Lisle, Poem, Edmund Gosse, 247, 330
Lee, Robert E., Fitzhugh Lee, 346
Lee-Hamilton, Eugene, What the Sonnet Is, Poem, 373
Leffingwell, A., Rambles Through Japan, 393
Legislation, Direct, J. W. Sullivan, 7
Legislation, Judicial and Unconstitutional, Brinton Coxe, 76
Leighton, Robert, Olaf the Glorious, 426
Lent, W. B., Gypsying Beyond the Sea, 43
Leroy-Beaulieu, A., Empire of the Tsars and the Russians, 245
Lesser's Daughter, Mrs. Andrew Dean, 352
Letters to a College Friend, John Ruskin, 243
Levant, Boy Travellers in the, T. W. Knox, 454
Lewis, George H., National Consolidation of the Railways, 170
Le Baron, Grace, Little Miss Faith, 455
Le Fanu, W. R., Seventy Years of Irish Life, 42
Le Gallienne, Richard, Prose Fancies, 219; The Religion of a Literary Man, 23
Libraries in America, Public, W. I. Fletcher, 155
Library Classification, W. I. Fletcher, 222
Library, A Divine Child, C. F. Hoffman, 108
Life Beyond, George Hepworth, 221
Life's Little Ironies, Thomas Hardy, 131
Light of Other Days, Mrs. Forrester, 249
Lilac Sunbonnet, S. R. Crockett, 455
Lillian Morris, H. Sienkiewicz, 455
Lillie, L. C., A Family Dilemma, 470
Lilly, W. S., Claims of Christianity, 300
Limber's Raffle, Mrs., W. A. Butler, 282
Lincoln, John Larkin, W. E. Lincoln, 106
Links in a Chain, Margaret S. Briscoe, 166
Lisbeth, Leslie Keith, 121
Liszt, Franz, Letters of, 246
Literature, Last Year's, 8
Little Ike Templin, R. M. Johnston, 453
Little Lady of the Horse, Evelyn Raymond, 453
Little Miss Faith, Grace Le Baron, 455
Little Mr. Thimblefinger, Joel C. Harris, 455
Little New World Idylls, J. J. Piatt, 11
Little Widow, A., W. Tirebuck, 90
Locke, W. J., At the Gate of Samaria, 470
Lockyer, J. N., Dawn of Astronomy, 149
Log of a Sky Pilot, T. S. Treanor, 27
London Letter, 56, 88, 136, 168, 216, 265, 330, 350, 426, 468
London Up to Date, G. A. Sala, 472
Lone House, Amelia Barr, 171
Long, Lily A., Apprentices to Destiny, 25
Long and Short Range, At, William Armstrong Collins, 12
Longfellow, Samuel, Joseph May, 133
Loomis, E. J., Wayside Sketches, 172
Lord, John, Two German Giants, 12
Lord Ormont and His Aminta, G. Meredith, 276
Lorimer, G. C., Baptists in History, 45
Lost Canyon of the Toltecs, C. S. Seeley, 41
Lot 13, Dorothea Gerard, 106
Lotus Life, L. Cleveland, 60
Louis XV, Last Years of, I. de Saint-Amand, 28
Louis XVII of France, The Story of, E. E. Evans, 180
Louisiana Studies, Alcée Fortier, 6
Lourdes, Emile Zola, 386
Louvre, The, G. Lafenestre and E. Richtenberger, 75
Lover's Diary, A, Gilbert Parker, 186
Lover's Lexicon, The, Frederick Greenwood, 44
Low Tide on Grand Pré, Bliss Carman, 11
Lowe, Martha P., The Olive and the Pine, 75
Lowell, James Russell, Dr. Holmes at Forty, Poem, 350
Lowell, Josephine S., Industrial Arbitration and Conciliation, 6
Lower Slopes, Grant Allen, 109
Lowry, H. D., Prisoners of the Earth, 41
Luckock, H. M., History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian, 471
Ludlow, Edmund, Memoirs of, 275
Lummis, Charles F., Land of Poco Tiempo, 51; Man Who Married the Moon, 423; Spanish Pioneers, 42
Lyall, Edna, Doreen, 164

Maartens, Maarten, The Greater Glory, 83
Maccallum, M. W., Tennyson's Idylls, 103
Mackay, Thomas, Editor, A Policy of Free Exchange, 169
Maclaren, Ian, Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, 448
Maclay, E. S., History of the United States Navy, 100, 446
MacLeod, Fiona, Pharais, 202
MacPherson, James, Life and Letters, Bailey Saunders, 227
Mad Sir Uchtred, S. R. Crockett, 302
Madeleine's Rescue, Jeanne Schultz, 452
Mademoiselle Miss, Henry Harland, 26
Madonna and Other Poems, Harrison S. Morris, 417
Magruder, Julia, The Child Amy, 454
Maiden Meditation, In, E. V. A., 172
Maiden's Progress, Violet Hunt, 259
Maine Coast, Tales of the, Noah Brooks, 231
Major Joshua, Francis Forster, 233
Mallory, Sir Thomas, Morte D'Arthur, 35
Man and Woman, Havelock Ellis, 211
Man from Corpus Christi, A, A. C. Pierce, 219
Man in Black, S. J. Weyman, 185
Man of Today, A, Helen Mather, 171
Man Who Married the Moon, C. F. Lummis, 423
Manhattan, Vignettes of, Brander Matthews, 351
Manifold Nature, Our, Sarah Grand, 138
Manxman, The, Hall Caine, 230
Marcella, Mrs. Humphry Ward, 99
Margaret Arnold's Christmas, M. D. Brine, 425
Margrédel, Story of, 138
Marie, L. E. Richards, 470
Marlborough, Life of John Churchill, Duke of, Gen. Viscount Wolseley, 165
Marriage Ceremony, Ada Cambridge, 91
Marriage, Jewish and Christian, History of, H. M. Luckock, 471
Marryat, Florence, How Like a Woman, 185; Parson Jones, 249
Marsena, Harold Frederic, 302
Marshall, Emma, Kensington Palace, 470; The Close of St. Christopher's, 58
Marshall, H. R., Pain, Pleasure and Æsthetics, 301
Masson, David, In the Footsteps of the Poets, 26
Masson, Frédéric, Napoleon at Home, 420; Napoleon, Lover and Husband, 420
Masterman, J. M., A Devoted Couple, 171
Matchmaker, The, L. B. Walford, 266
Mather, Helen, A Man of Today, 171
Matter of Honor, Barbara Yechton, 424
Matthew Austin, W. E. Norris, 392
Matthew Dudgeon, The Adventures in Algiers of, 139
Matthews, Brander, Studies of the Stage, 74; This Picture and That, 171; Vignettes of Manhattan, 351
Maurice, Countess of Jersey, 452
Maurice, Days of Prince, M. O. Nutting, 428
Maury, D. H., Recollections of a Virginian, 214
Maximilian and Carlotta, J. M. Taylor, 215
May, Joseph, Samuel Longfellow, 133
McCabe, Rose, American Girl at College, 74
McCarthy, Justin, Red Diamonds, 302
McCarthy, J. H., Ghazels from the Divan of Hafiz, 260
McClelland, M. G., Old Post-Road, 282
McCosh, James, 421
McCrackan, W. D., Romance of Switzerland, 213; Teutonic Switzerland, 213
McCulloch, Jr., Hugh, Quest of Hercules, 186; Refuge, Poem, 184
McKinley, William, Speeches and Addresses, 3
McLaughlin, E. T., Mediæval Life and Literature, 235
McVickar, H. G., Purple Light of Love, 231
Mediæval Life and Literature, Studies in, E. T. McLaughlin, 235
Meekins, L. R., Robb's Island Wreck, 202
Melting Snows, Prince Schoenaich-Carolath, 470
Memoirs of Two Young Married Women, H. de Balzac, 19
Men, Women and Books, Augustine Birrell, 44
Mendelssohn, Selected Letters of, W. F. Alexander, 172
Méneval, C. F. de, Memoirs of Napoleon, 227
Mental Development in the Child, W. Preyer, 12
Mental Growth of Mankind, J. S. Hittell, 122
Mentor, The, Alfred Ayres, 203
Meredith, George, Lord Ormont and His Aminta, 276
Merriam, F. A., My Summer in a Mormon Village, 203
Merriam, G. S., A Symphony of the Spirit, 222
Merrill, George E., The Reasonable Christ, 12
Merriman, H. S., From Wisdom Court, 26; With Edged Tools, 202
Merriman, Mrs., Mollie Miller, 425
Messiah of the Gospels, C. A. Briggs, 471
Metallism, Joint, Anson P. Stokes, 170
Micmacs, Legends of, S. T. Rand, 263
Middle Ages, Civilization During the, G. B. Adams, 86
Miller, Joaquin, Building of the City Beautiful, 38
Miller, Olive Thorne, A Bird-Lover in the West, 140
Millet, F. D., Some Artists at the Fair, 12
Miln, Louise J., When We Were Strolling Players in the Far East, 389
Milner, G., Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran, 393
Minerva in Boston, Poem, Edward A. Church, 72

Miss Hurd: an Enigma, Anna K. Green, 352
Missions, The Heroic in, A. R. Buckland, 429
Mitchell, Langdon E., Poems by, 154
Mitchell, S. Weir, When All the Woods Are Green, 392
Mitchell W., Two Strings to His Bow, 218
Modern Buccaneer, Rolf Boldrewood, 171
Modern Catechism, U. N. Gestefeld, 76
Modern Magdalene, Virna Woods, 231
Modern Régime, H. A. Taine, 115
Modern Wizard, 219
Modern Woman, Story of a, Ella Hepworth Dixon, 202
Moeller, W., History of the Christian Church, 45
Molesworth, Mrs., My New Home, 425; Olivia, 425
Moliere, trans. Katharine Prescott Wormeley, 345
Mollie Miller, Mrs. Merriman, 425
Moltke, Essays, Speeches and Memoirs of Helmuth von, 68; as a Correspondent, Mary Herms, 68
Mombert, J. I., Short History of the Crusades, 172
Money, Natural Law of, William Brough, 170
Money of the Bible, G. C. Williamson, 284
Monk of the Aventine, Ernst Eckstein, 352
Monk, Thymol, An Altar of Earth, 372
Monkhouse, Allan, Books and Plays, 282
Moodie, W., Tools for Teachers, 76
Moods, In Various, M. A. B. Evans, 59
Moore, Aubrey L., God Is Love, 73
Moore, F. F., A Gray Eye or So, 42; The Two Clippers, 453
Moore, George, Esther Waters, 196
Moorland and Sea, By, Francis A. Knight, 140
Moral Conflict of Humanity, A. C. Kendrick, 235
More Than Kin, James V. Blake, 59
Morgan, E. M., The Flight of the "Swallow," 218
Morley, Henry, 174
Mormon Village, My Summer in a, F. A. Merriam, 203
Morris, Harrison S., Madonna and Other Poems, 417
Morris, Richard, 174
Morris, W., Socialism, Its Growth and Outcome, 6
Morte D'Arthur, Sir Thomas Mallory, 35
Mortimer, Mary, M. B. Norton, 214
Moulton, Louise Chandler, Arthur O'Shaughnessy, 387
Moxom, P. S., Aim of Life, 26; Argument for Immortality, 76
Mozoomdar, P. C., Heart-Beats, 28; Spirit of God, 107
Müller, F. Max, Vedânta Philosophy, 283
Munhall, L. W., Anti-Higher Criticism, 59
Munro, Sir Thomas, John Bradshaw, 154
Munroe, Kirk, Fur Seal's Tooth, 302
Munroe-Ferguson, V., Music Hath Charms, 281
Murray, David, Japan, 87
Murray, David C., In Direst Peril, 70
Music, The Realm of, Louis C. Elson, 76
Music Hath Charms, Munroe-Ferguson, 281
Musical Education and Musical Art, E. V. Eastman, 172
Musicians and Music Lovers, W. F. Apthorp, 466
Myer, Isaac, Scarabs, 300
Mystery of Abel Forefinger, W. Drysdale, 91
Mystery of the Patrician Club, A. W. Vandam, 171

NANTUCKET, Island of, E. K. Godfrey, 268
Naples, Clara E. Clement-Waters, 422
Napoleon, A. Dumas, 420; Consulate and Empire of France, under, L. A. Thiers, 420; At Home, F. Masson, 420; Lover and Husband, F. Masson, 420; Memoirs of, C. F. de Meneval, 227
Napoleonic Era, Revolutionary and, J. H. Rose, 420
Narcissa and In Verona, L. E. Richards, 266
Narragansett Ballads, Caroline Hazard, 429
Nature, Friendship of, M. O. Wright, 211
Navigator's Pocket-Book, H. Patterson, 251
Navy, History of the United States, E. S. Maclay, 100, 446
Nero, Part II, R. Bridges, 372
Netherlands, Cruising in the, J. C. Davis, 259
Neville, Ella H., Historic Green Bay, 42
Newberry, F. E., Not for Profit, 302
Newell, P. S., Topsys and Turvys, 455
New Home, My, Mrs. Molesworth, 425
New Minister, The, Kenneth Paul, 58
New Redemption, The, G. D. Herron, 73
New York City, Handbook of, Moses King, 123
New York Letter, 10, 24, 40, 57, 72, 89, 105, 120, 137, 152, 169, 184, 200, 391, 427, 456
New York, In Old, T. A. Janvier, 325
Nichol, John, 375
Nicholson, J. Shield, Principles of Political Economy, 6
Nicoll, W. R., The Key of the Grave, 73
Nile, Up and Down the, Oliver Optic, 218
Niles, Thomas, 173
Noble Lives and Noble Deeds, 109
Nomad, Tales of a, Charles Montague, 122
Norris, W. E., Countess Radna, 133; Matthew Austin, 392; Victim of Good Luck, 372
Norsk Gopher, The, 266
Norton, M. B., Mary Mortimer, 214
Notovitch, Nicolas, Unknown Life of Jesus Christ, 220
Novel, The Experimental, E. Zola, 118
Nursery Problems, Leroy Yale, 45
Nursery Rhyme Adapted, Poem, 304
Nutting, M. O., Days of Prince Maurice, 428
Nye, Bill, History of the United States, 141

OFFENSIVE, On the, George I. Putnam, 139
Ohio Valley States, Making of, S. A. Drake, 430
Olaf the Glorious, Robert Leighton, 428
Old Books, Poem, Andrew Lang, 200
Old Master and Other Political Essays, An, Woodrow Wilson, 28
Old, Old Story, The, Rosa N. Cary, 372
Old Post-Road, The, M. G. McClelland, 282
Old Testament and Its Contents, The, James Robertson, 13
Old World Lyrics, T. B. Mosher, Editor, 13
Oliphant, M. O. W., House in Bloomsbury, 392; Reign of Queen Anne, 417; Victorian Age of English Literature, 423
Olive and the Pine, Martha P. Lowe, 75
Olivia, Mrs. Molesworth, 425
Oman, C. W., Europe, 476-918, 220
Oman, J. C., Great Indian Epics, 250
Omar Khayyam, Poem, Theodore Harris, 40; and Khwajah Nizâmi, Poem, W. L. Shoemaker, 330; The Rubaiyat of, 415
O'Neill, Moira, An Easter Vacation, 266
Only a Guardroom Dog, Edith E. Cathell, 42
Ontario's Parliament Buildings, F. Yeigh, 45
Optic, Oliver, Asiatic Breezes, 454; Brother Against Brother, 454; Up and Down the Nile, 218
Orchard Songs, Norman Gale, 27
Ordish, T. Fairman, Early London Theatres, 449
Oriental Studies, 283
Orthoepist, The, Alfred Ayres, 60
Osborne, G. P., Principles of Economics, 108
O'Shaughnessy, Arthur, Life and Poems, L. C. Moulton, 387
Ostrogorski, M., Rights of Women, 119
Other Side, The, Virginia F. Boyle, 5
Otis, James, Chasing a Yacht, 454; Jinny and His Partners, 302
Otken, C. H., Ills of the South, 250
Ouida, Silver Christ, 302; Two Offenders, 58
Out of Step, Maria L. Pool, 267
Outlaw and Lawmaker, Mrs. Campbell-Praed, 231
Overheard in Arcady, Robert Bridges, 132
Overton, J. H., English Church in the Nineteenth Century, 102
Oxford and Her Colleges, Goldwin Smith, 122
Oxley, J. M., In the Wilds of the West Coast, 453

PAGE, Thomas Nelson, Burial of the Guns, 455; Pastime Stories, 219
Pain, Barry, Two, 58
Pain, Pleasure, and Æsthetics, A. R. Marshall, 301
Paine, Thomas, Writings of, 232
Painter, Reminiscences of a Portrait, G. P. A. Healy, 471
Palgrave, R. H. I., Dictionary of Political Economy, 76
Pamela's Prodigy, Clyde Fitch, 42
Paradise of English Poetry, A, H. C. Beeching, 44
Paragraph Writing, F. N. Scott and J. V. Denney, 155
Paris, Comte de, 336
Paris Note-Book, My, A. W. Vandam, 215
Parisian Points of View, L. Halevy, 91
Parker, Gilbert, A Lover's Diary, 186; Sonnet, 200; The Trespasser, 218
Parkes, Sir Harry, Life of, S. Lane-Poole, 131
Parson Jones, F. Marryat, 249
Partridge, W. O., Art for America, 140
Pasquier, Memoirs of Chancellor, 134
Pastime Stories, T. N. Page, 219
Pastor Sang, B. Bjornson, 3
Pater, Walter, Poem, M. Field, 280; 253, 270, 303
Paterson, John, Thomas Egleston, 230
Patriot Schoolmaster, H. Butterworth, 424
Patterson, H., Navigator's Pocket-Book, 251
Paul, Kenneth, The New Minister, 58
Pax and Carlino, Ernst Beckman, 71
Peabody, Elizabeth P., 7
Pearce, J. H., Drolls from Shadowland, 167
Peard, Frances M., An Interloper, 218; Swing of the Pendulum, 122
Pease, Theodore C., The Christian Ministry, 198
Pemberton, Max, The Sea-Wolves, 393
Pembroke, Mary E. Wilkins, 147
Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen, Joseph Pennell, 416
Pendleton, Louis, The Wedding Garment, 218
Penelope Prig, A. G. Plympton, 425
Pennell, Joseph, Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen, 416
People of the Mist, H. Rider Haggard, 455
Perlycross, R. D. Blackmore, 181
Perrot, Georges, History of Art in Primitive Greece, 420
Perry, Bliss, Salem Kittredge, 218
Perry, George, A Sheaf of Poems, 171
Perry, Nora, Hope Benham, 424
Peter's Wife, "The Duchess," 282
Petiscus, A. H., Gods of Olympos, 91
Pfleiderer, Otto, Philosophy and Development of Religion, 229
Pharais, Fiona MacLeod, 202
Phelps, C. E. D., Bailiff of Tewksbury, 25
Phelps, W. L., English Romantic Movement, 27
Philian Horse, A, V. Cherbuliez, 42
Philadelphia Notes, 11, 40, 89, 121, 153, 185, 371, 469
Philip and His Wife, Margaret Deland, 445
Philipson, D., Old European Jewries, 429
Phillips, Claud, Sir Joshua Reynolds, 42
Phillipps-Wolley, C., Big Game Shooting, 123
Philology, Principles of Comparative, A. H. Sayce, 108
Philosophic Obscurity, Poem, J. K. Bangs, 88
Piatt, J. J., Little New World Idylls, 11
Piatt, Sarah M. B., Poems, 279
Piccino and Other Child Stories, F. H. Burnett, 452
Pickard, S. T., Life and Letters of J. G. Whittier, 390
Picket Pin, Mr., and His Friends, Price Collier, 268
Pictures in Prose, A. Trevor-Battye, 141
Pierce, A. C., Man from Corpus Christi, 219
Piers Plowman, J. J. Jusserand, 197
Pierson, A. T., New Acts of the Apostles, 373
Pilgrim Pastor's Manual, G. M. Boynton, 187
Pilgrims, Story of the, Morton Dexter, 393
Pinkee and Her People, T. R. Jenness, 453
Pitkin, On the Wooing of Martha, Charles K. Bolton, 430
Planet, Story of Our, T. G. Bonney, 220
Plaster, Portraits in, Laurence Hutton, 449
Platt, C. A., Italian Gardens, 43
Ploughed, L. B. Walford, 470
Plunkett, Mrs. H. M., J. G. Holland, 116
Plympton, A. G., Penelope Prig, 425; Rags and Velvet Gowns, 455
Poems, Sonnets, Songs, and Verses, 187
Poet, The, Poem, Edmund Gosse, 468
Poets, In the Footsteps of the, David Masson, 26
Poet's Portfolio: Later Readings, W. W. Story, 123
Poet's Wife, A, Poem, Grant Allen, 232
Political Economy, Dictionary of, R. H. I. Palgrave, 76; Introduction to the Study of, L. Cossa, 6; of Natural Law, Henry Wood, 170; Principles of, J. Shield Nicholson, 6
Politics in a Democracy, D. G. Thompson, 6
Politics, Three Weeks in, J. K. Bangs, 234
Polk, Leonidas, W. M. Polk, 37
Pomona, 25
Pomona's Travels, F. R. Stockton, 393
Pool, Maria L., Out of Step, 267
Poole, W. F., 93
Poor Folk, F. Dostoievsky, 233
Pope, Age of, John Dennis, 430
Poppæa, Julien Gordon, 470
Porritt, Edward, The Englishman at Home, 154
Portuguese Missions in Asia and Africa, A. J. D. D'Orsey, 43
Potter's Thumb, Flora A. Steel, 202
Pound of Cure, W. H. Bishop, 266
Poushkin, A., Prose Tales, 183
Prairie Songs, Hamlin Garland, 26
Prayer and Praise for Congregational Worship, Book of, 45
Presidents, Personal Recollections of Sixteen, R. W. Thompson, 366
Pretty Jane, My, E. A. Rowlands, 303
Preyer, W., Mental Development in the Child, 12
Price of a Pearl, Eleanor Holmes, 139
Pride and Prejudice, Jane Austen, 422
Primitive Civilizations, E. J. Simcox, 243
Prince Ricardo of Pantouflia, Andrew Lang, 25
Prince Siddartha, J. L. Atkinson, 20
Princess of the Stage, N. von Eschstruth, 122
Printer's Marks, W. Roberts, 141
Prisoner of Zenda, Anthony Hope, 167
Prisoners of the Earth, H. D. Lowry, 41
Prodigal in Love, Emma Wolf, 219
Profit, Nor for, F. E. Newberry, 302
Prose Fancies, Richard Le Gallienne, 219
Protegee of Jack Hamlin, Bret Harte, 70
Prothero, R. E., Life and Correspondence of Arthur P. Stanley, 19
Psychic Phenomena, Law of, T. J. Hudson, 107
Psychology, G. T. Ladd, 262
P'tit Matinic', G. W. Edwards, 456
Publishers' Announcements, 304, 334
Purple Light of Love, H. G. McVickar, 231
Putnam, George H., Authors and Their Public in Ancient Times, 154
Putnam, George I., On the Offensive, 139

QUAKER IDYLLS, S. M. H. Gardner, 233
Queen of Love, S. Baring Gould, 166
Quest of Hercules, Hugh McCulloch, Jr., 186
Questions of the Day, Essays on, Goldwin Smith, 22
Quickening of Caliban, J. C. Rickett, 42

RADCLIFFE, A. G., Schools and Masters of Sculpture, 467
Rae, John, Eight Hours for Work, 229
Rags and Velvet Gowns, A. G. Plympton, 455
Raiders, The, S. R. Crockett, 133
Railroad Question, The, W. Larrabee, 108
Railway, Union Pacific, J. P. Davis, 170
Railways, National Consolidation of the United States, G. H. Lewis, 170
Raimond, C. E., George Mandeville's Husband, 281
Rand, S. T., Legends of the Micmacs, 263
Randall, J. W., The Fairies' Festival, 451
Random Itinerary, J. Davidson, 74
Random Roamings, A. Jessopp, 122
Raphael's Madonnas, Karl Károly, 416
Ravenshoe, Henry Kingsley, 470
Raymond, Evelyn, Little Lady of the Horse, 453
Raymond, G. L., Art in Theory, 140
Read, Opie, A Tennessee Judge, 42
Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa, J. Johnston, 51
Recipe for Diamonds, C. J. C. Hyne, 25
Red Cap and Blue Jacket, George Dunn, 202
Red Diamonds, J. McCarthy, 302
Red Lamp, Round the, A. Conan Doyle, 419
Redgrave, R., Century of Painters of the English School, 74
Reed, Edwin, A Brief for the Plaintiff, Bacon versus Shakespeare, 284
Refuge, Poem, H. McCulloch, Jr., 184
Reid, John, Chronicle of Small Beer, 70
Religion in History and in Modern Life, Principal Fairbairn, 140
Religion of a Literary Man, R. Le Gallienne, 23
Religion, Philosophy and Development of, O. Pfleiderer, 229
Reminiscence, A, Poem, Theodore Watts, 804
Remsen, D. S., Primary Elections, 250
Renaissance in Italy, Short History of, J. A. Symonds, 21
Repplier, Agnes, In the Dozy Hours, 467
Repudiation of State Debts, the, W. A. Scott, 108
Revolution, Massachusetts Sons of the, 332
Reynolds, Sir Joshua, Claud Phillips, 42
Rich Miss Riddell, The, Dorothea Gerard, 186
Richard Dare's Venture, E. Stratemeyer, 426
Richard Escott, Edward M. Cooper, 58
Richard the Third, Memoirs of, J. H. Jesse, 332
Richards, L. E., Glimpses of the French Court, 122; Marie, 470; Narcissa and In Verona, 266
Rickett, J. C., The Quickening of Caliban, 42
Riley, James Whitcomb, Armazindy, 429
"Rita," A Husband of No Importance, 352
Ritchie, Anne Thackeray, Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs, 464
Riverby, John Burroughs, 428
Roadside Harp, A., Louise I. Guiney, 92
Robb's Island Wreck, L. R. Meekins, 202
Robert's Fortune, Sir, Mrs. Oliphant, 371
Roberts, W., Printers' Marks, 141
Robertson, A., Fra Paolo Sarpi, 182
Robertson, J., Old Testament and Its Contents, 13
Robinson C. S., Annotations upon Popular Hymns, 123
Robinson, Edward, Catalogue of Vases in Boston Museum of Fine Arts, 353
Robinson, R. E., Danvis Folks, 365
Rockies, Beyond the, C. A. Stoddard, 122; In the Heart of the, G. A. Henty, 454
Rogers, A. K., Life and Teachings of Jesus, 220
Rollins, C. S., A Burne Jones Head, 219
Rollins, F. W., Break o' Day Tales, 233
Rollins, M. P., What, When, Who, Poem, 56
Romance of a Transport, W. Clark Russell, 249
Romance of an Empress, R. Waliszewski, 21
Romance of the Insect World, L. N. Badenoch, 27
Romanes, George John, 174
Romantic Movement, English, W. L. Phelps, 27
Romantic Professions, W. P. James, 140
Rose, J. H., Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 420
Rose, Shamrock and Thistle, Rosa M. Kettle, 58
Rossetti, Dante and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement, Esther Wood, 180
Rossetti, D. G., House of Life, 60
Rousing of Mrs. Potter, Gertrude Smith, 58
Rowland, E. A., My Pretty Jane, 303
Rubáiyat of Omar Khayyám, The, 415
Rubicon, The, E. T. Benson, 171
Rudin, I. Turgenev, 231
Rulers of the Mediterranean, R. H. Davis, 12
Ruskin, John, Letters to a College Friend, 243; Verona, 216; The Work of, C. Waldstein, 76
Russell, A. P., Sub-Cœlum, 44
Russell, W. Clark, The Emigrant Ship, 5; The Romance of a Transport, 249
Russell, William E., Speeches and Addresses, 3
Russia and Turkey in the Nineteenth Century, E. W. Latimer, 74
Russia, The Industries of, 170
Russians, Empire of the Tsars and the, A. Leroy-Beaulieu, 245
Rutgers, Lispenard, On and Off the Saddle, 221
Rutherford, Mark, Catherine Furze, 35
Rutherford, Mildred, American Authors, 251
Ryan, M. E., A Flower of France, 303

SABATIER, Paul, Saint Francis of Assisi, 245
Sacher-Masoch, L., 174
Saddle On and Off, the, L. Rutgers, 221
Sailor Jack, H. Castlemon, 453
Saint-Amand, I. de, Last Years of Louis XV, 28
Saint Paul and His Missions, Constant Fouard, 464
Saint Paul's Conception of Christianity, A. B. Bruce, 470
Sala, G. A., London Up To Date, 472
Salem Kittredge, Bliss Perry, 218
Salt, H. S., Richard Jefferies, 69
Samaria, At the Gate of, W. J. Locke, 470
Samuels, A. F., Father Gander's Melodies, 455
Sanday, W., Inspiration, 117
Sandow on Physical Training, G. Mercer Adam, 187
Sandwich Islands, Six Months Among the, Isabella B. Bishop, 466
Santayana, George, Sonnets and Other Poems, 99
Sarah: a Survival, Sydney Christian, 249
Sarpi Fra Paolo, A. Robertson, 182
Saskia, the Wife of Rembrandt, C. K. Bolton, 45
Saunders Bailey, Life and Letters of James Macpherson, 227
Savage, Minot J., Jesus and Modern Life, 75
Sawtelle, Alice E., Miss Wilkins' Characters, Poem, 390
Sayce, A. H., Principles of Comparative Philology, 108
Scaife, Walter, Florentine Life During the Renaissance, 116
Scarabs, Isaac Myer, 300
Scarlet Poppy, A., Harriet P. Spofford, 301
Scartazzini, G. A., A Companion to Dante, 39
Schoenaich-Carolath, Prince, Melting Snows, 470
School Management, E. E. White, 75
Schultz, Jeanne, Madeleine's Rescue, 452
Schwatka, F., In the Land of Cave and Cliff Dwellers, 26
Scollard, Clinton, On Sunny Shores, 74
Scott, F. N., Paragraph Writing, 155
Scott, W. A., The Repudiation of State Debts, 108
Scott, Winfield, Marcus J. Wright, 54
Scudder, H. E., Childhood in Literature and Art, 368
Sculpture, Schools and Masters of, A. G. Radcliffe, 467
Sea Wolves, Max Pemberton, 393
Search for Andrew Field, E. T. Tomlinson, 352
Season, According to, Mrs. W. S. Dana, 203
Seawell, M. E., Decatur and Somers, 453
Secularism, John M. Bonham, 182
Seeker in the Marshes, The, D. L. Dawson, 75
Seeley, C. S., Lost Canyon of the Toltecs, 41
Seeley, J. R., Goethe Reviewed, 69
Sermons for the Church, C. D. Bradlee, 222
Sermons of Courage and Cheer, Brooke Herford, 220
Seven Little Australians, E. S. Turner, 302

Seventy Years of Irish Life, W. R. Le Fanu, 42
Shakespeare, The Ariel, 422; A Brief for the Plaintiff, Bacon vs., Edwin Reed, 284; Concordance to, John Bartlett 328, Studies and Other Essays, T. S. Baynes, 172; The Temple, 187
Shakespeare's Birthday, Sonnet for, H. G. Spaulding, 120
Sharp, F. C., Æsthetic Element in Morality, 108
Sharp, William, Vistas, 138
She-Wolves of Machecoul, A. Dumas, 348
Sheaf of Poems, George Perry, 171
Sheldon, H. C., History of the Christian Church, 471
Shelf of Old Books, Mrs. James T. Fields, 416
Shen's Pigtail, The, 186
Sherlock Holmes, Memoirs of, A. Conan Doyle, 106
Sherman Letters, The, 368
Ships That Pass in the Night, Beatrice Harraden, 70
Shoemaker, M. M., The Kingdom of the White-Woman, 202
Shoemaker, W. L., Omar Khayyám and Khwajah Nizami, Poem, 330
Shooting, Big Game, C. Phillipps-Wolley, 123
Shuman, E. L., Steps into Journalism, 250
Sibylla, Sir H. S. Cunningham, 470
Sienkiewicz, H., Lillian Morris, 455
Silence, In the Dwellings of, Walker Kennedy, 54
Silver Christ, Ouida, 302
Simcox, E. J., Primitive Civilizations, 243
Sirs, Only Seventeen, V. F. Townsend, 424
Six Boys, Elizabeth W. Champney, 25
Sizeranne, M. de la, Through Blind Eyes, 12
Sketch Book, The, Washington Irving, 417
Slocum, J., Voyage of the Liberdade, 372
Small, Albion W., Introduction to the Study of Society, 331
Smiles, Samuel, Josiah Wedgwood, 463
Smith, A. H., Chinese Characteristics, 429
Smith, C. E., The Old Church in the New Land, 471
Smith, Constance, A Cumberer of the Ground, 282
Smith, F. A. A., Keep Your Mouth Shut, 76
Smith, Gertrude, The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, 58
Smith, Goldwin, Oxford and Her Colleges, 122; Questions of the Day, 22; Specimens of Greek Tragedy, 250
Smith, M. P. W., Jolly Good Times To-Day, 453
Smith, W. Robertson, 119
Snake Dance of the Moquis, The, J. W. Fewkes, 221
Snider, D. J., Dante's Inferno, A Commentary, 39
Socialism and Social Reform, R. T. Ely, 195; Its Growth and Outcome, W. Morris and E. B. Bax, 6
Social Contract, The, E. L. Walter, 7
Social England, H. D. Traill, 117
Social Evolution, B. Kidd, 101
Society, Introduction to the Study of, A. W. Small and G. E. Vincent, 331
Soldier and a Gentleman, A., J. Maclaren Cobban, 167
Son of Man Among the Sons of Men, W. Boyd Carpenter, 43
Song of Companies, A., O. C. Stevens, 353
Songs From Dreamland, May Kendall, 275
Songs, Old English, 452
Sonnets and Other Poems, George Santayana, 99
South, Ills of the, C. H. Otken, 250
South Place Society, Centenary History of, 249
Spain, Child's History of, John Bonner, 453; The Christian Recovery of, H. E. Watts, 84
Spanish Pioneers, The, Charles F. Lummis, 42
Spaulding, H. G., Sonnet for Shakespeare's Birthday, 120
Speight, T. W., Burgo's Romance, 139
Spencer, Herbert, Aphorisms from the Writings of, 155; Introduction to the Philosophy of, W. H. Hudson, 250
Spinster's Leaflets, A, Alyn Y. Keith, 37
Spirit of God, The, P. C. Mozoomdar, 107
Spofford, Harriet P., Scarlet Poppy, 301; Three Heroines of New England Romance, 419
Sporting Pilgrimage, Caspar W. Whitney, 467
Sportsman, Complete, Howland Gasper, 45
Spring's Immortality, Mackenzie Bell, 45
St. Andrews, Andrew Lang, 67
Stage, Studies of the, Brander Matthews, 74
Stanbury, The Hon., etc., 303
Stanley, Arthur Penrhyn, Life and Correspondence, R. E. Prothero, 19
State, Sphere of, F. S. Hoffman, 234
Statesman's Year-Book, The, 141
Stead, W. T., If Christ Came to Chicago, 141
Steel, Flora Annie, The Flower of Forgiveness, 201; The Potter's Thumb, 202
Stelligeri and Other Essays, Barrett Wendell, 28
Stephen, A. C., Fairy Tales of a Parrot, 70
Stephen, Sir J. F., 119
Stephen Leslie, Hours in a Library, 186
Stephen Remarx, James Adderley, 26
Sterne, Lawrence, Works, 422
Stevens, C. E., Sources of the Constitution of the United States, 234
Stevens, G. B., Johannine Theology, 327
Stevens, O. C., A Song of Companies, 353
Stevenson, C. W., T. B. Aldrich, Poem, 468
Stevenson, Robert Louis, 473; The Ebb Tide, and Lloyd Osbourne, 244; Obituary, 473
Stimpson, F. M., Drawing-Room Duologues, 267
Stockbridge, G. H., Balder the Poet, 267
Stockton, F. R., Pomona's Travels, 393
Stoddard, C. A., Beyond the Rockies, 122
Stoddard, W. O., Captain's Boat, 454; Chris, the Model-Maker, 426; Our Boys, 60
Stokes, Anson P., Joint Metallism, 170
Stone, J. S., Woods and Dales of Derbyshire, 45
Story, W. W., Poets' Portfolio: Later Readings, 123
Strachan-Davidson, J. L., Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic, 467
Strachey, Sir Edward, Talk at a Country House, 467
Strategy, Principles of, John Bigelow, 123
Stratemeyer, E., Richard Dare's Venture, 426
Straus, Oscar S., Roger Williams, 198
Struthers, and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians, Anna B. Dodd, 234
String of Amber Beads, M. E. Holden, 76
Strong, James C., Wah-kee-nah and Her People, 59
Stuart, Ruth M., Carlotta's Intended, 233
Sturgis, Julian, A Book of Song, 282
Sub-Cœlum, A. P. Russell, 44
Suburban Pastoral, A, H. A. Beers, 219
Sullivan, Sir Edward, Comedy of Dante in English Prose, 39
Sullivan, J. W., Direct Legislation, 7
Sunny Shores, On, Clinton Scollard, 74
Sunshine Land, In, Edith Thomas, 424
Superfluous Woman, A, 58
Supernatural: Its Origin, Nature and Evolution, J. H. King, 108
Sutherland, A. and G., Australia and New Zealand, 132
Swedish Life, Pictures of, Mrs. Woods Baker, 446
Sweet Alyssum, 282
Sweet Clover, C. L. Burnham, 371
Swinburne, Algernon, Félise, 452
Swing, David, 355
Swing of the Pendulum, The, F. M. Peard, 122
Switzerland, Romance and Teutonic, W. D. McCrackan, 213
Symonds, J. A., Essays Speculative and Suggestive, 21; Short History of the Renaissance in Italy, 21; Studies of the Greek Poets, 21
Symonds, Margaret, Days Spent on a Doge's Farm, 53
Symphony of the Spirit, G. S. Merriam, 222
Sylvie and Bruno Concluded, Lewis Carroll, 59

TAINE, H. A., The Modern Régime, 115
Talbot, Canon, Our Bible, 429
Tale of Two Cities, Charles Dickens, 451
Talk at a Country House, Sir Edward Strachey, 467
Tallentyne, S. G., From Wisdom Court, 26
Taylor, H. C. C., An American Peeress, 26
Taylor, J. M., Maximilian and Carlotta, 215
Taylor, W. L., His Broken Sword, 186
Taylor, W. M., The Boy Jesus, 13
Telescopist's Handbook, The Amateur, F. M. Gibson, 203
Tempe, Constance Cotterell, 139
Temple, The, George Herbert, 59
Tennessee Judge, Opie Read, 42
Tennyson, Alfred, Becket, 422
Tennyson's Idylls, M. W. Maccallum, 163
Tennyson, Stopford A. Brooke, 163
Tennyson, J. Cuming Walters, 52
Thackeray, Mrs. W. M., 39
Thaxter, Celia, 280
Thayer, W. M., Ethics of Success, 109
Thayer, W. R., Invocation, Poem, 422; Poems New and Old, 349
Theal, G. M., Story of South Africa, 331
Theatres, Early London, T. F. Ordish, 449
Theatricals, Henry James, 202
They Met in Heaven, G. H. Hepworth, 107
Thiers, L. A., History of the Consulate and Empire, 420; History of the French Revolution, 420
Thing That Hath Been, A. H. Gilkes, 249
Things to God, From, D. H. Greer, 43
Third Alarm, The, J. L. Ford, 41
Third Person, A., B. M. Croker, 25
This Picture and That, Brander Matthews, 171
Thomas, A. C., History of the United States, 332
Thomas, Edith, In Sunshine Land, 424
Thompson, D. G., Politics in a Democracy, 6
Thompson, Maurice, Ethics of Literary Art, 11
Thompson, R. W., The Footprints of the Jesuits, 267; Personal Recollections of Sixteen Presidents, 366
Thoreau, Henry D., Familiar Letters of, 386
Three Boys on an Electrical Boat, J. Trowbridge, 426
Three Heroines of New England Romance, H. P. Spofford, Louise Imogen Guiney and Alice Brown, 419
Three Musketeers, A. Dumas, 420
Through Blind Eyes, M. de la Sizeranne, 12
Tibet, Diary of a Journey Across, H. Bower, 212
Tibetans, Among the, Isabella B. Bishop, 466
Tilden, W. P. Leaflets for Lent, 45
Tillier, Claude, Belle-Plante and Cornelius, 218
Timar's Two Worlds, Maurus Jókai, 325
Tirebuck, W., A Little Widow, 90
Todd, Mabel L., Total Eclipses of the Sun, 172
Toinette's Philip, Mrs. C. V. Jamison, 424
Tolstoï, Leo, Kingdom of God, 104
Tomlinson, E. T., Search for Andrew Field, 352
Tools for Teachers, W. Moodie, 76
Topsys and Turvys, P. S. Newell, 455
Torrey, B., A Florida Sketch-Book, 387
Tournay of the Heroes, Poem, Andrew Lang, 152
Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, Mrs. J. R. Green, 148
Townsend, V. F., "Sirs, Only Seventeen!" 424
Trade Unionism, History of, Sidney and Beatrice Webb, 244
Tragic Blunder, Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron, 90
Trail, Florence, Under the Second Renaissance, 219
Trail of the Sword, Gilbert Parker, 392
Transgression of Terence Clancy, Harold Collings, 5
Traveller from Altruria, W. D. Howells, 201
Travels in America 100 Years Ago, Thomas Twining, 106
Travels in a Tree-Top, C. C. Abbott, 117
Treanor, T. S., Log of a Sky Pilot, 27
Tregarthen, Greville, Story of Australasia, 132
Trespasser, The, G. Parker, 218
Trevor-Battye, A., Pictures in Prose, 141
Trilby, George Du Maurier, 299
Trilby, Poem, Alice Brown, 370
Tristram, H. B., Eastern Customs in Bible Lands, 374
Triumphant Democracy, Andrew Carnegie, 75
Trollope, Mrs., Domestic Manners of the Americans, 418
Trowbridge, John, Three Boys on an Electrical Boat, 426
Turgenev, I., Rudin, 231
Turner, E. S., Seven Little Australians, 302
Tuttle, Herbert, 224
Twining, Thomas, Travels in America 100 Years Ago, 106
Two, Barry Pain, 58
Two Clippers, The, F. F. Moore, 453
Two Destinies, Poem, W. L. Shoemaker, 216
Two English Story-Tellers, 370
Two German Giants, John Lord, 12
Two Girls, Amy E. Blanchard, 425
Two Knights Errant, Barbara Yechton, 424
Two Lives, Reginald Fanshaw, 332
Two Noble Lives, The Story of, A. J. C. Hare, 83
Two Offenders, Ouida, 58
Two Strings to His Bow, W. Mitchell, 218
Two Wives, My, 267

UNBIDDEN GUEST, The, E. W. Hornung, 278
Under the Red Robe, S. J. Weyman, 138
Under the Second Renaissance, F. Trail, 219
Underwood, F. H., 254
Unguarded Gates, T. B. Aldrich, 388
United States, History of, John Fiske, 283; Bill Nye's History of, 141; History of, A. C. Thomas, 332
Universal Name, The, Mrs. E. V. Blake, 268
Universities and the Churches, The, R. T. Ely, 76
Unknown Heroine, An, L. E. Chittenden, 12
Untempered Wind, The, J. E. Wood, 392
Upper Berth, The, F. Marion Crawford, 186

VAGABONDIA, Songs from, R. Hovey and B. Carman, 345
Vagabonds, The, Margaret L. Woods, 463
Valdés, A. P., The Grandee, 216
Valiant Ignorance, A, M. A. Dickens, 171
Van Brunt, Henry, Greek Lines, 22
Vandam, A. W., My Paris Note-Book, 215; Mystery of the Patrician Club, 171
Vanished Star, His, C. E. Craddock, 212
Varieties in Prose, W. Allingham, 250
Varying Moods, In, Beatrice Harraden, 167
Vases, Greek, Etruscan and Roman in Boston Museum of Fine Arts, E. Robinson, 353
Vashti and Esther, 262
Vast Abyss, The, G. M. Fenn, 453
Vedanta Philosophy, F. Max Müller, 283
Veitch, John, 281
Venetian Painters of the Renaissance, 172
Venice, Alethea Wiel, 372
Venn, Mrs., Husband of One Wife, 302
Verne, Jules, Castle of the Carpathians, 469
Vernon, W. W., Readings on the Inferno of Dante, 182
Verona, John Ruskin, 216
Victim of Good Luck, W. E. Norris, 372
Victorian Age of English Literature, Mrs. Oliphant, 423
Vie de Bohème, Poem, A. W., 8
Village Rector, The, H. de Balzac, 101
Virginian, Recollections of a, D. H. Maury, 214
Vincent, George E., Introduction to the Study of Society, 331
Vistas, William Sharp, 138
Viztelly, H., 14
Voyage of the Liberdade, The, J. Slocum, 372

WAGNER, Charles, Courage, 187
Wagner Story Book, W. H. Frost, 452
Wah-kee-nah and Her People, James C. Strong, 59
Wakeman, H. O., Europe, 1598-1715, 220
Waldstein, C., Work of John Ruskin, 76
Walford, L. B., The Matchmaker, 299; Ploughed, 470
Waliszewski, R., Romance of an Empress, 21
Walter, E. L., Social Contract, 7
Walters, J. Cuming, Tennyson, 52
Wandering Words, Sir Edwin Arnold, 418
Wanted, Mrs. G. R. Alden, 266
Wanted, a Copyist, W. H. Brearley, 249
Ward, E. S. Phelps, Gypsy Breynton, 455
Ward, Herbert D., The White Crown, 167
Ward, Mrs. Humphry, Marcella, 99, 156
Ward in Chancery, Mrs. Alexander, 91
Waring's Peril, Charles King, 106
Warner, C. D., As We Go, 28; The Golden House, 464
Washington, George, B. E. Johnson, 228; Early Sketches of, W. S. Baker, Editor, 332
Water Ghost and Others, The, J. K. Bangs, 301
Waters, Clara E. Clement, Naples, 422
Watts, H. E., Christian Recovery of Spain, 84
Watts, Theodore, Apollo in Paris, Poem, 280; Breath of Avon, 168; A Reminiscence, Poem, 304
Waymarks in Church History, W. Bright, 203
Wayside Music, C. H. Crandall, 59
Wayside Sketches, E. J. Loomis, 172
Wayt's, Mr., Wife's Sister, Marion Harland, 58
Wealth Against Commonwealth, H. D. Lloyd, 370
Wealth and Moral Law, E. B. Andrews, 268
Webb, Sidney and Beatrice, History of Trade Unionism, 244
Webster, Augusta, Selections, 123, 355
Webster Leigh, Another Girl's Experience, 425
Wedding Garment, Louis Pendleton, 218
Wedding Journey, Their, W. D. Howells, 422
Wedgwood, Josiah, Samuel Smiles, 463
Weed, C. M., Fungi and Fungicides, 222
Weizsäcker, C. von, Apostolic Age of the Christian Church, 248
Wendell, Barrett, Stelligeri and Other Essays, 28
Westall, William, For Honor and Life, 167
West Coast, In the Wilds of the, J. M. Oxley, 453
Weyman, Stanley J., My Lady Rotha, 35; The Man in Black, 185, 206, 254; Under the Red Robe, 138
What, When, Who, Poem, M. P. Rollins, 56
What the Sonnet Is, Poem, Eugene Lee-Hamilton, 370
When All the Woods Are Green, S. Weir Mitchell, 392
When Hearts Are Trumps, Tom Hall, 171
When Life Was Young, M. M. Dodge, 423
When London Burned, G. A. Henty, 425
When Molly Was Six, Eliza O. White, 454
When We Two Parted, Sarah Doudney, 41
When We Were Strolling Players in the Far East, Louise J. Miln, 389
White, E. E., School Management, 75
White, Eliza O., When Molly Was Six, 454
White, Percy, Mr. Bailey Martin, 150
White Crown and Other Stories, Herbert D. Ward, 167
Whites and the Blues, The, A. Dumas, 348
Whiting, Lilian, The World Beautiful, 429
Whitman, In Re Walt, Edited by His Literary Executors, 151
Whitney, Caspar W., A Sporting Pilgrimage, 467
Whitney, W. D., 189
Whittier, John G., Complete Poetical Works, 472; Life and Letters of, S. T. Pickard, 390
Whymper, Edward, Travels Among the Great Andes of the Equator, 353
Wild-Flower Sonnets, Emily S. Forman, 422
Wild Flowers, With the, E. M. Hardinge, 203
Wild Sheep Chase, Bergerat, 26
Wilkins, Mary E., Pembroke, 147; Miss Wilkins' Characters, Poem, Alice E. Sawtelle, 390
Willert, P. F., Henry of Navarre, 3
Williams, A. M., Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry, 428
Williams, F. H., The Flute-Player, 428
Williams, Roger, Oscar S. Straus, 198
Williamson, G. C., The Money of the Bible, 284
Wilson, Woodrow, An Old Master and Other Political Essays, 28
Wimples and Crisping-Pins, Theodore Child, 422
Wings of Icarus, L. Alma-Tadema, 197
Winslow, Anna Green, Diary of, 353
Winter, John Strange, Every Inch a Soldier, 266
Winter, William, Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson, 385
Wisconsin Authors, Bibliography of, 76
Wisdom Court, From, H. S. Merriman and S. G. Tallentyne, 26
Witch Winnie at Shinnecock, E. W. Champney, 424
Wolf, Emma, A Prodigal in Love, 219
Wolseley, General Viscount, Life of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, 165
Woman, How Like a, Florence Marryat, 185
Woman of the Iron Bracelets, Frank Barrett, 70
Woman, The Evolution of, E. B. Gamble, 119
Woman Suffrage, Common Sense Applied to, Mary P. Jacobi, 251
Women, The Rights of, M. Ostrogorski, 119
Women Wage-Earners, Helen Campbell, 6
Women's Conquest of New York, The, 251
Wood, Edith E., Her Provincial Cousin, 58
Wood, Esther, Dante Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement, 180
Wood, Henry, Political Economy of Natural Law, 170
Wood, John Seymour, A Coign of Vantage, 5
Wood-Longing, Poem, Alice Brown, 136
Woods and Dales of Derbyshire, J. S. Stone, 45
Woods, Margaret L., The Vagabonds, 463
Woods, Virna, A Modern Magdalene, 231
Woollam, W., With the Help of the Angels, 352
Woolson, Constance F., Horace Chase, 85, 31
World, Beautiful, The, Lilian Whiting, 429
Wright, Marcus J., Winfield Scott, 54
Wright, Mabel O., Friendship of Nature, 211
Wright, Thomas, Life of Daniel Defoe, 465
Writing to Rosina, W. H. Bishop, 393
Wulf the Saxon, G. A. Henty, 426
Wylie, Laura J., Studies in the Evolution of English Criticism, 172

XENOPHON, Art of Horsemanship, 45

YACHTING, Badminton Library, 332
Yale, Leroy, Nursery Problems, 45
Yale, Wit and Humor, 374
Yates, Edmund, 247
Yawcob Strauss Series, C. F. Adams, 452
Yeats, W. B., The Celtic Twilight, 195
Yechton, Barbara, A Matter of Honour, 424; Two Knights Errant, 424
Yeigh, Frank, Ontario's Parliament Buildings, 45
Yellow Aster, A, Iota, 116
Yellow Book, The, 187
Yellow Book, The, Poem, 422
Yonge, Charlotte M., The Cook and the Captive, 455
Youmans, E. L., John Fiske, 180
Younghusband, G. J., On Short Leave to Japan, 328

ZANGWILL, I., The King of Schnorrers, 138
Zola, Emile, The Experimental Novel, 118; Lourdes, 386
Zuleika, Hjorth Boyesen, 424
Z. Z., A Drama in Dutch, 372

LAWRENCE
Public Library
LAWRENCE

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 13 JANUARY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 1 Whole No. 497

Charles Scribner's Sons' New Books.

LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF DEAN STANLEY.

By R. E. PROTHERO. With the Co-operation of DEAN BRADLEY. With Portraits. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

The striking personality of Dean Stanley and his pre-eminence in the ecclesiastical, literary, and social history of his time give to this biography a special value and importance. Based upon Dean Stanley's voluminous correspondence, the work is complete, thorough, and authoritative.

The Barbary Coast.

By HENRY M. FIELD. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.00.

"Alert and interesting travel observations. It abounds in picturesqueness of description and illustration of nearly all portions of the once great empire of the Moors."—Brooklyn Eagle.

David Balfour.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. 12mo, $1.50.

"Surely the rarest and noblest work of fiction in the English language produced in the year 1893."—N. Y. Times.

"Nothing better in historical fiction has been produced since Scott."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by DUC D'AUDIFFRET PASQUIER. With Portraits. 3 vols., 8vo. Vol. I. now ready. $2.50.

"Since the record of Madame de Remusat's observations was given to the world no light so copious and searching has been thrown upon the Napoleonic era as is cast by this volume."—M. W. Hazletine, in N. Y. Sun.

Ivar the Viking.

By PAUL B. DU CHAILLU. 12mo, $1.50.

"The story of a typical Norseman in the third and fourth centuries. The volume is a thrilling and an interesting one."—Boston Advertiser.

"A thoroughly interesting romance."—Chicago Herald.

Opinions of a Philosopher.

By ROBERT GRANT. Illustrated by C. S. REINHART and W. T. SMEDLEY. 12mo, $1.00.

"A wonderfully bright book, by all odds the best thing Mr. Grant has written."—Chicago Herald.

REMBRANDT.

His Life, His Work, and His Time. By ÉMILE MICHEL. Edited and Prefaced by FREDERICK WEDMORE. Richly illustrated with reproductions from Rembrandt's works. 2 vols., royal 8vo, $15.00.

"The best specimen of art literature published in years, and probably the completest and most satisfactory commentary on the work of any single artist."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Customs and Fashions in Old New England.

By Mrs. ALICE MORSE EARLE, author of "Sabbath in Puritan New England." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Thanks to her investigation, we may follow the Puritan child from his cradle through his life. There is not one of the chapters which is not full of interest."—N. Y. Sun.

The One I Knew the Best of All.

A Memory of the Mind of A Child. By Mrs. FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. Richly illustrated by R. B. BIRCH. 12mo, $2.00.

"Its sweet, wholesome tone and naturalness will endear it to the hearts of readers."—The Churchman.

CIVILIZATION DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

Especially in Relation to Modern Civilization. By GEORGE B. ADAMS, Professor of History in Yale University. 8vo, $2.50.

Prof. Adams is a recognized authority on mediæval history, and has produced a brilliant picture as well as a suggestive account of the conditions and characteristics of the middle ages and their gradual evolution.

The Land of Poco Tiempo.

By C. F. LUMMIS. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.50.

"A series of interesting sketches of New Mexico. They are picturesque, poetic, glowing in local color, and have a genuine ethnological value, truth in every touch, showing familiarity with the country, the people, and their traditions."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Triumphant Democracy.

Sixty Years March of the Republic. By ANDREW CARNEGIE. Revised edition. 8vo, $3.00.

A new edition, almost entirely rewritten, of Mr. Carnegie's remarkably popular account of the political, intellectual, industrial, commercial and social progress of the United States

MEN, WOMEN, AND BOOKS.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. 16mo, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," $1.00.

A new volume of essays by Mr. Birrell, covering a variety of interesting topics, and all characterized by the bright, original thought and delightful literary flavor that distinguished the author's former books.

OBITER DICTA SERIES:—Obiter Dicta, by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. First and Second Series, each 16mo, $1.00; Res Judicatae, by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, 16mo, $1.00; Letters to Dead Authors, by ANDREW LANG, 16mo, $1.00; Views and Reviews, by W. E. HENLEY, 16mo, $1.00. Just ready: Stelligeri, and Other Essays Concerning America, by BARRETT WENDELL, 16mo, $1.25.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

J. SELWIN TAIT & SONS.

A NOTEWORTHY BOOK.

MEMOIRS OF ANNE C. L. BOTTA.

Written by her friends. With selections from her correspondence and from her writings in prose and poetry.

Edited by

PROFESSOR VINCENZO BOTTA.

A limited edition, printed on Holland paper with gilt top and untrimmed edges. Engraved portrait of Mrs. Botta. Cloth, 8vo, 475 pp., $3.50.

An extraordinary tribute, and one that could not have been called forth by any ordinary character. Mr. James Anthony Froude, Mr. Parke Godwin, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mr. E. C. Stedman, Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, Miss Kate Field, Miss Kate Sanborn, Mr. John Bigelow, Miss Edith M. Thomas, Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, Mr. Justin McCarthy, and many more have contributed these memoirs. —The New York Sun.

There is a touching charm about many of these memoirs; they glow with the splendor of lofty and real attachment, and they pulsate with generous and responsive life as do hearts. . . . For nearly two generations Mrs. Botta was a conspicuous force and figure in the social and intellectual life of this city. When she died, Julia Ward Howe remarks, "All her friends remain her debtors." . . . Andrew D. White quotes Horace Greeley, who said: "Anne Lynch is the best woman that God ever made." . . . Froude declares that while he lives he can never cease to remember her. . . . Charles A. Peabody will remember her "as a benefactor so long as memory shall continue to serve me."—New York Times.

Sold by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

J. SELWIN TAIT & SONS,
65 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

PORTLAND, MAINE.

THE BIBELOT SERIES.

Mr. Thomas B. Mosher takes pleasure in announcing his new series of poetical reprints, under the above general title, which he believes will be found more than usually attractive to the book lover and buyer of choice editions.

For the season of 1893 the following are now ready:

I. Songs of Adieu.

A little book of recent English lyrics, compiled from sources that are not generally known, or inaccessible in this country.

II. Old World Lyrics.

A little book of translations from Villon, Du Bellay, Ronsard and later French poets.

It is believed that such dainty specimens of book-making will be welcomed by those who seek for themselves or as a gift to friends something that will seem more exclusively their own than the ordinary booklet, pretty as it is, but seen and sold on every counter.

To prove that this is not only possible, but also attainable at a moderate price, the Bibelot Series has been planned, and the first two volumes put to press.

The Bibelot Series is modeled on an old style format, narrow 8vo, and beautifully printed on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, uncut edges, done up in unique Japan vellum covers, and each issue strictly limited to 725 copies.

Price Per Volume, $1.00 Net.

To be had of all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, Portland, Me.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books.

Darwiniana.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY, author of "Physiography," "Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals," etc. The second volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

These essays, ten in number, treat of evolution and the criticisms which followed the publication of "The Origin of Species," and endeavor to sum up Mr. Darwin's work and indicate its enduring influence on the course of scientific thought.

Science and Education.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The third volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The subjects comprised in this volume include: "Technical Education," "Medical Education," "The School Boards," "Science and Culture," "Universities: Actual and Ideal," "Emancipation: Black and White," "A Liberal Education and where to Find it," and several other allied topics.

The Recipe for Diamonds.

By C. J. CUTCLIFFE HYNE. No. 129, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"Any one wanting a really good and amusing sensational novel can be commended to 'The Recipe for Diamonds.' . . . It has good character, ingenious construction, plenty of adventure, and unfailing animation."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

"A story of remarkable power, originality and interest. . . . The account of the race for the island, and the discovery of the old pyramid Talaiti de Talt under which the recipe was secreted, is exciting and racy reading, and the dénoûment is decidedly dramatic."—Boston Home Journal.

Christina Chard.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL-PRAED, author of "December Roses," etc. No. 130, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Christina Chard" this popular author has given the public a novel which shows a gain in power and an increased ability to attract and entertain her readers.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,
1, 3, & 5 BOND STREET . . . NEW YORK

JUST READY.

ANTI-HIGHER CRITICISM,

OR

Testimony to the Infallibility of the Bible,

BY

Professor Howard Osgood, D. D., LL. D.
President W. Henry Green, D. D., LL. D.
Professor William G. Moorehead, D. D.
Talbot W. Chambers, D. D., LL. D.
James H. Brookes, D. D.
George S. Bishop, D. D.
B. B. Tyler, D. D.
Professor Ernst F. Stroeter, Ph. D.
Professor James M. Stifler, D. D.
William Dinwiddie, D. D.

EDITED AND COMPILED BY

REV. L. W. MUNHALL, M. A.

Crown 8vo. Cloth, 358 pp. Price, $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

HUNT & EATON, Publishers,
150 Fifth Ave., New York.

JUST ISSUED

A FAC-SIMILE REPRINT OF THE

ACTS AND LAWS
OF
THE ENGLISH COLONY
OF
RHODE ISLAND
AND
PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS
IN NEW ENGLAND
IN AMERICA
Made and passed since the
Revision in 1767.

NEWPORT:
PRINTED AND SOLD BY SOLOMON SOUTHWICK.

MDCCLXXII.

One volume folio, 41 pages, half law-sheep. Only 50 copies printed, each signed and numbered. Price $15.00 net, carriage paid to any part of the United States on receipt of price.

Mr. S. S. Rider, the well known editor of "Book Notes," issue of Dec. 30, 1893, says: "So far as my experience goes, this is not only the scarcest law book, but it is the scarcest book relating to Rhode Island history." . . . "This [the reprint] renders accessible to students a book indispensable to Rhode Island history, which few men have ever seen, and which some of our best informed bibliographers have believed had no actual existence."

H. GREGORY, Publisher, Providence, R. I.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $15,029,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,579,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $23,000,000,
$1,790,000 of it in 1892.

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 13 JANUARY 1894 No. 1

CONTENTS

Henry of Navarre 3
Pastor Sang 3
Speeches of Three Americans 3
Dr. Hamlin's Life and Times 4
A Daughter of the World 4
The Other Side 5

Fiction:

On the Cross 5
The First Supper and Other Episodes . . . 5
A Coign of Vantage 5
The Emigrant Ship 5
Girls of a Feather 5

Politics and Economics:

Nicholson's Principles of Political Economy . . 6
Ely's Outlines of Economics 6
Introduction to the Study of Political Economy . 6
Women Wage-Earners 6
Industrial Arbitration and Conciliation . . . 6
The English Peasant 6
The Labour Movement 6
Socialism: its Growth and Outcome . . . 6
The Cosmopolis City Club 6
Politics in a Democracy 6
The Social Contract 7
Comparative Administrative Law 7
Practical Essays on American Government . . 7
Direct Legislation 7

Poetry:

Vie de Bohème. A. W. 8
Last Year's Literature 8
The Best Books of 1893 8
New York Letter 10
Philadelphia Notes 11

Minor Notices:

Low Tide on Grand Pré 11
Little New World Idylls 11
Allegretto 11
The Ethics of Literary Art 11
An Unknown Heroine 12
Through Blind Eyes 12
The Rulers of the Mediterranean 12
Some Artists at the Fair 12
Two German Giants 12
Mental Development in the Child 12
The Reasonable Christ 12
Periodicals 13
Necrology for 1893 14
News and Notes 14
Publications Received 15

HENRY OF NAVARRE.*

THIS series of biographical studies of the lives and work of certain representative historical characters, who have embodied the great traditions of the nations to which they belong, has reached its fifteenth volume. Like the two previous works, this spirited monograph takes us into France.

The author, a Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, introduces his subject by giving us a clear picture of the Reformation in France. Like true Frenchmen, anxious to vindicate in all things the priority of their nation, the historians point out that in 1512, five years before Luther denounced the sale of indulgences, Lefevre, a lecturer on theology and letters at Paris, published a commentary on the Epistles of St. Paul, in which he taught the doctrine of justification by faith. Nevertheless, as the author argues, and as most persons of sanity and judgment will likewise agree, to give expression to a general desire is one thing, while to throw one's whole life and work into action is another thing. Little effect was produced in France until the minds of men were stirred by the great events taking place in Germany. It is a vice of state churches, uniting politics and religion, that heresy is made an offense against the Common Law and those accused of it are tried before the ordinary courts of justice. When, in 1521, the Sorbonne solemnly condemned the doctrines of Luther, declaring that they ought to be extirpated with fire and sword, the train was laid for persecution and the explosion of civil war. Persecution compelled the French reformers to become a church militant. They found a leader and an inexpugnable citadel — Calvin and Geneva. Calvin threw their doctrines into the most definite and logical form possible. He organized their churches, and his personal influence gave unity to their councils. He took the forces latent in Augustinianism and turned them in the direction of democracy by proclaiming the High Church doctrine of the independence of the church and of its authority over the state.

This is the text from which our author, with eloquence, French-like clearness, and abundance of learning and anecdote, preaches a powerful and pleasing sermon. He tells again the story of St. Bartholomew with judicial candor, limns the portrait of Henry of Navarre, and discusses, with scholarly use of all the search-lights of history, the question whether a heretic could be a king of France, concluding that at that time he could not. Henry's subsequent life, his going to mass, entering Paris, making war with Spain, winning peace, proclaiming the Edict of Nantes, and reorganizing the monarchy, as well as his divorce and second marriage, are all told in a way to interest; a reserve of power in the author constantly impresses the reader. While we have noticed but a single footnote on the pages, the familiarity of the author with contemporaneous documents and with the side lights obtainable from wide reading is manifest on every page.

One closes the fascinating story with a sad feeling that so much of actual history must end in clouds and darkness, and that assassination has so often ended the lives of the brilliant men who have been civilizations in epitome. It is, alas! too true that not alone on the rapidly disappearing frontiers of American civilization do men "die with their boots on;" instead of the mediæval dagger or the ancient poison, the dynamite bomb is the weapon which the enemy of civilization chooses for his devilish task.

PASTOR SANG.*

THIS Norwegian drama, by Björnson, is characteristic of its author and well worth translation. Pastor Sang was an exalted character who believed in his power to cure all kinds of physical disease. He tried his faith cure on his invalid wife, who made one mighty effort to rise from her bed and then died in her husband's arms. There are some extremely strong scenes in the play, and the interviews between the credulous father and his skeptical children are wonderfully pathetic. As with most Norwegian dramas, the interest is subjective rather than objective, and the dramatist's appeal is to the mind, not to the eye, throughout. It is a play written to be read rather than to be acted.

Pastor Sang will probably be received with unfriendly criticism from the advocates of mental healing, faith cure, and the like. It will also arouse opposition among the theologians, as it deals freely with revealed Christianity, discusses miracles, and makes Pastor Sang a man of such pure and devout life that the reader feels convinced that if any faith could remove mountains it would be this. He is indeed a noble character. In beautiful simplicity of nature he stands among the bishops and clergy as a true and faithful follower of his Lord and Master Jesus Christ. The contrast between his sincere, childlike faith and the cruel fact — the failure of his miracle — is appalling. He dies disappointed, a martyr to his faith.

The fourth scene in the play is perhaps the most remarkable, and this might be effective on the stage with delicate and artistic acting. It is tragedy in the fullest sense of the word, and so painful to read that it would make a deep impression on an audience.

SPEECHES OF THREE AMERICANS.*

A FIT memorial of George William Curtis, the orator and civil service reformer, we are happily to have, with Professor Norton as editor. This first volume, in uncut edges and gilt top, well typifies the elegance and refinement of Mr. Curtis' oratory. While the second will be filled with addresses and reports on the reform of the civil service, and a third with historical and literary addresses, the present volume has a wider range. Its nineteen subjects are included under the one heading "The Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duties of American Citizens. 1856–1891." Professor Norton well says that the spirit which pervades these varied addresses "gives unity to the collection. It is the spirit of a lover of his country, firmly convinced of the validity of the fundamental principles of American democracy in its highest sense, and believing, consequently, in the indissoluble connection of morals and politics; it is the spirit of an idealist tempered by sound reasonableness and by experience in affairs; the spirit of an independent well aware of the limits, established by the necessity of party organization, within which independence can be usefully asserted and maintained. Of this spirit of patriotism, of fidelity to moral principles, and of manly independence, the life and character of Mr. Curtis afforded such illustration as confirmed and enforced the lesson of his words." "The Duty of the American Scholar," "The American Doctrine of Liberty," "Fair Play for Women," "The Puritan Principle," "The Leadership of Educated Men," and "The Spirit and Influence of the Higher Education" are a few of the titles of these finished, graceful, high-toned, and nobly patriotic orations. The charm and potency of the living speaker can be here only in the recollection of those who heard Mr. Curtis; but moral ardor, the glow of deep conviction, and the persuasiveness of a true lover of principle are eloquent throughout. The volume is one to make every American feel pride in his country and to nourish devotion to the great ideas for which she stands among the nations.

---

* Heroes of the Nations — Henry of Navarre, and the Huguenots in France. By P. F. Willert. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

* Pastor Sang. By Björnstjerne Björnson. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.

* Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Vol. I. Harper & Brothers. $3.50.

Speeches and Addresses of William McKinley. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

Speeches and Addresses of William E. Russell. Little Brown & Co. $2.50.

Governor McKinley, one notes with pleasure, adopts Mr. Curtis' picture of the Puritan for the text of his speech at a New England dinner in Philadelphia in 1890:

> He was narrow, bigoted, sour, hard, intolerant; but he was the man whom God sifted three kingdoms to find, as the seed grain wherewith to plant a free republic. He has done more for human liberty than any other man in history.

Governor McKinley is, too, a thorough and consistent civil-service reformer, and it is the voice of a man honest, sincere, and convinced that we hear in the sixty-five speeches collected in this large volume. The larger part of them are devoted to the advocacy of the high protection policy with which the speaker is so prominently identified. In this advocacy Governor McKinley indorses Horace Greeley as economic authority, and prefers, he says, the utterances of the puddler to those of the college professor.

A younger governor, for three years the just pride of Massachusetts as her representative at the World's Fair and other great occasions, speaks forth as manfully and with confessed ability in a volume edited by his brother and introduced to the world by Colonel Higginson in an admiring preface. There is as little ornament here as in Governor McKinley's much larger volume and less quotation. Both speak "right straight on," belonging to a later school of oratory than Mr. Curtis' and having less of the literary man about them. Their speeches are remarkable for solidity and sobriety. Professing the most opposite doctrines as to protection, tariff reform, and free trade, both cannot be right, and one of the two, in fact, must be extremely mistaken. The question, it is evident, has a long time of discussion yet before it; it is fortunate, therefore, that two such able champions have put themselves fully on record in such accessible volumes. No one can look into them and not respect the solid qualities of genuine American manhood which both display and which the portraits of their authors bear evidence to. A portrait is strangely lacking in the Curtis volume.

DR. HAMLIN'S LIFE AND TIMES.*

THE author of this interesting autobiography is now living in venerable retirement in the quiet Massachusetts town of Lexington. From New England he went out and to New England he returned, after mingling in as stirring and eventful scenes as fall to the lot of most men to participate in. A strong personality, a romantic career, and memorable times — these are the three ingredients in this notable book. Dr. Hamlin tells his story with great frankness, and has a right so to tell it. Few men have a better right.

The story divides itself in two. The first part shows us a New England boy, a typical New England boy, in his life on the old farm, in the shop, at school, college, and the theological seminary. It is a historic picture that is fast fading out. Not many "old boys" survive to recount such reminiscences as these of stealing of ox-goads and making of ox-bows, of farm days and muster fields, and of all the manifold sights, sounds, and experiences that went to make up the traditional New England life of the first quarter of the present century. Dr. Hamlin was born in 1811. He passed apprentice days in Portland, sat under Dr. Payson's preaching, fitted for college at Bridgton Academy, Maine, graduated at Bowdoin in Longfellow's time, and took his seminary course at Bangor. While in college he made with his own hand, from drawings and explanations then just published, the first steam engine ever seen in the State of Maine. What a story to be told by a man still living! This product of his mechanical skill is now in the Cleveland Cabinet at Bowdoin.

The second and important part covers Dr. Hamlin's public service in Turkey, first as a missionary of the American Board and founder of Bebek Seminary; after that independently, as the builder and organizer of Robert College on the shores of the Bosporus. The planting of this institution was a strategic feat of the highest order, and stamps Dr. Hamlin as a man and manager of commanding executive ability. The story of it is of surpassing interest.

Dr. Hamlin was in Constantinople during the Crimean War, and his career as a "baker" was as striking as it is amusing. Only a Yankee with a mechanical turn of mind, great inventive capacity, and indomitable energy could have carried out as he did the work of supplying the English hospitals with bread. It sounds incredible now, in view of existing illustrations of "applied Christianity," that ever fault could have been found with a Christian missionary for doing this sort of thing; but so it was. However, the world has moved in forty years, and the Dr. Hamlins are the men who have moved it.

This is a good book for missionaries, ministers, students, economists, Americans, boys, and, in fact, almost everybody, to read. It is full of anecdote, a distinct and strong personality, a vivid memory, a kindly spirit, and love of work for all human kind — instructive, entertaining, and interesting. The five years' presidency of Middlebury College makes a capital closing chapter. May the good doctor's last days be full of peace!

A DAUGHTER OF THE WORLD.*

FLETCHER BUTTERSHALL is a new writer and this first book is a remarkable one. It is a story with a plot, carefully worked out, of the old-fashioned kind, but fresh and unhackneyed. The character studies, however, are the most interesting matter.

The scene is laid in a small, out-of-the-way town in Nova Scotia, and the four striking characters are a father and daughter, a Jesuit priest, and a young man of letters. The father was early left a widower; bitterly disappointed in his own life, he determined to educate his daughter to enter a convent, not because he believed in the tenets of the Roman Catholic religion, but because he believed it to be a superstition which made its devotees happy. He induced a Jesuit priest to undertake his daughter's education, and permitted him to have absolute control. The appearance of the young literary man and the dawn of love altered the father's plan very considerably. With great difficulty the daughter threw off the priest's influence, being determined to lead her own life. We follow her from Nova Scotia to Italy and from the nursery to the stage.

The character of the Jesuit priest — Father Axon — is a wholly new one in fiction. He had tremendous will power, partly mesmeric or hypnotic; this power the writer describes and analyzes with great skill. As a psychical study, Father Axon is admirable. We crave the abnormal in this age; it has come to take the place of the supernatural. In the old days a writer of fiction would have made Father Axon a sorcerer; but the modern writer explains his actions according to natural laws.

---

* My Life and Times. By Cyrus Hamlin. Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. $2.50.

* A Daughter of the World. By Fletcher Buttershall. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

The style of A Daughter of the World shows a delicate and charming literary sense; the scenes and the conversations have been studied with great care. Mr. Buttershall has certainly much talent, and his story is one of the strongest works of fiction that appeared in 1893.

THE OTHER SIDE.*

HOW many readers in this busy age will stay to read a long poem on the events in the Civil War written from the Southern point of view? We do not believe that a poem from the Northern point of view would have a much better chance of a warm reception. Yet this poem has great merit. It has been composed with tremendous intensity by a woman who lived through the struggle she powerfully describes. Part III is perhaps the strongest and most dramatic:

> Unconquered men! — who held the coat of gray
> In rags and honor o'er the Southern heart,
> That struck for right, outstripped by force, for death —
> Unblessed by both, to teach how mankind lives!
>
> They told their stories by the broken hearth,
> By empty chairs, by boards with sorrow spread,
> When two or three had gathered in the name,
> And paused within a prayer, to call it "Home."
>
> They came from far along the dusty way
> To seek their own — to find the husks of life;
> Graves sorrow-filled, to soothe a yearning love,
> And dreary wastes where torch of wrath had dwelt.

We have caught now and again strains of the sad songs which accompanied our pæans of Northern victory, but it is good for us to have these minor melodies brought a little nearer to our ears. Over dead

> Whom all the world has crowned,
> Who never felt the woe the vanquished feel!

we mourn much less bitterly. It was the waste of life which made the "proud old South" refuse to be comforted.

The author tells us in her preface that Northern and Southern literature do not now exist, but that she hopes this poem will be received as a contribution to American literature and that "when the sentiment not less true may jar" on the readers, "they will yet hear with interest the unfamiliar voice, remembering that it is the literature of 'the other side.'"

FICTION.

On the Cross.

One of the most powerful of recent stories from the German is this romance of the Passion Play at Oberammergau, by Wilhelmine von Hillern, translated by Mary J. Safford. The subject is very unusual; the hero is no less a person than the man who personates Christus. Surely, delicacy of treatment and a certain sacred reticence were necessary for a satisfactory result. But the author has shown herself fitted for her work. It soon becomes apparent that she is capable of carrying out what she has undertaken. The story opens with the arrival at Oberammergau of a spoiled beauty, the rich and captivating Countess Madeline, a young widow, with a distinguished prince in her train, who is deeply in love with her, and has come with her partly to humor a kind of religious sentiment which is her caprice of the hour. The Passion Play overwhelms her; she loses sight of everything she has held dear in the ecstatic yielding of her whole being to the influence of the Christus, Joseph Freyer. She confuses the man with the divine one whom he personates, and in a strange mingling of passion with spiritual fervor she gives herself to him, bringing such fascinations to bear upon him that he deserts his people and disappears with her. He consents to a marriage which leaves her free to live her former life, while he, as her steward, dwells at an obscure hunting seat, seeing her only as she secretly visits him. This arrangement she imposes on him to save her wicked father, with whom her money interests are involved. This double life comes to a most disastrous end, and retribution overtakes the sinning woman. Just here, however, when all seems lost, the author develops a tender sequel of penitence, which brings about a recompense to the husband and wife quite in harmony with the long-suffering and forgiveness he has personated. The story is intense, absorbing, and well-sustained. — Geo. Gottsberger Peck. $1.00.

The First Supper and Other Episodes.

"To the memory of George Pellew," the brilliant young man of letters, this volume of exquisitely subtle tales is dedicated. They are not an unworthy tribute. They are the product of a delicate, poetic, and imaginative mind, tinged with German mysticism and sentiment. The longest and best of the stories is the first — of one evening which a man and a woman spent together, and its results. "Three Forms" is an allegorical story, powerful, too, in its own peculiar way. It has a text and it preaches a sermon, as no one of the other stories attempts to do. All the tales are artistic and have that evasive quality which we call "atmosphere." — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

A Coign of Vantage.

The coign of vantage selected by Mr. John Seymour Wood for the scene of his romance is Saillous in the Valois Contrée. Here is a fine old ruin, the Chateau de la Bastiat, with an oubliette, dungeons, towers, and all the other conveniences of the Middle Ages. With this owl-and-ghost-haunted pile a romantic American pair fall in love, and they "hire" it, so to speak, for a week or two, while one of them finishes a picture of the place. Presently they are joined by a beautiful Kentucky girl from the Blue Grass region; following in her wake come, very naturally, a couple of lovers, and the piece being "set" the play goes on to its natural conclusion. It is a light bit of work enough, but readable and entertaining, and there is a little vein of humor which adds point to the situation and merits encomium. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.

The Emigrant Ship.

Mr. W. Clark Russell is fertile in situations, but he has never invented a stranger one than that in which the hero of this story finds himself. A young man, mate on a brig, is enticed by stratagem on board a ship loaded with female emigrants bound for Australia; her officers have all been killed, blinded, or otherwise disabled by a stroke of lightning. The crew of twelve sailors have resolved to land, each with a "partner," on an island in the South Pacific and form an ideal colony of their own. He has the problem forced upon him for solution how to convey, alone and single-handed, the remaining women, some ninety odd in number, safely to their destination. He dares not ship a crew of Kanakas or of such undisciplined material as might be picked up from passing vessels; in the end he accomplishes his task by training a crew of the younger women to furl, reef, and steer, and with their aid he reaches Melbourne in safety. With all its unlikelihood, there is an air of probability in the story, and it is as interesting as it is well carried out. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

Girls of a Feather.

Mrs. Amelia E. Barr has departed from her usual way of writing in this New York story. The ethical motive which pervades her novels and is a distinguishing feature is conspicuously lacking here. The book is exceedingly brilliant, and has such spirit and spontaneity that it might easily, it would appear, have been dashed off without effort. But we miss that lofty purpose the author has accustomed us to. The men and women we are so charmed with at first are not true to what we have reason to expect. It is inexplicable that Bessie should have proved so untrue to what she promised to be. The introduction of St. Ange brings a long train of sensational results wholly unnecessary to the restoration of the lost happiness of Ambrosia and her husband. Bessie is perfectly bewitching; but she is hardly one of Mrs. Barr's typical girls, who could never by any possibility say of a tea-gown that it was "chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely." — Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

The Face of Death, a rather striking story of the Westmoreland Fells, by E. Vincent Briton, has for its heroes a baronet, with a Bluebeard capacity for worrying wives to death and speedily remarrying, and his son, keenly alive to his father's peculiarities and by no means inheriting them. There is some fairly good character-drawing in the novel and not a little humor, which goes far to neutralize the somber title chosen by the author. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

How weak a well-bred man can be in betraying friendship, ruining the lives of others, and dreading discovery of his sins is shown at rather tedious length in The Transgression of Terence Clancy, by Harold Collings. The book is interesting, the plot well constructed, and the style smooth; but in a story rapidity of movement and brilliancy of expression are needed to counterbalance the description of the slow and tortuous progress of an inert conscience in an ordinary sinner. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

In current reprints of fiction, Miss Burney's Cecilia, in three volumes, is the latest issue in the pleasing and convenient Dent edition (Macmillan & Co. $3.00); The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat continues the revised edition of Mr. William Black's novels (Harper & Brothers); and Peveril

---

* Published by the author, Virginia Frazer Boyle, at the Riverside Press.

of the Peak is the fresh volume in the Dryburgh Scott. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

POLITICS AND ECONOMICS.

Nicholson's Principles of Political Economy.

The first volume of Prof. J. Shield Nicholson's new treatise is devoted to Production and Distribution, which he treats on the lines of Mill, but more in the spirit of Adam Smith. Mill's great defect is, to him, "the want of historical knowledge." Professor Nicholson has, therefore, included "a much greater amount of history than is usual in a statement of principles." He is not, however, one of the historical school, so-called, but a liberal adherent of the standard school of classical economics, with great independence in criticising and supplementing Mill in particular. Those who quote Mill in support of socialism would be especially profited by a careful study of Professor Nicholson's first volume. To him socialism is "vitally opposed to historical development, since it aims at reversing the broadest principle of progress, the continuous substitution of contract for status. It is equally false in its assumptions as to the present relations of capital and labor. . . . Not only does socialism rest upon a false view of past and present conditions, it sets up an ideal which would dwarf the minds and cripple the energies of mankind. . . . The liberty of the individual would be stifled, and with it self-reliance, independence, and enterprise." — Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

Ely's Outlines of Economics.

This volume was intended at the outset to be only a revision of Professor Ely's well-known Introduction, "but it became practically a new book" of a more theoretical character. This edition is intended especially for college use, and one of its most valuable features is the appendix, containing subjects for essays and discussions, with courses of reading and a full working biography. Professor Ely's position with regard to "natural monopolies" seems to us to receive a more guarded statement here than in previous volumes, while his judgment on socialism is more emphatic. It does not appear clear to the author how socialism could be made to work in actual life. "The danger to freedom seems a very real one. . . . Social reform seems likely to accomplish more valuable results than socialism. What is needed is a free and peaceful evolution of industrial institutions, but not a radical departure from fundamental institutions." — Hunt & Eaton. $1.25.

Introduction to the Study of Political Economy.

Prof. Luigi Cossa's little Guide developed in its third edition into an entirely new book, numbering nearly six hundred pages in Mr. Louis Dyer's excellent translation. In the "theoretical part" the author handles such matters as the name of the science, its terms, methods, and relations to other sciences. The "historical part" treats the history of the science in sixteen chapters, which finely exhibit the standing of economic doctrine in Europe and America today. Professor Cossa's industry is prodigious, his bibliography astonishingly complete, and his brief characterizations fair and accurate. He is a classical economist with liberal tendencies, but the value of his information is not lessened for any school by his views. As a historical manual the volume is without an equal in economic literature. — Macmillan & Co. $2.60.

Women Wage-Earners.

Mrs. Helen Campbell has nearly doubled in size her essay which received a prize from the American Economic Association in 1891. The volume is now a model for the thoroughness of its investigation, the sobriety of its tone, and the rationality of its suggestions. The question is so large and the facts are so hard to obtain that such a book will need constant revision; but as it stands it is far and away the best treatment of the subject now to be had. Mrs. Campbell combines the faculties of the careful student, the popular expositor, and the warm-hearted woman who respects the limits of the advisable and the attainable. Her volume is especially one to commend to her own sex, whether they are hand workers or writers on labor matters. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Industrial Arbitration and Conciliation.

Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell has done a service in compiling this little volume of a hundred pages, showing how industrial peace has been secured in many large industries in Europe and America. Mr. Henry Crompton's well-known book and an article in the Contemporary by R. S. Watson supply information for England; of conciliation in Belgium at the collieries of Bascoup and Mariemont the account is taken from Mr. Weiler, the manager; and for our own country, the various successful efforts in New York, Chicago, and Boston, and by the National Association of Builders are well exhibited. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

The English Peasant.

Mr. Unwin of London is issuing a new series of books on questions of the day called "The Reformer's Book-Shelf," which contains a cheap reissue of Mr. Holyoake's interesting autobiography. The next most substantial volume is The English Peasant, by Richard Heath. Its four hundred pages are composed of papers written for different periodicals between 1870 and 1884. First comes "The English Via Dolorosa," a review of the history of the agricultural laborer; then a paper on "The Cottage Homes of England," followed by a series of "Walks and Talks with English Peasants." Mr. Heath made pedestrian tours all over England in pursuit of information at first hand, and the picture he gives is indeed a distressing one but for the fact that things are mending with the long-neglected laborer, now that he can vote and parish councils will soon come to his aid. Three biographical chapters on Cobbett, John Clare, and William Huntington and a paper on "The Poor Man's Gospel" fill out an instructive and sympathetic book. — Century Co.

The Labour Movement.

Mr. L. T. Hobhouse's essay is an attempt to show that certain defensible principles of economic reform are common to various industrial movements of the present day, and that therefore these movements should come into closer alliance and receive the support of all the fair-minded. To show that Trade-Unionism and Coöperation should be in hearty sympathy is, however, a much easier task than to establish the principles relating to the distribution of wealth and the control of industry which Mr. Hobhouse advocates. Here he seems to be too much under the guidance of inadequate theory and to pay too little respect to history and economic science. — T. F. Unwin. $1.25.

Socialism: its Growth and Outcome.

There is nothing new in this brief book by William Morris and E. Belford Bax, and but little that is true as a complete statement of the facts in any direction. It is full of the usual omniscience and wholesale condemnation of the existing order of things to be found in socialistic writings, of which sensible men are getting a trifle weary. The chief sign of sanity is the refusal to plot out the socialistic millennium in detail. But as the millennium is still stoutly declared to be the sure result of socialistic principles, its prophets who refuse to tell more and thus expose themselves to detailed criticism will probably lose much of their hold on the faithful. These are not creatures of logic, but they have imaginations requiring to be fed with "News from Nowhere," and writers like Messrs. Morris and Bax will find their avocation gone when they refuse to give out such news. A more complete confession of the impracticability of the socialistic programme could hardly be imagined. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

The Cosmopolis City Club.

Dr. Washington Gladden's exposition, in the form of a story, of what a few public-spirited citizens can accomplish in the way of reforming the government of a city has been received with deserved applause on its appearance in the Century Magazine. It is an extremely readable and sagacious handling of what he well calls "the most important practical question now before the American people." The government of our cities is the weakest and most discreditable point in our whole system; as cities are not only to continue but to increase, the problem of their sensible government is not one to be put by but to be studied most patiently. Dr. Gladden's story should be read by every municipal reformer. — The Century Co. $1.00.

Politics in a Democracy.

Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson is a thorough disciple of Mr. Herbert Spencer, and it is not strange that he should place the emphasis upon individual character and look to a decrease rather than to an increase of governmental machinery to cure present political evils. But when he gravely sets forth the "good" in government by Tammany Hall (the subject of four of his chapters) one may well feel doubts as to the fitness of the Spencerian for practical politics. The "good" appears to be that Tammany refrains from open murder of its opponents on the highway, and such like mercies! The fact that Mr. Thompson, soon after the Maynard nomination, should feel moved to enter this plea for Tammany Hall, as not so bad after all, sheds a curious light on the evolution of conscience in a supposed philosopher. He seems to be guided more by dislike of some enemies of Tammany than by any surplus of Puritan spirit. One can easily imagine the astonishment of Mr. Spencer himself reading such an apologia! — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

The Social Contract.

It is a good thing to have in so convenient a form as this a careful translation of Rousseau's famous little treatise on "the principles of political rights." Prof. E. L. Walter of the University of Michigan furnishes brief footnotes and an interesting introduction in which he expounds the condition of things in France when Rousseau wrote. The interest of the Contrat Social must be chiefly historical for us, he well says, since Rousseau's method is fatally discredited with sound thinkers; but none the less is the book an arsenal to which unsound thinkers still resort for weapons to use "against the whole framework of the modern state." — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

Comparative Administrative Law.

Prof. Frank J. Goodnow of Columbia College has produced in these two volumes a work of the first order of value. Administrative law is a field little cultivated by Americans in a scientific spirit, but Professor Goodnow has studied with great thoroughness the best authorities of Europe, and has applied their method to our country so far as the diverse conditions warrant. His aim is to present an analysis of the systems, local and national, by which the executive power in England, France, Germany, and the United States administers the task intrusted to it. The methods of organization are the subject of the first volume, and legal relations of the second — "the means of holding this organization up to its work, and of preventing it from encroaching on those rights which have been guaranteed to the individual by the constitution or laws." Speaking generally, these volumes are such as many laymen who enjoy Mr. Bryce's great work will read with ease and profit. Professor Goodnow has not entered into minute detail, being concerned mainly with principles. His remarks on the respective advantages and disadvantages of the bureaucratic and the non-professional systems are a good example of this characteristic. While his solid legal learning is manifested in the cases referred to in the footnotes, the text is kept clear and readable for the laity. The work will immediately become a standard authority in its field. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00.

Practical Essays on American Government.

Prof. A. B. Hart of Harvard has here collected from the periodicals eleven essays on the actual working of government in the United States. Description, not suggestion, is their main purpose; but all improvement in existing conditions must be based on a thorough understanding of them. To such an understanding this lucid and forcible volume will certainly contribute much. There have been few essays of late years that have gone to the point more directly and described the actual situation better than those on "The Speaker as Premier," "The Exercise of the Suffrage" (against compulsory voting), "The Rise of American Cities," and "The Biography of a River and Harbor Bill." Professor Hart ascribes the defeat of the South in the Civil War to the economic weakness of slavery. His accounts of the Chilian Controversy and of our Public Land Policy are thoroughgoing, if not flattering. The volume is one which will give great enlightenment to the intelligent voter. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.

Direct Legislation.

In this slender volume of somewhat more than a hundred pages Mr. J. W. Sullivan gives a clear and comprehensive account of the political devices known in Switzerland as the initiative and the referendum, and advocates their adoption in the United States as a cure for various evils which afflict us — such as the "boss," the "machine," and all kinds of corruption. It is difficult for us to see the justification of these extreme hopes. As Mr. Bryce and Mr. Bradford point out, the tendency of the two devices is to weaken the sense of responsibility in the legislator — and our American legislators have too little of this already. No new system will probably change the situation so fundamentally that indifference will cease to be the worst vice of the average citizen, and the system will not work automatically. If the voters are alert and interested they have machinery enough now to procure good government; if they are not, no amount of imitation of Switzerland will save them. Nothing, however, stands in the way of a large trial of what is practically a referendum in our American States. If the results are good then a more thorough adoption of the principle will seem advisable; but the advocates of the system have not made out a strong case, from the experience we have had with what amounts to a referendum, for an extension of the plan to legislation in general. As for the initiative, it is as easy here as in Switzerland, now, for a few thousand people who desire a law to get it considered, if not passed, by a legislature. Mr. Sullivan's book would be better if it had a little more of the judicial quality in it. — New York: True Nationalist Pub. Co. 50c.

— The pathos or really tear-starting part of the copyright records, according to the Librarian of Congress, relates to poetry. There are more books of poems in the National Library than the most careful and diligent student of American literature can imagine, and the sad thing about it is that by all odds the greatest number of these books are published by the authors themselves. In every other class of literature the copyrighted publications are mostly by large publishing houses, and the writers appear to have more or less the support of the reading public; but the poor poet, who appears to be the most persistent of all producers, appears to have to feed upon his own fancies and pay his own bills. Be the publishers as discriminating as they may, the copyright law has no favorites, and permits all who produce to claim the right of exclusive publication, and in the Congressional Library the volumes of the poetasters stand proudly by the side of the works of genius. Thousands of volumes of "Poems, published by the author," stand upon the shelves, and it is a revelation how many men and women who would not attempt to write in prose think that their wild fancies in a regular rhyme and stilted meter are worth preserving in print for posterity. In this class is found the very poorest example of literary effort. The number of productions of truly good poetry in this country is, however, increasing with considerable rapidity.

— Miss Elizabeth Palmer Peabody died at her residence in Jamaica Plain, Boston, January 3. She was almost ninety years old, having been born in Billerica in May, 1804. She was a daughter of Dr. Nathaniel Peabody of Salem; her sister Sophia married Nathaniel Hawthorne, and her sister Mary married Horace Mann. Miss Peabody was a teacher all her active life, and a most efficient and useful one. She was also busy in many a measure of philanthropy, and was widely acquainted abroad and interested in the affairs of the world so that she could not forbear writing on such subjects. Among her writings were Esthetic Papers (1849), Crimes of the House of Austria (1852), The Polish-American System of Chronology (1852), Reminiscences of Dr. Channing (1880), Last Evening with Allston and Other Papers (1887); besides many educational works. To her is due the introduction of the kindergarten into this country, and to its perfection Miss Peabody devoted much of her time.

— Frank Bolles, A.M., LL.B., secretary of Harvard University, died in Cambridge, January 10. Mr. Bolles was born at Winchester, October 31, 1856, and was therefore 37 years old at the time of his death. He is known in the world of letters by his two books, The Land of the Lingering Snow, published in 1891, and At the North of Bearcamp Water, issued in 1893. Both of these we have had pleasure in commending to our readers.

— Miss Louise Imogen Guiney has been appointed by President Cleveland postmistress at Auburndale, Mass.

— The papers read before the recent International Congress of Anthropology will be published in permanent form, the publication committee of the congress having arranged with the Schulte Publishing Co. of Chicago to issue a first edition limited to 500 copies.

— Florence Marryat's married name is Mrs. Francis Lean. She is a tall, masculine-looking woman, and is now a grandmother, though not gray. She was one of a very large family — a sixth daughter. Her father died when she was very young, but she remembers him well, and says that his children stood in great awe of him. She has American blood in her veins — if we mistake not, that of the well-known New England family of Tuckers. She is very much interested in spiritualism. — London Literary World.

— Much interest should attach to the autobiography on which Dr. Samuel Smiles is now engaged. The veteran writer has known many of the most interesting and most eminent persons of the century, and has been on terms of close friendship with several of them. His next book, with which he has made considerable progress, is a life of Wedgewood, the Staffordshire potter.

— The first supplement to Mr. Sonnenschein's bibliography and current literature, The Best Books, will be published soon. It will comprise the more important literature of the years 1890–93, classified into sections, sub-sections, and paragraphs, under the ten headings into which Mr. Sonnenschein's scheme classifies knowledge.

The Literary World

BOSTON 13 JANUARY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Vie de Bohème.

Did you ever walk down Fleet Street in the rain,
With a hole in your boot where the water came in and then squished out again?
Did you ever wonder — halfway 'twixt joy and sorrow —
Where on earth you'd find the coin to have a meal tomorrow?

Did you ever, while a guilty heart half choked you with its knocks,
Slip a clumsy roll of copy in the office letter-box?
Or, passing 'neath the blue of the livid lightning-lamps,
Think you'd sell your very soul for a shilling's worth of stamps?

Have you ever known that hardest work of seeking work to do,
Or the turning out of "copy" that may never profit you?
Did you ever write through a winter's night and into a foggy day,
And then creep into your bed to sleep the hopelessness away?

Or did you ever sit, when the long hard day was done —
With its worry, and its hopes, and its toil and wrath and fun —
Crouching over a fenderless fire, with your heart's own friend beside,
And tell of all your adventures and laugh until you cried?

Or have you walked through the glory of a blue and silver morn,
In a frost on the Embankment, and felt a new thought born?
O! do you know the thrill of doubt and the slashing joy of strife?
What! no? — I tell you you've never felt the good there is in life!

— A. W., in "The Speaker."

LAST YEAR'S LITERATURE.

THE widespread financial distress of 1893 began after many plans of authors and publishers had been formed and set in motion, and the worst stringency was not felt until nearly the usual list of autumn publications had been arranged. Hence there has not been the falling off in the number of new publications that might have been expected but for these circumstances. It is probable, however, that the number of new books published before next September will be much smaller than usual, as publishers will be uncommonly shy of works the success of which is not altogether certain.

It is not the panic, but far other reasons which leave the literary year 1893, like several of its foregoers, to occupy not a brilliant but only a respectable position. No new novel of preëminent rank, no verse of great mark, no masterly biography, and no historical volumes of the first order — this is what one may rightly say of 1893. On the other hand there have been numerous good novels well worth reading, several fine volumes of minor poetry, some historical works of substantial worth, and a much longer list than any other department can show of interesting works in biography and autobiography. Lowell's Letters (not a biography proper) have been easily first among all the books of the year for charm and value; Scott's Familiar Letters have been widely welcomed too; the biographer was more in evidence in Mrs. Gray's two volumes on Asa Gray; Mr. Pierce has finished his valuable life of Sumner; and Mr. Collingwood's Ruskin, Mr. Morse's Lincoln, and Messrs. Sanborn and Harris' Alcott are conspicuously good.

Among the novels of 1893 the translations of H. Sienkiewicz' Pan Michael and Without Dogma have been far more notable than any original work in our language. But Pietro Ghisleri, David Balfour, A Gentleman of France, and The Cliff-Dwellers rank high in the product of fiction — as immense as usual — while Mr. Black, Mr. Howells, Mr. Bret Harte, Mr. Kipling, Mrs. Catherwood, Mr. Besant, Miss Dougall, and Miss Cholmondeley have sustained their reputations. (It is not probable that posterity will know much about The Heavenly Twins or Dodo.)

The slender volumes in which the precious essence of true poetry is distilled have proceeded entirely from the minor poets; but Messrs. Gilder, Watson, Bliss Carman, Norman Gale, C. G. D. Roberts, Miss Edith Thomas, Madame Darmesteter, and Miss Guiney have the genuine strain, however limited the range of each may be.

In the line of essays and criticism Emerson's Natural History of Intellect, Professor Jebb's Classical Greek Poetry, Mr. Pater's Plato and Platonism, and Rev. Stopford Brooke's History of Early English Literature are especially notable.

In fields of European history three American writers have won repute — Mr. Ropes by his Campaign of Waterloo, Captain Mahan by his Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution and Empire, and Mr. W. R. Thayer by his Dawn of Italian Independence. M. A. Leroy-Beaulieu's masterly work on Russia has been made known in part to English readers; and other volumes of much interest are Fifty Years of Australian History, by Sir H. Parkes; Professor Goldwin's brilliant sketch of American political history; and Mr. Rhodes' strong work on our history since 1850.

The interest in political science and economics has not been diminished this last year. Among the more important books out of many that might be named are the new edition of The American Commonwealth; a second volume on English Economic History, by Prof. W. J. Ashley; Prof. F. J. Goodnow's Comparative Administrative Law; Socialism and the American Spirit, by Mr. N. P. Gilman; the first volume of Professor Nicholson's Principles of Political Economy; Professor Bastable's Public Finance; the new edition of Professor Cossa's excellent manual; and Mrs. Earle's very readable volume on Old New England.

In books of travel Mr. Edward Carpenter's From Adam's Peak to Elephanta, Miss Duncan's Simple Adventures of a Memsahib, and Mr. Bishop's House-Hunter in Europe have been particularly interesting. Among more solid volumes Nansen's Eskimo Life and Mr. E. G. Browne's A Year Amongst the Persians have been conspicuous.

The translation of M. E. Michel's admirable volumes on Rembrandt has been the notable art book of the twelve months; but it has worthy companions in Mr. Hamerton's Drawing and Engraving and Mr. Chapin's Masters of Engraving, while Mr. Brownell's French Art, Mr. Bent's Ruined Cities of Mashonaland, Mr. Bandelier's Gilded Man, and Mr. Van Dyke's Art for Art's Sake are attractive and authoritative.

The noteworthy book of the year in theology has undoubtedly been Prof. Edward Caird's invaluable series of Gifford Lectures, The Evolution of Religion; its philosophic tone is not foreign, however, to such strong works as Principal Fairbairn's Place of Christ in Modern Theology, Dr. Bruce's Apologetics, Dr. Cone's The Gospel and its Earliest Interpretations, Dr. Gordon's Witness to Immortality, Dr. Matheson's Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions, Professor Everett's Gospel of Paul, Mr. Horton's Verbum Dei, and Mr. Beach's Newer Religious Thinking. The contributions to the study of the Hexateuch by Mr. Addis and Dr. Briggs have been especially adapted to spread exact knowledge in this field.

A new edition has renewed the youth of that standard work of reference, Lippincott's Gazetteer; the Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases is a sterling work, while the Indexes edited by Mr. W. I. Fletcher have made periodical and even general literature more accessible.

The following list names so few, comparatively, of the many books for the young issued last year that we will not refine farther upon it. Every season finds many of the ablest writers in the language employed upon this field, which they cultivate so artistically that the products are often as attractive to parents as to children.

THE BEST BOOKS OF 1893.

Art, Archæology, and Folk-Lore.

Japan in Art and Industry.	F. Régamey	Put.
French Art.	W. C. Brownell	Scrib.
Ruined Cities of Mashonaland.	J. T. Bent	Longm.
Drawing and Engraving.	P. G. Hamerton	Macm.
Blackfoot Lodge Tales.	G. B. Grinnell	Scrib.
Art for Art's Sake.	J. G. Van Dyke	Scrib.
Through Colonial Doorways.	A. Hollingsworth,	Lip.
Excursions in Greece.	C. Diehl	Westerm.
Evolution of Decorative Art.	H. Balfour	Macm.
Voodoo Tales.	M. A. Owen	Put.
Greek and Latin Palæography.	E. M. Thompson,	Ap.
The Gilded Man.	A. F. Bandelier	Ap.
The Christ-Child in Art.	H. Van Dyke	Harp.

Masters of Engraving. W. O. Chapin	Harp.
Rembrandt. E. Michel	Scrib.

Biography and Autobiography.

The Memories of Dean Hole	Macm.
Washington Allston. J. B. Flagg	Scrib.
Alfred, Lord Tennyson. A Waugh	U. S. B. Co.
John Wyclif. P. Sergeant	Put.
Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life. G. J. Holyoake,	Put.
Henry Martyn. G. Smith	Revell.
Three Generations of English Women. J. Ross	Put.
Sir Henry Maine. M. E. Grant-Duff	Holt.
William Cowper. T. Wright	Put.
Last Voyages of the Admiral of the Ocean Sea. C. P. Mackie	McCl.
Charles Sumner. Vols. III–IV. E. L. Pierce	Rob.
General Jackson. J. Parton	Ap.
John Ruskin. W. G. Collingwood	H. M.
Personal Reminiscences. L. E. Chittenden	Richmond.
Joan of Arc. Lord R. Gower	Scrib.
Abraham Lincoln. J. T. Morse	H. M.
Recollections of Middle Life. F. Sarcey	Scrib.
Wagner and His Works. H. T. Finck	Scrib.
A. Bronson Alcott. Sanborn and Harris	Rob.
Napoleon. W. O'C. Morris	Put.
B. de St. Pierre. A. Barine	McCl.
A New England Boyhood. E. E. Hale	Cassell.
Madame de Krudener. C. Ford	Macm.
General Greene. F. V. Greene	Ap.
Major-General Wayne and the Pennsylvania Line. C. J. Stillé	Lip.
W. G. Ward and the Catholic Revival. W. Ward,	Macm.
J. and S. Cabot. F. Tarducci	Brownson.
Jared Sparks. H. B. Adams	H. M.
The Baroness Burdett-Coutts	McCl.
Sam Houston. A. M. Williams	H. M.
Letters of J. R. Lowell. Ed. C. E. Norton	Harp.
Personal Recollections of W. von Siemens	Ap.
Letters of Asa Gray. Ed. J. L. Gray	H. M.
Edwin Booth. W. Winter	Macm.
Puritan Love Letters. Ed. J. H. Twichell	Dodd.
Autobiography of T. Salvini	Cent.
Literary Recollections. F. Espinasse	Dodd.
Marie Antoinette. M. de la Rocheterie	Dodd.
Familiar Letters. Sir W. Scott	H. M.
The Brontës in Ireland. W. Wright	Ap.

Economic, Political, and Social Science.

Socialism from Genesis to Revelation. F. M. Sprague	L. & S.
Children of the Poor. J. A. Riis	Scrib.
Toilers of the Field. R. Jeffries	Longm.
Socialism and the American Spirit. N. P. Gilman,	H. M.
Public Finance. C. F. Bastable	Macm.
Prisoners and Paupers. H. M. Boies	Put.
Tools and the Man. W. Gladden	H. M.
Public Health Problems. J. T. J. Sykes	Scrib.
The People's Money. W. L. Trenholm	Scrib.
The City State of the Greeks and Romans. W. W. Fowler	Macm.
Philosophy and Political Economy. J. Bonar	Macm.
Public School System of the U. S. J. M. Rice	Cent.
Customs and Fashions in Old New England. A. M. Earle	Scrib.

Essays and Sketches.—History of Literature.

Early English Literature. S. A. Brooke	Macm.
Studies by a Recluse. A. Jessop	Put.
Story of the Atlantic Telegraph. H. M. Field	Scrib.
At the North of Bearcamp Water. F. Bolles	H. M.
Echoes of Old Country Life. J. K. Fowler	Macm.
The Japanese Bride. N. Tamura	Harp.
Idylls of the King. H. Littledale	Macm.
Persian Literature. E. A. Reed	Griggs.
Spanish Literature. H. Butler Clarke	Macm.
Walt Whitman. J A. Symonds	Nimmo.
Science and a Future Life. F. W. H. Myers	Macm.
Questions at Issue. E. Gosse	Ap.
Road, Track, and Stable. H. C. Merwin	Lit.
Irish Idylls. Jane Barlow	Dodd.
The Realm of the Habsburgs. S. Whitman	Lovell.
In a North Country Village. M. E. Francis	Lit.

Fiction.

Jane Field. M. E. Wilkins	Harp.
The Chosen Valley. M. H. Foote	H. M.
The Ivory Gate. W. Besant	Harp.
The Silent Sea. Mrs. A. Macleod	Harp.
An Artist in Crime. R. Ottolengui	Put.
Secret of Narcisse. E. Gosse	Tait.
Aladdin in London. F. Hume	H. M.
Broken Chords. Mrs. G. McClellan	Lip.
His Grace. W. E. Norris	U. S. B.
Blood Royal. Grant Allen	Cassell.
Children of the King F. M. Crawford	Macm.
In the Three Zones. F. J. Stimson	Scrib.
Cosmopolis. P. Bourget	Tait: Sergel.
A Mere Cypher. Mary A. Dickens	Macm.
A Golden Wedding. Ruth M. Stuart	Harp.
In the Bundle of Time. A. Bates	Rob.
In the Suntime of Her Youth. B. Whitby	Ap.
The World of Chance. W. D. Howells	Harp.
The Handsome Humes. W. Black	Harp.
Commander Mendoza. Juan Valera	Ap.
Prairie Folks. H. Garland	Schulte.
The Stickit Minister. S. R. Crockett	Macm.
The Marplot. S. R. Lysaght	Macm.
Orchardscroft. E. d'Esterre-Keeling	Cassell.
Mr. Tommy Dove. M. Deland	H. M.
Old Kaskaskia. M. H. Catherwood	H. M.
Voice of a Flower. E. Gerard	Ap.
A Cathedral Courtship. Kate D. Wiggin	H. M.
Madame Rosély. V. Monniot	Cassell.
The Doomswoman. Gertrude Atherton	Tait.
Sally Dows. Bret Harte	H. M.
The Story of a Story. B. Matthews	Harp.
Many Inventions. R. Kipling	Ap.
Brown's Retreat. A. E. King	Rob.
Mona Maclean. Graham Travers	Ap.
Day and Night Stories. T. R. Sullivan	Scrib.
A Singer from the Sea. A. E. Barr	Dodd.
A Literary Courtship. Anna Fuller	Put.
Heather and Snow. G. MacDonald	Harp.
Suspected. L. Stratenus	Ap.
Pietro Ghisleri. F. M. Crawford	Macm.
Foes in Ambush. C. King	Lip.
Found Wanting. Mrs. Alexander	Lip.
The Last Sentence. Maxwell Grey	Tait.
The Tutor's Secret. V. Cherbuliez	Ap.
The Sign of the Four. A. C. Doyle	Lovell.
The Prince of India. Lew. Wallace	Harp.
True Riches. F. Coppée	Ap.
At the Rising of the Moon. F. Mathew	Tait.
From the Five Rivers. Mrs. F. A. Steel	Macm.
David Balfour. R. L. Stevenson	Scrib.
The Cliff-Dwellers. H. B. Fuller	Harp.
The Opinions of a Philosopher. R. Grant	Scrib.
Brothers and Strangers. Agnes B. Poor	Rob.
The Faience Violin. Champ Fleury	Ap.
Can This Be Love? Mrs. Parr	Longm.
Two Bites at a Cherry. T. B. Aldrich	H. M.
Pastorals of France. F. Wedmore	Scrib.
The Two Salomes. M. L. Pool	Harp.
The Wheel of Time. H. James	Harp.
What Necessity Knows. L. Dougall	Longm.
To Right the Wrong. E. Lyall	Harp.
Barabbas. M. Corelli	Lip.
A Comedy of Masks. E. Dowson and A. Moore,	Ap.
The Soul of the Bishop. J. S. Winter	Tait.
Without Dogma. H. Sienkiewicz	Lit.
A Native of Winby. S. O. Jewett	H. M.
A Gentleman of France. S. J. Weyman	Longm.
Pan Michael. H. Sienkiewicz	Lit.
Diana Tempest. M. Cholmondeley	Ap.
The Delectable Duchy. A. T. Quiller-Couch	Macm.

History.

Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution. A. T. Mahan	Lit.
The Dawn of Italian Independence. W. R. Thayer,	H. M.
The Refounding of the German Empire. G. B. Malleson	Scrib.
History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850. J. F. Rhodes	Harp.
The Tuscan Republics. Bella Duffy	Put.
The Campaign of Waterloo. J. C. Ropes	Scrib.
Rise of the British Dominion in India. A. Lyall,	Scrib.
The Army of Northern Virginia in 1862. W. Allan,	H. M.
Venice. H. F. Brown	Put.
Story of Poland. W. R. Morfill	Put.
The Church in the Roman Empire. W. M. Ramsay,	Put.
York. J. Raine	Longm.
The United States. G. Smith	Macm.

Natural Science.

Beauties of Nature. J. Lubbock	Macm.
Extinct Monsters. H. N. Hutchinson	Ap.
Sound and Music. J. A. Zahm	McCl.
Experimental Evolution. H. de Varigny	Macm.
Pioneers of Science. O. Lodge	Macm.
American Types of Animal Life. St. G. Mivart	Lit.
The Germ-Plasm. A. Weismann	Scrib.
The Great World's Farm. S. Gaye	Macm.
Hypnotism, Mesmerism, and the New Witchcraft. E. Hart	Ap.
How to Know the Wild Flowers. Mrs. W. S. Dana	Scrib.
The Life of a Butterfly. S. H. Scudder	Holt.
Evolution and Man's Place in Nature. H. Calderwood	Macm.
Hours in My Garden. A. H. Japp	Macm.

Philosophy and Ethics.

The Interpretation of Nature. N. S. Shaler	H. M.
Youth. C. Wagner	Dodd.
Plato and Platonism. W. Pater	Macm.
Skeptics of the Italian Renaissance. J Owen	Macm.
Moral Instruction of Children. F. Adler	Ap.
Practical Ethics. W. DeW. Hyde	Holt.
History of Modern Philosophy. B. C. Burt	McCl.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Rowen. H. C. Bunner	Scrib.
The Parsifal. M. Kufferath	U. S. B. Co.
Adzuma. Sir E. Arnold	Scrib.
Poems of G. Carducci. Trans. by F. Sewall	Dodd.
Green Fields. J. W. Riley	Bowen-Merrill.
Fair Shadow Land. Edith M. Thomas	H. M.
Athelwold. Amélie Rives	Harp.
Second Book of Verse. E. Field	Scrib.
A Country Muse. N. Gale	Put.
Seaward. R. Hovey	Loth.
The Drama. H. Irving	Tait.
El Nuevo Mundo. L. J. Block	Kerr.
Some Rhymes of Ironquill	McCl.
The Perfume Holder. C. L. Betts	Saalfield.
Poems, Dramatic and Lyrical. Lord de Tabley,	Mathews.
Poems Here at Home. J. W. Riley	Century.
The Great Remembrance. R. W. Gilder	Century.
Teresa. J. Rhoades	Longm.
Introduction to Shakespeare. E. Dowden	Scrib.
English Religious Drama. K. L. Bates	Macm.
Classical Greek Poetry. R. C. Jebb	H. M.
Poems, and The Divine Comedy, trans. T. W. Parsons	H. M.
Tanagra. G. Kinkel	Put.

Religion and Theology.

The Gospel of Life. B. F. Westcott	Macm.
Apologetics. A. B. Bruce	Scrib.
Early Narratives of Genesis. H. E. Ryle	Macm.
Members of One Body. S. M. Crothers	Ellis.
Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions. G. Matheson	Rand.
Higher Criticism of the Hexateuch. C. A. Briggs,	Scrib.
History of the Christian Church, A. D. 1–600. W. Moeller	Macm.
Present Day Theology. L. F. Stearns	Scrib.
Gospel of Paul. C. C. Everett	H. M.
Things New and Old. R. Collyer	Dut.
Straight Sermons. H. Van Dyke	Scrib.
Documents of the Hexateuch. W. E. Addis	Put.
The Gospel and its Earliest Interpretations. O. Cone	Put.
Survivals in Christianity. C. J. Wood	Macm.
The Newer Religious Thinking. D. N. Beach	Lit.
Place of Christ in Modern Theology. A. M. Fairbairn	Scrib.
The Evolution of Religion. E. Caird	Macm.
Verbum Dei. R. F. Horton	Macm.
Literary History of Early Christianity. C. T. Cruttwell	Scrib.
The Bible : its Origin and Character. J. T. Sunderland	Put.
Theology of the Old Testament. C. Piepenbring	Crow.
The Apostolic Church. O. J. Thatcher	H. M.
The Witness to Immortality. G. A. Gordon	H. M.
The Pilgrim in Old England. A. H. Bradford	Fords.
Sermons. Sixth Series. Phillips Brooks	Dut.
The Spiritual Life	Ellis.

Travel and Adventure.

In Artic Seas. Keely and Davis	Hartranft.
Life and Character in Hungary. M. Fletcher	Macm.
First Days Among the Contrabands. E. H. Bottume	L. & S.

From Adam's Peak to Elephanta. E. Carpenter,	Macm.
Letters from South Africa	Macm.
Artistic Travel in Normandy, etc. H. Blackburn,	Scrib.
Simple Adventures of a Memsahib. Sara J. Duncan	Ap.
Eastward to the Land of the Morning. M. M. Shoemaker	Clarke.
A House-Hunter in Europe. W. H. Bishop	Harp.
The Empire of the Tsars and the Russians. I. A. Leroy-Beaulieu	Put.
Camp Fires of a Naturalist. C. E. Edwards	Ap.
In Amazon Land	Put.
In the Wake of Columbus. F. A. Ober	Loth.
Our Great West. J. Ralph	Harp.
A Japanese Interior. A. M. Bacon	H. M.
Eskimo Life. F. Nansen	Longm.
My Arctic Journal. J. D. Peary	Contemp.
A Year Amongst the Persians. E. G. Browne	Macm.

Books for Young People.

A Battle and a Boy. B. W. Howard	Tait.
In the Service of Rachel, Lady Russell	Macm.
The Story of J. G. Paton	Armstr.
The Grand Chaco. G. M. Fenn	Tait.
Little Miss Muffet. Rosa N. Carey	Lip.
Historical Tales. C. Morris	Lip.
True Story Book. Ed. A. Lang	Longm.
Ivar, the Viking. P. B. Du Chaillu	Scrib.
One I Knew Best of All. F. H. Burnett	Scrib.
Musical Journey of Dorothy and Delia. B. Gilman,	Crow.
A Dog of Flanders. Ouida	Lip.
My Dark Companions. H. M. Stanley	Scrib.
Century World's Fair Book. T. Jenks	Cent.
The Barberry Bush. Susan Coolidge	Rob.
Princess Margarethe. J. D. Barry	Allen.
Polly Oliver's Problem. K. D. Wiggin	H. M.
History of a Bearskin. J. de Marthold	Dodd.
Guert Ten Eyck. W. O. Stoddard	Loth.
Boy Travellers in Southern Europe. T. W. Knox,	Harp.
More English Fairy Tales. J. Jacobs	Put.
When I Was Your Age. L. E. Richards	Estes.
Odd Business. L. J. Bridgman	Loth.

Miscellaneous.

Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases	Macm.
The Best Reading. Fourth Series	Put.
Index to General Literature. Fletcher	H. M.
Index to Periodical Literature. Second Supplement	H. M.
Lippincott's Complete Pronouncing Gazetteer	Lip.
A Companion to the Iliad. W. Leaf	Macm.
W. Camp's Book of College Sports	Scrib.

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE literary event of the past fortnight was the first New York production in English of Ibsen's "Ghosts." The audience, distinctly literary and theatrical throughout, included Mr. Howells, Mr. Laurence Hutton, Prof. Brander Matthews, Mr. Aldrich, and Prof. H. H. Boyesen. The piece was followed with the closest attention, with that silence that is finer appreciation than applause. Altogether, the representation may be regarded as a success. It does not follow from this fact, however, that it could ever be received with public favor; indeed, quite the opposite conclusion might more justly be drawn.

Only those who have read "Ghosts" can know how utterly loathsome it is. Before seeing it performed I wondered what effect it would have on an audience. I still wonder what effect it would have on a popular audience, which would, of course, be composed of worthy people who do not go to the literary slums. The unflinching indifference with which physiological information found acceptance by the Ibsenites the other day was the best evidence that could be given of the passing of squeamishness among those who are generally supposed to have the tenderest sensibilities. No one appeared to be shocked, not one lady even fainted. I think I did see a lady go out during the second act; but she probably belonged to a club.

Mr. Bronson Howard announced some time ago that Ibsen was the best constructive dramatist of his time. Since the production of "Ghosts" his remark has been echoed by the critics. Some remarks echo easily. If wastes of dialogue well run together be good dramatic construction then "Ghosts" is a perfectly model play. Some people believe that in a good drama action is one of the chief essentials; Ibsen evidently does not. Whether he believes in humor or not, I don't know; but in "Ghosts" he certainly does not attain it. The somber quality of the work is unrelieved from the first speech to the last. Perhaps this helps him to produce his effect; but surely an author has no right to hack and hew the feelings of those to whom he appeals. Such hacking and hewing is not art; it is butchery.

Just what good is to be attained by the production of such a play as "Ghosts" in this country it is difficult for the uninitiated to see. It is possible that it might benefit a few vicious people, that is, it might arouse them to a sense of the terrible possibilities that their sins involve; but these are the very people who would be likely to avoid seeing the piece. At any rate "Ghosts" would not be tolerated for any length of time in a New York theater. Yet it contains elements of popularity, and I believe that if Ibsen would turn from the charnel house and write a wholesome play it would be sure to succeed in two continents. His popularity with actors is easily accounted for; every character in his plays is fully developed; consequently, every part is what actors call "fat."

Mr. Julian Hawthorne is still preparing to leave New York to make a new home for himself and his family in Jamaica. He intended to take his departure some time ago, but he has kept putting it off. I fancy that he hates to go away from the city to which he has been attached for so many years. His son, who apparently does not intend to follow in the footsteps of his father and his grandfather, will go in for farming on the island, and Mr. Hawthorne hopes to gather there material for some new novels.

Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, the novelist, sailed from New York last week for Rome, where she is to spend the winter as the guest of Mrs. Terry, her aunt and the mother of Mr. F. Marion Crawford. During her visit there Mrs. Elliott will make a study of the political and social conditions of present Italy, and lecture upon them when she returns to this country. She also expects to write a series of articles about her experiences. Before returning to this country Mrs. Elliott will make a visit in the home of Mr. Crawford, who has a pretty villa at Sorrento. It was in this villa that several of his Roman novels were written.

Mr. Oscar Wilde's new play, "A Woman of No Importance," is at present occupying a large share of public attention. It is neither a great play nor an altogether good play; but it is a clever play. It gives Mr. Wilde an opportunity to show the world how "dev'lish cynical" he is. In fact, as I watched it the other night I could not rid myself of the image of the æsthete laughing at his own jokes behind the flimsy personages who delivered them, and saying slyly to the audience: "Come, now, isn't that cynical? Isn't that the most cynical thing you ever heard? O, I'm such a cynical dog!" It was, indeed, difficult not to imagine this, for Oscar Wilde is like Byron in one respect (he really is a kind of end-of-the-century, washed-out prose Byron), in his fondness for repeating himself in the majority of his characters. However, we must acknowledge that there is a kind of diseased wit in his high-born people, with their "might I do this" and their "might I do that." Sometimes, in their efforts to be cynical they succeed only in being silly. But, on the whole, the dialogue in the piece is a good specimen of smart writing. Dramatically, "A Woman of No Importance" is much better than "Lady Windermere's Fan." Practice has made the amateur touch professional. The first act is simply a waste of cynicisms, and the characters are dragged on the stage by the ears. But all this is atoned for by the skillful management of the rest of the work, which has moments of genuine power.

When I first saw the play it was given as the author wrote it. I went to see it a second time in order to witness the reappearance of Mr. Charles Coghlan, who assumed the rôle of the chief male cynic, Lord Illingworth. Mr. Coghlan played admirably, but I was sorry to discover that he had presumed, with what seemed to me gross impertinence on his part, to rewrite the last act. In place of the genuinely clever dialogue of one of the original scenes Mr. Coghlan had inserted a long and dreary piece of writing, artificial from beginning to end. He also had the temerity to introduce the hideous old device of making one of the characters develop the story by the reading of a letter — a device, by the way, which Mr. Wilde had skillfully avoided. I have heard that the author sanctioned the change in the play, but I fear that his sensibilities would be sadly shattered if he could see how the alterations have been made.

While discussing Mr. Coghlan's tampering with another man's play I heard an author of this city remark: "Now that sort of thing is one reason why so many literary men will not write for the theater. Managers insist upon modifying their work, and they often injure it seriously. Why can't we let writers for the stage do as they please, and let their dramas be judged by the public?" This author, I think I ought to mention, has himself suffered from the tyranny of the stage manager; so perhaps his views were not altogether unbiased. But after seeing the other night how Oscar Wilde's work had been hacked I was quite in the mood to sympathize with him. Managers, as a rule, know what the public wants, and they are more eager to give it what it wants than to present what it ought to want, which is the ambition of so many of our authors. Their point of view is the practical one of dollars and cents, and there is much to be said on their side. But there is not the same excuse for Mr. Charles Coghlan, as "the Woman of No Importance" had already won its success before he "improved" it.

The daughter of Prof. Brander Matthews will soon bring out a translation of some stories by Ludovic Halévy. This will be Miss Matthews' first literary venture. She has chosen a particularly happy title for the volume, Parisian Points of View. It will be published in attractive form by the Harpers.

Mr. Oscar Fay Adams, who has just returned from a fifteen months' visit in England, has been engaged as instructor in Shakespeare at the Misses Merrington's school here, so he will not return to the apartments in Felton Hall, Cambridge, which he occupied for several years. Mr. Adams spent most of his time while abroad in London, where he saw a good deal of the English writers.

Signs of the times point to lower Fifth Avenue as New York's literary thoroughfare in the future. Several publishers have already congregated there and the Scribners and others will follow. New York is in a very active state of transition; the publishing houses are naturally following the march of business up town.

Mr. John Corbin, a recent graduate of Harvard who distinguished himself in college both as a runner and a writer, combining abilities that rarely go together, has recently been made the editor of Outing. Mr. Corbin's peculiar fitness for his work together with his energy and industry are sure to win him success.

JOHN D. BARRY.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

PERHAPS the most significant point in the life of this awakening town is the popular interest in the fine arts. To no exhibition in the history of the academy has there been so generous a response as to the present one, the sixty-third in the annals of this the oldest art institution in the land. Whether it is due to the splendid array of American works from the World's Fair, or whether the high quality of the entire show has attracted the public, it matters little. That the people go and go in throngs, on pay days as well as free days, is an irresistibly cheering sign. The Fair is, of course, a leading motive, but is a legitimate one; and whoever sees a good picture upon any motive has done himself a lasting benefit.

The academy has also on view the Theodor Graf collection of ancient Egypto-Grecian portraits which, I believe, have already been seen in Boston. Upon this theme Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, the accomplished Egyptologist of the university, spoke on Monday, the 9th inst., at the Drexel Institute. We are informed that she will also speak in connection with the exhibition at the Academy of the Fine Arts at an early day. During a brief visit to the city Madame Blanc (Th. Bentzon) called at the academy, and was much impressed with the exhibition and with Herr Graf's unique collection. Far from being annoyed at the crowds which thronged the academy, Madame Blanc expressed great pleasure, saying that nowhere else, saving in Chicago, had she seen such a general interest shown in art. She also asserted with emphasis that the salvation of our artists lay in painting on their native soil. The skies, almost Italian in beauty, and the clear, sharp atmosphere brought her untold delight, and should inspire, not discourage, our artists. Hard as it might be to depicture these new elements, genius would at last compass it and give us a national expression in color and form.

Another local institution which is beginning to flourish is the free library established by the city in the Wagner Institute, situated in what is locally known as "up town." The library started with 7,000 books at the beginning of last year and gradually increased the number to 12,000. The "turn over" was 15,000 per month — the largest, I am told, on record, in proportion to the volumes — and the total output was 145,000. This denotes a vital demand for better library facilities, and city councils have responded by establishing two other branches in widely separated spots. It is hoped that the nucleus left by Mr. Pepper, amounting to about $250,000, will bring out other bequests and contributions, and ultimately, with municipal aid, secure us a library worthy of our area and population. We are now sadly deficient in this respect; but Philadelphia must pass through a renaissance before it can safely believe itself abreast of its younger or already regenerated sister cities.

That this is imminent is shown by the home interest in people and things Philadelphian. Judge Fell, the new member of the supreme court, is shortly to have a reception at the Penn Club, to be followed by a tribute of the same order to Mr. Charles Leonard Moore, who has always had fuller recognition as a poet outside than inside our civic walls. It is cheering to see these signs of self-respect in a town so long hidden in its own modesty, as it is encouraging to behold the awakening pride of the local press — impelled by outer appreciation — in writers like Miss Agnes Repplier.

We have recently had with us, as the guests of Mr. Jos. M. Stoddart of Lippincott's Magazine, his namesakes of a different spelling, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Henry Stoddard. Rarely have more agreeable literary folk stepped upon our shores than these two who come as envoys from the Augustan age of American letters. They are full of anecdote, grave and gay, of times which seem out of all proportion to their lively young eyes, and to hear Mr. Stoddard exchange anecdotes of Poe and Willis with Mr. John Sartain is to be startled from the dream of our pretended venerability. Both knew the author of the "Raven" and gossip of him as of a friend of yesterday; this reminds me that Mr. Sartain is hard at work upon his reminiscences, to be published before long, and that they will preserve for us all the pleasant facts recounted to his old friend Stoddard.

The Philobiblon Club has decided to keep its publications within the lines of Pennsylvaniana in so far as is consistent with its general aims. This course is to be commended, as the field is quite fresh and very rich in treasure worthy of reproduction.

Mr. Owen Wister, whose stories of the West have been appearing in the late numbers of Harpers, has just returned from the field of his literary work, and Mr. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell has, I am told, a volume of poems in the hands of his Boston publishers for immediate issue. Dr. Charles C. Abbott will put forth at Easter, through the Lippincotts, another open-air book with a unique title, and Miss Anne H. Wharton and Professor Appleton are at work upon new volumes.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

MINOR NOTICES.

Low Tide on Grand Pré.

Mr. Bliss Carman has a poetic touch and much genuine feeling for nature. He deals with the scenery of the land in which he dwells, "the sleeping Ardise hills" and "the lonely Ardise trail," and he makes the reader listen with him to > . . . the sweet, low calling of the bell-buoy on the bar,

> Warning night of dawn and rain
> Lonelily on Arrochar.

"Pulvis et Umbra" seems to us the most remarkable poem in the volume. Lines like these,

> For man walks the world in twilight,
> But the morn shall wipe all trace
> Of the dust from off his forehead
> And the shadow from his face, are worth remembering, worth quoting, and worth writing. Again, in "Seven Things" a very high note is struck:

> But last and best, the urge
> Of the great world's desire,
> Whose being from core to verge
> Only attains to aspire.

There is music, melody, and the subtle quality of real poetry in this new writer's verse. May the sympathy of a large audience encourage him to write many more of these sweet, serene, and tender poems. — C. L. Webster & Co. $1.00.

Little New World Idylls.

Mr. John James Piatt's new volume of verse strikes us as being of unequal quality. Here and there he is at his best, more often he falls below it. The thought is sometimes commonplace, the measure occasionally inharmonious, and then again we chance on a fine and noble hint or catch, the note of unmistakable music. This little bit which we quote, though slighter than some of its companions, has a charm of its own:

QUICK AND DEAD.

> Once the wings of every bird
> Lifted me; the songs I heard,
> In my breast, full-hearted then,
> Wakened answering songs again.
>
> Now their wings, that skyward go,
> Mock my want; their songs below,
> In my empty bosom, make
> Only the dumb silence ache!

— Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

Allegretto.

Very light, merry, saucy, and nonsensical are these vers de société by Miss Gertrude Hall. They furnish an odd contrast to the originality and perfection of her more serious work, but their gayety and frolic will insure them an audience. The illustrations with which Mr. Oliver Herford has enriched the volume give it another charm. — Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

The Ethics of Literary Art.

There are stern, startling sentences in these Carew Lectures for 1893, by Mr. Maurice Thompson, which it would be well for parents to remember in regulating the reading of their children, if there are any parents who exercise such supervision. "Art," the author reasons, is for "education and rational delectation," and its relation to Christian ethics should guide its expression. The unmoral influence of certain fiction, especially in the realistic school, and the "fascination of the unclean" are vigorously handled. An "artistic conscience" should not be different from any other conscience. Mr. Thompson speaks bravely and to our mind truly of Tess of the D'Urbervilles as a "brilliantly fascinating filthy novel" which "appeals to human perversity and pleases human animalism." This little volume is worthy of perusal because of its underlying purpose and its fearless expression of much needed truth in regard to many phases of realism. — Hartford Seminary Press. $1.00.

An Unknown Heroine.

There are readers who prefer to have a true story told precisely as it happened, trusting to their own imagination for the embellishment. Others accept as real or helpful the conversations, interviews, and details which an author may choose to supply. The former class will read with some reservations the passing strange narrative here told by Mr. L. E. Chittenden of "an historical episode of the war between the States." He has certainly made it interesting and attractive, and he had extraordinary facts for the foundation. It relates to Major Bedell of a Vermont regiment, who was left desperately wounded when the army moved on, and was found by the young wife of a Confederate soldier, then in a Federal prison, and nursed back to life. This woman, Mrs. Van Metre, only nineteen years of age, managed to reach Harper's Ferry and obtain supplies from our own sanitary commission, making journeys back and forth in imminent peril, and finally conveyed her invalid to headquarters secreted under a load of hay. The plans and contrivances by which she was able to save him from her Confederate neighbors read like romance. Her services were recognized and appreciated by General Stevenson, then in command, and through him an order was issued by Mr. Stanton for the release of her husband from Fort Delaware. Whether her sickness and delirium, the many trials before the two husbands and their wives met, and the final gathering on Thanksgiving Day in Vermont are true or not, Mr. Chittenden does not tell. But he makes a capital story out of it all, and if half of it is true there is enough to satisfy the reader. The portrait of Major Bedell shows a genial, candid man worth saving. Mrs. Van Metre's face is singularly attractive. — Richmond, Croscup & Co. $1.50.

Through Blind Eyes.

This interesting little volume is translated from the French of the blind Maurice de la Sizeranne by Dr F. Park Lewis, one of the trustees of the New York Institution for the Blind. M. Sizeranne writes as an expert on the characteristics of the blind. They recognize color in certain cases by the odor of the coloring material; do not care as much for metaphysics as people do that see, preferring history, travels, and literature; are capable of being great poets; are no more proud or egotistical than other people, and are much more agreeable in conversation than the deaf. The second part of the book is a sketch of "Valentine Haüg and His Work;" he was the inventor of "typography in relief," and founded a school for the blind during the days of the French Revolution. M. Sizeranne himself is a philanthropist, having established lectures, libraries, and reviews for the blind. It is cheering to find how sympathy and science are widening the opportunities for active service in which the sightless can be originators, leaders, or followers. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

The Rulers of the Mediterranean.

Under this title Mr. Richard Harding Davis has produced a guidebook in the form of humorous essays. He has the rare faculty of viewing events and men en masse and yet, when he chooses, of defining them with the clearness of a silhouette. His style is so colloquial that occasionally he misplaces his words. He uses current expressions with too great facility, but he is always entertaining. The chapters on Gibraltar, "the clearing house for three most picturesque peoples;" on Tangier, "a fine thing spoiled by civilization," and its prisons, which were not so bad as Mr. Davis expected; and on Cairo as "a show place" are vivid word-paintings. The chapter on "The Englishmen in Egypt" is an admirable short presentation of that pseudo-philanthropic dynasty. The remaining chapters, on Athens, Constantinople, and other cities, are pleasant but not remarkable. The book is well illustrated. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Some Artists at the Fair.

The "impressions at Chicago" of five popular artists are collected between these covers. Mr. Frank D. Millet leads off with a paper on the decoration of the Exposition, calling attention to the choice conception, the high order of workmanship, the fitness, and the general effect. His illustrations are fine reproductions — so fine that one lingers over them — of some of the best and most typical of the figures. Mr. J. A. Mitchell treats in a happy, off-hand manner of "Types and People at the Fair," with the accompaniment of characteristic sketches and vignettes. The theme of Mr. Will H. Low is "The Art of the White City," which he disposes of in a few pages, illustrated by five pictures. Mr. W. Hamilton Gibson has "Foreground and Vista at the Fair," in which he dwells lovingly upon the picturesque settings, and depicts exquisite bits, such as reedy coves where swans and wild ducks are at home among the flags and osiers, a border of the rose garden, and corners where great ferns and quaint foreign plants are growing. Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith entitles his article "The Picturesque Side," the term applying especially to the architectural and human aspects. It is like a chapter out of one of his books, in the same light and fascinating vein; and his sketches have the peculiar charm which belongs to his work. The illustrations as a rule are admirable; the make-up of the book is very attractive. It is bound in flexible covers, with a decorated slip cover of linen in grayish green, and altogether is, as it should be, highly artistic. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Two German Giants.

The veteran and venerable lecturer on biographical history, John Lord, D.D., has here given us two essays on Frederick the Great the founder and Bismarck the builder of the German Empire. Those who have heard or read Dr. Lord will know exactly what to expect in these volumes, and they will not be disappointed. There is no sign of failing vigor or of capable generalization or of apt correlation of Germany with America wherever possible. For example, we are told that if the economy of Frederick the Great in his seven years' war had been exercised by our government during the Civil War we should not have had a national debt at all! A portrait of the grand old tyrant is given as a frontispiece, while a half-tone engraving of Bismarck prepares us to read the wonderful story of the life of this autocrat who had no faith in governmental responsibility to Parliament. With all his resources of rhetoric, Dr. Lord pictures Bismarck as a giant, overtopping in his impressive proportions even the great Frederick. After the war this giant's work was colossal. He caressed only his dogs, ate but once a day — though then a meal enough for five men — drank a quart of beer or wine without taking the cup from his lips, smoked incessantly a long Turkish pipe, received one thousand letters and telegrams a day, and overawed even the royal family. Included in the volume is a character sketch of Bismarck by the late Bayard Taylor who, drawing the lines of distinction clear between statesman and politician, calls the man of blood and iron "the first statesman of the age." Interesting as both these lectures are, the gem of the book is Bismarck's speech before the Reichstag, delivered February 6, 1888, which carried the imperial legislature for national defense. — Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.00.

Mental Development in the Child.

Prof. W. Preyer speaks to parents with authority on the science of child observation. His object is to initiate parents into this work and to show them its grave importance. Some of the fundamental rules given for the first learning of children are exceedingly wise, and the chapter on the "Conditions of Mental Development" deserves to be read by every parent. "Talk sensibly with the child that is learning to speak" is one rule, and "Leave the child alone" is another. "Spare the organs of sense and the nervous system" is perhaps the most important of all. In speaking of heredity, the writer says: "Powerful as its influence appears in the shaping of every organized being at every step, still the influence of external circumstances may surpass it in a psychogenetic respect." The volume has been well translated by H. W. Brown of the normal school in Worcester; it forms one of an admirable series. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.

The Reasonable Christ.

This "series of studies" is in some respects of unique interest. The author is the Rev. George E. Merrill, a well-known, cultured, and scholarly Baptist clergyman of Newton, Mass. He belongs to the great company of catholics who do not spell their church name with a capital C. His aim is to present the Christ of the gospel as one who satisfies the reason as well as the heart of believers. While he has read carefully the works of modern as well as of older writers, he draws his facts from the four original bodies of documents called the Gospels, and he strives to bring out their statements into perfect clearness. He believes that the knowledge of God has come to man through nature precisely in the same way as the generalizations of science, and is subject to the same limitation and carries the same conviction as all general truths. He accepts the divinity of Christ, and gives us an exceedingly beautiful and suggestive homily upon "the luminous boyhood." The fourteen chapters take into view every important incident and influence in the life of Christ on earth and in heaven, but in a way which is not that of the average sermonizer or essayist, or the critic, either hostile or friendly. In a word, here is a book whose trend is not in the ordinary rut. — Silver, Burdett & Co.

At Long and Short Range, by William Armstrong Collins, is a clever little book of thoughts, the outcome, evidently, of many meditations. The thoughts do not take the ambitious form of essays, but are mostly terse, epigrammatical paragraphs, two or three to a page. Sometimes two lines express the thought, while again two pages are not enough. The book has all the charm of a personal mood, the seriousness and questionings, the whims and pleasantries, while the substantial binding and broad margins give dignity to the whole. A girl's trousseau, Emerson, uncles and aunts, books, mechanics, minnows, trees, and toy drums are a few of the subjects that have inspired the paragraphs and pages. The whole style of the book may be summed up in the one word, suggestive. Here is one thought, "Many a poor little ugly dog has secured lifelong food, shelter, and care by simply wagging his tail and giving a quick, glad bark when his master comes. A good deal could be said about this, but we forbear." — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.

Good handbooks descriptive of the library of the Old Testament Scriptures are always in order. The progress of scholarship, based upon research in language, archæology, and ethnology, requires that the old introductions be revised from time to time. Prof. James Robertson, author of The Early Religion of Israel, who takes, on the whole, the conservative view of the origin and contents of the Hebrew Scriptures, yet is not blind to the advance in scholarship and the modern change of view, has compiled with conscientious care an interesting little book, The Old Testament and Its Contents. Free from the prejudices of extremists on either side, he has condensed into 162 pages an informing and suggestive description and analysis of each book. Familiar with a number of volumes of this sort, we count this one, considering its price and size, one of the best. — A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 30c.

The tenth and last volume in the new Riverside Thoreau is Miscellanies. It contains Emerson's biographical sketch, papers on Carlyle, slavery in Massachusetts, and John Brown, translations from Æschylus and Pindar, a few scattered poems, a general index to the whole set of ten volumes, and a portrait from an ambrotype taken in 1861. Early Spring in Massachusetts (Volume V) has for frontispiece the much more striking portrait from the Moxham daguerreotype. Volume IX, Excursions, is substantially the same as the volume previously published under this title, "A Yankee in Canada" being included. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Per volume, $1.50.

Volume XLVI of the Century Magazine is the storehouse of good literature and fine art one always expects in the bound volumes. The World's Fair articles, the Bonaparte series, the Salvini autobiography, Mrs. Oliphant's papers on Swift and Defoe, Mrs. Catherwood's White Islander, Miss Grace King's Balcony Stories, and papers on Tolstoï and Russia are but a small part of the good matter here brought together. — Century Co. $3.00.

Old World Lyrics is a pleasing collection of translations from the old French, Romaic, and Italian. They share the nature of most lyrics in singing of women and wine, of love and death. Mr. Mosher, the compiler, has not only shown admirable taste in his selection of translators — chiefly Lang, Rossetti, and Payne — but has also given various versions of the same lyric. The book belongs to the oblong little Bibelot series. — Portland, Me.: Thomas B. Mosher. $1.00.

Volume XX of St. Nicholas (November, 1892, to October, 1893,) comes to us in the usual two parts. Mr. Stoddard's White Cave, Mrs. Wiggin's Polly Oliver's Problem, and the series of articles on American cities are especially notable in these two volumes, which keep up remarkably the high standard Mrs. Dodge set long ago for the best of young folks' magazines. — Century Co. $4.00.

Mr. George Wharton Edwards' charming little articles recently published in the Century on Dutch people and places, entitled Thumb-Nail Sketches, are worthy of being bound in morocco and given a holiday garb. They are dainty vignettes illustrated with great cleverness, and make a delightful pocket companion. — The Century Co. $1.00.

Under the title, The Boy Jesus and Other Sermons, Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor, now pastor emeritus of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, has put together a selection of general discourses which will be welcomed by those who can no longer hear his living voice. — A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.75.

Mr. Egerton Castle's interesting volume on English Book-Plates appears in a new and handsome form, with many new examples and additional plates from the original copper; the binding is a green silk. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

Part XI of the American Dictionary of Printing and Bookmaking extends from Quad to Stereotype, and brings this excellent book of reference well toward its end. — New York: H. Lockwood & Co.

The third volume in Mr. H. B. Wheatley's unabridged Diary of Samuel Pepys has Lely's portrait of Pepys for a frontispiece. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

PERIODICALS.

In the January Forum Hon. David A. Wells draws out "The Teaching of Recent Economic Experiences" to show the immense price the American people have to pay for their ignorance of financial problems they are obliged to settle. Mr. Sydney G. Fisher answers affirmatively the question "Has Immigration Dried Up Our Literature?" but his facts are too obviously colored by his foregone conclusion. Mr. A. R. Spofford sets forth much more judiciously the "Directions and Volume of Our Literary Activities" as shown by the books received at the Congressional Library. Mr. G. H. Putnam finds that the "Results of the Copyright Law" are disappointing to the English author, but on the whole good — to be made better as soon as we can secure a copyright commission to readjust the whole matter systematically. Mr. Riis' "Christmas Reminder of the Noblest Work in the World" describes the work of the admirable Children's Aid Society in placing poor children in homes. Articles on the new tariff bill by Hon. W. L. Wilson, and on Sumner by Senator Hoar, and a series on football by a physician and three college presidents are the other more important contributions.

The able and scholarly Political Science Quarterly has this table of contents for December: "The Concentration of Wealth," by George K. Holmes; "The Economic State," by Prof. Lindley M. Keasbey; "Private Claims Against the State," by Ernst Freund; "Villainage in England," by I. S. Leadam; "Parliamentary Government in Italy," by the Marquis Pareto; and "The Unseen Foundations of Society," by Prof. E. A. Ross — a review of the Duke of Argyll's volume. Mr. Holmes' and the Marquis Pareto's articles are especially noteworthy. The Reviews and the Record of Political Events are as valuable as usual.

In the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science for January, Mr. Lester F. Ward exhibits the weaknesses of the "Political Ethics of Herbert Spencer;" Mr. G. L. Molesworth expounds "Indian Currency," i.e., of British India; Mr. F. C. Howe in his paper on "Federal Revenues and the Income Tax" views the latter unfavorably. W. D. Lewis has a discussion of the "Adaption of Society to its Environment," and M. Paul de Rousiers in "La Science Sociale" gives an interesting account of the divided counsels of the Le Play reform movement in France.

The January New England Magazine has for frontispiece a portrait of the late Mr. E. L. Bynner, accompanied by a sympathetic sketch by E. E. Hale. "Springfield, Mass.," by C. E. Blake; "Boston and Liverpool Packet Lines," by H. A. Hill; "The Graf Collection of Greek Portraits," by J. Walter Fewkes; "Gruyère and its Castle," by W. D. McCrackan; and "In and About Old Bumstead Place," by Kate Gannett Wells, are excellent articles well illustrated. Mr. N. N. Withington's short paper on "The Swiss Referendum" takes too little account of the objections raised by such students of politics as Mr. Gamaliel Bradford; "Modern Vengeance" is a pleasing story by "Dorothy Prescott;" and Mr. J. H. Crooker's discriminating article on Matthew Arnold has an excellent photograph.

An important and certainly timely article in the Review of Reviews for January is Dr. Albert Shaw's paper on "Relief for the Unemployed in American Cities," showing what is actually being done this winter. Lord and Lady Aberdeen are the subjects of Mr. W. T. Stead's too facile pen in the character sketch, and there is the usual abundance of information on the "Progress of the World," illustrated with portraits of men of the day.

The Magazine of Poetry for January is a "Buffalo Number," devoted to poems and portraits of poets connected with that beautiful city by birth or residence. David Gray, "Bessie Chandler," Bishop Coxe, Anna Katherine Green, Prof. H. A. Beers, and Miss K. E. Conway of the Pilot are among the more widely known of quite a long list.

In Poet-Lore for January Mr. W. G. Kingsland prints, with comments, the first installment of "Clematis and Ivy" — letters, that is to say, signed "Clematis" by George Eliot to her friend Miss Lewis; they are chiefly notable as showing how much the writer outgrew. Prof. Henry Jones' paper on "Browning as a Dramatic Poet" is one of the best articles on the poet in its appreciation and discrimination to be found in the whole range of Browning literature. A third paper on "Julius Cæsar," by Dr. W. J. Rolfe; another on "The Import of Keats' 'Lamia' in Contrast with Coleridge's 'Christabel,'" by Miss Porter, and a study of Lowell's "Sir Launfal" in the series "A School of Literature," with the usual miscellany, make out a good number.

NECROLOGY FOR 1893.

B.

Baker, Sir Samuel W.; Newton Abbot, Devonshire, Dec. 30, 72 y.; African explorer and writer of books of travel and adventure.

Bolton, Sarah T.; Indianapolis, Aug. 4, 79 y.; "poetess of Indiana."

Bridge, Horatio; March 20, 87 y.; Recollections of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Brooks, Phillips; Boston, Mass., Jan. 23, 57 y.; preacher.

Bynner, Edwin Lasseter; Boston, Aug. 5; novelist and historical writer.

C.

Campbell, Douglas; Schenectady, N. Y., March 7, 53 y.; The Puritan in Holland, England, and America.

Carpenter, Esther Bernon; Wakefield, R. I., Oct. 22, 45 y.; South County Folks.

Considerant, Victor Prosper; Paris, Dec. 27. 85 y.; socialist, Principles of Socialism, etc.

Cox, Samuel; Hastings, England, March 27, 67 y.; Biblical critic and commentator.

D.

Delpit, Albert; Paris, Jan. 4, 44 y.; novelist.

Doubleday, Abner; Mendham, N. J., Jan. 27, 73 y.; military writer.

Dwight, John S.; Boston, Sept. 5, 80 y.; poet, musical critic.

F.

Frohschammer, J.; July —, 72 y.; philosopher and theologian.

G.

Goodwin, Hannah Bradbury; Boston, June 1; novelist.

Gottsberger, W. S.; Tarrytown, N. Y., 56 y.; publisher.

Guillemin, A.; Feb. —, 66 y.; astronomic and economic works.

H.

Hamley, Sir Edward B.; Aug. 12, 69 y.: novels and essays.

Hefele, Dr.; June —, 84 y.; Concilien geschichte.

Horsford, Eben N.; Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 1, 75 y.; science and American archæology.

I.

Ireland, Mrs. Alexander; Nov. —; Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle.

J.

Jones, C. C. J.; Augusta, Ga., July —; historical writer.

Jowett, Benjamin: Oxford, Oct. 1, 76 y.; theologian, translator of Plato.

K.

Kemble, Frances Anne; London, Jan. 16, 83 y.; dramatist, poet; Journals and Records.

Kip, William I.; San Francisco, April 7, 82 y.; theologian and church historian.

Knapp, C. L.; Lancaster, N. Y., Sept. 20, 88 y.; writer on religion.

Knatchbull-Hugessen, Edward H.; 63 y.; biographer and writer for children.

L.

Lamb, Martha J.; New York, Jan. 1, 64 y.; editor and historian.

Lamon, Ward H.; Martinsburg, W. Va., May 9; Life of Lincoln.

Larcom, Lucy; Boston, April 17, 67 y.; poet; A New England Girlhood.

M.

Maupassant, Guy de; July 6, 44 y.; novelist.

Merivale, Charles; Dec. 27, 85 y.; History of the Romans under the Empire, etc.

Minto, William; London, March 1, 47 y.; professor, novelist, writer on English literature.

Moral, José Zorella Y; Madrid, Feb. —, 65 y.; poet and dramatist.

Mozley, Thomas; June —, 87 y.; theologian, historian of the Oxford Movement.

N.

Nettleship, Henry; Oxford, July —, 54 y.: Latin Dictionary.

P.

Parkman, Francis; Boston, Nov. 8, 70 y.; historian of England and France in North America.

Parsons, George Frederic; New York, July 19; journalism, fiction.

Peabody, Andrew Preston; Cambridge, Mass., March 10, 82 y.; preacher, editor N. A. Review, essayist, moralist.

Pease, Theodore C.; Andover, Mass., Nov. —; professor and critic.

Pettit, Henry; London, Dec. 24; dramatist.

S.

Schaff, Philip; New York, Oct. 20, 74 y.; ecclesiastical historian.

Smart, Hawley; Jan. —; novelist.

Smith, Elizabeth Oakes; Nov. —, 87 y.; poet and novelist.

Smith, William; London, Oct. 7. 69 y.; editor Quarterly Review and Dictionaries.

Stapleton, Patience; New York, Nov. 25, 33 y.; stories of Western life.

Symonds, John Addington; Rome, April 19, 53 y.; literary critic, historian of the Renaissance.

T.

Taine, Hippolyte Adolphe; March 5; critic and historian.

Tautphœus, Baroness; Munich, Nov. 12; The Initials, Quits.

Towle, George Makepeace; Brookline, Mass., Aug. 9, 52 y.; biographer and critic.

Tyndall, John; Haslemere, Surrey; Dec. 4, 73 y.; popular science.

W.

Whately, Elizabeth Jane; Guernsey, March —, 70 y; Life of Archbishop Whately.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Mr. Hall Caine's new novel is entitled "The Manxman," and it is almost needless to add that the scene is laid in the Isle of Man. It will appear forthwith in the Queen and likewise in a syndicate of newspapers in the Provinces, Australia, and America.

—In November of this year Nuremberg will celebrate with a great national festival the four hundredth anniversary of the birth of Hans Sachs.

—Simultaneously with the report of the Royal Commission on Labor, Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. will publish, in their Social Science series, a work entitled The Labor Commission: an Epitome of its Evidence. It will contain a concise account of the nature and policy of the labor movement, of the legislation demanded by the "workingman" and his friends, and of the arguments by which each successive proposal was attacked and defended.

—Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. announce a new novel by Maarten Maartens, The Greater Glory; a new novel from one of the rising English writers, Alexander Allardyce, Earlscourt: a Story of Provincial Life; and an important new work, entitled Germany and the Germans, by William Harbutt Dawson, the author of German Socialism and Ferdinand Lassalle and Prince Bismarck and State Socialism.

—Henry Vizetelly, the well-known publisher, died in Farnham, England, on the 1st inst., at the age of seventy-four. He was born in London. In early life he was a wood-engraver, and was one of the first artists of the Illustrated London News. He became a publisher for the avowed purpose of introducing the works of Edgar Allan Poe and Harriet Beecher Stowe to the English people.

—Macmillan & Co. have nearly ready Mrs. J. R. Green's Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, which deals with the times when towns were independent communities and centers of political life; also, a new book on The Dawn of Astronomy, by J. Norman Lockyer. They have in preparation a biography of Joseph Jefferson, by William Winter, to be published in uniform style with Mr. Winter's volume on Booth, which is just entering upon its third edition.

—Georg Ebers' new historical romance, Cleopatra, is finished, and will appear at an early date.

—Richard Bentley & Son, London, have recently purchased nearly a hundred letters from Edward Fitzgerald to Fanny Kemble. Their publication will be awaited with interest.

—A memorial to Phillips Brooks is to be erected in St. Margaret's Church in London. The money for the memorial has been quietly subscribed and lacks only $150 of the desired amount. Canon Farrar, who as rector of the church has the matter in charge, appeals to the British public for this trifling sum.

—It appears from statistics furnished by the Boston Public Library that the most popular book in the Hub is The Count of Monte Cristo. It is interesting to note that this work does not appear in the list of most popular books prepared by Messrs. J. Selwin Tait & Sons, whose statistics, compiled from the chief libraries in the United States, prove David Copperfield to be the book for which there is most call. With the exception noted, the volumes which enjoy the greatest favor are Ivanhoe, The Scarlet Letter, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Ben-Hur, Adam Bede, and Vanity Fair.

—The Dial reports that Miss Constance Fenimore Woolson has given up her house in Bellosguardo, Florence, and has taken an old palace at San Gregorio, Venice, where she intends to make her home for several years.

—Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. will publish Ernst Eckstein's Preisgekrönt for American readers.

—Queen Margaret of Italy is about to publish in one of the Roman reviews a series of popular stories.

—The Indian mails that reached London on the 28th ult. announce the death of Charlotte Tucker, known best by the initials of A. L. O. E. (A Lady of England.) For the last eighteen years Mrs. Tucker has been engaged in missionary work in India, where the proceeds of her pen have been used to benefit the missions, and it is understood that all money earned by her works after death is also to be placed at the disposal of the Indian missions.

—Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel is to be published in America late this month or early in February.

—Sir Samuel W. Baker, the distinguished African explorer and author, died December 30, aged seventy-two years. He was a prolific writer. Among his books are The Rifle and the Hound in Ceylon, 1854; The Albert Nyanza, Great Basin of the Nile, and Explorations of the Nile Sources, 1866; Cast up by the Sea, a story, 1869; and Wild Beasts and Their Ways, 1890.

—Mr. Swinburne is reading the proofs of a new volume of lyrics to be called Astrophel, and Other Poems, and to have a poem dedicating the work to William Morris, which, it is hinted, contains a veiled reference to the laureateship.

—A work on The Constitution of the United States at the End of the First Century has been prepared by ex-Gov. George S. Boutwell of Massachusetts, and will be published at an early date by D. C. Heath & Co.

—Dr. Tyler's History of Amherst College ends with 1871, when a half century was completed. The author is now actively engaged on a continuation of his work.

—The first installment of Lord Wolseley's Life of Marlborough will make its appearance next spring.

— Far and Near, edited by Maria Bowen Chapin, and The Charities Review, edited by Dr. John H. Finley, president of Knox College, hereafter will be published by Oswald Weber, Jr., at the United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. Mr. Weber has long been connected with the publishing department of the Critic, and is now secretary of the Critic Company.

— Colonel Higginson has nearly completed the manuscript of his Military and Naval History of Massachusetts.

— It is reported that the present Lord Tennyson will not be ready to publish the biography which he has written of his great father before next autumn.

— Roberts Brothers will soon publish a volume of essays from the pen of Rev. P. S. Moxom, D.D., entitled The Aim of Life.

— Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have in press a life of Sir Harry Parkes, some time British minister in Japan and China, written by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, the biographer of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe. It will be in two volumes, illustrated with a portrait and a map.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish January 24 A Protégée of Jack Hamlin's, and Other Stories, by Bret Harte; The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and Other Stories, by Gertrude Smith; A Symphony of the Spirit, edited by George S. Merriam; The Bench and Bar of New Hampshire, by the late Hon. Charles H. Bell, formerly governor of New Hampshire; and A Sappho of Green Springs, and Other Stories, by Bret Harte, in the Riverside Paper series.

— The Scribners will soon publish Mr. R. E. Prothero's Life and Correspondence of Dean Stanley, in two volumes; Psychology, Descriptive and Explanatory, by Prof. George T. Ladd of Yale; The Philosophy of Reality, by Dr. James McCosh; Essays about Men, Women, and Books, by Augustine Birrell; and a Chess Pocket Manual, by C. H. D. Gossip.

— The Student's Froebel, by William H. Herford, late member of the Universities of Bonn, Berlin, and Zurich, is the title of a book adapted from Froebel's Der Erziehung der Menschheit. The first part — the Theory of Education — is soon to be published by D. C. Heath & Co. Boston.

— Thomas Whittaker has just issued The Ascent of Faith; or, Grounds of Certainty in Science and Religion, by Alexander J. Harrison, and The Son of Man Among the Sons of Men, by the Bishop of Ripon.

— A work in twelve volumes, each distinct, is contemplated (and partly executed) by Mr. Charles S. Peirce, member of the National Academy of Sciences. Its full title reads: "The Principles of Philosophy; or, Logic, Physics, and Psychics, Considered as a Unity, in the Light of the Nineteenth Century." The first volume, which is ready for the press, will be A Review of the Leading Ideas of the Nineteenth Century.

— Joel Munsell's Sons, Albany, announce The Pioneers of New France in New England, a history of the French incitement of the Indians against the English settlements, with documentary French evidence and illustrations. The author, Mr. James Phinney Baxter, is president of the Maine Historical Society.

— The third session of the Plymouth School of Applied Ethics is announced for July and August of this year. There will be the usual courses of lectures in the three departments of ethics, economics, and the history of religions.

— Prof. Max Müller has received from the King of Siam an offer of sufficient funds to guarantee the continuance of "The Sacred Books of the East." The money will be used, in the first place, for printing a translation of the remaining portions of the Buddhist Tripitaka.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Sir Joshua Reynolds. By Claude Phillips. Illustrated. Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Leonidas Polk: Bishop and General. By William M. Polk, M.D., LL.D. In 2 vols. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00

The Diary of Samuel Pepys, M.A., F.R.S. Edited by H. B. Wheatly. Vol. III. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Romance of an Empress. Catherine II of Russia. Translated from the French of R. Waliszewski. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

Educational.

Evangeline. By Henry W. Longfellow. English Classic Series. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 24c.

Romance of the Insect World. By L. N. Badenoch. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Manuel de la Littérature Française. Par A. de Rougemont, A.M. William R. Jenkins. $1.25

College Preparatory French Grammar. By Chas. P. Du Croquet. William R. Jenkins.

Paul Bercy's French Reader. For Advanced Classes. William R. Jenkins. $1.25

How to Study and Teach History. By B. A. Hinsdale, Ph.D. D. Appleton & Co. $1 50

Essays and Sketches.

The Writings of Henry David Thoreau. Riverside Edition. Vols. V, IX, and X. Early Spring in Massachusetts. Excursions. Miscellanies. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each, $1.50.

A Phidian Horse. Art and Archæology on the Acropolis. From the French of Victor Cherbuliez by Elizabeth Hill Bissell Roberts. Camden, N.J.: A. J. Milliette Pub Co.

The Rights of Women. By M. Ostrogorski. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Science and Education. Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Camp-Fire Musings. By Wm. C. Gray, Ph.D. Chicago: The Interior Co. New York: A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

The English Peasant. Studies: Historical, Local, and Biographic. By Richard Heath. The Century Co.

Historic Green Bay, 1634-1840. By Ella Hoes Neville, Sarah Greene Martin, and Deborah Beaumont Martin. Published by the authors, at Green Bay, Wis. $1.25

Days Spent on a Doge's Farm. By Margaret Symonds. Illustrated. The Century Co. $3.50

Brave Lads and Bonnie Lasses. By Fred'k Myron Colby. Hunt & Eaton. $1.50

Our Boys. What They Can Do, and How To Do It. Compiled by Wm. Stoddart. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

Fiction.

Catharine Furze. By Mark Rutherford. Edited by his friend, Reuben Shapcott. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

An American Peeress. By H. C. Chatfield-Taylor. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Rip Van Winkle and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow. By Washington Irving. With fifty-three illustrations by George H. Boughton. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Legends of the Micmacs. By the Rev. Silas Tertius Rand. Longmans, Green & Co.

The New Minister. By Kenneth Paul. A. S. Barnes & Co. $1 00

Only a Girl's Heart. By Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Prince Ricardo of Pantouflia. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25

The Norsk Gopher. A Story of the Northwest. By Chas. N. Sinnett. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

The Waverley Novels. Dryburgh Edition. Vol. XV, Peveril of the Peak. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

History.

The Spanish Pioneers. By Chas. F. Lummis. Illustrated. A. C. McClurg & Co $1.50

History of the Philosophy of History: France. By Robert Flint. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

Civilization During the Middle Ages. By George Burton Adams. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Father Junipero Serra. By Chester Gore Miller. Chicago: Skeen, Baker & Co.

The Poems of William Blake. Edited by W. B. Yeats. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75

Prairie Songs. By Hamlin Garland. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

The Temple. By George Herbert. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Last Flight. By W. H. Venable. Cincinnati: Robert Clarke & Co. 35c.

Allegretto. By Gertrude Hall. Illustrated by Oliver Herford. Roberts Brothers. $1.50

Thistle Down Poems. By Julia Ditto Young. Buffalo: Peter Paul & Brothers. $1.25

Prince Robert, and Other Poems. By William B. Benton. De Ruyter, N.Y.: Published by the author.

East and West. The Discovery of America, and Other Poems. By E. F. Fenollosa. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.00

Religion and Theology.

From Things to God. By David H. Greer, D.D. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

Thoughts on God and Man. Selections from the works of Fred'k W. Robertson. Edited by Jos. B. Burroughs. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

Annotations upon Popular Hymns. By Chas. S. Robinson, D.D. Hunt & Eaton. $2.50

Thoughts for the Thoughtful. Selected and edited by Adelaide S. Seaverns. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

Sabbath Hours. Thoughts. By Liebman Adler. Philadelphia: Jewish Pub. Society.

Sermons for the Church. By Caleb Davis Bradlee, D.D. George H. Ellis. $1.25

The Trial of Dr. Briggs before the General Assembly. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 50c.

The American Church Almanac and Year Book for 1894. James Pott & Co. 25c.

The Key of the Grave. By W. Robertson Nicoll. London: Hodder & Stoughton. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Heart-Beats. By P. C. Mozoomdar. With Biographical Sketch by S. J. Barrows. Geo. H. Ellis. $1.50

Travel and Observation.

The Sacred City of the Ethiopians. Being a Record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia in 1893. By J. Theodore Bent, F.S.A. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00

The Rulers of the Mediterranean. By Richard Harding Davis. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Barbary Coast. By Henry M. Field. With illustrations. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

Reality vs. Romance in South Central Africa. By James Johnston, M.D. Profusely illustrated. Fleming H. Revell Co. $5.00

In the Land of Cave and Cliff Dwellers. By Lieut. Frederick Schwatka. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.25

Miscellaneous.

Printers' Marks. A Chapter in the History of Typography by W. Roberts. Macmillan & Co. $2.75

The Thoughts of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. Long's translation. Edited by Edwin Ginn. Ginn & Co. $1.30

The Lover's Lexicon. A Handbook for Novelists, Playwrights, etc By Frederick Greenwood. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Canadian Almanac and Miscellaneous Directory, 1894. Toronto: The Copp, Clark Co. 20c.

The Century Illustrated Magazine. Vol. XLVI, May, 1893, to October, 1893 The Century Co. $3.00

St. Nicholas: an Illustrated Magazine for Young Folks Vol. XX, Part I, November, 1892, to April, 1893; Part II, May, 1893, to October, 1893. The Century Co. $4.00

The Book of the Fair. An Historical and Descriptive Presentation. By Hubert Howe Bancroft. Part I, II, III. Chicago: The Bancroft Co. Each, $1.00

Ghazels from the Divan of Hafiz. Done into English by Justin Huntly McCarthy. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00 net.

Museum of Fine Arts. Catalogue of Greek, Etruscan, and Roman Vases. By Edward Robinson, Curator of Classical Antiquities. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Bon-Mots of Charles Lamb and Douglas Jerrold. Edited by Walter Jerrold. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

English Book Plates, Ancient and Modern. By Egerton Castle, M.A., F.S.A. Macmillan & Co. $3.75

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

ESTABLISHED 1870. SECOND HAND BOOKS.
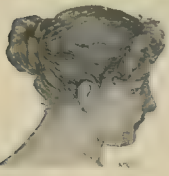
Catalogues issued monthly. Sent free to book buyers.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Ye Olde Booke Man,
Books Bought. 53 & 55 State Street, Albany, N. Y.

UNMOUNTED PHOTOGRAPHS



of Ancient and Modern Works of Art, reproductions of famous paintings, sculpture and architecture, with views from all parts of the world. Send 15 cents for catalogues of 14,000 subjects (including 1893 supplement).

World's Fair Views
- - AND - -
Art at the Fair

SPECIAL LIST OF 130 SUBJECTS.

Now Ready.

Lantern Slides to order from any of our Subjects. Glass Panels for Holiday Gifts. Photograph mounting in Albums or on Cards a Specialty. Albums Supplied. Yacht and Squadron Photos, New England Coast Views.

SOULE PHOTOGRAPH CO.,
PUBLISHERS.
338 L Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PRINCIPAL AGENCIES.
New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23rd Street.
Chicago: M. O'Brien & Son, 208 Wabash Avenue.
Philadelphia: J. E. McClees & Co., Ltd., 1417 Chestnut Street.
Washington: W. H. Veerhoff, 1217 F. Street.
San Francisco: W. K. Vickery, 224 Post St.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address
Miss LOUISE STOCKTON.
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

FRANK T. SABIN'S Catalogue of Fine and Rare Books, Engravings, Autographs, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to The Times.
Washington, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England, France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS
Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

Chicago, Rock Island
— AND —
Pacific Railway.

THE Favorite and Direct Line, furnishing the best facilities and accommodations, at lowest rates, to and from Chicago, Rock Island, Davenport, Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Watertown, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, St Paul, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Topeka, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS,

UNRIVALED for splendor of equipment, daily between Chicago and Des Moines and Council Bluffs, and between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, with superb through Dining-Car Service, FREE Reclining Chair Cars and Pullman Palace Sleepers.

THE POPULAR TOURIST LINE to and from Manitou, Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Glenwood Springs, and all the sanitary and scenic resorts of Colorado, offering choice of routes, via Denver, to and from Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FAST EXPRESS TRAINS daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to and from all important towns, cities and sections in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Kingfisher and El Reno in the Indian Territory.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager. JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

JUST OUT.

A New Volume of Poems by Edward Randall Knowles, LL. D.

For sale by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

J. STILMAN SMITH & COMPANY,
3 Hamilton Place, Boston.

LIBRARIAN.

Position as Librarian wanted by first assistant (male) in large library. Wide knowledge of literature, six years' experience. Terms moderate. L. B. N., care Literary World.

FOR SALE.—Volumes 9 to 12, inclusive, LITERARY WORLD, June, 1878, to December, 1881, inclusive. Complete, unbound. good condition. Apply A. C. SEEMANN, 108 North 4th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Advertising Rates:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 27 JANUARY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 2 Whole No. 498

MACMILLAN & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS

And Books Announced for Immediate Publication.

Just Published.

THE LOVER'S LEXICON.

A Handbook for Novelists, Playwrights, Philosophers and Minor Poets; but especially for the Enamoured. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

"It is unique in its treatment, delightful in its diction, quiet in its humor, and altogether satisfactory."—New York Herald.

Second Edition Just Ready.

Seventy Years of Irish Life.

Being the recollections of W. R. LE FANU. One vol., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt top, $1.75.

"This delightful book. . . . It is long since we have seen a book so full of entertaining matter as the 'Seventy Years of Irish Life,' by W. R. Le Fanu. This volume is stuffed as full of anecdotes as a Christmas pudding is with plums."—The Sun.

Third Edition Just Ready.

The Life and Art of Edwin Booth.

By WILLIAM WINTER, author of "Shakespeare's England," "Shadows of the Stage," etc. With 12 full-page portraits in character, reproduced by E. Bierstadt, and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

"It is a volume for which there is a distinct place in every American library."—The Independent.

Just Published.

NEW BOOK BY PROFESSOR BOYESEN.

A COMMENTARY ON THE WRITINGS OF HENRIK IBSEN.

By H. H. BOYESEN, Professor of Germanic Languages and Literature at Columbia College, author of "Goethe and Schiller," "Essays on German Literature," etc. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

Just Published. Vol. III. New Edition.

The Diary of Samuel Pepys.

With Lord BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F. S. A. 12mo, cloth, Vol. III., $1.50. Vols. I. and II. also ready, $1.50 each.

⁂ Also an edition on large paper, limited to 100 copies, sold only in sets, $5.00 per volume.

Fourth Edition Just Ready.

PROFESSOR GOLDWIN SMITH'S BRILLIANT WORK,

The United States:

AN OUTLINE OF POLITICAL HISTORY, 1492-1871.

By GOLDWIN SMITH, D. C. L., author of "Canada and the Canadian Question," etc. With Map. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

"It is a marvel of condensation and lucidity. In no other book is the same field covered so succinctly and well."—New York Sun.

THE DAWN OF ASTRONOMY.

A STUDY OF THE ASTRONOMY AND TEMPLE WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS.

With numerous Illustrations and full-page Plates. By J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F. R. S., author of "The Meteoritic Hypothesis," "The Chemistry of the Sun," etc. Royal 8vo. Just Ready.

Anatomy and Physiology for Nurses.

By DIANA C. KIMBER, Assistant Superintendent of Training School for Nurses, Blackwell's Island, and LOUISE DARCHE. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo. In Preparation.

Mental Development in the Child and the Race.

By J. MARK BALDWIN, Ph. D., Stuart Professor of Experimental Psychology in the College of New Jersey, author of "Handbook of Psychology." Crown 8vo. In Preparation.

THE EVANSTON COLLOQUIUM

Lectures on Mathematics.

Delivered before members of the Congress of Mathematics held in connection with the World's Fair in Chicago, at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., by FELIX KLEIN. Reported by Professor ZIWET, of the University of Michigan. 8vo. Just Ready.

Town Life in the Fifteenth Century.

By Mrs. JOHN RICHARD GREEN, author of "Henry the Second" (Twelve English Statesmen Series). Two vols. 8vo. In Preparation.

CHRONOLOGICAL OUTLINES OF AMERICAN LITERATURE.

By SELDEN L. WHITCOMB, A. M. With a preface by BRANDER MATTHEWS, Professor of Literature in Columbia College. Uniform with "Chronological Outlines of English Literature." 12mo.

NEW NOVELS.

THE KING OF SCHNORRERS.

Grotesques and Fantasies. By I. ZANGWILL, author of "Children of the Ghetto," etc. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Just Ready.

THE RAIDERS: Being Some Passages in the Life of the Faa Lord, and Earl of Little Egypt.

By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister, and Some Common Men." 12mo. In Preparation.

Catherine Furze.

By MARK RUTHERFORD.

Edited by his friend, REUBEN SHAPCOTT. 12mo. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL REVIEW.

A new Bi-monthly Publication under the Editorship of Professors BALDWIN (Princeton University) and CATELL (Columbia College). First number now ready. Single copies, 75 cents; annual subscription, $4.00.

The Physical Review.

A Journal of Experimental and Theoretical Physics. Conducted by EDWARD L. NICHOLS and ERNEST MERRITT. Published bi-monthly for Cornell University. Single copies, 50 cents; annual subscription, $3.00.

The Portfolio.

An Artistic Periodical. Edited by P. G. HAMERTON. Single copies, 75 cents; annual subscription, $7.50.

⁂ With the January number the Portfolio assumes a new and improved form, calculated to render it more attractive.

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, 66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

THE

Atlantic Monthly

FOR FEBRUARY.

CONTENTS:

PHILIP AND HIS WIFE. IV.-VII. Margaret Deland.
RECOLLECTIONS OF STANTON UNDER LINCOLN. H. L. Dawes.
TWO STRINGS TO HIS BOW. In Two Parts. Part I. Walter Mitchell.
TAO. William Davies.
IN A PASTURE BY THE GREAT SALT LAKE. Olive Thorne Miller.
A WINTER TWILIGHT. John B. Tabb.
FROM LITERATURE TO MUSIC. B. J. Lang.
"FOR FALSTAFF HE IS DEAD." Grace McGowan Cooke.
HAMILTON FISH. J. C. Bancroft Davis.
FRANCIS PARKMAN. Oliver Wendell Holmes.
HIS VANISHED STAR. XVI., XVII. Charles Egbert Craddock.
TAMMANY HALL. Henry Childs Merwin.
THE EDUCATIONAL LAW OF READING AND WRITING. Horace E. Scudder.
CONTEMPORARY ESSAYS.
A STUDY OF RUSSIA.
COMMENT ON NEW BOOKS.
THE CONTRIBUTORS' CLUB.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a number.

NEW BOOKS.

A Protegee of Jack Hamlin's, and Other Tales.

By BRET HARTE. 16mo, $1.25.

A new volume of Mr. Harte's inimitable stories nearly all relating to California and the West.

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and Other Stories.

By GERTRUDE SMITH. 16mo, $1.25.

A pretty book of fresh, vigorous, readable stories, some of which have appeared in The Century and other periodicals. Several of them are Western in scene and characters, some are located in New England, and one in Italy.

A Symphony of the Spirit.

Compiled by GEORGE S. MERRIAM, author of "The Story of William and Lucy Smith," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Mr. Merriam has gathered here, for the consolation of those who have lost dear friends, some threescore poems of faith and uplifting thought from Wordsworth, Tennyson, Browning, Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier, Matthew and Edwin Arnold, and others.

Familiar Letters of Sir Walter Scott.

With a fine Steel Portrait of Scott and an Autographic Plan of Abbotsford. 2 vols. 8vo, gilt top, $6.00.

"In perusing these fascinating pages we seem to live Sir Walter's life over again along with him."—London Telegraph.

The Cambridge Longfellow.

Longfellow's Poetical Works. Complete in an entirely new edition with a Biographical Sketch, Notes, Index to First Lines, a Portrait, and an Engraving of Longfellow's Cambridge Home. Printed from new plates, large type on opaque paper, and attractively bound. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, gilt top, $3.50; tree calf, or full levant, $5.50.

"In every respect a model of a low-priced but tasteful and substantial book."—The Outlook, New York.

Sold by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

ESTABLISHED 1870. SECOND HAND BOOKS.
Catalogues issued monthly. Sent free to book buyers.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Ye Olde Booke Man,
☞ Books Bought. 53 & 55 State Street, Albany, N. Y.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

LIBRARIAN.

Position as Librarian wanted by first assistant (male) in large library. Wide knowledge of literature, six years' experience. Terms moderate. L. B. N., care Literary World.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

JUST OUT.

A New Volume of Poems by EDWARD RANDALL KNOWLES, LL. D.

For sale by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

J. STILMAN SMITH & COMPANY,
8 Hamilton Place, Boston.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$15,029,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,579,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $23,000,000,
$1,790,000 of it in 1892.

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

UNMOUNTED PHOTOGRAPHS

of Ancient and Modern Works of Art, reproductions of famous paintings, sculpture and architecture, with views from all parts of the world. Send 15 cents for catalogues of 14,000 subjects (including 1893 supplement)

World's Fair Views
- - AND - -
Art at the Fair

SPECIAL LIST OF 130 SUBJECTS.

Now Ready.

Lantern Slides to order from any of our Subjects. Glass Panels for Holiday Gifts. Photograph mounting in Albums or on Cards a Specialty. Albums Supplied. Yacht and Squadron Photos, New England Coast Views.

SOULE PHOTOGRAPH CO.,
PUBLISHERS.
338 L Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PRINCIPAL AGENCIES.

NEW YORK: E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23rd Street.
CHICAGO: M. O'Brien & Son, 208 Wabash Avenue.
PHILADELPHIA: J. E. McClees & Co., Ltd., 1417 Chestnut Street.
WASHINGTON: W. H. Veerhoff, 1217 F. Street.
SAN FRANCISCO: W. K. Vickery, 224 Post St.

IF YOU ARE GOING

WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

FOR SALE.—Volumes 9 to 12, inclusive, LITERARY WORLD, June, 1878, to December, 1881, inclusive. Complete, unbound, good condition. Apply A. C. SEEMANN, 108 North 4th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

The Literary World

VOL XXV BOSTON 27 JANUARY 1894 No. 2

CONTENTS

Memoirs of Two Young Married Women . . . 19
Dean Stanley's Life and Letters . . . 19
The Japanese Buddha . . . 20
J. A. Symonds' Writings . . . 21
The Romance of an Empress . . . 21
Greek Lines . . . 22
Goldwin Smith's Essays . . . 22
The Book of the Fair . . . 22
The Religion of a Literary Man . . . 23

Original Poetry:

An Invocation. Alice Brown . . . 24
New York Letter . . . 24

Fiction:

Pomona . . . 25
Garrick's Pupil . . . 25
Apprentices to Destiny . . . 25
The Bailiff of Tewksbury . . . 25
The Recipe for Diamonds . . . 25
Six Boys . . . 25

Minor Notices:

The Aim of Life . . . 26
A Wild Sheep Chase . . . 26
In the Footsteps of the Poets . . . 26
In the Land of Cave and Cliff Dwellers . . . 26
Prairie Songs . . . 26
From Wisdom Court . . . 26
The Log of a Sky Pilot . . . 27
Mr. Fish and the Alabama Claims . . . 27
Romance of the Insect World . . . 27
The Humours of the Court . . . 27
Orchard Songs . . . 27
The English Romantic Movement . . . 27
Heart-Beats . . . 28
Stelligeri and Other Essays Concerning America . . . 28
Periodicals . . . 28
News and Notes . . . 29
Publications Received . . . 31

MEMOIRS OF TWO YOUNG MARRIED WOMEN.*

THIS volume, while not among the more famous of the novels of Honoré de Balzac, is one of the most pleasing. It has the charm of cleanliness and pathos. The story is told in a series of letters written by two young girls; separated at the door of their convent in Blois, they go forth to meet widely differing destinies. One returns to her home in Provence, where a husband is waiting for her — the son of a neighbor, double her age and broken and enfeebled by a long imprisonment in Siberia. Her consent is scarcely asked; it is a family arrangement. "I preferred to become the wife of Louis de l'Estorade rather than return to the convent — that is the plain truth," she writes her friend. "After making quite sure that, if I did not marry Louis, I should return to the convent, I resigned myself, as girls say. Having resigned myself I set to work to examine my situation so as to make the best of it. Perhaps nothing more is really needed for a happy marriage than a sincere friendship which covers many human imperfections with its harmonies."

Beginning with these tranquil and reasonable hopes Madame de l'Estorade gradually conquers happiness for herself. Her husband grows gradually youthful in the sunshine of her company; children come to fill her heart; a multitude of benevolent and engrossing interests keep her time and hands occupied. As years go on she learns how to return the ardent devotion which she inspires. Her friend, Louise de Chaulieu, meanwhile reverses her experience. She marries a romantic Spaniard, wears his life out by a series of tests and torments, is disconsolate for a few months, then marries again a man who has the power to make her as causelessly wretched as she had made her first husband. In the end she dies at thirty, in the full perfection of beauty and charm, the victim of a baseless jealousy. She is a striking type — one of those vivid, scintillating creatures ruled by whim and the senses, and yet with a spark of the divine, in the portrayal of whom Balzac excelled. Miss Wormeley's translation is made with her accustomed grace and facility.

DEAN STANLEY'S LIFE AND LETTERS.*

THE two volumes of the Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley are large and handsome octavos of 536 and 600 pages respectively. In all points of editorship and manufacture they are what such an important work should be. There is an analytic table of contents, repeated seriatim at the head of each chapter; an index to the whole concludes the second volume; and there are a number of excellent portraits and other illustrations. The portraits are two of the Dean, when Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford about 1860 and again in his later years, and one of Lady Augusta, his wife, who was a very ordinary looking woman of very lovely character. The other pictures are of the rectory and church of Alderley, where Stanley was born in 1815; of his father the bishop's palace at Norwich, and of his own workroom in the same; of his later home at Canterbury during his canonry in the cathedral; of his library in the deanery at Westminster; and of himself at work at his standing desk in the deanery. These pictures materially vivify the impression of the Dean's personality, and frame him pleasantly in his successive surroundings from childhood to the end. The type of the work is large and clear, the paper is cream laid, the margins are ample, the tops are gilt, the other edges are uncut, and the cloth binding is a plain purple, with the family escutcheon emblazoned on the side.

The literary history of the work is not without its own interest. Dean Stanley died in 1881, leaving an immense mass of letters and manuscripts and some informal beginnings towards a biography. By will he constituted his dear friend, Rev. Hugh Pearson, another intimate friend, Mr. Theodore Walrond, and Sir George Grove his literary trustees and executors, with full discretionary powers after consulting with Professor Jowett, just deceased, Dr. Vaughan, Master of the Temple, and Dr. Bradley, who succeeded him as Dean of Westminster, then Master of University College, Oxford. The preparation of the biography was finally committed to Mr. Walrond, who, however, died in 1887 when his task was only partly under way. Dean Bradley then took it up and carried it forward till 1891, when the immensity of it and his own limitations of time and strength obliged him to lay it down. It was then that Mr. Rowland Prothero succeeded to the undertaking, and he has finished it with Dean Bradley's and Sir George Grove's careful assistance.

There are not lacking passages of original biographical writing, in which Mr. Prothero describes, analyzes, or sums up traits in the character of his distinguished subject or passages in his career of special interest; but for the most part Stanley's own letters tell his story. The materials which his letters afford are well-nigh inexhaustible in quantity and almost incomparable in quality. Says Dean Bradley:

> He was the most indefatigable of letter-writers. His early letters from Seaforth, from Rugby, from Hurstmonceaux, from Oxford, from Cambridge, from Westmoreland, from Ireland, from Norwich, from Baden-Baden, would of themselves fill more than a volume.

And the habit of letter-writing grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength. We might almost say here, in a parenthesis, that as he wrote with more and more facility, what he wrote was read with more and more difficulty. His handwriting, while very legible at first, came to be of the most undecipherable description. How his biographer and his biographer's assistants ever succeeded in the term of years consumed in their task in merely reading the stacks of letters which were placed in their hands by Dean Stanley's family and friends must be left to the imagination to conceive.

It is to be doubted if anywhere in literature there is such a contribution to the autobiography of childhood and schoolboy life as is to be found in the first four chapters of the first volume. All the high animal spirits, all the freshness of thought, all the unconventionality of expression, all the freedom and largeness of mind and intense closeness and penetration of view which characterized the man are present, in the germ at least, in the child at Alderley or the boy at Rugby. It is no wonder that he who at the age of thirteen could so interpret and delineate the scenery of the Pyrenees should at the age of nineteen, at Oxford, be forming and stating judgments on delicate points of New Testament criticism, sore spots of ecclesiastical controversy, and heated leaders of political strife. Yet he has a word or words for everything or everybody, from the Pic Maladetta to Dr. Pusey, and his utterance always goes straight to the mark.

---

* Memoirs of Two Young Married Women. By Honoré de Balzac. Translated by Katharine P. Wormeley. Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

* The Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, late Dean of Westminster. By Rowland E. Prothero, with the Coöperation and Sanction of the Very Rev. G. G. Bradley, Dean of Westminster. With Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $8.00.

Stanley's life at Oxford traversed much of the stormy period of the Tractarian Movement, with which, we need not say, he had no sympathy, though he was younger than most of the famous men whose names are inseparably linked therewith. His leanings were all toward Dr. Arnold and Maurice, especially Arnold, whom he loved and venerated beyond words to express, and whose delight and pride in his Rugby pupil were touching to witness; and these leanings carried him so far in later years of theological controversy and ecclesiastical administration as to awaken serious distrust among the High Churchmen of the Establishment. His latitudinarianism — which, however, was his only arianism — did go far in some directions, considering his anchorage; but whatever his convictions nobody ever doubted their sincerity, or that he had the courage of them under all conditions. It is pleasant to see how in these respects the father was repeated in the son, and indeed in many ways the Dean of Westminster was the Bishop of Norwich over again. How he loved his mother, too, and what an impress she left upon him! These honored memories link this work with that other most delightful and edifying English family history, the Memorials of a Quiet Life, by Augustus J. C. Hare, which everybody who sets out to read this Life and Correspondence ought to read, or read again, as a domestic threshold to this larger and more public and famous biographical interior.

In the course of his life Dean Stanley was a great and observant traveler, and many of the most interesting chapters in this everywhere interesting work relate his experiences and impressions in foreign lands. In France and Spain and the Pyrenees in his early teens, as we have remarked above; in Bonn at study in 1837–39, in Italy and Greece in 1840–41, in Rome, Egypt, the Holy Land, and Constantinople in 1852, in Sweden and Russia in 1857, in Spain again in 1858, in Denmark in 1859, in Germany in 1860, in the East again and at Mount Athos in 1861, in the East a third time on that memorable tour with the Prince of Wales in 1862, in America in 1878, and on the Continent over and over again between 1862 and the end of his busy life, he traveled rapidly, with curiosity all alive, with enthusiasm all aglow, with descriptive powers that never wearied, with a pen that never halted. How ripe and rare a traveler he was his volume on Sinai and Palestine has shown to thousands of readers all over the world and the countless extracts from correspondence in these volumes amply confirm.

Dean Stanley's professional career divides itself roughly into three main portions: first, as Canon of Canterbury, from 1851 to 1856; second, as Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford, from 1856 to 1863; and third, as Dean of Westminster, from 1863 until his death. He was not out of place in an Oxford professorship, for which his Oxford tutorship in 1848 and after was a sort of preparation; but he was in his true and greatest place as Dean of Westminster. For this illustrious and congenial function his Canterbury canonry in like manner prepared him; this notwithstanding his incapacity for accounts, his ignorance of architecture, and his indifference to music — three serious disqualifications which in almost any other man would have been fatal. How lovingly he studied those ancient landmarks of English ecclesiasticism, how intelligently he interpreted their meanings, how tenderly he conserved their treasures, how generously he administered their privileges, the whole world knows and his successive Memorials of Canterbury and of Westminster amply testify. If ever a great and august material fabric had a soul, Dean Stanley was that soul of Westminster. Among all the monuments in that crowded edifice which today attract the feet and stir the emotion of the visitor, no two exert a more potent spell than those of the great Dean and Lady Augusta.

Over all this long, varied, brilliant life, over all this unique, gifted, most lovable personality, these volumes throw the spell of a radiant light and a heavenly temper. It is unavoidable to bracket this biography with that other great English biography just fresh from the press, Dr. Liddon's Life of Dr. Pusey. But how different the two men; how different the two types of men; how different the two schools of thought and character and churchmanship; and yet how like, how one, the spirit of both men, which made each what he was! Comparisons are invidious, and it is not for us to institute one here. But the reader will close the present fascinating portraiture with the conviction renewed and confirmed that in Dean Stanley we had a truly great man — a man great in the largeness of his mind and heart, great in his sympathies and aims, great in his versatility and adaptability, as great by the side of his Queen as he was by the side of the humblest workingman whom he showed around the abbey of his love. These pages, studded as they are with his own animated words, make us see him as he was — as he is; for such a light as this cannot have gone out in the darkness of death; it must be shining on in the kingdom of the Father.

THE JAPANESE BUDDHA.[*]

By the time that great system of metaphysics and religion known as Buddhism reached Japan it was as different from its original form as Mexican or Abyssinian Christianity from what Jesus taught. Among the very many Buddhisms of Asia that of Japan is the most peculiar and the least recognizable of the systems claiming to emanate from Gautama. Furthermore, the Japanese Buddhism of today is something amazingly different from the Buddhism first introduced from Korea in the sixth century, which had in it the blended elements of the Larger and the Smaller "Vehicles," or of Northern and Southern Buddhism; whereas the forms introduced from China in the ninth and tenth centuries, and developed on the soil, are unique forms of Northern Buddhism only, with its Paradise, its Goddess of Mercy, and many features unknown to the Buddhists of Southern and Peninsular Asia. Like the painters and preachers of mediæval Europe and the Renaissance, who depict Christ and the apostles in Italian, Spanish, or Dutch garments and environment, so the Japanese paint Gautama in the fashions and amid the surroundings of Kioto, Kamakura, and Zenkoji.

The Rev. J. L. Atkinson, a missionary of the American Board in Kobé, Japan, has done well in putting into the English dress of a free translation one of the many lives of Buddha which are popular in Japan. That he has condensed the long work within readable limits one may be devoutly thankful. He who has toiled over the amazingly long sentences and prolix details of Japanese historical and religious books will especially appreciate the work which this scholarly translator has bestowed on his volume. The original work translated is the Shaka Hasso Monogatari, which is known to have been published in 1665, but is probably older than that date. There are other lives, with one of which, the Shaka Jitsu-roku, the reviewer is more familiar, but the details in both books are much the same; many of these details, by the way, are utterly unknown to the scriptures of Southern Buddhism. Moreover, as the author well says and as the inquirers in Japan well know, the writings of Southern Buddhism, which is considered by European scholars to be the more orthodox, are but very slightly known even among the Japanese priesthood. Only last month the Buddhist newspapers of Tokio were complaining of the lack of interest in the study of Sanskrit and that Mr. Bunyiu Nanjio, M. A. Oxon., was receiving no encouragement, his voice as yet being a [*] Prince Siddartha, the Japanese Buddha. By John L. Atkinson. Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. $1.25.

---

vox clamantis. The book is well worth reading, and is so interesting that it is a pity that the translator's remarks, comments, and polemics were not thrown into the form of footnotes or put into a separate chapter. There is a spirited introduction by Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D. The book deserves a wide reading beyond the circle of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, whom the translator had especially in view. If Buddhism has anything good to offer the English-speaking world ought to know it; both the translator and the publishing society have done well to furnish us with some elements of real Buddhism, rather than the thoughts evolved from Western minds which have so often passed current as the fruits of Eastern wisdom.

J. A. SYMONDS' WRITINGS.*

IT is very pleasant to see that Mr. John Addington Symonds is not likely to be left out of sight by readers if publishers can prevent it by the issue of new and comely editions of his works. Of the books named below the first and the last, indeed, were edited by Mr. Symonds himself in his wintry home at Davos Platz, but they come to his many admirers on this side of the Atlantic in an almost posthumous manner. The Short History of the Renaissance he seems to have seen in manuscript only.

The Studies of the Greek Poets were published twenty years ago, and have all this time been a favorite book both with the Greek scholar and with the English reader who knew no Greek but wished to enter into the spirit of Homer, Pindar, the three great dramatists of Greece, Aristophanes, and the minor lyrists, idylists, and comedians. Mr. Symonds belonged distinctively among the truly literary critics who esteem the Dryasdust details of philology at their proper worth but dwell with main emphasis upon the fair and enduring qualities which still make the literature of ancient Greece a power in modern life. Not a very systematic work, these two volumes are studies, not literary history in the full sense of the term. For this very reason they have an attraction of their own in their freedom and discursiveness. In this third edition a chronological order has been observed in the arrangement of the papers and a study added of the Mimiambi of Herondas, with a number of translated poems. The Clark Press of Edinburgh has done its usual good work on the volumes.

Mrs. Symonds tells us in a brief preface that her husband favored the plan of a condensation of his seven fascinating volumes on the Renaissance for the benefit of those unable or disinclined to read all these. He gladly turned the task over to Colonel Pearson, an associate of the family for some years at Davos and an accomplished student of Italy. The compiler has aimed to select and arrange from Mr. Symonds the matter best fitted to sustain and promote an interest in Italian history, art, and literature. The author believed that "the intention of his large work had been thoroughly appreciated by Colonel Pearson, and its essence reproduced without any important omission." This testimony may well suffice to commend the work, which is now accessible to American readers in two forms. The imported volume is the larger of the two and well made after the excellent traditions of the English trade; the portrait it gives is of later date than that in the Holt edition. This has the advantage of a smaller size, but the type is, of course, small, too. In either form Mr. Symonds' work will doubtless greatly increase its multitude of readers.

The Essays are not for those who desire short histories, but for those who grant with pleasure to a cultivated and accomplished mind full room to pour out its treasures. The more cultivated the reader himself, the more will he enjoy these discussions of criticism, style, democratic art, the relations of the arts to each other, to science and morality, and their fundamental ideas. The most solid matter is to be found in the first essay on "The Philosophy of Evolution," but the "Notes on Style" give one of the best treatments of that vexed subject. We may occasionally desire a stricter, more scientific treatment of certain points, and here in America we may well believe that Mr. Symonds overrated Walt Whitman's importance in "Democratic Art." But with a mind so full of knowledge, generous in sympathies, instinctively drawn to the best in letters and in art, and able to draw others thereto with sweet compulsion, it is always good to associate. Such volumes as this are manuals of liberal education in noble matters.

---

*Studies of the Greek Poets. By John Addington Symonds. Third edition. Two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $6.00.

A Short History of the Renaissance in Italy. Taken from the work of John Addington Symonds by Lieutenant Colonel Alfred Pearson. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.75.

The Same. Henry Holt & Co. $1.75.

Essays Speculative and Suggestive. By the Same. New edition in one volume. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.

THE ROMANCE OF AN EMPRESS.*

THIS volume is rather hard in its style — the result of using another language than one's own (R. Waliszewski, a Russian, wrote in French which has been translated into English), but testifies to an extraordinary amount of research. Russian state papers, periodicals, and family records and the archives of the French Foreign Office have been diligently searched and a mass of material extracted from them which has never before been published. It is not surprising that the circulation of the book has been prohibited in Russia, for it not only shows how Catherine II became what she was as empress, but also how the Russian government took from her some of its worst features not yet eradicated. The frequent repetition in the analysis of Catherine's character is indeed wearisome, and the constant balancing of the opinions of her contemporaries concerning her, however laudable in the interests of impartiality, might have been condensed. Yet the conflicting evidence about certain events is brought forward with great lucidity, as in regard to Catherine's share in her husband's death. M. Waliszewski has comprehended her ambitions, her policy, her amours, her temperament, with the sympathy of an intelligent student of the abnormal. Hence we have the first full, frank life of her that has ever been written. The biographer investigates carefully her childhood and girlhood, finding in them the dominant trait of policy and the ability to make an impression of her best self in public which characterized her later career.

Catherine became a Russian from policy. She cared for "the public," as she wrote confidentially — but the author shows here as elsewhere that backward-looking memoirs are apt to be delusive, for there never was a Russian "public," only an army. Catherine's elevation to the throne was by "occupative right." Her activity was never continuous, and yet moderation was unknown to her. She was a "great temperament, not a great intellect." Her open amours, though not vulgar, were vital to her, and through them the reign of favoritism was inaugurated. On her masculine favorites she spent more than 400 millions of francs at the then rate of exchange. Depression and exaltation of sentiment were alike foreign to her; witness her reply to a love letter of Patiomkine's, where she answered him point by point on the margin of his own note. She was merciful to her servants, long-suffering with her lovers, who usually deserted her, and, oddly enough, for the sake of her country she was, if not the first, almost the first to be inoculated in her empire. She managed men, yet she always needed to lean upon a man, and so she elevated her favorites to be her ministers. Her home policy belied her apparent girlish enthusiasms. She was afraid to free her serfs. She lightened none of their burdens, but she performed individual dramatic acts of kindness which won her renown. She tried to hasten judicial proceedings, and never signed a death-warrant, though she allowed the knout to be used. She had money for her reforms, her gifts, and her favorites because she issued paper money whenever she needed it, and Russia has suffered in consequence ever since. Her foreign policy was brilliant, as shown in the division of Poland, the conquest of the Crimea, and her treatment of Prussia. Catherine tried to be artistic, educational, and literary. She wrote letters, memoirs, state documents, fiction, and even began a translation of the Iliad. Of her old age — but she was never really old — M. Waliszewski says little, and nothing of her death. To explain her was his task; this he has done vigorously, critically, but sympathetically. The portrait from Bartolozzi's engraving of Benedetti's painting, which makes the frontispiece of the book, is charming.

---

*The Romance of an Empress. Catherine II of Russia. From the French of R. Waliszewski. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

GREEK LINES.*

SUCH a book as this is exceedingly welcome after the vanishing of the World's Columbian Exposition. Now that the White City has become a remembered vision, it is well for the cultured mind to inquire just why its forms so enthralled and delighted the mind. In Jackson Park the spirit of Greek beauty came to resurrection. Many of us whose purses are slender cannot travel in Greece or along the rim of the Mediterranean where the Greek cities once stood and where their ruins now lie. Yet some of us are, or imagine we are, poets, though we never write any verses; and "the poet," says a Japanese proverb, "without traveling abroad sees all the beautiful places." Sensitive to beauty and able to recognize it in its Greek form, some of us enjoyed the White City because it "touched with emotion" our little knowledge of the Greek history and genius.

Mr. Van Brunt intimates that he sends forth this book to please his "brethren in the craft;" he is not unmindful, however, that the interest with which these essays have been received by the laity may be attributed mainly to the fact that they have been developed rather from practice than from theory. He is certainly right in saying that they have the advantage of that sort of sincerity which is the natural product of conviction rather than sentiment. In its outward dress the book tells its own story, even as an edifice ought to tell its purpose and meaning. Besides the choice paper, print, and binding, which in themselves form a sort of documentary equivalent for the name of the publishers, there are enough cuts and pictures in the work to form excellent illustration and commentary. As for style, we are reminded continually of the best, not the worst, characteristics of Mr. Ruskin. As we read we have been constantly tempted to draw a contrast between the style of one who is a student and critic, a lover of beauty and a worker with the pen and pencil but not a practical builder, and one who has to know the mechanical as well as the æsthetic side of his work. In the first essay, the most fascinating of all, Mr. Van Brunt shows what Greek lines are and how strongly modified they became not only in the hands of the less intellectual Romans, but also in those of modern nations, so that these very modifications are an index to the character of the pupil-people. "Architecture properly conceived should always contain within itself a direct appeal to the sense of fitness and propriety, the common sense of mankind which is ever ready to recognize reason, whether conveyed by the natural emotions of the mute or the no less natural motions of lines." Mr. Van Brunt urges that architects should be instructed by the past and guided by principles and not by the prejudices of the schools. To create as true artists we must know ourselves and our distinct capacities for the utterance of monumental history. The other essays treat of conscience in architecture, the personal equation, the present state of architecture, architecture and poetry, and the Chateau of Blois. We can heartily recommend this stimulating and enriching volume.

GOLDWIN SMITH'S ESSAYS.*

WE remember hearing a connoisseur of contemporary English style say that "the best English on this side of the Atlantic is written by two of the great family of Smiths, the one Newman and the other Goldwin, and the second is the more brilliant of the two." The style of the volume before us would be a reason for its existence though all the conclusions of the essays were rejected. One might profitably read the volume through simply as an exercise in the art of arranging words and building sentences according to their best values, and to enjoy the splendor and glory of the English language in the hands of a master. Most of the essays have been before the public in the higher periodical literature, but their interest is by no means spent, for the questions treated are still living and unsolved, and they concern especially the men of the English-speaking world. Professor Smith declares himself "a Liberal of the old school, as yet unconverted to state socialism, who looks for further improvement not to an increase of the authority of government but to the same agencies, moral, intellectual, and economical, which have brought us thus far, and one of which, science, is now operating with immensely increased power. A writer of this school can have no panacea or nostrum to offer, and when one is offered he will be found on the critical side. He expects little from violence or revolution, but much from improvement, and that gradually. The clearest gain reaped by the world from all its struggles will be liberty of opinion."

There is no mistaking what Professor Smith means, for his essays always start out with a proposition which he proceeds to elucidate and to prove in language crystal clear. Treating of social and industrial revolution, he criticises the literature of which Looking Backward may be called the type, and asks, How can there be progress beyond perfection? "Finality is the trap into which all Utopians fall." The question of disestablishment of the Church of England is discussed with that thorough knowledge and that wonderful variety of light and shade which only a long residence and keen study in England could make use of. In handling the political crisis in England there is a clear grasp of the vast and complicated forces now in movement and much to give thought to the American who believes in government by party. In the discussion of the British Empire there is a consummate grasp of the actual facts of history; probably without intending it the author makes the American feel that, despite the long centuries of political experience enjoyed by the Englishmen, they have scarcely made any better politicians than are produced by the American federal system. To one who can read between the lines there may be light here on the Hawaiian question. Woman suffrage is discussed from a conservative point of view, and here the prejudices of the author against the French and the French Revolution shine in their full force. We are always thankful that we are American when we read the orthodox Englishman's opinions about France, Russia, or Ireland. The Jewish question is discussed with all the resources of a scholar who is acquainted with economics and the higher criticism, as well as with scriptural, European, and universal history. To him the Jew is a parasite, if not a vampire sucking the rich blood of Christendom. "He will either have to return to Jerusalem or to forget it." We all know how Professor Smith feels in regard to the Irishman and the Irish question. His final word seems to hint at the "dread arbitrament" of war, possibly within a generation. The essay on prohibition in Canada and the United States ought to be read by all "temperance" people, especially of the intemperate sort. An appendix deals with the Oneida community and American socialism. The work should have an index.

THE BOOK OF THE FAIR.*

A PERMANENT memorial of the Chicago Exposition not unworthy of it will be Mr. H. H. Bancroft's magnificent book, which is to be made up of twenty-five parts of forty pages each, published semi-monthly. Each of these parts is printed in fine typography by the Blakely Company of Chicago, heavy paper being used to afford the best ground for the many illustrations, which are, of course, the preëminent feature of the work. There are to be two thousand of these illustrations, varying in size from vignettes, two or three inches square, of many of the able men who engineered the enormous undertaking so successfully, to full-page plates covering 102 square inches. Most of the views are process work well done — the poorest, naturally, being the largest, while many of the smaller pictures are very good. To a certain extent every work of this kind has to sacrifice quality to quantity unless a prohibitive price be put upon the volumes. Mr. Bancroft seems to us to have steered wisely amid the various difficulties which attend such an undertaking, and to have selected with good taste the scenes and objects to be represented out of the distracting multitude of the world on exhibition in Jackson Park. No collection of photographs that we have seen at any price will give so comprehensive and, on the whole, so artistic a survey as the twenty-five parts of The Book of the Fair promise.

---

* Greek Lines and Other Architectural Essays. By Henry Van Brunt. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

* Essays on Questions of the Day. By Goldwin Smith. Macmillan & Co. $2.25.

* The Book of the Fair. An Historical and Descriptive Presentation of the World's Science, Art and Industry, as Viewed through the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. By Hubert Howe Bancroft. Parts I-III. Chicago and San Francisco: The Bancroft Co. $1.00 per part.

Mr. Bancroft practices here, we presume, the methods of cöoperation in composition with which the public has been made familiar by his many volumes on the Pacific slope. In a clear and readable style he presents, in the three parts before us, five chapters dealing with fairs of the past, the history of Chicago, the evolution of the Columbian Exposition, the site, the plans, the artificers, the management, the auxiliary, the finances, the progress from the dedication to the opening, and the naval review at New York; and then, with Chapter VI, he takes up for detailed description the Government Building. As this was generally conceded to be "the only discordant architectural note in Jackson Park," it was well to begin with it and get it out of the way. The rare and curious exhibits in it were, however, sufficiently numerous to afford the artist material for one of the most attractive series of pictures.

Mr. Bancroft and his coadjutors have not been too bold in naming their work the Book of the Fair. In its comprehensiveness of description and statistics, in its literary ability, and in its copious and beautiful pictorial embellishment it stands preëminent as a memorial of the wonderful city by Lake Michigan:

> Fled is that music; did I wake or dream?

THE RELIGION OF A LITERARY MAN.[*]

THIS little volume, charmingly printed after the best manner of Messrs. Elkin Matthews and John Lane, is a spirited and persuasive confession of faith by a man of true poetical insight into the heart of things and of unusual power of style. The world of man being divided naturally into spiritualists and materialists, he sides with the former, but not therefore with the churches. "'Religion,' as conventionally understood, makes more materialists than science. Organized religion is but a form of more or less arbitrary symbolism. For some few the symbolism is alive; is transparent and radiant with the occult significance for which it stands. For the majority it is as opaque as the rest of these daily interests." Mr. Le Gallienne, not subscribing to the particular form of the symbolism of any church, knows that he will be rejected not only by all such but also by "the typical literary man of the period, who sips his absinthe (with a charmingly boyish sense of sin) and reads Huysmans. To discuss such antiquated matters as God, Love, and Duty, when one might be wrangling over Degas or grappling with a sonnet by Mallarmé!"

Though the "Relative Spirit" teaches us to judge men's faith and actions by the time in which they live, "it carries us too far if it causes us to imagine that there is nothing absolute in life, nothing which is not, after all, a matter of opinion." On the contrary, "the vital question of the modern world is What is Sin?" and sin is "that which in any time or country, or under whatsoever conditions or outward appearances, means the living by the lower instead of the higher side of our natures." Looking at life from another standpoint than that of the "Sentimental Spectator," and taking pain not "in bulk" but in its actual mixture with good and pleasure, and rejecting modern pessimism, which "means but two things: cowardice and selfishness," we find life "a reality governed by illusions" — one of which is the common notion of free will:

> Though the astronomy of Copernicus is taught in our schools, the world still remains Ptolemaist. We still practically believe that the whole of the firmament is an immense candelabra for lighting this bit of an earth; that it revolves round us instead of our revolving with it round some inconceivably remote center. We are accustomed to talk as though God is our servant, and that his laws must needs square with our desires. We are silly enough to talk of our rights. Man has no rights in regard to God. He has only mercies. He exists for God, and not God for him. The incorrigible presumption and irreverence of man! It never seems to occur to him that the joy and good things of life which he undoubtedly possesses have come to him all unasked and unworked for — a free boon. . . . Our rights! Our grievances against God! When we have given due thanks for our mercies — for the mere sky and sunshine, for the wonder of love, for the miracle of beauty, for the humblest joys of sensation — then it will be time to talk about those.

Mr. Le Gallienne, thus grateful for the good he finds, believes that whatever theory may be true about immortality "it does not really much matter. . . . The life here is sufficient unto itself," and that "our clinging to personal identity is an illusion. We do not really cherish it so much as we imagine. What we do cherish is living." Christianity is meant for this life, in any case. "Christ's teaching was an impassioned morality based upon a profound mysticism. Very soon that mysticism became hopelessly perverted by teachers incapable of understanding it, and the dogmas into which it hardened almost entirely obscured its morality as well. . . . The great dogmas of the religion of the future will be Love, Beauty, Purity, and Strength." Such a faith, the true religion of Christ, will be assisted by the cultivation of the natural religious senses — the spiritual sense, the sense of wonder, the sense of beauty, the sense of pity, the sense of duty, the sense of gratitude, and even the sense of humor. Commenting keenly on the relation of these senses to religion, our literary man declares that "the all-pervading sanctity of life is the one message religion has had to deliver." His words of disdain for the pessimists, the décadents, and the shallow of every sort are incisive. He has not the apparatus of scholarship which Matthew Arnold possessed, but his general result is much the same. He has made a singularly fresh and unconventional statement of the perennial beauty and force of the religious sentiment, which deserves the close attention in particular of the aspiring geniuses who feel themselves to have got beyond religion.

— Edward Spencer Mead, of the firm of Dodd, Mead & Co., died on the 10th inst. at his home in Southampton, Long Island. Mr. Mead was born in New York City forty-seven years ago. After obtaining his early education in New York, he entered Yale University, from which institution he was graduated in the class of '69. Soon afterward he married the daughter of John S. C. Abbott, the historian. In 1870 he and Mr. Frank H. Dodd bought out the publishing business of M.W. Dodd, the latter's father. Mr. Mead had charge of the larger part of the literary department, while Mr. Dodd looked after the manufacturing end. In addition to his other duties, Mr. Mead found time to write several books, and also translated some works of French authors.

— In reading the reports of the various trades, the closing of mills and factories, the stagnation in new undertakings, and retrenchment generally during the past year, we realize that the book trade has reason to congratulate itself upon its undiminished activity. Amid all the discouraging surroundings and commercial disaster it has accomplished a year's work as a producer, at least, that surpasses all its previous records. The American publishers have issued more books during 1893 than in any previous year, the books recorded by us being over two hundred more than in 1892, and the titles recorded by the Librarian of Congress exceeding the record of the previous year by over three thousand. — Publishers' Weekly.

— The chair of English literature to be established at Yale with the bequest of $70,000 left for that purpose by the late Judge Edward Billings will be known as the Emily Sanford Professorship of English Literature.

---

[*] The Religion of a Literary Man. (Religio Scriptoris). By Richard Le Gallienne. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

The Literary World

BOSTON 27 JANUARY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

An Invocation.

O melody! O melody!
For whom the muses sing and sigh,
And bind their loves in choric call,
Till all Olympus lies in thrall;
O hither fly, and wait thou nigh
While our dull discords vainly die.

O syren old, in witching old,
Take up again thy harp of gold,
And strike the strings in moving strain
With echoing fall and soft refrain;
Then loud and bold the measure hold
Till some new tale is nobly told.

Yet if thou fear these valleys drear,
Our sullied springs and pasture sear,
Lend from above one lyric note
To pierce and rend our hollow rote;
That we may hear with tunèd ear,
May dream we wake and thou art near!

ALICE BROWN.

NEW YORK LETTER.

REV. DR. WILLIAM HENRY FURNESS, father of the distinguished Shakespearian scholar and the oldest living graduate of Harvard College, spent a few days here last week. Though now in his ninety-second year, he is still in good health, still intellectually if not physically active, and full of interest in life. I had the pleasure of meeting him the other day and listening to him as he gave some reminiscences. It seemed strange to hear him talk of his college days and the old Harvard that he used to know, so different from the new. Emerson was in college with him, and of the philosopher he spoke with great affection. "Waldo," he said — "we used to call him Waldo then — was always studious. I had known him in the preparatory school, and even there he had been devoted to books and to writing. In college he spent most of his time in study and literary work; he never could do much in athletics, but he had the highest admiration for those who could. In fact, he was always admiring the abilities of others. In those days the students of Harvard were wild on the subject of rhetoric. Whenever an undergraduate made a clever turn of speech or a fine-sounding aphorism, it was repeated all over the college and he was covered with honor. Edward Everett excelled in this particular and won in youth great local renown. His brother, John Everett, was also a young man of very great ability, but he died in early youth."

Dr. Furness interested me very much by telling about one of the brightest of the Harvard men of his time. This was William Person, whose singular surname owed its derivation to the fact that he was a foundling. He led his class in college and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. At one time, however, it was reported that he was about to leave Cambridge on account of lack of funds to meet his expenses. As soon as this became known his classmates collected money for him, and by this means he was enabled to continue his studies. "He wrote charming verse," said Dr. Furness, "but he died very young. I believe that his poems were collected in a little volume after his death."

It is always pleasant to meet a venerable optimist — one, of course, never expects to find a young optimist — and Dr. Furness is the most optimistic of his kind. This is notably true in his attitude toward religion. Though he retired from regular service in the Unitarian Church at the age of seventy-five, he still preaches occasionally and takes a keen interest in all religious work. He saw the beginnings of Unitarianism in Boston, and he loves now to tell of the intense prejudice against the new sect in his early days. "Ah," he said, "the Congress of Religions at the World's Fair was very wonderful. It showed how the barriers of religious prejudices have been broken down during the past fifty years. And now I look forward to the time when all men will be united in religious faith. I don't mean that the sects are to adopt the same ceremonial; indeed, I doubt if this would be desirable. But they will be one in spirit."

"Do you know," said a literary man to me the other day, "I think I can see a change of attitude in the public mind toward the profession of literature. Literary men are now far more respected than they were a quarter of a century ago. Twenty-five years from now journalism will also be more respected than it is at the present time. It is certainly less sensational than it used to be, all opinions to the contrary notwithstanding, and the large numbers of college men who go into it every year are sure in the end to improve its quality." Whether this be true or not, it is certainly a fact that much work of genuine literary quality is now being done in several of the New York papers. This work brings those who do it comparatively little fame, that is, little public fame, for journalistic reputations exist, as a rule, only among newspaper workers. There is no doubt, however, that journalism can give men of talent a good preparation for literary work; it at least gives facility of expression; on the other hand, it may mar and possibly destroy certain kinds of literary ability. The reporter, for example, comes face to face with life and is obliged to write of things as he sees them, which in a way is admirable practice, but he has to do all this hastily, which often leads to the formation of a bad style. As for the element of imagination which is supposed to predominate in pure literature, stories that I hear about methods of work on some of our dailies indicate that this element is given splendid play in journalism.

New York newspaper writers like to tell the story of the great "beat" of Foster Coates, now editor of the Commercial Advertiser, which illustrates the possibilities of the use of imagination in newspaper work. It happened several years ago, when Mr. Coates was editor of the Mail and Express, which had not then fallen under the domination of the late Colonel Shepard. News was sent to New York that all the telegraph wires connecting with Charleston, S. C., had been cut down. As soon as Mr. Coates heard of it his quick brain conceived the idea that the city had been upheaved by a terrible earthquake. So he determined to risk all to gain all. He sent for an artist, told him to hunt up a picture of Charleston in one of the libraries and to make a sketch of it. The sketch was completed as quickly as possible and presented to the editor. "Now," he cried to the artist, "knock off the tops of these public buildings and make a scene of general wreckage." While this was being done Mr. Coates shut himself up in his office and wrote column upon column of an imaginary account of the earthquake. The picture and account were at once published, and they naturally created a tremendous sensation. Several of the other evening papers of a more conservative character came out denying the story and trying to allay the excitement. But Mr. Coates stuck to his guns even when Mr. David Dudley Field, then owner of the paper, stalked up to the office and in stentorian tones asked the editor how he had dared to publish such a story. "If it isn't true, you have ruined my property, sir," he cried. Up and down his office Mr. Coates paced excitedly, his face white with anxiety. For hours he had to bear the strain. At last he heard one of the telegraph operators cry out the news that a terrible earthquake had actually taken place in Charleston. The reaction was too much for the editor; he fell fainting. But he became the hero of the hour and his admiring staff gave him a handsome testimonial.

Mr. Richard Harding Davis has written a novelette of life in America, Europe, and Africa, which the Harpers will soon publish serially. It is presumably based upon his recent experiences in the East. Mr. Davis has hitherto confined himself almost wholly to short stories, and it will be interesting to see how he succeeds with a more sustained work. Three years ago, however, he wrote a brief serial, "How the Reporter Made Himself King," a tale for young people.

The volume of poems which Mr. Gilbert Parker is soon to bring out through Stone & Kimball of Chicago will include much of the verse which he wrote some time ago before he launched out as a novelist. It was his first intention to bring out the book anonymously, but this plan was at the last moment changed. Those who know Mr. Parker's work by his fiction only will not be surprised to hear of his having dipped into verse, for much of his prose has a genuine poetic quality. The book is to be brought out with that excellence of workmanship for which Stone & Kimball have already won distinction. This and other literary interests have kept Mr. Parker longer in this country this winter than he had plannèd to remain. He has kept putting off his visit to Mexico for several weeks, but he will probably go there before very long.

Mr. Oscar Wilde has changed his mind about his lecture tour in this country. He probably finds that he does not need the money enough to be persuaded to endure America for another season. To his friends in London, even to his American friends, he makes no secret of his dislike for this country, which he regards as unlovely in nearly all respects. One of these friends, an American author, has spent several months in London recently. I asked him the other day if Mr. Wilde had abandoned his old desire to reform men's dress — the desire which caused him to be so ridiculous during his tour here several years ago. "O, no," he replied, "Wilde is as ardent an æsthete as ever. He has given up wearing his æsthetic costume simply because he's too fat for it." The "Woman of No Importance," by the way, has been taken off by the Coghlans after a surprisingly brief run. So it can hardly be regarded as a financial success here.

Mr. James A. Herne, whose plays both Mr. Howells and Mr. Hamlin Garland have commended enthusiastically, has at last won recognition in New York. His realistic drama of New England life, "Shore Acres," is a very great success at Daly's and promises to run for many months. How literary men will gasp when they hear that from this work Mr. Herne expects to make by the end of the season a quarter of a million of dollars!

Mr. F. Marion Crawford has nearly completed the new novel on which he has been engaged for the last few months, and it is said that the Macmillans will bring it out late in the spring. It is known to deal with American life, and there is a rumor in literary circles here that in it the author has introduced an American family whose fortunes he will treat in several novels as he did with the Saracinesca family in his Roman series. A friend of Mr. Crawford's who has seen the new work in manuscript said to me the other day: "A good many people think that Crawford is less successful in treating life in this country than he is in dealing with Europe and the East; but I believe that after the new novel appears they will change their opinion, for it is a fine piece of writing." This story will be the first of Mr. Crawford's novels to be illustrated. Alfred Brennan will make the drawings.

The Macmillans have in press a new book of a rather peculiar character by I. Zangwill, who is now very popular in England. It is called The King of Schnorrers and it deals with the Jews of London during the latter part of the eighteenth century. The work consists of a series of sketches more or less loosely connected, and it will be quaintly and copiously illustrated. Mr. Zangwill is as yet comparatively little known in America, but it is thought that he is going to have a vogue here.

Mrs. Ward's book, which the same house has promised for the middle of next month, is being eagerly anticipated. It was to have been brought out early in January, but the illness of the author and her careful work on the proofs have delayed it. Marcella will deal with the fortunes of a young girl who does work among the poor of London. As Mrs. Ward has herself been active in the founding of University Hall, the well-known settlement in London for the benefit of the poor and the unfortunate, she will in this story be on ground that is familiar to her.

JOHN D. BARRY.

FICTION.

Pomona.

The simplicity, leisurely humor, and genuine straightforwardness of thought that have always characterized the author of Miss Toosey's Mission receive fresh exemplification in her new book, though its scope is somewhat wider than that of her earlier volumes. It is the story of a girl left motherless in earliest babyhood and given over to the absolute possession of one who justifies her desire to take the child by all a mother's care and devotion. Closely connected with the fortunes of Pomona is the life of another girl, less fortunate, apparently, in outward circumstances, but delightfully natural in all her thoughts, emotions, and experiences. The love story is most unconventional in its outcome. The lover who might have been "happy with either" fails of both, the author would say deservedly. The beatitude, "Happy is the girl who loses her first lover," is often proved to be based on sound reasoning, but in this case we must take it for granted, since we are told no more. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Garrick's Pupil.

This is the story of a young actress, Esther Woodville, who sits for her portrait to Sir Joshua Reynolds, where she meets her fate in the person of the foundling, Francis Monday, apprentice of the painter. Being a bewitching beauty she is persecuted by the unprincipled Lord Mowbray, who attempts to abduct her after the fashion of the times. Matters are complicated by the mysterious Lebeau, who plays a double part, and by Esther's fanatic Quaker cousin Reuben, who means to secure her for himself. In the course of the story Dr. Johnson, Burke, Gibbon, young William Pitt, and other distinguished men are introduced and sketched by a few touches. A very fair picture of London society of that period, with its frequent intrigues and free-and-easy manners, is given in these pages.— A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00.

Apprentices to Destiny.

The lesson of this book by Lily A. Long, author of The Squire of Low Degree, would seem to be that young women only half matured in mind and less than half informed as to facts would do well not to dabble in socialism and write leaders for anarchistic journals without due consideration as to just what it is that they are teaching. Joyce Mabie, the heroine of the novel, goes off at halfcock in an article on "The Necessity of Organized Labor against Capital;" as a consequence, the hands of her lover's factory, ordered out on strike to sustain a boycott, promptly fire the works and burn them to the ground. The consequences to Joyce herself are not altogether painful, as the destruction of the factory sets Mr. Paul Rodman free to pursue bacteriology, which is his natural bent, and he and she go off to a college professorship and are comfortable; but we should imagine that the absolute annihilation of a promising industry which supported a number of men and their families might have sometimes occurred to her in after life as a serious consequence of a girl's headstrong act, and a matter calling for repentance. — Merrill & Baker. $1.00.

The Bailiff of Tewksbury.

The interest of this story, written by C. E. D. Phelps and Leigh North, is mainly dependent on its Elizabethan setting and its use of Shakespearean tradition and problems. The hero is William Helpes, supposed to be the dearest friend of Shakespeare and the mysterious W. H., called by Thorpe "onlie begetter" of the Sonnets. He shares with Shakespeare in the midnight poaching escapade in the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, forever remembered by his activity in enforcing game privileges. Sweet Mistress Dorothy, niece of Sir Thomas, aids the poachers to escape, winning the tender interest of both. Since Shakespeare is obliged to betake himself to London the field is clear for Helpes, who wooes, wins, and marries the maid. It will be readily seen that this scheme gives room for effective use of certain sonnets, though Shakespeare himself hardly appears again. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00.

The Recipe for Diamonds.

The motif of this romance, by C. J. Cutliffe Hyne, is a formula left concealed by Raymond Lully in a "Tayalot" in the island of Minorca which gives the process for converting carbon into diamonds. The place is designated in a diary written by him in Spanish; two Englishmen stumble on the discovery, and two others become accidentally apprised of it; all of them make for Minorca with the utmost haste, and the tale of their inventions and circumventions is sufficiently entertaining. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Six Boys.

Mrs. Elizabeth W. Champney has quite outdone herself in this brilliant story. The six boys — though one of the number was a girl — were the three children of the rich Huntingtons — "Hanx," "Trix," and little Jack; "Bricktop" Heywood; Percy Coffin, the minister's son; and "Riggers," or Rodrigua, a Brazilian boy in the care of Mr. Coffin. Several of them are as full of mischief as it is in the nature of young human creatures to be; and Riggers, who has all the knightly honor of a Sir Philip Sidney, is made to suffer for their pranks and wrong-doing, especially at the hands of Percy, who is a moral coward. The most exciting, the most wonderful things take place concerning the loss of a diamond necklace. The affair of Mr. Glitter, the fortune-teller, the prize bull, and the fire, are enough to take one's breath away. There is a highly dramatic rush of occurrences, partly ludicrous, but mostly of an almost tragic character and altogether puzzling; through them all poor brave little Riggers is a martyr to circumstances. However Mrs. Champney knows how to extricate him, and the boys and girls will not lay down the book until they see how she does it. It is well illustrated by Frank T. Merrill.— Estes & Lauriat. $1.50.

A Third Person, an unpretentious story by B. M. Croker in Lippincott's series of Select Novels, gives fresh proof of the social differences between the middle-class life of America and England, due to the colonial dependencies of the latter country. India is a convenient background into which to disappear or from which to arise. The author makes good use of his material, dealing with contrasts in character of which that between the old Indian general and the buxom English matron is the best. "The third person" tries to spoil the course of true love but does not succeed. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

That even odiously clever Mr. Andrew Lang has continued his fairy story of Prince Prigio with a vivacious chronicle of his son Prince Ricardo of Pantouflia. The strange results that followed upon King Prigio's hiding the genuine wishing cap, cap of darkness, sword of sharpness, and magic carpet may here be read. It is a sophisticated narrative which mature readers will probably enjoy more thoroughly than boys and girls. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

Mademoiselle Miss is the title of the first story in a collection of five by Henry Harland (Sidney Luska). All have striking individuality, and the situations or themes are unusual. There is a decidedly Bohemian air about the majority of them, and the author is at home in sketching life and character in the Latin Quarter of Paris. "The Prodigal Father" is a unique episode; "A Light Sovereign" has the elements of a neat comedietta, being as bright, sparkling, and piquant as the many-faced princess who is the subject of it.— Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

An American Peeress, an international love tale by H. C. Chatfield Taylor, author of With Edge Tools, shows how a Chicago girl wins back the heart of her recalcitrant English husband. Temptations and frivolity surround her, of which she avails herself only just enough to bewilder her husband and accomplish her purpose. She ennobles him as he first ennobled her. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00.

Stephen Remarx, by James Adderley, is the story of a noble-minded young curate who embarks in the social movement of the time with all his soul. The reader's sympathies go along with him while one's judgment is not entirely convinced; but the tragic conclusion is utterly improbable and our feelings are harrowed without cause. — E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

In his farce, Evening Dress, Mr. W. D. Howells presents his favorite simpletons, Mr. Edward Roberts and Mrs. Campbell, once more in a characteristic situation. The female "sect" ought to feel profoundly grateful to him for such "realism," if realism it can be. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Aim of Life.

These thoughtful, forcible, and happily written papers for young men and women, by the Rev. P. S. Moxom, D.D., contain little that is original in the way of thought, but much that is valuable in the way of precept. They treat of such subjects as character, education, temperance, habit, the choice of companions, reading, the use of time, and the ethics of amusement. These topics have been discussed in the same general manner by men of various temperaments and ways of thinking. It would be difficult either to formulate new deductions from sound principles concerning them or a fresh method of handling them; but their importance cannot be overstated, and as it is with repeated blows of the hammer that a nail is driven in, so the reiteration of truth has its value. Dr. Moxom's blows are well delivered and vigorous, and we believe that they will serve excellently well in the inculcation and propagation of righteous living among the young people he addresses.— Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

A Wild Sheep Chase.

These "Notes of a Little Philosophic Journey in Corsica" only a Frenchman could have written and illustrated; they make a pretty book, but one that is disappointing nevertheless. Sprightly the style is and engaging are the delicate and dainty vignettes, looking like the deftest of pen-and-ink work transferred bodily to the printed page. But there is a feeling as we read of over-effort on the part of the writer; in place of naturalness there is an artificiality; not English wild flowers bloom in these pages, but French nosegays of muslin, wax, and the like. The author's objective point was the discovery and study of the somewhat obscure and elusive wild-goat of Corsica, the mouflon; but he is a long time finding that animal, and meantime he skirts the rocky and romantic île de Napoleon, visits Ajaccio, Bastia, Corte, and other of its picturesque towns, penetrates its mountain fastnesses and forests, and makes the acquaintance of its brigands and outlaws. The book is pervaded with the atmosphere of the vendetta. Some of the better things in it are its portraits of cut-throats, and dramatic adventures in their haunts, far back among the hills. M. Bergerat studies and describes like an artist. He has with him on this expedition young Prince Roland Bonaparte; the time is the autumn of 1887, and there are not wanting effective bits of delineation like this:

> The fine beaches are neglected even by fishermen; the fiords, with their yellow sands blazing like brass basins, are deserted; ports where whole fleets might shelter at ease are left useless. For the Corsican inhabits the mountains; he is no lover of the sea; he will always prefer a horse to a boat, a gun to a net, and hunting to fishing.

The book is beautifully made and the woodcuts are exquisite. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

In the Footsteps of the Poets.

Apparently Prof. David Masson is considered as the most distinguished writer in this volume as his name stands on its title-page, though "and others" is added in fine print. His essay on Milton is admirable from a topographical point of view, for the various residences of the poet are fully described, and many people like to know where a man sat when he wrote a certain line. Professor Masson has finely discriminated between the various epochs of Milton's life, appreciating the great break that his political life made in his career as a poet and the great services that he rendered as foreign secretary; but why need he call him the "discovered supreme?" The notable essay in the book is the one on Browning, by Mr. R. H. Hutton, who notes the "surprises," that is, the discords, as well as the harmonies in the poet's rhymes. He was a "spiritual teacher disguised as a man of the world," not a cynic, though insisting on the irreligiousness of many religious people and the religiousness of the irreligious. The world to him is moral and full of significance. The pages on Walter Scott by John Dennis are very good. Several of the essays have the flavor of a Sunday evening literary address by a minister who is not en rapport with his subject. Well chosen, though, are the quotations from Herbert's "The Temple." Cowper, Thomson, whose "Seasons" reveal him as a healthy pagan, Wordsworth, Mrs. Browning, and Tennyson are successively discussed. Most of the seventy or more illustrations, chiefly of scenery, are very good and add to the pleasure of this volume of discursive reading. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

In the Land of Cave and Cliff Dwellers.

No recent book on this subject is better calculated to be popular than this by the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka. He was exceedingly fond of adventure, and on these late expeditions in 1889 and 1890 he set out with enthusiasm which never flagged whatever the obstacles. His narrative is vivacious and graphic and of unfailing interest. He made three distinct trips — the first from Deming, New Mexico, into the northwestern part of the state of Chihuahua; the second through the central part of the state of Sonora; the third into the Sierra Madre that forms the boundary between those states and Durangoa and Sinaloa. In the course of his journeyings he had opportunity to learn much about the great Mexican mining belt and the vast wealth of the silver regions in the Sierra Madre. From the light he throws upon this unfrequented part of Mexico it is easy to understand why, at the time of the early Spanish conquests, utensils and treasures of silver were so abundant. The interest of the book is divided between the marvelous resources of the country, the grandeur of the scenery, and the singular, prevalent, and almost inaccessible abodes of the cliff-dwellers. The many illustrations are presumably from photographs taken by Lieutenant Schwatka. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.25.

Prairie Songs.

This volume of "chants, rhymed and unrhymed, of the level lands of the great West," by Hamlin Garland, is one of the most carefully confected pieces of bookmaking of these later years. One of the early issues of a new and ambitious firm of publishers, no pains have been spared to make this book perfect. From its cover of rough green cloth and pattern in gold, with blossoming maize, to its quaint finis, everything — paper, print, margins, illustrations — has been the subject of a painstaking study, and the result is excellent. For the poems themselves, many of them are a close reflex of Whitman, of whom the author is evidently a disciple and scholar. Joaquin Miller would also seem to have had a certain influence in forming his style. Here and there is a note of original thrill or a little picture given in a few vivid words, and these are what the reader will most enjoy. There is a swing of rough, manly humor in the poem called "Across the Picket Line" which strikes us as clearly Mr. Garland's own:

Wal! Every night we'd hear 'em sing
  "Old Hundred" or "Salvation's Free!"
And we'd join in and make things ring;
  And so we got to know, y' see,
Jest when the Johnnies meant t' shell
  Or charge next day or spring a mine,
For when they'd planned t' give us hell
  They'd sing of heaven all 'long the line.

Fact! Yessir, sure's y'r born
  I never see the singin' fail,
Always brought a storm next day,
  With bullets flyin' thick as hail,
And then these Rebs a-scramblin' up,
  Straight up to our blessed eyes,
Teeth gritted, faces white,
  And yellin' fit to raise the skies.

'Fraid? Not by a darn sight! They Didn't know what the word meant.
No, sir, they'd jest nacherly pray,
  An' wherever a man ud go, they went;
They wan't no discount in their grit,
  And I don't bear 'em any spite.
We met like men an' settled it,
  And I guess they think it's settled right.

— Stone & Kimball. $1 25.

From Wisdom Court.

It must have required some assurance on the part of the two friends, Mr. Henry Seton Merriman and Mr. Stephen G. Tallentyne, to give this ambitious title to their joint work. But the contents of the book are their justification, for no small amount of wisdom is contained therein, besides not a little wit and humor. The essays number twenty-nine, and are of a brevity highly to be commended since it insures them many readers who will be enticed for that very reason to the perusal of them. It is a handy little volume to take up in odd moments, and the list of subjects is tempting, from a "post card" and a bed of sickness to love, Sunday morning, good works, learning, and unselfishness. Occasionally there is a little straining after effect, but, as a whole, the papers have the charm of spontaneity and candor and of a revelation of the inmost thoughts of the writers. The illustrations, by E. Courboin, are odd and quaint. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

The Log of a Sky Pilot.

Frankly accepting the sailor's nickname for a chaplain or clergyman, the Rev. T. S. Treanor gives an account of his life and work, spiced with not a little adventure, around the Goodwin Sands. "No doubt the expression [Sky Pilot] is chiefly used in jest, but behind the jest there lies in Jack's breast a solemn conviction that a Sky Pilot is what he wants and just what the minister of Christ ought to be." The opening chapter is historical and describes the Downs, a roadstead on the south of Kent, opposite Ramsgate and Deal, eight miles long and six miles wide. Memories of all kinds gather around this great anchorage. Julius Cæsar and his legionaries landed here, and for centuries the legions disembarked at Rutupiæ, near which also still stand the walls of Richborough Castle, with its proud Roman masonry. Here gather fleets of vessels, often as many as 500 in number, half British, the other half foreign. For days and sometimes weeks they ride at anchor in the Downs, wearied by baffling calms or tempests. Five thousand men often lie thus in waiting. Among these houses on the waters the Sky Pilot makes his pastoral calls, often hoisted up many a foot by a rope slung round his loins. Life on the light-ships and work among them and the temptations and safeguards of the seamen are vividly described, with an interest that is human and wholly beyond the narrowness of the mere sectary. There is something of the flavor of Father Taylor of Boston in this work, which is not far from a first-class novel in real interest. It is appropriately bound in canvas, and has plenty of illustrations. — F. H. Revell Co. $1.50.

Mr. Fish and the Alabama Claims.

Despite its small size this little book is a first-class contribution to history. General Grant, Charles Sumner, and Motley the historian were great personages, but the services of the late Hamilton Fish during the time covered in this monograph were probably equal to those of any of the three. Mr. Sumner has had the benefit of an imposing biography, written with signal ability and extraordinary painstaking by a devoted friend; yet there are certain parts of that biography which, taken alone, do not constitute history in the scientific sense. Though Dr. Holmes' biographical sketch of Motley is fascinating and intended to be perfectly truthful, it contains statements which, to say the least, need supplementing and modification. Mr. J. C. Bancroft Davis, formerly Assistant Secretary of State, here expands his letter to the New York Herald of January 4, 1878, on "Mr. Sumner, Mr. Motley, the Alabama Claims and Their Settlement." He shows how earnest both General Grant and Mr. Fish were in desiring peace through arbitration, and how necessary they deemed it to disavow all responsibility for Mr. Sumner's speech in the Senate in which he claimed "indirect damages" from England. Such a doctrine, if supported by the administration, would have shut the door against future negotiations. It would hardly seem to be necessary to say that Mr. Motley made a mistake in disobeying his chief. The fame of the author of The Rise of the Dutch Republic is secure, in illustrious service to his country and in permanent literature, and it is a good thing simply to set forth the facts of his diplomatic career and the efforts of General Grant to avert war between England and the United States. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 75c.

Romance of the Insect World.

In this compilation of the observations of Bates, Wallace, Poulton, Darwin, Huber, and others, L. N. Badenoch has produced a careful piece of work worthy of praise for his painstaking. The style is not charming, for the author is not quite as familiar with English as with his array of facts, which render the book especially valuable to young readers who are observing and collating for themselves; the full glossary and index appended to the volume increase its utility. Very little of theory is presented, and this is so well substantiated that it ought not to be called even a working hypothesis, as when, for instance, in explanation of the metamorphoses of insects the writer states that they "are continuous," that "birth is merely a stage in the process of development," and that the "young quit the egg at a more or less immature stage of development." In treating of mimicry he shows how it has been produced in certain insects by natural selection through the necessity arising for self-protection. The two chapters on insect architecture in "hermit" and "social" homes abound in careful study. In the chapter on the food of insects the accounts of the seed-storing habits of ants in certain countries are confirmed and reference is made to the quaint passage in the Mishna concerning the ant-stores found in the corn-fields: "Should they belong to the gleaners or to the owners of the lands?" The illustrations by Margaret J. D. Badenoch and others are good, but it is to be regretted that there are not more of them. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

The Humours of the Court.

Robert Bridges is not to be considered as a new figure in the fields of English poesy, but to American readers generally his name has an unfamiliar sound and his books are as yet few among us. This is due probably to the fact that his poems have hitherto been privately printed in limited editions of not more than one hundred and fifty copies. Mr. Arthur Stedman, in a recent literary letter from New York, states that copies of the first volume by Mr. Bridges, published a few years ago at the price of six shillings under the simple title, Poems, are now for sale in that city at twenty-five dollars each. The Feast of Bacchus, published five years ago, can be had only by paying the round sum of thirty-five dollars, while The Growth of Love, issued one year later, is held at twenty dollars. If it seem unworthy to consider the poet's reputation first in the light of its monetary value, the offense must be pardoned, since no other estimate is at present open to most readers.

One can hardly believe that the poet is adequately represented by the drama which gives the title to his book. "The Humours of the Court," written in blank verse, is founded on two Spanish comedies by Calderon and Lope, and it presents with grace and ease, but with no especial merits of fancy or poetic power, the love intrigues of three days. Diana, Countess of Belfior, is beloved by Ricardo, Duke of Milan, who visits her court in disguise, hoping to further his apparently hopeless suit. Diana fancies herself in love with Frederick, her secretary, an old friend of Ricardo and in the secret of his disguise, who in his turn loves and is beloved by Laura, sister of Diana. In the dénouement Laura's fiancé, Sir Nicholas, is the only one left forlorn, but his sorrow at losing his bride is hardly greater than his grief over a stolen sonnet.

A handful of verses are collected at the end of the comedy, and few as they are we may obtain here an idea of the poet's quality, and we gladly yield him honorable place among the minor singers of England. The joyous strain of "Larks," the lyric sweetness of "The Palm Willow," and the plaintive echoes of "Nightingales" awake sincere desire to know more of this singer. The following lines are as representative as any that can be taken in short compass:

Since to be loved endures,
To love is wise;
Earth hath no good but yours,
Brave, joyful eyes:

Earth hath no sin but thine,
Dull eye of scorn;
O'er thee the sun doth pine
And angels mourn.

— Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Orchard Songs.

Norman Gale is one of those light-hearted singers of whom Browning wrote:

Touch him ne'er so lightly, into song he broke.

There is not much rock in his "song-soil," and it would not do to suspect him often of over-seriousness; but such singers have their own place, and it is much when they write with such grace and arch simplicity as does Mr. Gale. He sings of kisses, milkmaids, and sweethearts, and is always an out-of-door poet. The one genuine heartache in the book is for imprisoned birds, and the one expression of deep, even bitter feeling is the poem, "Better So." "A Prayer" expresses well his attitude and aspirations:

Tend me, my birds, and bring again
The brotherhood of woodland life,
So shall I wear the seasons round,
A friend to need, a foe to strife.

Keep me my heritage of lawn,
And grant me, Father, till I die,
The fine sincerity of light
And luxury of open sky.

So, learning always, may I find
My heaven around me everywhere,
And go in hope from this to thee,
The pupil of thy country air.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

The English Romantic Movement.

The aims of this study, by Prof. William Lyon Phelps of Yale University, are twofold. He would show first that the spirit of romanticism has never been wholly absent from English literature, despite the self-consciousness and formalism of certain periods; and secondly, that the Romantic Movement was already a real force in the years between 1725 and 1745, and that in these twenty years may be found the seeds of that growth which matured in Scott and Byron and has influenced the literature of the nineteenth century. In an interesting introduction to the main work the author discusses with succinct clearness various definitions of romanticism as applied successively to spirit, subject, and method, thus clearing the way for a sketch of its growth in England. He analyzes its various elements — the appreciation of external nature, the change of form, the revival of Spenser and the influence of Milton, the enthusiasm for mediævalism and ancient themes, and finally the direct influence of Gray. The book is interesting in itself as a contribution to the literary history of these times, as well as valuable in respect to the special points it attempts to prove. — Ginn & Co. $1.10.

Heart-Beats.

This is a volume of paragraphs, usually less than a short page in length, on the spiritual life, by the remarkable man now at the head of the Brahmo-Somaj of India, who has become widely known in America through the Parliament of Religions and his subsequent addresses in the East. Mr. Mozoomdar at once impresses his hearers as a man of religious genius, to whom piety is a native air and religion a congenial home. What such a lofty thinker, intent upon eternal realities of the soul, has to say cannot be without interest to very many who are glad to recognize the essential unity of all the faiths of the world. For pure mystical quality and sound ethical strain these Heart-Beats are most notable. Rev. S. J. Barrows furnishes a detailed biographical sketch of Mr. Mozoomdar, which he closes by calling this "the most remarkable devotional book since that of Thomas à Kempis." Such comparisons are of doubtful value, but surely the volume stands very high in devotional literature. There is a good portrait of the author. — George H. Ellis. $1.50.

Stelligeri and Other Essays Concerning America.

For genuine condescension, not of a foreigner but of a native, to all things American, commend us to Prof. Barrett Wendell. When we read that "hitherto the history of America has been that of a great national inexperience," and are enlightened as to the meaning of the true saying that "America has no literature at all," and are informed that Emerson and Phillips Brooks "were good men — wonderfully good," we begin to inquire how many centuries old this oracle must surely be. Mr. Warner has suggested how much pleasanter it might be if we could begin life "rich and old" and grow poor and young to the last. Putting the matter of property aside, one is tempted to believe that the world-weary sagacity which speaks through these papers is due to the author's having been born very old — and oppressively clever. We reflect that it is, indeed, a sad thing to be so very clever at the start, for any considerable growth is thus out of question, if one is to continue human. If Professor Wendell will give us a revised edition of these patronizing estimates of Whittier, Lowell, the Puritans, and American history and literature in general, in which the imitation of Matthew Arnold shall be less obvious and "the pressure of external fact" (a pet phrase) be more obvious to the reader than now, the volume will be much smaller and far more valuable. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Hazell's Annual has come to be one of the most indispensable of books of reference, especially for English affairs. The ninth issue, for 1894, has a new feature in the sketch maps of Siam, Uganda, and such little known countries. The expanded table of contents amounts to an index, and the longer articles are broken up, to facilitate reference. Home Rule, the Labor Movement, and the Coal Strike are, of course, prominent entries. The World's Fair has over two pages given to it, but Mr. Parkman is passed over and there is no record whatever of American literature. The treatment of American subjects needs more care, evidently. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

An Old Master and Other Political Essays is the title given to a small volume of five reprinted papers by Prof. Woodrow Wilson. "An Old Master" is not at all a "political essay;" it is a sensible paper on the value of lecturing in college, which uses Adam Smith as a great example. The other essays are distinctly political, their subjects being the study of politics, sovereignty, the character of democracy, and government under the constitution. While all are readable and sagacious, one fails to find in them very ample justification for their appearance in book form and suspects that Professor Wilson would do well to let his thought ripen before he reproduces it. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

As We Go is the title Mr. Charles Dudley Warner has given to a collection of his short essays from Harper's Magazine. There is a great amount of genial wisdom in the little book, with its discussions of "the newspaper-made man," whom American women are leaving so sadly behind in the progress of culture, of "interesting girls," "the tall girl," "the new feminine reserve," and "the island of Bimini." The tenth paper is properly on Health and Character, not Wealth as the table of contents gives it, and an abandoned half-title is retained by oversight. — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

In Volume XXXVII of the Dictionary of National Biography, extending from Masquerier to Millyng, the more prominent names are Massinger, the dramatist; Increase Mather; the two Mathews, the comedians; F. D. Maurice, James Mill, and John Stuart Mill — the last three falling to the skillful hand of Mr. Leslie Stephen. Besides these we find the Maules, the Maxwells, the Mays, the Meads, the Melvilles, the Middletons, and the Millers — families which have left their mark deep in English statesmanship, science, art, and literature. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

Last Years of Louis XV is the closing volume of the four in M. Imbert de Saint-Amand's series on Women of Versailles. It is not hard to account for the popularity of these books, but one shudders to think of the number of volumes that would be required were all history written on the scale that M. de Saint-Amand follows. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

We have previously commended Mr. Henry Irving's four addresses on The Drama, and it is not necessary to speak of their merits in noticing the issue of a handsome large-paper edition by Lovell, Coryell & Co. The margins of the fine paper are very wide, the edition is limited to three hundred copies, and there is a frontispiece by Whistler, which gives little idea of Mr. Irving's strength on the stage.

PERIODICALS.

Edward Burne-Jones is the subject of an admiring article in Scribner's Magazine for February, by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, fully illustrated with specimens of his very original art. Mr. Cable's novel, "John March, Southerner," is continued. Mr. Ferris Lockwood gives a brief exposition of "Mr. Lowell on Art Principles." Mr. James Baldwin's article in the series of Men's Occupations treats in a felicitous way of "The Schoolmaster." Mr. W. A. Stiles' paper on "Orchids" is beautifully illustrated by Paul de Longpré. Mr. Joel Chandler Harris contributes the first of two articles on "The Sea Island Hurricanes" of last year, describing "the devastation." M. Jean Geoffrey's "Prayer of the Humble" is the frontispiece, and the painter is the subject of two or three pages from Mr. Hamerton. There are several good short stories.

The best thing in the Atlantic for February is Dr. Holmes' admirable poem on Francis Parkman, but it is an excellent number, with the continuations of "Philip and His Wife," and "His Vanished Star;" Mr. Dawes' "Recollections of Stanton under Lincoln;" Mr. J. C. Bancroft Davis' biographical paper on "Hamilton Fish;" Mr. H. C. Merwin's candid account of "Tammany Hall;" Mr. Scudders' convincing address on "The Educational Law of Reading and Writing;" Mr. William Davis' study of "Tao;" Mr. B. J. Lang's brief paper "From Literature to Music;" Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller's "In a Pasture by the Great Salt Lake;" two short stories, numerous reviews, and the Contributors' Club.

In Harper's Magazine for February, a very good number, one notes especially the second part of "Trilby," by George du Maurier, describing Bohemian life in Paris; "In the Sierra Madre with the Punchers," by Frederic Remington; "Lord Byron and the Greek Patriots," by Rev. Dr. Henry Hayman; "A Bar of Iron," in the Great American Industries series, edited by R. R. Bowker; and "Walking Sticks," by Samuel H. Scudder. A farce by W. D. Howells, called "A Masterpiece of Diplomacy," appears in this number, together with five short stories, by Brander Matthews, William McLellan, Miss Woolson, Flavel Scott Mines, and Richard Harding Davis. "A Singing Student in London," by Jean Forsyth, is the record of a real experience; "The-Man-that-draws-the-Handcart," by Edward Eggleston, gives reminiscences of an almost forgotten frontier hero of picturesque history; "In Tenebras" is a parable, by Howard Pyle. The Editor's Study discusses the Letters of James Russell Lowell and the art of making church-going attractive.

The complete novel in the February number of Lippincott's is "The Picture of Las Cruces," by Christian Reid. The scene is laid in Mexico and chiefly in the ancient house of a noble family, where an American artist undergoes a curious experience. Mr. Gilbert Parker's serial story, "The Trespasser," reaches its sixth chapter and makes its hero acquainted with his uncle, who is the villain of the tale, and with sundry other factors in his new life. "Dr. Pennington's Country Practice," by Butler Munroe, is a lively and amusing story. "Dick," by George Grantham Bain, tells of an office boy whose unobtrusive virtues wrought a reform among editors and reporters. "A House that Jack Built," by Philo Andrews Tucker, is a quaint sketch with a moral. Champion Bissell contributes a careful and interesting "Study of Pawnbrokers." Alice Wellington Rollins writes on "The Science and the Art of Dramatic Expression." Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen tells us about "Norwegian Hospitality," and Charles Robinson about "Freaks." In "Talks with the Trade" the question, "Have Young Writers a Chance?" is discussed.

A photogravure of Mr. Burne-Jones' æsthetic picture, "Chant d'Amour," is the frontispiece of the Magazine of Art for February. The two other full-page illustrations are "Head of a Girl," by Sir F. Leighton, and "Christ Blessing Little Children," which one is amused to learn was purchased as a genuine Rembrandt for the National Gallery twenty-eight years ago. "Puvis de Chavannes," "Charles Bell Birch," "The Illuminated Books of the Middle Ages," "The Modern Picture, in the Ruston Collection," "Italian Chimney-Tops," and summaries of current art fill out a very good number.

In the Popular Science Monthly for February Dr. Andrew D. White, who has been missed from its pages for over a year, contributes the first of a new group of his Warfare of Science papers under the special title of "The Visible Universe." It shows that the displacement of the theological and metaphysical ideas of creation by the evolutionary was itself an evolution in human thought. The recent death of Professor Tyndall gives occasion for an account of "Tyndall and His American Visit," containing some interesting letters, which is furnished by Miss E. A. Youmans. There is also an estimate of the man and his work in the Editor's Table. Prof. William S. Windle describes the laboratory of the Johns Hopkins University in Jamaica, with views of its surroundings. James E. Humphrey tells "Where Bananas Grow," showing by the pictures how the fruit is gathered and shipped. Dr. Sidney J. Hickson describes the "Physical Conditions of the Deep Sea." From "The Wandering Jew at the Salpêtrière" we learn that this mythical character really exists, not as an individual but as a class. Several portraits of these unfortunate wanderers are given. Prof. Wesley Mills, M.D., writes on "Heredity in Relation to Education," and suggests to teachers that they can learn much as to the proper treatment of their pupils by observing the characteristics of the parents. Mrs. Ellen B. Dietrick discloses the real condition of "The Circassian Slave in Turkish Harems," which is not so bad as many outsiders have imagined. The list closes with a "Sketch of David Starr Jordan," president of Stanford University, by Prof. M. B. Anderson, accompanied by a portrait.

Professor Huxley's article on Professor Tyndall in the Nineteenth Century for January easily takes the first place among the tributes to this great man of science. That astonishing work of modern engineering, "The Manchester Ship Canal," is described by Lord Egerton. "The Revolt of the Daughters" is a lively article by Mr. Crackanthorpe, not without a serious intention. Dr. L. H. Mills, from his abundant knowledge, sets forth the relations of "Zoroaster and the Bible." William Graham concludes his interesting "Chats with Jane Clermont," the friend of Byron and Shelley, and William Sharp describes "The New Winter Land," i. e. Northern Africa under French Control.

In the Fortnightly Review for January Mr. Coventry Patmore announces "Mr. Francis Thompson, a New Poet," but gives few specimens to verify his credentials. Miss Bulley summarizes the report of the four lady commissioners on "The Employment of Women." "Football," "The Ireland of Tomorrow," and "Prince Alexander of Battenberg" are other subjects discussed.

In the Quarterly Journal of Economics for January Mr. Albert C. Stevens gives an "Analysis of the Phenomena of the Panic in the United States in 1893," in which he would supplement the views of previous observers as to the phenomena antecedent to panics. Sidney Sherwood discusses "The Nature and Mechanism of Credit." The article by Mr. C. C. Closson, Jr., on "The Unemployed in American Cities," is made up of condensed reports of the situation all over the country and the measures of relief taken. "Pain-Cost and Opportunity-Cost" is a contribution to the theory of value by David I. Green of Johns Hopkins. Mr. W. B. Shaw gives his usual valuable report of "Social and Economic Legislation of the States" in a survey of last year.

In the Economic Journal for December the more generally interesting matters are Miss Helen Dendy's paper on "The Industrial Residuum," two short contributions on the Coal Strike, a report of the last Trades Union Congress, Prof. F. S. Nitti's survey of "Strikes in Italy," Professor Taussig's report on the "Repeal of Silver Purchase" in this country, and a large number of valuable reviews. "The Agricultural Problem," "Poor Relief," "Bimetallism," and "Indian Currency" are other topics of this leader among economic periodicals.

The October–December Journal of American Folk-Lore has more than the usual amount of matter of general interest in addition to that special information in which it is always strong. Professor A. Gerber gives an attractive exposition of "Uncle Remus Traced Back to Africa," and Ellen P. Thompson of "Folk-Lore from Ireland." J. Walter Fewkes, Ph.D., continues his authoritative series of papers on Tusayan Ceremonials. The fifth annual meeting at Montreal last year is fully reported.

Macmillan's for January has an unusual proportion of fiction — not to its disadvantage. In addition to an installment of Mr. Blackmore's novel there is an Australian story by Mr. Gilbert Parker, a tender sketch called "The Captain's Gun" by T. E. Brown, and one of Mrs. Steel's East Indian stories. Fourteen pages are devoted by Hon. J. W. Fortescue to an episode in history during Cromwell's time, "The Expedition to the West Indies." An anonymous writer has a paper on two gentlemen of leisure — a typical old country minister and a ne'er-do-well fisher and poacher. Other unsigned papers are on "The Political World of Fielding and Smollett," and Vincent Voiture, the hero of the Hotel Rambouillet who was such a figure in Paris from 1625 till his death in 1648.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— In 1893 there were published in Great Britain 6,382 new books and new editions, being 128 more than the total of the preceding year. As might be expected, a considerable growth is noticeable in fiction. The number of new novels, indeed, was less by over 200 in 1893 than in 1892, a circumstance which will probably cause some surprise. But, on the other hand, a comparison of the figures of the two years will show a striking increase in the number of juvenile books. Here, however, we must be on our guard. It is often extremely difficult to classify works of fiction in grades for old or young. It will be convenient, therefore, to take the entire production of fictitious narratives en masse. Adopting that plan we find that the output of 1893 exceeds that of 1892 by 141 books. Last year there were issued 1,584 new works of fiction, or rather more than five for every working day. And these figures represent but a mere fraction of what was written, for every year thousands of stories are fated to stick at the manuscript stage. Theological and Biblical literature, curiously enough, shows a falling off. Does this indicate indifference on the part of the public, or merely a more stable and settled faith? Educational works likewise exhibit a slight decrease — a fact which is, no doubt, to be accounted for by the good nature of the Education Department in forbearing to recast the code. Law and political economy both evince a decline, which may or may not be a promising sign according to the point of view taken. Voyages and travels indicate little change, but historical works show a drop. Poetry, to use a stock exchange phrase, is firm, for the minor poets are not the sort of people to pass their days and nights in inglorious sloth. The miscellaneous writer, too, the writer who discusses topics of ephemeral interest in pamphlets and booklets, has been unusually busy during 1893. His industry, indeed, has been so great that in the department of miscellanies we find an increase of 400 in new books over the figures of the preceding year, and 100 in new editions, making a total of 500. This certainly may be called remarkable. — Publishers' Circular, London.

— The real name of "Q." is Mr. A. T. Quiller Couch. He is very rarely in London, suffering, it is said, from nervous affections when he is there. One would not expect it from his personal appearance, for he is a tall, well-built, very active-looking man, and indeed was stroke of the Trinity "eight" when at Oxford. Mr. Raymond Blathwayt said, a few years ago, that he "gives one the idea of being a country gentleman at his ease, more at home on the moor or the river than as a dweller in cities and a wielder of the pen of so ready a writer." Mr. Couch cordially hates London, and flies back to his native Cornwall the very moment he can get away. He lives at the queer old town of Fowey, on the south coast of Cornwall, quite close to Plymouth. It comes again and again into his books, though not under its own name. His light eyes and curly red hair are more familiar to country folk than to critics. Mr. Couch is a fine scholar. At Oxford, where he was a scholar of Trinity, he took first in moderations, and afterwards became a college lecturer in classics. He was also a constant contributor to the University magazine of some clever topical poems, in the Calverley style, full of classical allusions; these were recently published by Methuen. — Literary World, London.

— Plenty of irresponsible fables have appeared in the press regarding Mr. Norman Gale's going to America. We are able to say with the utmost certainty that he will not leave England till September. Mr. Gale's next book will be a volume of Cricketing Songs, which will be issued in May. About two or three years ago he brought out, through the Rugby Press, in an edition of eighty copies, a book containing a few cricket songs and some verses with a light tone. The latter now entirely disappear, and Mr. Gale has added thirteen or fourteen new songs about the national game. — Literary World, London.

— James Whitcomb Riley contemplates writing a drama of Indiana rural life in order to let the play-going public know what the genuine Hoosier dialect is like.

— The body of Sir Samuel White Baker, the African explorer, was incinerated at the Woking Crematory on January 4.

— Three volumes are nearly ready of the new and enlarged edition of Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia, which, by purchase, has passed into the hands of D. Appleton & Co. When complete the work will embrace eight volumes. It is under the editorial direction of Charles Kendall Adams, president of the University of Wisconsin.

— The Massachusetts Historical Society has just discovered that it possesses an autobiography of the late Francis Parkman. The document, which is brief, is said to be very characteristic, and will be included in the forthcoming memoir to be presented to the society by Rev. Dr. G. E. Ellis.

— Archdeacon Farrar has completed an entire revision of the text and notes of his Life of Christ.

— Mr. James Schouler has decided to extend his History of the United States under the Constitution by one more volume, the sixth, embracing the Civil War and Lincoln's administration.

— The Boston Round Table Club, whose president has always been Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, recently presented to him on the occasion of his seventieth birthday a superb silver loving-cup, on which was engraved this quotation from Tennyson: "Hold us for your friends; here we pledge our troth; yea, by the honor of the Table Round."

— S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago, will issue next month The Union Pacific Railway: a Study in Railway Politics, History, and Economics, by John P. Davis, A.M., Michigan.

— The University Press, Cambridge, England, has undertaken to publish a complete translation of the Pali Jâtaka or "Buddha Birth-stories," which are supposed to be the oldest collection of folk-lore stories in existence. The first volume is now in the press, and has been prepared by Mr. R. Chalmers, late of Oriel College, Oxford, a former pupil of Prof. Rhys Davids. It will contain the forty stories given in Prof. Rhys Davids' discontinued translation, but will also give the remainder of the first volume of Professor Fausböll's edition of the Pali text.

— A friend of Mr. Jerome K. Jerome told him, after reading Novel Notes, that the story of the woman who was crushed to death by a python was "not as funny as some of his things." Similar experiences have led Mr. Jerome to say in the preface that three of the tales in John Ingerfield and Other Stories, soon to be published by Messrs. Henry Holt & Co., are "not intended to be amusing." He designates the three in order to avoid confusion.

— The late Professor Jowett's oracular manner of speech did not escape the good-natured satire of his students, one of whom put these lines into the master's mouth in a college mask. The master, who enters leading a procession of dons, announces his arrival in these words:

First come I, my name is Jowett.
There's no knowledge but I know it.
I am master of this college;
What I don't know—isn't knowledge.

— Studies in the Evolution of English Criticism, by Laura Johnson Wylie, graduate student of English in Yale University, will be ready this spring from Ginn & Co.

— Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. will issue shortly a History of the Mental Growth of Mankind in Ancient Times, by John S. Hittell, in four volumes. The first treats of savage culture; the second of the Aztecs, the Quichuans of Peru, the Egyptians, Brahmins, Buddhists, and Chinese; the third of Jews and Greeks; and the fourth of Rome and the early Christians.

— The niece of Guy de Maupassant has inherited all his MSS. and notebooks. Last year the copyright royalties on the works of the dead novelist produced $8,000. It is estimated that they will yield about $6,000 annually.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons announce as their earlier publications for the new year, in The Writings of Thomas Paine the first of four octavo volumes covering the years 1774–1779 and including the famous pamphlet "Common Sense;" in the edition of The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, which Mr. Paul Leicester Ford has carefully edited and annotated, Volumes III and IV; of The Life and Correspondence of Rufus King, the first of five octavo volumes; a third and cheaper edition of Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library, in three volumes; Secularism: its Progress and Morals, by John M. Bonham, author of Industrial Liberty; Oliver Cromwell: a History, by Samuel H. Church; Tennyson: His Art, and His Relation to Modern Life, by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke; Art in Theory, an introduction to the study of comparative æsthetics, by Prof. George L. Raymond; Piers Plowman — 1363–1399, a contribution to the history of English mysticism, by J. J. Jusserand; A History of Social Life in England, edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L., the first volume presenting the record from the earliest times to the accession of Edward I; The Best Recent Books, edited by W. Swan Sonnenschein, continuing the lists contained in The Best Books to the close of the year 1893; American Song, a collection of representative American poems, by A. B. Simmonds; in the Story of the Nations series, The Christian Recovery of Spain, by H. E. Watts, The Story of Australasia, by Greville Tregarthen, and The Story of the Crusades, by T. A. Archer; in the Heroes of the Nations series, Cicero, and the Fall of the Roman Republic, by J. L. Strachan-Davidson, Henry the Navigator, by C. Raymond Beazley, and a reissue of the Life of Abraham Lincoln, by Noah Brooks; Random Roamings in Time and Space, by the Rev. Augustus Jessopp, D.D.; James Henry Chapin of Connecticut, by George Sumner Weaver, D.D.; a new story by Rodrigues Ottolengui, A Modern Wizard; A Sheaf of Poems, by George Perry, formerly editor of the Home Journal; The Life and Teachings of Jesus, by Arthur K. Rogers; and Mediæval Life and Literature, by the late Prof. E. T. McLaughlin of Yale.

— Messrs. Harper & Brothers will publish on February 2 the second volume of George William Curtis' works, edited by Professor Norton; a new volume in the Odd Number series, Parisian Points of View, from the French of Ludovic Halévy, by Edith D. B. Matthews; In Direct Peril, a new story by David Christie Murray; The Mystery of Abel Forefinger, by William Drysdale, in Harper's Young People series; A Child's History of Spain, by John Bonner; The Science of the Earth, by Sir J. William Dawson, C.M.G., LL.D.; and Dodge's Practical Biology, by Prof. Charles Wright Dodge, a laboratory guide for high school and college students. They have in preparation for publication during the same month The Jewish Question; Our English Cousins, by Richard Harding Davis; Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes, by A. Conan Doyle; and Constance Fenimore Woolson's latest novel, Horace Chase.

— It is said that on the fly-leaf of an odd volume of Emerson's works accidentally picked up by Prof. Tyndall at an old bookstall — a volume which first made him acquainted with the writings of the New England seer — are inscribed these words, "Purchased by inspiration."

— In bequeathing to Balliol the copyright of his writings, the late Professor Jowett said: "I desire that they may be republished from time to time as may seem expedient, and that the profits, if any, arising from the republication of them shall be invested from time to time, and the income thence accruing applied in the first place to the improvement or correction of them; secondly, to the making of new translations or editions of great authors, or in any way assisting or advancing the study of Greek literature, and otherwise for the advancement of learning."

— The people of Yorkshire are doing credit to themselves by founding a Brontë Society in that West Riding which owes so much to the genius of the gifted sisters of Haworth Parsonage. If Charlotte Brontë could have foreseen that in Bradford, which she has described for us in such vivid but unlovely colors, a meeting of grave men of business would be held forty years after her death in order to found a society primarily intended to do honor to herself and her sisters, she would have been filled with amazement. Yet the Brontë cult has now taken firm hold of the sturdy Yorkshire people, and the author of Jane Eyre is no longer neglected in her own country. A Brontë Museum is to be founded in connection with the Brontë Society, and there ought to be no difficulty in filling this with many interesting relics of the world-famed parsonage. — The Speaker.

— There is something very encouraging to all literary men in the triumph of any author, especially if he belong to some other country. And certainly no triumph could be more complete than the celebrations of the jubilee of authorship for Maurus Jokai, or Jókai Mor, as his countrymen call him. He is the Hungarian polyhistor, and recognized as the national poet, historian, novelist, and dramatist. He has also considerable reputation as a politician, and he has seen military service. His publishers issued a complete edition of his works in a hundred bulky volumes, and have handed £7,500 over to him as half profit on that edition alone.

— They are telling the tale in Boston that a bluestocking there recently said that she thought Mr. Aldrich effeminate. The remark was repeated to the poet, who replied, "So I am, compared with her."

— G. P. Putnam's Sons have just ready the third volume of The Writings and Correspondence of Thomas Jefferson, edited by Paul Leicester Ford; also, the first volume of The Writings of Thomas Paine, edited by Moncure D. Conway and issued uniform in style with Mr. Conway's Life of Paine. The Writings of Paine will be comprised in four volumes, and will be also issued in a limited edition of 150 copies, uniform with the limited editions of the Writings of Washington and Jefferson. They have also published The Religion of a Literary Man, by Richard Le Gallienne, and The Story of Japan, by David Murray, in the Story of the Nations series.

— The current reports about Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel are unauthorized and incorrect. The book is in no sense a study of socialism, though the background and atmosphere of the story are very much supplied by some of the social questions of the period which now come so practically home to each one of us. It is the history of a woman, and will be called by her name. It is expected that the new novel will have finally left the author's hands by the middle of February, and that it will be published simultaneously in England and America about the first week in April. Mrs. Ward's last novel, The History of David Grieve, has been a remarkable success, the circulation having already reached a total of from 130,000 to 140,000 copies in the various copyright editions. — Christian World, London.

— The first novel translated from the Bulgarian has just been issued in the International Library series. It is a story of an unsuccessful revolutionary movement against Turkish oppression. Hence the title, Under the Yoke. Ivan Vazoff, the author and the foremost writer of Eastern Roumelia, was born in 1850. He is a native of the Bulgarian village of Sopot, situated at the foot of the Balkan, forty miles north of Philippopolis. He is a man of action as well as of letters, and his share in the insurrectionary movement of 1876 obliged him to fly for his life north of the Balkan. He has written several prose works, of which Under the Yoke is unanimously considered his masterpiece. It was composed during a three years' residence at Odessa. M. Vazoff is also a poet. The magnitude of his achievement in this direction can be estimated only by taking into account the fact that before his advent there was no Bulgarian verse, and that he was obliged to originate his meters as well as his subjects. Most of his poems are patriotic lays. In a series of three volumes, entitled The Banner and the Guz'la, The Sorrows of Bulgaria, and The Deliverance, he sings the story of the deliverance of Bulgaria from the "Ineffable Turk." A school of native versifiers is springing up in his wake, but no one strong enough to dispute the preëminence of the leader has yet arisen. M. Vazoff's admirable prose is considerably influenced by his study of French and Russian models, but his verse is said to be entirely his own in form as well as in sentiment. — Literary World, London.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish immediately the story by Beatrice Harraden entitled Ships that Pass in the Night.

— Mr. Robert Bridges, the author of Humours of the Court and Other Poems, published recently by Macmillan & Co., is not the Mr. Bridges of Scribner's Magazine, for whom he seems to be mistaken, but an English poet, and one of decided note on the other side of the water. The Outlook, we believe, is soon to publish a sketch of him and his work.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish this spring Newton Booth of California: His Speeches and Addresses, edited by Lauren E. Crane. Newton Booth's later services as governor and United States senator are well known, and his speeches on topics of national importance are well worth preserving, while his addresses on non-political subjects will be found to be excellent reading and possess a personal interest as showing the versatility of his mind. The volume will contain a portrait. Primary Elections: a Study of Methods for Improving the Basis of Party Organization, by Daniel S. Remsen, and The Evolution of Woman: an Inquiry into the Dogma of Her Inferiority to Man, by Eliza Burt Gamble, will be two other new volumes.

— News was received in America on the 24th inst. of the death in Venice, Italy, of Miss Constance Fenimore Woolson, the well-known novelist. She was born in Claremont, N. H., in 1848, the daughter of Charles Jarvis Woolson and Hannah Cooper Pomeroy, who was a niece of James Fenimore Cooper. She moved to Cleveland, O., early in life, where she was educated in a young ladies' seminary, and subsequently finished her education at a French school in New York City, which she afterward described in Anne. On the death of her father in 1869 she removed with her mother to Florida, where she resided until 1879, when her mother died. Since then she has resided abroad, traveling in different countries. From the first her stories were a success. She had been a contributor to Harper's Monthly since 1870, where her sketches of travel and her short stories have been very popular. Horace Chase, which has been running in the Magazine, is about ready to appear in book-form.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Art.

Some Minor Arts as Practiced in England. By A. H. Church, F.R.S.; W. Y. Fletcher, F.S.A.; J. Starkie Gardner; Albert Hartshorne, F.S.A.; and C. H. Read, F.S.A. With many illustrations. Macmillan & Co. $7.50

Biography.

Richard Jefferies. A Study. By H. S. Salt. With a portrait. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

Early Sketches of George Washington. Reprinted, with Biographical and Bibliographical Notes. By William S. Baker. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

Educational.

Contributions from the Botanical Laboratory of the University of Pennsylvania. Vol. I, No. 2. Philadelphia. $1.50

Sohrab and Rustum. By Matthew Arnold. [English Classic Series]. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 30c.

The Coming of Arthur, and The Passing of Arthur. By Alfred Tennyson. Maynard, Merrill & Co.

Essays and Sketches.

Essays About Men, Women, and Books. By Augustine Birrell. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

A Commentary on the Writings of Henryk Ibsen. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Aim of Life. Plain Talks to Young Men and Women. By Philip Stafford Moxom. Roberts Bros. $1.00

Literary Clubs of Indiana. By Martha Nicholson McKay. Indianapolis: The Bowen-Merrill Co.

Canada's Intellectual Strength and Weakness. By J. G. Bourinot, C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., D.L. Montreal: Foster, Brown & Co.

Wah-Kee-nah and Her People. By James C. Strong. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Essays Selected from the Spirit of the Age. By William Hazlitt. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Fiction.

A Tragic Blunder. A Novel. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Christina Chard. By Mrs. Campbell-Praed. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Gray Eye or So. By Frankfort Moore. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Two Offenders. By Ouida. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Rejected Bride. By Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Balzac's Novels. Translated by Katharine P. Wormeley. Memoirs of Two Married Women. Roberts Brothers. $1.50

The Heir of Redclyffe. By Charlotte M. Yonge. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle. A Story of Two Border Towns. By Rosa Mackenzie Kettle. London: T. Fisher Unwin. Imported by G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

The Close of St. Christopher's. A Story for Girls. By Emma Marshall. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50

When We Two Parted. By Sarah Doudney. New edition, illustrated. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50

History.

The Story of Japan. By David Murray, Ph.D., LL.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

A Short History of the Renaissance in Italy. Taken from the Work of John Addington Symonds by Lieut.-Col. Alfred Pearson. Henry Holt & Co. $1.75

A History of Chile. By Anson Uriel Hancock. Chicago: Charles H. Sergel & Co.

St. Andrews. By Andrew Lang. With illustrations by T. Hodge. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00

Philosophy.

Psychology. Descriptive and Explanatory. A Treatise of the Phenomena, Laws, and Development of Human Mental Life. By George Trumbull Ladd. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Sing-Song. A Nursery Rhyme Book. By Christina G. Rossetti. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Goblin Market. By Christina Rossetti. Illustrated by Lawrence Housman. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Ariel Shakespeare: Antony and Cleopatra; Macbeth; Hamlet; Othello; Julius Cæsar; King Lear; Romeo and Juliet. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each, 75c.

Religion and Theology.

Christ, the Patron of all True Education. By Charles Frederick Hoffman, D.D., LL.D. Together with The Library a Divine Child. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.50

Anti-Higher Criticism. By Prof. Howard Osgood, President W. H. Green, Prof. W. G. Moorehead, Dr. Talbot W. Chambers, and others. Hunt & Eaton. $1.50

The Ascent of Faith; or, the Grounds of Certainty in Science and Religion. By Alexander James Harrison, B.D. Thomas Whittaker. $1.75

The Son of Man Among the Sons of Men. By the Rt. Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, D.D. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

Letters on Baptism. By Rev. Edmund B. Fairfield, D.D. Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. 75c.

The Early Spread of Religious Ideas, Especially in the Far East. By Joseph Edkins, B.A., D.D. London: The Religious Tract Society.

Harper's Magazine.

FEBRUARY.

166 Pages; 71 Illustrations.

A Transplanted Boy.
A Story. By CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLSON. With 4 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

Lord Byron and the Greek Patriots.
By Rev. HENRY HAYMAN, D. D. With Portraits.

An Anonymous Letter.
A Story. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Illustrated by CLIFFORD CARLETON.

A Masterpiece of Diplomacy.
A Farce. By W. D. HOWELLS. With 6 Illustrations by ALBERT E. STERNER.

In the Sierra Madre with the Punchers.
By FREDERIC REMINGTON. With 8 Illustrations by the Author.

An Adjustment of Accounts.
A Story. By WILLIAM MCLENNAN. With an Illustration by C. S. REINHART.

Walking Sticks.
By SAMUEL H. SCUDDER. With 11 Illustrations.

Vignettes of Manhattan.
III. In the Little Church Down the Street. By BRANDER MATTHEWS. With 2 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

In Tenebras.
A Parable. By HOWARD PYLE.

The-Man-that-Draws-the-Handcart.
By EDWARD EGGLESTON.

Great American Industries.
X. A Bar of Iron. By R. R. BOWKER. With 10 Illustrations.

A Singing-Student in London.
By JEAN FORSYTH.

The Flower of Death.
A Story. By FLAVEL SCOTT MINES.

Trilby.
A Story. By GEORGE DU MAURIER. Part II. Illustrated by the Author.

Editor's Study.
By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

Editor's Drawer
Contains an illustrated story by THOMAS NELSON PAGE and other humorous sketches.

Literary Notes.
By LAURENCE HUTTON.

SUBSCRIPTION, $4.00 A YEAR.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

HARPER & BROTHERS' NEW PUBLICATIONS

READY FEBRUARY 2d.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. Volume II. Addresses and Reports on the Reform of the Civil Service of the United States. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $3.50. (Already published: Vol. I. On the Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duty of American Citizens.)

Horace Chase.

A Novel. By CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLSON, Author of "Anne," "Jupiter Lights," "East Angels," etc. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Science of the Earth.

Some Salient Points in the Science of the Earth. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C. M. G., LL. D., Author of "The Story of the Earth and Man," "The Origin of the World," etc. With forty-six Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2.00.

Parisian Points of View.

(Nine Tales.) By LUDOVIC HALÉVY. The Translation by EDITH V. B. MATTHEWS. An Introduction by BRANDER MATTHEWS. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the "Odd Number Series.")

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes.

Stories. By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "The Refugees," "Micah Clarke," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. Uniform in size and price with "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," by the same author.

In Direst Peril.

A Novel. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Time's Revenges," "First Person Singular," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Practical Biology.

Introduction to Elementary Practical Biology. By CHARLES WRIGHT DODGE, M. S., Professor of Biology, Rochester University. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $1.80. (Mailing price, $1.98.)

The Penance of John Logan.

And Two Other Tales. By WILLIAM BLACK. New Edition, Revised and Corrected by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, 80 cents.

OTHER NEW BOOKS.

Letters of James Russell Lowell.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. With Three Photogravure Portraits. Two Volumes. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $8.00; Three-Quarter Calf, $12.50. (In a Box.)

A Short History of the English People.

By J. R. GREEN. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE. In Four Volumes. Vols. I., II., and III. now ready. With Colored Plates, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations. Royal 8vo, Illuminated Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $5.00 per volume.

The Rulers of the Mediterranean.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "The West from a Car-Window," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Italian Gardens.

By CHARLES A. PLATT. With Many Illustrations, including a Colored Frontispiece printed in Paris. 4to, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $5.00. (In a Box.)

The above works are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. HARPER'S CATALOGUE will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 10 FEBRUARY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 3 Whole No. 499

Charles Scribner's Sons' Standard New Books

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF DEAN STANLEY.

By R. E. Prothero, with the Co-operation of Dean Bradley. With portraits and illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

"Perhaps no similar book since Trevelyan's 'Life of Macaulay' has been prepared with so much care or wisdom. It is a work that will be to many well-nigh indispensable."—Boston Journal.

"Should take its place with the great biographies of the world." —N. Y. World.

"One of the most profound, scholastic and brilliant biographies ever written."—Chicago Daily News.

"Their biographical interest and value are beyond all praise."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"One of the great biographies of the day."—Chicago Tribune.

"It presents a great career with desirable fullness and in a literary form intensely attractive."—Boston Advertiser.

"One of the most valuable biographies of late years."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier. With portraits. In 3 vols., 8vo. Vol. I. now ready, $2.50.

"Memoirs which promise to be among the most valuable ever published concerning the Napoleonic period. Pasquier's account of the Empire is surely one of the best that any contemporary has left us. It will be found rich in material concerning the imperial régime, and in portraits of Napoleon's family and associates."—Atlantic Monthly.

"Pasquier lived through the Revolution, the Consulate, the Empire; he held office under every régime; he became the Chancellor of France; he was intimate with Napoleon and Talleyrand—in short, of all Frenchmen, save Talleyrand himself, he was the best equipped to write the history of his time. How well he has done this it is as yet too early to say; but he has done it admirably should the remaining two volumes of the work equal in interest the first, now before us."—Philadelphia Press.

PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY—FRANCE.

By Robert Flint, D. D., LL. D., Professor in the University of Edinburgh, author of "Theism," "Anti-Theistic Theories," etc. 8vo, $4.00.

"The volume makes up a large octavo of 705 pages, and is replete in interest to the philosophical student of history. It is both historical and critical, and it aims to show the rise and progress of reflection and speculation in human developments. It is a valuable and entertaining book. The thoughtful scholar will find the volume a rich mine of thought."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

CIVILIZATION DURING THE MIDDLE AGES,

Especially in Relation to Modern Civilization. By George B. Adams, Professor of History in Yale University. 8vo, $2.50.

"Prof. Adams's work is lucid in plan and style, comprehensive in its survey of the field, and has the additional merit of being highly interesting."—Prof. George P. Fisher.

"This volume, we are confident, will be found one of the notable books of the year just begun. Professor Adams proceeds on the assumption that the facts of history are known. It is with the sequence and philosophy of these facts he deals, and it is here that his work has its great value."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

REMBRANDT: HIS LIFE, HIS WORK, AND HIS TIME.

By Emile Michel. Edited by Frederic Wedmore. With more than 320 photogravures, colored plates, and text illustrations. 2 vols., royal 8vo., $15.00.

"Let us say at once that the book is admirable and, considering what it contains, astonishingly cheap. M. Michel is one of the leading authorities on Rembrandt and his works, and has written a monumental and, we should think, nearly definitive Life. Hardly too much can be said in praise of the illustrations."—The Nation.

MEN, WOMEN AND BOOKS.

By Augustine Birrell. 16mo, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," $1.00.

"Augustine Birrell has won for himself an enviable reputation as an essayist, and his new volume will add to it. His pen sketches are wonderfully graphic." —Boston Advertiser.

OBITER DICTA SERIES:

Obiter Dicta, by Augustine Birrell. First and Second Series, each 16mo, $1.00; Res Judicatae, by Augustine Birrell, 16mo, $1.00; Letters to Dead Authors, by Andrew Lang, 16mo, $1.00; Views and Reviews, by W. E. Henley, 16mo, $1.00. Just Ready: Stelligeri, and Other Essays Concerning America, by Barrett Wendell, 16mo, $1.25.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books.

Germany and the Germans.

By WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON, author of "German Socialism and Ferdinand Lassalle," "Prince Bismarck and State Socialism," etc. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"This excellent work—a literary monument of intelligent and conscientious labor—deals with every phase and aspect of state and political activity, public and private, in the Fatherland. . . . Teems with entertaining anecdotes and introspective aperçus of character."—London Telegraph.

"With Mr. Dawson's two volumes before him, the ordinary reader may well dispense with the perusal of previous authorities. . . . His work, on the whole, is comprehensive, conscientious, and eminently fair."—London Chronicle.

The Story of the Sun.

By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, F. R. S., author of "An Atlas of Astronomy," "The Cause of an Ice Age," etc. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

Professor Ball's entertaining style is known to so large a number of readers of his popular astronomical works that this volume, which brings together the results of all the latest investigations concerning the sun, will find a ready welcome.

The Romance of an Empress.

Catharine II., of Russia. By K. WALISZEWSKI. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

"Of Catharine's marvelous career we have in this volume a sympathetic, learned, and picturesque narrative. No royal career, not even of some of the Roman or papal ones, has better shown us how truth can be stranger than fiction."—New York Times.

"A striking and able work, deserving of the highest praise."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"The book is well called a romance, for, although no legends are admitted in it, and the author has been at pains to present nothing but verified facts, the actual career of the subject was so abnormal and sensational as to seem to belong to fiction."—New York Sun.

"A dignified, handsome, indeed superb volume, and well worth careful reading."—Chicago Herald.

General Scott.

By General MARCUS J. WRIGHT. A new volume in the Great Commander Series, edited by Gen. JAMES GRANT WILSON. With Portrait and Maps. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

General Wright's book is a work of popular interest. The subject is one of the most picturesque and impressive to be found in our military history, and the author, in availing himself of the latest authorities, has produced a book which seems likely to be accepted as a standard work in its class.

How to Study and Teach History,

With Particular Reference to the History of the United States. By B. A. HINSDALE, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of the Science and the Art of Teaching in the University of Michigan, author of "Schools and Studies," etc. Vol. 25, International Education Series. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The aim of this book is practical, and it was written with particular reference to the needs of elementary and secondary teachers, although it will be found of interest and value to teachers and students of all grades. It is one of the most important and valuable volumes in the series.

The Greater Glory.

A Story of High Life. By MAARTEN MAARTENS, author of "God's Fool," "Joost Avelingh," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Press comments on "God's Fool."

"Maarten Maartens is a great novelist and a remarkable man. . . . Few books since the best days of Dickens and Thackeray contain such quiet humor and depict human nature with such an unerring touch."—Cleveland World.

"Maarten Maartens has secured a firm footing in the eddies of current literature. . . . Pathos deepens into tragedy in the thrilling story of 'God's Fool.'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

"One of the greatest successes of the year."—New York Tribune.

A Gray Eye or So.

By FRANK FRANKFORT MOORE, author "I Forbid the Banns," "Highways and High Seas," etc. No. 131, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

One of the most amusing and taking of contemporary modern novels. . . . The book is packed with vivacious cleverness of speech, sparkle of wit, and shrewdness of observation. It overflows with good things."—London Athenæum.

"A very bright and clever novel, written with unflagging liveliness and a vivacity that never fails."—St. James's Gazette.

Earlscourt.

A Novel of Provincial Life. By ALEXANDER ALLARDYCE, author of "Balmoral: A Romance of the Queen's Country," "The City of Sunshine," etc. No. 132, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The adroitness with which the author works out his motive, and the sustained interest due to plot and to the graphic reproduction of certain phases of English social life, seem certain to gain for this book a success which will greatly enhance Mr. Allardyce's reputation as a new light in the English fiction of the day.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,
1, 3, & 5 BOND STREET, - - - NEW YORK.

THE CASSELL PUBLISHING CO.

HAVE JUST ISSUED:

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

Will create as much of a sensation as the "Heavenly Twins."

By MARION HARLAND.

Mr. WAYT'S WIFE'S SISTER.

By MARION HARLAND (Mrs. Mary Virginia Terhune), author of "Common Sense in the Household," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, author of "List, ye Landsmen!" "The Romance of a Transport." 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

By J. COMPTON RICKETT.

QUICKENING OF CALIBAN.

A modern story of evolution. By J. COMPTON RICKETT, author of "The Christ that is to Be." 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, laid paper, etc., $1.00.

"It deals with some of the more modern theories of evolution, and does this in a thoroughly interesting manner."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"The story is a very strange one, and will doubtless be widely read. There are strong characters in addition to the leading ones, and incidentally the shams of London society and intellectual life are cleverly revealed."—Boston Times.

"Brimful of meaning, suggestion, and fine satire."—London Academy.

"Since Mr. Grant Allen's well-known study of the Rev. John Creedy we have scarcely come across so remarkable a book as the present—in which the author of that original and unusual book, 'The Christ that is To Be,' has given us a second proof of his originality and power."—The Bookseller (London).

By WILLIAM H. BEARD.

ACTION IN ART.

With over two hundred and twenty illustrations from the original drawings by the author. 1 vol., 8vo, extra cloth, gilt top, etc., $2.00.

PROF. H. BLÜMNER.

HOME LIFE OF THE ANCIENT GREEKS.

Translated from the German of Prof. H. BLÜMNER by Alice Zimmern. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol., 8vo, extra cloth, etc., $2.00.

By HENRY MORLEY, LL. D.

ENGLISH WRITERS.

An attempt toward A History of English Literature.

Now ready, Vol. X., SHAKESPEARE AND HIS TIME: UNDER ELIZABETH. 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, etc., $1.50.

By SARAH GRAND.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS.

In one large 12mo volume of nearly 700 pages. Extra cloth, $1.00.

"A dangerous and difficult subject for a novel."—The American Woman's Illustrated World.

. At no time since the publication of this book, although edition after edition has come from the press, have the publishers been able to supply the demand for this remarkable volume. It is without question the great success of the year.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS,

The Cassell Publishing Co.,
31 E. 17th St. (Union Sq.), New York.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 10 FEBRUARY 1894 No. 3

CONTENTS

Catharine Furze 35
Sir Thomas Mallory's Morte D'Arthur . . 35
Huxley's Collected Essays 36
The Barbary Coast 36
A Spinster's Leaflets 37
A Militant Bishop 37
A Commentary on Ibsen 37
The Building of the City Beautiful . . 38
East and West 38
Dante Literature 39

Original Poetry:
  To Omar Khayyám. Theodore Harris . . . 40
New York Letter 40
Philadelphia Notes 40
Fiction:
  Christina Chard 41
  Prisoners of the Earth 41
  When We Two Parted 41
  The Lost Canyon of the Toltecs 41
  The Third Alarm 41
  A Gray Eye or So 42
Minor Notices:
  Seventy Years of Irish Life 42
  Sir Joshua Reynolds 42
  Historic Green Bay 42
  The Spanish Pioneers 42
  Italian Gardens 43
  Gypsying Beyond the Sea 43
  How to Study and Teach History . . . 43
  Portuguese Missions in Asia and Africa . . 43
  From Things to God 43
  Bishop Carpenter's Sermons 43
  Sub-Cœlum 44
  Men, Women and Books 44
  Camp-Fire Musings 44
  The Lover's Lexicon 44
  Action in Art 44
  Some Minor Arts 44
  A Paradise of English Poetry 44
Periodicals 45
News and Notes 46
Publications Received 47

CATHARINE FURZE.*

THE author who uses the pen name of "Mark Rutherford" has here produced a work of more importance and broader scope than anything he has hitherto published. His studies of human character in certain subtle aspects have taken shape in the history of a young girl. Her surroundings were not of special interest; her life was short, and the events in it were few and colorless, as ordinary observers would regard them. But in the hands of this biographer these happenings assume tragic import. The story pulses with tumultuous life; there is a glowing fire of passion; there is heart hunger, struggle, repression, and final self-conquest. Catharine is the one child of parents who have no knowledge of what she is, and who are by their narrowness incapable of comprehending her. She has an intense nature, with thoughts and feelings she cannot herself understand, and with her dignity of character she cannot possibly make them known. Left in this way to self-imprisonment and isolation, she is sent away to school by her weak-minded mother, and there she meets Mr. Cardew, the rector, who has failed to find in his wife the adaptability which his ill-organized and exacting nature demands. The minister and the proud, reticent girl enter on the way that leads to ruin. This is hardly more than in thought, however, when, as by the illumination of a lightning flash, Catharine sees and understands where she is. The author has perilous material in his hands in dealing with the relations between these two, but he serves the ethical purpose of his story without overstepping the limits of true art. The outcome could hardly be other than he has made it with his knowledge of Catharine's nature. It is this singular penetration, insight into character, understanding of its complexities, power of analyzing motives and arriving at conclusions, together with remarkable candor and abhorrence of shams which make this writer so attractive to a certain class of readers. His pronounced opinions on the conduct of life, the nature of rectitude, and the true standards of human action give peculiar force to his writing. His style has a peculiar charm. His pages are full of pleasant surprises. His touch is deft, and his workmanship skillful.

SIR THOMAS MALLORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR.*

THE world has two great story-books in extraordinary, each possessed of an individuality which reduces to the ranks of the ordinary many notable tales and collections of tales. One is Oriental — the Book of the Thousand Nights and a Night; the other Occidental — Sir Thomas Mallory's Morte d'Arthur. Centuries come in and go out without depreciating the charm of the very diverse pictures and dramas and types of humanity which they offer; the generation to come will find them as impressive as did the generation departed. They are supreme abstracts of romance, religion, love, and glory.

Of editions of Mallory's masterwork the best one is unquestionably the most expensive — Dr. Oscar Sommer's eminent labor of love, which should be in the library of every earnest student of English literature, but which, unfortunately, is somewhat too costly for the average scholar's purse to afford. Of anything in the way of a popular reprint we do not hesitate to pronounce the present one the best, and it is to be commended most kindly to the widest circle of the reading world that can obtain it. Only the first volume of the two necessary to complete the edition is at hand now, so careful and enthusiastic have been the labors of Mr. F. J. Simmons, the editor, and of Professor Rhys of Oxford. The second and final volume is, however, in an advanced state of preparation and will speedily be in print. It is not too emphatic praise to reckon the edition definitive. Naturally, the text which Mr. Simmons presents is Caxton's own, after a careful process of collating and comparison, and with a certain very unobtrusive and judicious modifying of the archaic spelling. It faithfully reproduces the flavor, orthographic and otherwise, of the original. The editor has been tireless in his painstaking, and the result of his watchfulness seems not less a matter of his personal interest than of literary conscience. The chronicle can be read without interruption save for the marginal gloss upon some obsolete word. An excellent and peculiarly interesting essay on Mallory and his work, from Professor Rhys, is made prefatory to the body of the book; it includes in its course a scholarly study of the essential materials of the whole Morte d'Arthur and takes into special consideration the possible elements of historical truth latent in so gorgeous a tissue of chivalric fictions. Professor Rhys quite positively favors the theory, expressed by Zimmer, that a striking majority of the Round Table legends came from Brittany; those which revolve around the sacred mystery of the Sangreal — the group of histories in which the Cup is the motive power and the inner inspiration — he refers back to Welsh sources. This conclusion has found a fairly general acceptance among many myth-students.

It is late to speak of the Morte d'Arthur as if any considerable part of the well-read world were not familiar with it at first-hand; yet too many persons know it only through Tennyson's and Arnold's verse, or by brief extracts and adaptations from one or another hand. There is use in such bundles of extracts and fragments. But even the dignity and grace of the Idylls of the King do not diminish the moving and poetic prose of Mallory's own complete pages, incomparable in romantic literature of England or of the world. It is not within the fancy of even the literary pessimist to set limits to its vitality. Those who have not read it have now an admirable opportunity to repair the fault.

The book is issued with a thoroughly artistic suggestiveness of the antique as to paper and letterpress. The illustrations, which are particularly profuse, are intended to increase this result very significantly; but we are not sure that they do so by any means. Mr. Beardsley is an artist of exceptional originality. That admirable quality seems to have bewrayed him here. Of the strong individuality and boldness of his work there can be no question, but there is an almost complete want of congruity between the feeling in the pictures and such a book. The initial letters and borders are in keeping. The illustrations otherwise throw into our faces more or less violent suggestions of Japanese, Pompeian, Greek, French Impressionistic, and even of fin de siècle extravagance in delineation; and when Mr. Beardsley is so obliging as to seem to be trying to be early English his anatomical drawing is queerly poor. His style is so unique in these pictures as to give one a more decided impression than ever of his unlikeness to anybody else, of his wonderful mastery of line and clearsightedness for simple effects. The book distinctly gains in value as a book from what he has so lavishly put into every chapter. But he has too liberally illustrated his own audacious fancies, almost to the point of the grotesque; and some such pictures as "Arthur and the Questing Beast" are unintelligible and wholly in antithesis to the subject. All connoisseurs of books, as well as the admirers of Mallory, will await the second volume of this fine edition with interest.

---

* Catharine Furze. By Mark Rutherford. Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

* The Birth, Life, and Acts of King Arthur, of His Noble Knights of the Round Table, Their Marvellous Enquests and Adventures, the Achieving of the Sangreal; and, in the end, Le Morte d'Arthur, with the Dolorous Death and Departing out of this World of Them All. The Text as Written by Sir Thomas Mallory, and imprinted by William Caxton at Westminster the Year MCCCCLXXXV; and now spelled in the modern style. With an Introduction by Professor Rhys, and embellished with many original designs by Aubrey Beardsley. Vol. I, 4to. London: J. M. Dent & Co.; New York: Macmillan & Co. $7.00.

HUXLEY'S COLLECTED ESSAYS.*

THE world of science has lately lost the distinguished investigator and lecturer with whom Professor Huxley's name was long associated as if they were twin brothers. Some years back what "Tyndall and Huxley" said was for many the essence of infidelity; for others it was the evident truth of nature and philosophy; for a few it was important in its substance and in its expression, but to be taken with discrimination, especially when either professor crossed the line of his own specialty and gave law to the metaphysician or the theologian. Both were in the highest degree bent on the acquisition of truth and truth alone, and it was not strange that the bigoted denunciation they encountered from mere ecclesiasticism and traditionalism aroused the fighting blood in both and led to statements which need much qualification to commend them to the acceptance of the philosophic mind. Of the two writers, Professor Huxley is the more robust and combative, and a harder-hitting style than that of his controversial papers it would be difficult to find. But he has so far mollified with the course of time and the gradual liberalization of thought as to pay compliments to English bishops for their fairmindedness — a striking sign of change in the intellectual climate!

It is a pleasure to see Professor Huxley editing, in a neat form, his more distinctively popular writings, of which we are promised nine volumes, including the Hume and Man's Place in Nature. The style of the collection is familiar from the admirable editions of Matthew Arnold, John Morley, and Walter Pater issued by the Macmillans. An American must regret that the Appletons have used such inferior paper and binding that one immediately sees he is not handling books manufactured by the noted English firm. American presses have shown themselves quite able to equal the example set them in the English works mentioned, and the admirers of Professor Huxley would not have grudged a little higher price for better paper and more careful binding.

The first volume of the three already issued has the most of present interest, since it reprints a brief autobiography, prepared a few years ago, gives the strong paper on Descarte's Discourse on Method, four papers which are virtually the application of Descarte's principles to several scientific problems, and then presents four other essays bearing on the social discussions of the day. Over twenty years ago Professor Huxley aptly stigmatized Mr. Herbert Spencer's strict individualism as "administrative nihilism." The same sturdy English sense for the practical and the attainable is fully displayed in the three papers on the natural inequality of men, national rights and political rights, and government, first printed in 1890. The writer, starting from the known in government of one's self, of the family, and of the state, declares the lesson of experience to be that safety lies neither in regimentation nor in individualism pushed to anarchy, but in a rational balance between the two principles. No method of discussion is, indeed, more fatal to the claims of socialism than this appeal to experience. The single-tax theorist, too, will find Professor Huxley a much more formidable antagonist than the recalcitrant Mr. Spencer.

The second volume contains, among other papers, the two essays on "The Darwinian Hypothesis" and "The Origin of Species," which rank among the very ablest contemporary discussions of Darwin's famous book. "The Coming of Age of the 'Origin of Species'" (1880) shows the marvelous change of opinion in twenty-one years — a change to which Professor Huxley has powerfully contributed. Under the simple heading "Obituary" is given the memoir of Darwin, fifty pages in length, contributed to the Royal Society, and the volume closes with the six familiar lectures to workingmen "on our knowledge of the causes of the phenomena of organic nature."

The third volume contains seventeen papers which all come well within the rubric "science and education," though the address on Priestley takes a wider range. "Science and Culture" is the address which called out Matthew Arnold's defense of literature in education against the somewhat one-sided view of Professor Huxley.

THE BARBARY COAST.*

THIS, as we reckon, is the ninth book of travels from the practiced and facile pen of Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field, the veteran editor of the Evangelist. Perhaps because latest impressions are freshest, perhaps also because the Barbary coast is less familiar than Ireland, Egypt, Palestine, Spain, and Greece, it seems to us nearly, if not quite, the writer's best work. The new routes and multiplying voyages of the great German steamers from New York into the Mediterranean are turning a large current of travel that way to the Orient direct; and they create a new occasion for a book like this while also exciting a new interest in its subject. It is now the thing to sail from New York direct to Genoa, Alexandria, or Algiers; and twelve days from Sandy Hook bring one through the Pillars of Hercules to the edges of African deserts and the gates of the Far East.

In the present volume of 250 pages Dr. Field just touches with his foot the soil of Gibraltar for a moment and then crosses swiftly to the African shore at Tangier, moving thence slowly as far east as Tunis and penetrating inland as far as Biskra and a little farther. A delicious climate, a varied and picturesque scenery, a strange and striking native life, a French colonialism, the bazar of the Orient and the café of Paris side by side, the camel and the railway, the donkey and the electric light, make up a picture, an experience, scarcely to be found elsewhere on the globe. The personal element in the picture before us is accented a trifle by the companionship of Richard Harding Davis with Dr. Field.

We will touch lightly on a few salient points. Tangier bursts like "a vision of beauty" upon the visitor approaching from Gibraltar, "its white walls rising from the sea." No carriage takes you to the hotel; the donkey has the right of way. The streets are abominably filthy. "On the outside it is one of the most beautiful of cities; within it is the vilest." The peculiar atmosphere takes all glare out of the African sun. The country around is full of wild boars, some of them very large and fierce; a boar hunt is the sport of the Tangierine. The horizon is full of mountains. To Algiers one proceeds most easily, via Oran by a steamer on whose decks you meet all nationalities, exchanging at Oran the steamer for the luxurious carriage of a modern and first-class railway. The two hundred and fifty miles to Algiers require twelve hours. At first pasture land, where

---

*Collected Essays. By T. H. Huxley. Method and Results; Darwiniana; Science and Education. D. Appleton & Co. Each, $1.25.

*The Barbary Coast. By Henry M. Field. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

Arabs are tending their flocks; then the beginning of French settlements; then, in Algiers, an essentially European city, bright, gay, and busy:

> The charm is not in the city itself but in its atmosphere, in the balmy air, in the palms and the flowers that bloom in midwinter; and in its surroundings, the encircling hills crested with villas, from whose broad verandas look out not Eastern houris but noble English and American women, who in this land of the sun gather in their interiors all the attractions of their distant homes.

White walls, the blue of the Mediterranean, the distant Atlas Mountains covered with snow, bright Arab children, everywhere the sunshine — this is Algiers. But Algiers, says Dr. Field, ought to be neither the beginning nor the end of a journey in North Africa. There is rugged Kabylia, with grand passes and Alpine heights; there are bold gorges opening to the south; there is Biskra, toward the desert, with well-paved streets and brilliant shops; there is the vast Sahara, "larger than the earth and broader than the sea;" there is Constantine, planted on its rocks as if the whole of Edinburgh stood on its Castle Hill, Jugurtha's stronghold two thousand years ago; there are the ruins and remains of Carthage — delenda est; there is the mighty shade of the great Augustine; last, but not least, is the noble African lion. What a majestic head of one is that depicted against page 124! What a soul behind that face! Tamed savagery, gentle grandeur, the lamb looking out of the lion's eyes. Then there is Tunis on its level plain, with its 250,000 people — the third city of Africa — with its bustling bazar, its gallery-like streets, its Grand Hotel, its red-legged Zouaves — all colors and all races.

Besides his distinctively descriptive chapters, Dr. Field discusses in a statesmanlike way the question of French occupation and movements toward the interior of the continent; sketches a historical picture of Carthage and a biographical one of the great Bishop of Hippo — "the last great African;" moralizes a little over the Moslems, for whom he has a kind word to say, and surmises prosperity for Africa and French administration. There is a memorial sentence for the good Cardinal Lavigerie and a visit to his half-garrison, half-convent.

A number of well-executed woodcuts, besides the lion's head above noted, beautify the book, help out its interest, and make us want to go to Africa.

A SPINSTER'S LEAFLETS.*

THERE is a quaintness and originality in the style of this story written by Alyn Yates Keith which make us glad that it has been reprinted from the Evening Post. It might better be called a series of leaflets which combine to make a tender, pathetic little love story. A love story does not necessarily mean a romance, the tale of a courtship, and in this case it means the story of a mother's love.

The lonely spinster who sat in her sitting-room, "lifted one step above the kitchen, like a sort of higher life," and who longed to possess a "lay baby," a little child on whom to lavish the hoarded wealth of her affectionate heart, is a genuine character, worth describing in fine pen-and-ink lines. Then the story of her realized dream — her adoption of a little boy, not the tiny baby she had longed for, but a little lonely bit of humanity who seemed, as it were, "sent to her by Providence" — is told with unusual humor and pathos. Of course the boy did not turn out all that she had hoped he would, at least not at first, but patience and faith and love finally worked together and brought the spinster mother a rich return for her unselfish devotion. Miss Toosey's Mission went straight to the heart of thousands of readers. We shall be surprised if A Spinster's Leaflets does not do the same. It is a sweet, wholesome, graceful little series of leaflets. We prophesy for it and for its author's future work no small success.

A MILITANT BISHOP.*

THE picture of the bishop on horseback, leading armies, was more common in the Middle Ages than it has been in our century. Whether it were the Buddhist bishop in helmet and armor inciting his armed mob to burn down rival monasteries and dictate imperial policy, or the ecclesiastical burglar of Europe, the phenomenon was too common to be a curiosity. Since the Reformation, however, when a spiritual shepherd exchanges the lawn for the army uniform much explanation seems necessary to make clear the reason of the extraordinary change of action and environment. In the handsomely printed volumes before us a large part of the text is devoted to clearing up the mystery of an acceptable bishop becoming a Confederate general. The author has done his part of the work with conscientious care, and the narrative is clear and thoroughly interesting. He has left the finishing touches to Mr. E. E. Treffry, who has certainly magnified his office, furnishing not only the page and chapter headings (which, as readers of the King James version of the English Bible know, are often dictatorial and even coercive as to interpretations of the text below) but also an index filling sixty-eight pages. The diagrams and maps of battles are skillfully made and beautifully printed and there are several steel plate engravings by Sartain; so the outward dress of the book is very comely.

The Polks (whose name is a contraction of Pollock) were Scotch pioneers who served under Cromwell and emigrated to the eastern shore of Maryland. As colonel of Continentals Thomas Polk served with Washington at Brandywine and Valley Forge and convoyed the "liberty bell" to Bethlehem. William Polk fought in several revolutionary battles in the South and welcomed Lafayette in 1824. His son, Leonidas, born with soldier blood in his veins, went through West Point, traveled through New England and Canada, and was graduated from the theological seminary at Alexandria. He did good missionary work in the southwest and was warmly interested in the welfare of the Southern States. He held extreme "southern views," believing intensely in State sovereignty and in slavery as an institution ordained of God. He was in a sense an absentee bishop of Louisana when the war broke out, for he was residing at Sewanee, Tenn. There, through his enthusiastic efforts, the Southern University was founded under the auspices of the Episcopal Church. He waited patiently the course of events, though he believed that secession was a foregone conclusion with at least all the Gulf States. It was his conviction that an ordinance of secession was as intrinsically right as the same act by which it had entered the federal Union. Evidently it had been taught at West Point that, as to duty, the soldier must obey first the State and then, through the State, the United States. In other words, Leonidas Polk was a disciple of the theories of Barneveldt, John De-Witt, and Calhoun. When the war broke out, and the necessity of every Southerner to support his State and her rights seemed imperative, he took up the sword at once. Of a fiery temper, and evidently more controlled by impulse than by reason, he appears to have acted more like one who has in him "the blood of the clan" than in accordance with the cool dictates of enlightened reason. The second volume, which treats of his military experiences, is more valuable to the student of the war, though the first is more interesting to the student of biography. A cannon shot at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain "crashed through his breast," and he died at the age of fifty-eight. Admiring the sincerity and unselfishness of Leonidas Polk, as we cannot help doing, and without any sympathy with his political convictions or determinations, we cannot but express a favorable opinion of the value of this work.

A COMMENTARY ON IBSEN.*

THIS calm, dispassionate study of the noted Norwegian writer is both timely and valuable. It is timely because Ibsen has now been long enough before the reading public to allow the violence of partisanship caused by his searching questions and his sweeping denunciations to subside, while yet no adequate study of his works has appeared. He is no longer cultivated as the latest literary sensation, but neither is he complacently approved or condemned for theories only half understood. Professor Boyesen possesses especial qualifications for understanding Ibsen as a man and estimating his place as a writer. He wastes no time in quarreling with him for what he is not, even when his own ideals may lead him to differ from his author's conclusions. He accepts the dramatist as a fact and seeks to understand his work as it stands, recognizing the unalterable fixity of character of a man of genius, and sure that an Ibsen "reconstructed and harmonized" would need very little study.

---

* A Spinster's Leaflets. By Alyn Yates Keith. Lee & Shepard.

* Leonidas Polk, Bishop and General. By William M. Polk. Longmans, Green & Co. 2 vols. $4.00.

* A Commentary on the Writings of Henryk Ibsen. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Ibsen is a ceaseless asker of questions. He propounds problems and leaves us to answer them or not as we will. Professor Boyesen finds the necessity for facing them that is practically forced on thinking minds both stimulating and helpful. James Russell Lowell said once, referring to Browning, that he found himself not unwilling to think when he was compelled to it, and Professor Boyesen evidently believes that the same process need be neither disagreeable nor dangerous for readers of Ibsen. To face these questions and to understand the dramas is of more consequence than to assign to their writer his exact position as a thinker. The commentator confesses, indeed, that he has failed to discover the dominant principle that ought to underlie all this restless dissatisfaction, this ruthless criticism of life. He seems almost uncertain whether or not to believe Ibsen's statement of faith in evolution, in "the possibility of transmuting and developing [human] ideals," and his assertion that in this sense he is an optimist. Professor Boyesen does not delay at this point, however, but goes on to present the story of Ibsen's life and to consider each of his important social dramas separately. Naturally he looks to the poems for revelations of Ibsen's own personality, the charm of which rests chiefly in its distinctness and definiteness. After having attempted in vain to classify him as a Schopenhauer, a Voltaire, a Rousseau, or a Carlyle, he decides that in Henri Beyle (Stendhal) there is a nearer kinship to Ibsen than in any of the others, though in Ibsen there is a total lack of humor which leads him to mistake often the real proportions of the evils he attacks.

We have not space nor would it be desirable to consider the detailed analysis of the dramas, each of which takes its place in Ibsen's presentation of the problems of modern life. That their writer has become a power in the world of thought must be conceded, and for him who desires a commentary on the works of an independent thinker, "now the pride of the people whom he has scourged," Professor Boyesen's book will be most helpful. Let one's conclusions be what they may, there is at least "something wholesome and morally purifying in this stern spirit holding up to a paltry and pusillanimous world a mirror of an impossible perfection."

THE BUILDING OF THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.*

IN a first edition of five hundred choicely printed, small-paper copies, Mr. Joaquin Miller has issued his dream of the ideal society. What poet ever lived who had not some vision of a "City Beautiful," and what theme is more perennially attractive to the world at large? This particular vision is told in prose chapters, each preluded by simple and sometimes musical verse. The story begins in Jerusalem, where a Jewish woman of marvelous gifts and goodness meets a man of the Western world and teaches him some of the lessons she has learned. Trained under Sir Moses Montefiore to consider the needs of colonies, this latter day Miriam is dissatisfied with the attempts at city-building that she has seen in the Holy Land. Together the two friends journey into Egypt, the one speaking to the other many words of wisdom and power. "Let us go forth," she says, "and build a city . . . and let us lay the moral and social foundations on the sacred and immortal precepts of the Sermon on the Mount."

At Cairo they parted, the man going to found a settlement in the far West. On a hilltop above the Golden Gate he pitched his tent. A few comrades joined him, grew discouraged, and departed. After various mistakes and failures, he lay one night reproaching himself, visited by "dreamful and confused thoughts." It seemed to him that he saw Miriam. With her he entered a ship and sailed above the clouds. The second half of the book describes the City Beautiful which she had built in a desert. It was approached by railroad cars of malleable glass; its inhabitants had grown so sensitive and refined, "even in a few years of meditation and unselfishness, that they really knew the thoughts and feelings of one another." The desert sands had been cemented into blocks of building stone, and we are incidentally told that this was the mode in which the Egyptians built their pyramids. When the pilgrim murmured, "And the desert shall blossom as the rose," a priest assured him that "the only real place for the rose is in the fervid sands of the desert. Warm sands above, artesian water below, and you have such roses as the world has not seen since the Garden of Eden." The citizens had time for all desirable pursuits, because they spent none in watching one another; they had "no bankers, no landlords, no brokers, no soldiers, no jailers, no idlers, indeed, of any sort." Their law and order they found in germ among the savages. Conserving what they believed to be good in the Indian's life, they "continued the common ownership of nature's storehouse and left to the individual the fruit of his own toil."

So the vision unfolds — more coherent than some dreams of the night, offering here and there a scrap of argument, but open to many assaults of logic and common sense. Its strength is in a whole-hearted allegiance to the spirit of the Beatitudes. Moral and poetic insight, alloyed by crudity of reasoning, and frequent charm of expression, lacking the artist's perfect touch, are some of the characteristics to be noted in Mr. Miller's effort to depict his Utopia.

EAST AND WEST.*

THE poems of Ernest Francisco Fenollosa, art lecturer, musician, and connoisseur in things Japanese, come to us in beautiful white and gold covers, well suited to the luxurious, beauty-loving lines they contain. It seems not many years ago, and yet it was in 1874, that we sat in Appleton Chapel on a rainy June day and listened to his class-day poem. It would be difficult to name the poet whose verses would seem to us today quite so good as those seemed then, so filled with meaning, so worthy of enthusiastic comment; and it would be most unfair to compare the Phi Beta Kappa poem of eighteen years later with the vague memories of that other heard from the poet's lips when we were all young together — the world and the poet and the listener.

The Phi Beta Kappa poem has here the place of honor. Its length is less important as one reads it from the printed page, and one is here better able, too, to appreciate the breadth of its design and the appropriateness of its imagery. The other long poem of the volume is "The Discovery of America," a symphonic poem in four movements, called respectively "The Sea and the Sky," "Dreams," "Wedding Music," and "Triumph" — titles which suggest the treatment. To enjoy it thoroughly one must be willing to surrender himself to a mood as in music, and allow himself to be dominated by its conception and the unrestrained wealth of metaphor and comparison, rather than seek too insistently for definiteness of thought and clear outline. Taken by themselves the irregular, musical lines are often overweighted by the attempt to express too much. Sometimes it amounts to impressionism in words, and one is never quite sure of the mood in which he might read it for the second time. In the shorter poems one finds more variety of manner. After the others a "Requiem" seems almost severe in its simplicity, but it is a poem one remembers and likes to repeat. Sometimes the poet just misses his desired effect by the word too much, the expression too strained. "Karma," for instance, is an experiment that succeeds until one reaches the eighth stanza. This fails to compel the reader to its thought as do the others, and the climax of the closing lines thus loses half its power. The opening of "With Death" may be taken as an example of the way in which the poet may distract one's mind from the meaning of his words by their curiously woven harmonies.

---

*The Building of the City Beautiful. By Joaquin Miller. Cambridge and Chicago: Stone & Kimball.

*East and West. The Discovery of America and Other Poems. By E. F. Fenollosa. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.00.

When the lamplight dims in a mist of hymns,
And your sad, sweet glance in a glad trance swims,

are lines that vex one, because he is literally compelled to stop short and note the form, and yet the same poem contains these direct lines:

This is the self-made sting; this is the cursed thing:
To mutter the palsied doubt, to flutter with listless wing,
To creep like an icy snake in the grass of a sordid thought;
Never a passion to sin for, never a bliss to be fought.

There is much that one might quote from these passionate poems, instinct with the worship of beauty, love, and harmony.

* * *

DANTE LITERATURE.*

DR. SCARTAZZINI is the most eminent of living scholars of Dante, and Mr. A. J. Butler has added greatly to the indebtedness readers of the Divina Commedia acknowledge to himself by this excellent translation of the Dante-Handbuch of 1892. To a translation of a smaller manual Mr. Thomas Davidson had given the name of Handbook, so that Companion was Hobson's choice for Mr. Butler. This volume is much more extended, occupying some five hundred octavo pages. It was prepared in response to requests for a German version of the Prolegomeni of 1890. Dr. Scartazzini preferred to write an entirely new and independent work. It may safely be called the one book which the student of Dante should have at hand by the side of the original. Its four parts are entitled Dante in His Home; Dante in Exile; Dante's Spiritual Life; Dante's Smaller Works and the Divina Commedia. The translator does not always agree with his original in its "skepticism — perhaps almost better called negative dogmatism — which is now in fashion among some of the leading Dante scholars on the Continent;" but he goes on to say that "no one will deny that Dr. Scartazzini knows his Dante as well as any man, and Dante literature, especially that of the last hundred years, better in all probability than any man, while . . . he states his facts with precision and accuracy and quotes authorities almost in superfluity." To Dr. Scartazzini the Beatrice of the Commedia is purely symbolic, representing spiritual authority; he rejects most of the Letters as spurious, and he considers the Convito and the De Vulgari Eloquentia scholastic lectures which Dante may have given at Bologna and Paris in his exile.

Those who are acquainted with Mr. Snider's previous critical writings will expect from him a very different kind of "commentary" on the Inferno from that offered by Dr. Scartazzini. He is one of the commentators who tell us a good deal that may be so or not so in itself; but one thing is very probable, that it was not in the mind of the original writer. They start out from a "fundamental fact" and hold the poet strictly up to this all the time, while he — poor inconsequential man — may have lost sight of this profound idea in gazing upon some other fact not quite so "fundamental" (in the eyes of the critic), or be occupied too often with mere beauty. Mr. Snider, in his first sentence, declares that the "fundamental fact of Dante's poem" is that "it is the outgrowth of a Mythus — a Mythus which springs up with the origin of man and can end only when he ends, the Mythus of Life and Death, of the Here and the Hereafter." This Mythus, "when Death itself is not a terror but a hope, not a bond but a relief from bonds, not a limit but a passage to the deathless . . . has become the grand apocalypse of soul." Amid the immensities and eternities which such a conception opens Mr. Snider's voice is eloquent and confident and inspiring. One cannot, perhaps, say that this kind of commentary is equal in value to one more reading of the Inferno in a good prose version or in the original; but it is always thoughtful and provocative of thought. The advanced student will profit most by it, but the beginner had best avoid it lest it give him a distaste for more critical work of a surer kind.

Sir Edward Sullivan's version of the Inferno, with a few explanatory notes at the foot of the page, makes an attractive book. Comparison with Professor Norton's volume shows that the translator, in his desire to preserve "the poetical spirit which is so marked a characteristic of the work," has departed much more widely from literal accuracy. Occasionally he makes a mistake in understanding his author, as when he writes "low-lying" instead of "humble" (humiliated or fallen) Italy, "in whose defense fell chaste Camilla." Sir Edward's version has, indeed, a certain poetical flavor which Professor Norton's lacks, but when this is attained by departure from the meaning of the text the chief purpose of a prose version is lost. The translator says that he knows "of no prose rendering in our language which is throughout intelligible without the aid of the original text." He seems to be quite unaware of the existence of Professor Norton's version, to which certainly his remark would apply with no more force than to his own.

---

*A Companion to Dante. From the German of G. A. Scartazzini by Arthur John Butler. Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

Dante's Inferno. A Commentary by Denton J. Snider. Chicago: Sigma Publishing Co.

The Comedy of Dante Alighieri rendered into English Prose. By Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart. Hell. London: Elliot Stock.

* * *

— Mrs. William Makepeace Thackeray, widow of the great novelist, died January 11, at Eden Lodge, Leigh, at the age of seventy-five. It is just thirty years since Thackeray himself died, and now the death of his wife closes one of the most tragic stories in the lives of our English men of letters. Mrs. Thackeray was the daughter of a Colonel Shawe, of the Indian Army, and was married in 1836. In 1837 was born the novelist's eldest daughter, now Mrs. Thackeray Ritchie; a second daughter died young, and in 1840 was born a third daughter, who married Mr. Leslie Stephen and died some years ago. From the time of the birth of her third daughter Mrs. Thackeray's mind became seriously affected and she never recovered. This happened, too, at a time which makes it the sadder, for Thackeray was just beginning to be recognized as one of the literary giants of the nineteenth century. Mrs. Thackeray was buried by the side of her husband.

— A certain Dr. O. W. Owen has gone one better than Mr. Ignatius Donnelly. In a book published at Detroit, Mich., he claims to have proved — again with the help of a cipher — not only that Bacon wrote the works bearing the names of Shakespeare, Marlow, Green, Peele, and Spencer (sic), as well as The Anatomy of Melancholy, but also that he was the lawful son of Queen Elizabeth and Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, who had been secretly married in the Tower of London.

— As authorship goes, Maurus Jókai has made immense sums by his writings. Altogether he is said to have received something like £200,000 for his novels, plays, and poems, and at present a national edition of his works is being issued which will yield him another fortune. Of course his genius and his industry are both great; but, making all allowance for them, it must be said that as an author he has been exceptionally lucky. In more ways than one his career has been a romance; not the least romantic side of it has been the financial. — Publishers' Circular.

— The new French review, La Revue de Paris, which was announced some weeks ago, was to appear on the first of February. Although a fortnightly review of the external type of the Revue des Deux Mondes, in some respects the Revue de Paris will be more akin to the more important English monthlies. There will be no chronicle of art, literature, music, the drama, contributed by an established staff; but on all questions of the hour the Revue de Paris will address itself directly to the writers, French or foreign, most capable of treating them. It will have no definite bias, religious or political.

The Literary World

BOSTON 10 FEBRUARY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

To Omar Khayyám.

What darker blood, drawn from the Orient,
Coursed in mine English veins I never knew
Till in an idle hour I chanced upon
Thy matchless Rubáiyát — Omar Khayyám!
But the first quatrain e'er I read of thine
Proclaimed our preëxistent cousinship.
And as 'twere yesterday the scroll of time
Rolled back to sunnier climes and happier hours,
When thou and I within the tavern sate,
And talked of life and love, wine, woman, fate,
Of Kaikhosrú and Kaikobád the Great.
Nathless, good cousin Omar, whilst thyself
Hast vanished into that dim nothingness
Which thou wert wont to say all things began
And ended in, meseems that in thy tomb
Thou art still living! And, though drawing breath,
I am the one who died Oblivion's death!

THEODORE HARRIS.

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE death of Miss Constance Fenimore Woolson was a shock to her friends and readers in this city. On the day of its announcement I called at the Harpers' to make inquiries, but there only the mere news that she was dead had been received. The information that came later made the death all the more sad. It was known that Miss Woolson had been in ill health for several years and that one of her reasons for remaining abroad so long as she did was the hope that the climate there would benefit her. Letters which she wrote to friends in this country during the past few months indicate that she suffered greatly from her exile from home. Yet in many ways she liked Europe, and the widened scope which her life there gave her broadened her style and offered her admirable material for her fiction. She was a very hard worker, and, like Anthony Trollope, she could pursue her work anywhere. Personally, she was comparatively little known here, as her residence in Europe had, to a great extent, removed her from contact with American authors, though some of these she saw occasionally in London.

One of the most successful publications of the past few months is the Century World's Fair Book. Though it appeared only a few weeks before Christmas more than thirty-five thousand copies have already been sold. The way in which it happened to be written was peculiar. The idea was conceived by Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth of the Youth's Companion. He knew that a book describing in a semi-humorous way the adventures of two boys at the Fair would be popular; but he was tired of writing boys' books and did not care to undertake the task, so he suggested the scheme to one of his friends, who a short time afterwards repeated the suggestion to Mr. William Ellsworth, secretary of the Century Company. Mr. Ellsworth appreciated the value of the idea and at once communicated it to the company. Mr. Tudor Jenks, the well-known writer of short stories and verses, was forthwith sent to Chicago with instructions to write the book as quickly as possible. As the Fair was soon to close, he had no time to lose. His first few chapters were written on the train and sent back to New York by mail. Each day after his arrival at the Fair he spent in gathering material for the chapter which, in the evening, he wove into form and sent away. The book was completed in about ten days. It was a remarkable feat, and the excellence of the performance speaks well for Mr. Jenks' ready ability and facility as a writer.

Brooklyn has a new literary society, called the "Twentieth Century Club." It was started a few weeks ago by Mrs. George White Field, and its membership includes most of the prominent people of the city. The first meeting, held a week ago Saturday, was very successful. It was devoted to story-telling, and many capital stories were related by the members. Mr. Hopkinson Smith had been announced as the guest of the evening, but at the last moment he sent a telegram saying that he was "snowed up" in Providence. But at ten o'clock, to the surprise and delight of every one, he arrived in his traveling costume and, in spite of fatigue, delighted the club with his humorous tales and anecdotes. The club is to be very much more serious than its opening meeting would indicate. It will devote itself to discussion and at each meeting a distinguished guest will be present. Brooklyn has become very active in a literary way during the past few years, and this activity is due largely to Mrs. Field's disinterested efforts.

There has been some misunderstanding of late with regard to the identity of Robert Bridges, the poet, a volume of whose verses the Macmillans have announced for publication. It was thought by many people that he was the Robert Bridges who for many years has been one of the assistant editors of Scribner's Magazine and who is well known for his critical articles and literary dialogues in Life, contributed under the pseudonym of "Droch." Robert Bridges, the poet, however, is an Englishman. He has been writing for several years and has already won repute in his own country in spite of the fact that a good deal of his work has been privately printed. Within the past two years, however, he has contributed occasionally to American periodicals charming bits of verse, and these, together with his first American book, are sure to make him known on this side of the water.

I was amused the other day to hear a young author describe the fate of a bit of verse that he had written. "At first," he said, "I didn't think it was good. So I decided not to offer it anywhere. I set it aside and didn't look at it again for three months. Then I read it over, and to my surprise I found that it was the best thing I had done, or, at any rate, I thought it was. But I made up my mind to be modest about it and I sent it to Judge; Judge refused it. Then I sent it to Puck; Puck refused it. Then I tried Life; Life refused it. Then I got mad and sent it to the Century, just to keep my self-respect, as it were. The Century accepted it." I may add, what the writer of the poem didn't mention, that since its publication it has been copied all over the country.

Here is another story that is being told about Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Early in her literary career Miss Wheeler, as she was then, sent a poem to one of the leading magazines. It was accepted and paid for. Years passed, but the poem did not appear. In the meantime the author had married. One day she happened to recall the half-forgotten verses, and, on the impulse of the moment, she sat down and wrote a note to the editor who had accepted them. She informed him that she had changed her name and that when the poem did appear she wanted it to be published under her new name, so that her grandchildren should know that it was she who had written it. The editor apparently appreciated the humor of the communication, for in the next number of his magazine the verses appeared.

An elderly gentleman was pointed out to me the other day with the explanation that he had once been a successful novelist. I had never even heard his name before. "His history is very curious," said my companion. "Thirty years ago his stories were sought after by the smaller magazines, and when they were published in book form they sold by the tens of thousands. This success lasted for several years and then he fell out of notice. His style was old-fashioned and he seemed to be unable to adapt it to the new taste. He stopped writing about fifteen years ago and now he's completely forgotten." The story, I thought, was quite pathetic; but the old gentleman looked hale, hearty, happy, and prosperous. He had evidently made hay while the sun shone.

Mark Twain is still in New York. In a few weeks, however, he will return to France, where his family now are. He expects to remain abroad for at least another year; his exile, his readers will be glad to know, will not interfere with his productivity.

Mr. Crawford has been so expeditious with the proof-sheets of his new novel that the Macmillans will bring it out sooner than they expected to do, probably early next month. It is to be called Katherine Lauderdale, and it will concern itself with the affairs of the Lauderdales, a rich family of New York. Mr. Crawford, it is said, proposes to make a series of three novels dealing with the family, each of which will be complete in itself. The new work is pronounced by one who has read it to be very interesting. Among its features is a secret marriage performed under unique circumstances.

JOHN D. BARRY.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

IT is a rare thing for men eminent in literary callings to be good readers of the works they produce or are most concerned with. The exceptions have been very few in the long list of English and American authors. We, in Philadelphia, are happy in possessing two such exceptions in Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and Mr. Horace Howard Furness. Both have been reading before enthusiastic audiences of late; and it would be impossible to convey the charm which characterizes Mr. Furness' Shakespeare readings and Dr. Mitchell's rendition of his own drama, "Francis Drake." Mr. Furness has given a series of afternoon interpretations, including "Henry IV," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Romeo and Juliet," and "Hamlet," which will be as memorable as Fanny Kemble's in earlier times; but those who have heard both give the palm to Mr. Furness. His power to project himself into even the female creations of Shakespeare is astonishing, while the unity which he produces from each play leaves it as consistently realized in the memory as a stage production. It takes the subtlest art to achieve this, and the generation which is fortunate enough to hear the readings will forever be called lucky by its offspring.

Dr. Mitchell read his drama before the Contemporary Club. The audience was a very critical and very crowded one, and it was stirred deeply by the noble lines and the pathetic incidents of the play. The resonant voice of the reader and his ability to give the shades of passion and emotion required by the scenes; his winning recital of the charming songs, proving that even the lightest lyric may be made to touch an audience if properly modulated; his interjected explanations, even the dramatic pauses — all exhibited a new order of talent, to add to an already surprising versatility. It was hard to believe Dr. Mitchell when he said, "That is the first time I ever did such a thing in public." The reading brought a knowledge of the beauty of the drama to many who had known it only by name, one able critic asserting that it is the finest work of the kind produced in the last decade. Apropos of this, it is interesting to learn that Dr. Mitchell has just completed another drama dealing with an Elizabethan episode, which has a vein of comedy running through it. The plot is a most diverting one, of the doctor's own invention.

The soul of Walt Whitman goes marching on, though his mortal remains lie in Harleigh cemetery. Treading on the heels of the reunion dinner given by his disciples on January 27, when Dr. Brinton presided and Mr. Francis Howard Williams read a paper, comes the news that the suit brought by Mrs. Davis against Whitman's estate has resulted in a verdict in her favor of $500. Mrs. Davis was the bard's housekeeper, and, notwithstanding that she received a bequest of $1,000 and the use of his house for sixteen months after Whitman's death, she sued for further compensation, which has thus been granted her in a measure much below her demands.

We have been holding, under the auspices of the Municipal League, a "National Conference for Good City Government," which brought within our borders many notables of literature, law, and religion. Mr. R. W. Gilder was for some days the guest of Mr. Talcott Williams, at whose house a reception was given for him which was attended by others of the visiting reformers, including Rev. Dr. Rainsford of New York, Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte of Baltimore, and Hon. Theodore Roosevelt. The exchange of views at the conference lasted for three days and, without doubt, has resulted in a firmer union of belief among audience and speakers which will be of ultimate good. One outgrowth of it is the just formed Civic Club, presided over by Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson and composed of energetic women who propose to exercise a larger influence in civic affairs.

As a pendant to this visit from the outlanders it is pleasant to note that the Authors' Club of New York gave several Philadelphia women a cordial welcome to its "Ladies' Night" last month. Mrs. Florence Earle Coates, whose poems have given her a firm place in the regard of editors and authors, and Miss Anna H. Wharton, who wrote Through Colonial Doorways, were the sufficient representatives of the Quaker City at the function. Another woman who is gaining notice by her excellent literary work is Miss Harriet Boyer. Her course of lectures on the beginnings of history has been a success, and her papers read before the Browning Club have been greatly relished for their racy wit.

Dr. Daniel G. Brinton has begun his annual course of lectures before the Academy of Natural Sciences. This year the subject is "Man Before History." Mr. W. Lewis Fraser, manager of the Art Department of the Century Magazine, will deliver his two lectures on the Black and White Arts in the Academy of the Fine Arts during the current month.

Of publishing there is little enough to say. The Lippincotts will bring out immediately Bill Nye's Comic History of the United States, which promises a hearty relish for those who like American humor at its best and wildest. Some of the jokes have a subtlety that would not disgrace the wits of other days, as when we are told that General Howe decided to capture Brooklyn first so that he might have a place to sleep in while taking New York. This house will also bring out Dr. C. C. Abbott's new fresh-air book, Travels in a Tree Top, and the same author's handbook of American birds called The Birds About Us. Dr. Abbott has an unusual talent for choosing happy titles which aptly denote the attractive contents of his books.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

FICTION.

Christina Chard.

Mrs. Campbell-Praed has surpassed her previous efforts in elaborate plots by the skillful construction of her latest story and by the variety of characters she has introduced, which are yet made subsidiary to the development of Christina. It is a novel of unusual vigor and sustained power, dealing largely with the Bohemian society of London bordering on the circles of nobility. Editors, artists, financiers, Members of Parliament, all fall under the spell of the heroine, whose improbable history and character are so well delineated that the climax seems probable, though it is so carefully concealed that it would be injustice to the author and cruelty to the reader to reveal it. Mrs. Praed is successful in her conversations; if many and long, they are also natural and cleverly interspersed in the action. After the book is read, what has one gained? Certainly a sense of gratitude that Christina is not a real person and that one has nevertheless forgotten himself while reading of her. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Prisoners of the Earth.

In this volume of stories written by H. D. Lowry there is considerable rude strength and knowledge of a certain kind of human nature. English factory life is described and all the characters are drawn from the "working classes." The stories are short and none of them are thoroughly worked out. We should call them clever sketches rather than good short stories. Indeed the short story has reached such a point of perfection that a new writer must be a genius to be able at once to enter the ranks of our best writers. "The Informers" is one of the most dramatic of these sketches. It is tragic, but the writer chooses to emphasize the tragic side of life. It is the story of a woman who determines to find her husband's murderer and discovers him in a suitor for her hand. She apparently accepts his offer of marriage; but before the ceremony at the church, when the entire congregation is assembled, she reveals her discovery, and shows the world who her affianced husband really is. This tale, like many others in the collection, is improbable, but it is written with intensity and shows some talent.— Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.

When We Two Parted.

Presumably it is the moral lessons which can be drawn from this tale of love by Sarah Doudney that cause it to be designated on its green and white covers as a "Story for Girls." The two lovers are noble, patient, silent men. Of the three heroines, one is a typical noble woman; the second is a good girl, who does not know her own mind, and the third is a selfish, heartless, baffled creature, who reforms before she conveniently dies. The earlier days of English Chapel life, with its horror of the theater and actors and the quiet pastoral existence of its ministers, are well portrayed and add a charm to an exceedingly healthy-minded novel. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

The Lost Canyon of the Toltecs.

On its title-page this book, by Charles Sumner Seeley, describes itself as "an account of strange adventures in Central America." Like those of Robinson Crusoe, they are presented with such precision of detail as to assume an engaging air of reality. An English baronet and his niece, with servants, are supposed to have landed on the Isthmus of Panama, thinking that they could easily cross to the town of Panama. The niece's lover, a passenger upon the same steamer from San Francisco, was disabled by an accident and did not learn of this movement until he reached Panama. Then, alarmed for the safety of his betrothed, he organized a little party of search. How these enterprising persons found their friends in a city of cliff-dwellers hidden in a cañon, and how, at last, by means of nerve and ingenuity, they all escaped from their captors, we are told at considerable length. Mr. Seeley's romance is not in harmony with the position of archæologists like Professor Brinton, who says that "it is high time for this talk about the Toltecs as a mighty people, precursors of the Aztecs, and their instructors in the arts of civilization, to disappear from the pages of history." — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00.

The Third Alarm.

Boys will like this illustrated book for two reasons — because it is a very spirited story, and because it gives a full account of the New York fire department. Everything that they can care to know about the system, the management, the rooms, engines, horses, apparatus, and code of alarms is here incorporated in the history of a boy, Bruce Decker. This youth came to the city a stranger, but on making himself known to a chief of battalion, as the son of one of the men who had perished in a burning building, he was adopted and helped along. He proves to be worthy of confidence, and is not only the hero at the time of a great fire but also the hero of a romance connected with a New York family. There is a villain and an eccentric old gentleman near of kin, and there are bright young people who are involved in the tangle of circumstances; but right triumphs, as it should, and everything is straightened out. The author is James L. Ford. — Brentano's. $1.50.

A Gray Eye or So.

The world of Mr. Frank Frankfort Moore's new novel is a place where the chief object in life is to gain an advantage over others in some game of intrigue, and where, if you cannot be rich, you must be "clever." The genuinely sincere woman is unique, and even she is obliged to learn diplomacy in self-defense, and at no stage of her development can she be matched by an equally straightforward man, though the entire resources of the book be brought into requisition. The story is well written, though the conversations are less natural than carefully bright. The following epigram may be worth quoting: "When you are talking about Woman enthusiastically, you are talking about the woman you love; when you are talking about Woman cynically, you are talking of the woman who won't love you." — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Tennessee Judge, a story by Opie Read, although crude in the mode of telling, accomplishes what is presumably its chief aim, inasmuch as it sets clearly before us a manly old Tennessean, with his prejudices, his peculiarities, and his intense admiration of Andrew Jackson. Several minor characters of marked eccentricity are sketched in and a love story runs through the book. It is the kind of novel which a newspaper reporter might produce in his spare moments; but a reporter would be likely to insist upon better proof-reading than that which has visited the pages of A Tennessee Judge. The untrammeled printer of the West has not thought it necessary to consult a dictionary as to the spelling of what he repeatedly renders "snoar." "Contemptable" and "cellery" are other instances of his freehand method. — Laird & Lee. $1.00.

In The Quickening of Caliban Mr. J. Compton Rickett has written a strange conglomeration of science, religion, and philosophy and water which he calls "A Modern Study of Evolution." The hero is a kind of missing link, half man and half beast; the heroine is half African and half English. The whole story is grotesque and ludicrous in many respects, and yet it has some little literary merit and shows considerable ingenuity though little talent for story-telling on the author's part. It is a kind of literary curiosity; as such it may appeal to a small class of thoughtful readers. The fiction of the day is overloaded with immature philosophy. This writer has sugar-coated his theories in the hope of gaining a larger audience. — Cassell & Co. $1.00.

A plucky and affectionate little terrier who should do so many deeds of service to his human friends as "Tangle" is recounted to have done would well deserve to have his memoirs written. He could not have a more appreciative biographer than Edith E. Cathell proves herself to be in Only a Guardroom Dog. Although it rarely falls to a dog's lot to have a career quite so eventful as that here related, the reader feels the essential truth of the character-drawing and is glad to have his attention called to the virtues of "Tangle" and to those which he stimulated among his friends of the guardroom. — Cassell Publishing Co.

If the freakish is good literary form, then "George Egerton" (the latest woman to assume a masculine nom de guerre beginning with George) has succeeded in Keynotes, a series of fancies. With rapid, bold strokes she depicts, in one way or another, the old, dual story of passion; but her word-pictures are tarnished by coarseness and homely vulgarity. Her mannerisms, we hope they are not more, suggest Olive Schreiner, Amélie Rives, and Currer Bell without their excellences. The deshabille of the toilet is freely mentioned, and attitudes, hands, etc., are emphasized with astonishing freedom. None of the stories are strong enough to do harm, and none are so simple and charming as to merit a second reading. — London: Elkin Mathews & John Lane; Boston: Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Under the name A Phidian Horse Mrs. Elizabeth Hill Bissell Roberts has translated Un Cheval de Phidias, which M. Victor Cherbuliez wrote more than thirty years ago. Taking as a text one of the horses from the frieze of the Parthenon, M. Cherbuliez wove together four discourses on Grecian art, including a discussion of the ever-reappearing contest between realism and idealism, which retain their interest and value. A slight love story is delicately suggested rather than narrated. The proof-reading of the book shows carelessness. It is for sale at John Wanamaker's, Philadelphia.

A Daring Experiment is the title of a volume of short stories, about twenty in number, of average merit and perhaps worth collecting in their present form. The first one, which is the most original, has an experiment in vivisection for its subject. "Miss Button's Candy Shop" and "A Stolen Baby" are among the best, and "Tessie's White Kitten" is a sweet child's story. A portrait of the author, Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, adds to the attractiveness of the book. — Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

A new division of the Ariel Shakespeare is made up of seven tragedies — "Antony and "Cleopatra," "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "Lear," "Othello," "Julius Cæsar," and "Romeo and Juliet" — each in flexible morocco binding and clear type, illustrated with Mr. Frank Howard's outline drawings and cased in a box of its own. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each, 75c.

Pamela's Prodigy, "a lively comedy" by Clyde Fitch, has been put into a handsome small quarto volume. Miss Virginia Gerson has illustrated it with taking water colors depicting the dress and manners of 1830. — George M. Allen Co. $3.50.

MINOR NOTICES.

Seventy Years of Irish Life.

Mr. W. R. Le Fanu has here written his first book, in his seventy-eighth year; his brother was the well-known novelist, J. S. Le Fanu, and some of the most interesting pages are those relating to the youth of the brothers. The experiences of the Le Fanu family in County Limerick between 1826 and 1831 were pleasant, the peasants being on very friendly terms; but the "tithe war" of 1831 changed the situation entirely, and there was "boycotting before Boycott" and violence of every kind. Mr. Le Fanu was more distinguished as a skillful fisherman than otherwise, but his chatty reminiscences are agreeable reading for the side lights they throw on Irish history and character. Many of his frequent stories are familiar, and none is better than that of the drunken Irishman who found the width of the road more troublesome than its length. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

Sir Joshua Reynolds.

This clear, compendious, and well-written biography, by Claud Phillips, is made additionally valuable by its careful and critical lists of pictures painted by Sir Joshua year by year, and exhibited in the National Academy, of which he was the first president. It is an amazing record of industry, and when the high quality of most of the work is considered it may be called almost unparalleled in the history of art. Not less meritorious is the portrait drawn of the distinguished artist himself, framed by nature to be a popular favorite, gifted with many gifts, endowed with a kind temper, much native tact, and a certain temperance of emotion which kept him from indulging in the imprudent too-much or from suffering the pains and reactions which more enthusiastic temperaments must needs undergo. A touch of frost laid on the hot flame of genius is a rare and advantageous addition and a most comfortable belonging so far as the genius is concerned, whatever it may be in the cooler judgment of the public and posterity. Nine reproductions of Sir Joshua's portraits illustrate the work, which is delightfully well printed. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

Historic Green Bay.

A trilogy of authors has combined over the getting up of this sketch of the early days of the Wisconsin settlement. Ella Hoes Neville, Sarah Greene Martin, and Deborah Beaumont Martin are the names which we find on the title-page. The narrative begins with the earliest explorations of the Lake region and the map made by the Jesuits in 1871; then, through Indian wars and the French occupation, we come to the colonial settlement, based in the first place on the fur trade, and the transfer of the lands on the Fox River and Lake Michigan to the United States in 1815. The transition period while the new government was formally replacing the old was full of storms and threatenings; but civilization gradually struck its roots, and little by little life became not only safe but pleasurable on the once wild Lake frontier. Large cities grew over the site of the old Indian camps — Detroit, Milwaukee, Green Bay — commerce established itself with wider and wider ramifications; the trails gave place to broad highways; and the chain of inland seas, once furrowed only by the canoes of the savage, now bears upon its bosom argosies of stately vessels. A single century has effected these changes; what may not another century do? — Published by the authors. $1.25.

The Spanish Pioneers.

This book comes at a favorable time, following so closely upon the Columbian Exposition and the revival of interest in Spain. The author, Mr. Charles F. Lummis, is an enthusiast over the discoveries made by the Spaniards, their early missionary and educational work in America, and all we owe to Spain. In the first section, covering about a hundred pages, he makes "a running summary" of the early pioneering of America, showing what Spanish conquest, exploration, and heroism really were. That he makes a very clear showing cannot be denied. His ardor, his positive manner, his command of his subject, and his terse way of presenting it are compelling if not always convincing. He claims to be writing from the standpoint of historical science and after the methods of the "New School of American History." In the standard histories justice was not done to the Spanish pioneers. Prescott and Irving and their class are no longer authorities — "they rank today as fascinating writers of romance and nothing more." Mr. Lummis sweeps away the palace of Montezuma and his rank as emperor, denies the cruelty of Cortez to the Indians, showing him to have been merciful and beloved, and ranks Pizarro as one of the greatest of self-made men, who, considering his chances, "deserves the utmost respect and admiration for the man he made of himself." After relating "the broad story," Mr. Lummis devotes the remainder of the volume to brief but graphic sketches of "specimen pioneers" and to the conquest of Peru. There are several illustrations from photographs. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

Italian Gardens.

Mr. Charles A. Platt's charming volume is a picture book of the finest and most interesting of the formal gardens of Italy, with their fountains and statuary, rather than a treatise on their history or the way to reproduce them. He calls his few pages of text simply supplementary notes to the forty excellent full-page photographs; there are numerous smaller pictorial adornments. The artificiality of the Italian garden repels the English or the American eye at first; but when one considers that the garden was an extension of the house, designed to be lived in for no small part of the time, it appears more rational. The architect of the house was the architect of the garden also; he "proceeded with the idea that not only was the house to be lived in, but that one still wished to be at home while out of doors; so the garden was designed as another apartment, the terraces and groves still others, where one might walk about and find a place suitable to the hour of the day and feeling of the moment, and still be in that sacred portion of the globe dedicated to one's self." The Villa Lante at Bagnia is presented as the most complete example, while the Villa D'Este and the Colonna Gardens have peculiar charms of their own. Mr. Platt's volume should aid in the extension of the Italian garden in those parts of our country where the climate makes it suitable. — Harper & Brothers. $5.00.

Gypsying Beyond the Sea.

If people will continue to write books on the familiar "European round" they must at least make them exceptionally attractive with print, cover, and illustration. Mr. William Bement Lent has done this with his two pretty, almost elegant, volumes entitled Gypsying beyond the Sea from English Fields to Salerno Shores, though the appearances of the word "Lent" on the back of a work appearing just at this particular season under the imprint of A. D. F. Randolph & Co. confused us for a moment as to the author's purpose. Mr. Lent has written, however, for all readers and all seasons, and takes us over the conventional tourist's path through England, Wales, and Scotland; across Belgium, which he calls "the cock pit of Europe," into Holland, Germany, and Switzerland; and thence, in the second volume, into Russia, Finland, Denmark, Sweden, and Italy. To England, Russia, Switzerland, and Italy he devotes his chief attention. The charm of the books is in their delicate binding of green and gold and in the exceedingly good process plates which accompany the text, founded on photographs but blending the best effects of etching and mezzotint. One who has not read much European travel would find a good deal in Mr. Lent's books to please. — $4.00.

How to Study and Teach History.

This volume in the International Education series, by Dr. B. A. Hinsdale of the Unversity of Michigan, is very welcome in these times when the study of history is so general in the United States. In his general view and method the author honors and appreciates at their true value the two factors of history — the material and the spiritual. With introductory chapters on the educational value of history he gives others pointing out the right choice of facts, their organization by the teacher, and the methods of imparting instruction through these facts. While the old world is kept steadily in view the attention is centered upon this continent on which we dwell. In a series of clear and compact reviews the author sketches the outlines of the great phases of war, peaceful development, territorial growth, and the mixture of morals and politics illustrated in the struggle for the abolition of slavery and the Civil War. At the head of each chapter there is a select bibliography, and each of these shows that Dr. Hinsdale is familiar both with the later writings as well as with the earlier books which treat of his theme. We should not value very high the capacities of a teacher who could not improve along certain lines upon the author's suggestions, but, as a whole, it would be difficult to match this needed handbook. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

Portuguese Missions in Asia and Africa.

That numerous but somewhat lazy-minded individual, the "general reader," will need a sense of duty to master the contents of Rev. A. J. D. D'Orsey's book on Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa; but when he has mastered it he will have learned a good many things he did not know before, and he will have formed a considerably higher respect for Portuguese enterprise, skill, and ascendancy than the nineteenth century prospect would give him. The fact is, as every student of history is aware, that Portugal was a great power four hundred years ago on sea and land, in church and state; how great these four hundred and thirty-four pages eloquently show. The eloquence, however, is that of facts, not of rhetoric. The writing is plain to the degree of dullness; the interest lies in the intrinsic quality of the subject, its geographical antiquity, its historical romance, its picturesqueness of adventure, its religious zeal, its motive of political aggrandizement, its immense, almost majestic sweep of ambition and desire and activity. The way Portuguese fleets, admirals, and priests coasted along continents, traversed oceans, founded factories, planted missions, conquered peoples, and subjugated sovereigns in the fifteenth century and thereabouts makes a story well-nigh like one of Rider Haggard's. Here was an arm that once nearly ruled the world; and what has withered and crippled it into the nonentity it is today? The answer to this question provides food for reflection. There is scarcely a quarter of the globe into which this book does not take us at a time when all continents were more or less "dark continents;" and the political and ecclesiastical — we cannot justly say Christian — ardor which it shows in association were certainly well mated if not well directed. One is tempted to think that if the Portuguese stock had been sounder it might have permanently ruled the earth. The book is handsomely made, and its maps well serve the text. The concluding chapters throw important side lights on modern missions, Roman and Protestant, in India. — London: W. H. Allen & Co.

From Things to God.

Rev. David H. Greer, D.D., the popular rector of St. Bartholomew's Church in New York, is a preacher who always has the living, actual man of the nineteenth century before him. There is no smell of the lamp or of the cloister in these sermons. The vocabulary is of a sort which refined gentlemen of today use. The English is simple and undecorated as an arrow, for each sermon is fashioned with the idea of reaching the conscience as swiftly and surely as possible. The old stories of human experience in the Hebrew Scriptures are interpreted with insight and with sympathy. The author seems to be more than usually able, beyond his clerical brethren, to strip off what is Hebraic and local and show what is eternal and human. Whether the number of sermons chosen, twenty-one, be intentional or not, they are significant and typical of the years which make a man. Throughout the whole volume the preacher shows to us the ideal side of life, and teaches us how out of the stones and rocks of daily experience to find a way to God. No preacher of this sort can lack either for hearers or readers. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

Bishop Carpenter's Sermons.

W. Boyd Carpenter, Lord Bishop of Ripon, is well and widely known as one of the more thoughtful English bishops. A volume of his sermons, The Son of Man among the Sons of Men, will further commend him to American readers. The sermons are twelve. They are connected by unity of purpose and a certain community of topic and structure. There is ingenuity if not originality in the plan of studying Christ in his intercourse and relations with twelve representative men of Scripture, namely: Herod, Pilate, Judas Iscariot, Simon Peter, Thomas, Matthew, Nathanael, Nicodemus, the unnamed man sick of the palsy, John the Baptist, blind Bartimæus, and the restored demoniac; and the one motive is through these historic media to bring Christ closely home to the realization, apprehension, love, honor, and service of the men of today. The idea of the series is capital and it is well carried out. There is meat on this table. "We need to believe," says the bishop, "not in a Christ who once wrought something for the world, but in a Christ who is even now with us. . . . We need to believe that what the Son of God was among men eighteen hundred years ago he is among the sons of men now." This is the keynote of these sermons, and it sounds throughout them all. "Dr. Pusey," said Pope Pius IX to Dean Stanley, "seems to me like a bell-ringer, standing without and ringing for people to enter the true church, but does not enter in himself." Bishop Carpenter in this book seems like a man who leads the way where he would have us follow. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

Sub-Cœlum.

The sub-title of this book, by Mr. A. P. Russell, is "A Sky-built Human World." The contents are in reality the reflections of an observing and thoughtful man on his fellow beings as he has seen them individually, in families and in society. He creates an ideal world in which to carry out his plan, but in showing what he thinks people should be and how they should conduct in the many relations of life he reveals, of course, his opinions with regard to the present condition of things. The various themes to which he gives his attention, conveniently shown in the marginal summary, number about one hundred and fifty, and are on nearly all conceivable subjects, from ideal manhood to drainage and whistling. There seems to be no phase of his pet world that he has failed to consider. Many of his opinions are on a high moral plane, and many are wise and philosophic. Some are peculiar, and some amusing. For instance, the public buildings in Sub-Cœlum are allowed to stand only about thirty years, and then, on account of the accumulation of foul gases, are taken down; streets are laid out from northeast to southwest, and from southeast to northwest, so that everybody is sure of sunshine; horses are bred for their moral qualities rather than speed; the incorrigibly impure are locked up forever; once a year an oyster-holiday is observed; pork is not in favor except roast pig; wine-making is one of the prominent pursuits of the country, and women have a part in treading out the juice; marriage is considered such a risk that only after a year's trial are congratulations proper. The style is epigrammatic and occasionally obscure; in a few instances the author loses his verb altogether. It is rather an artificial way of writing which sometimes becomes wearisome. Evidently the author did not consult his Latin grammar under sub when he wrote cœlum instead of cœlo. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Men, Women and Books.

These bright, sketchy papers — they have neither the dignity nor the length of essays — by Augustine Birrell, author of Obiter Dicta, are quite as agreeable reading as that noted series. His appreciation of Thackeray's criticism of Dean Swift is as honest as his dislike of Lord Bolingbroke, "the most accomplished of all our political rascals." He calls Sterne a plagiarist, taking his cue from Dr. Ferrier's book, which showed how freely Sterne pillaged from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy. In speaking of DeQuincey, Mr. Birrell keenly remarks that his style lacks the charm of "economy and his workmanship the dignity of centralization," though he acknowledges his "magnificence and the boundlessness of his information." Hannah More our author lays low with delightful frankness; he sees through her want of reality and genuine emotion. He writes sensibly about that monstrous "human document," Marie Bashkirtseff, as she might have called herself instead of others. Very clever is his sarcasm upon the report of the Royal Commission which permits liquor to be sold to a "bona fide traveler" if three miles from home. He also attacks severely the "rank McKinleyism" of Professor Brander Matthews' Americanisms and Briticisms, for who cares about the nationality of a writer who is great in his own right! In these days, when slight but graceful writing gives relief to the weary in mind, and when the love for famous books needs stimulating, this little volume will do a pleasant service. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Camp-Fire Musings.

Dr. William C. Gray's immediate circle of friends will delight in this volume of his musings though the general public will find them rather lengthy. They abound in really picturesque descriptions of nature which accompany moral reflections, revelations of the mysteries of gunning and fishing, and photographs of campers, presumably friends of the author. The papers bear a strong resemblance in beauty of expression and closeness of observation to the late Frank Bolles' books, with this great difference — that Mr. Bolles wrote impersonally, while the reader is kept aware of Dr. Gray and his opinions. The lover of flowers will, however, thank him for his theory of the "moral tendency" of flowers, which manifests itself in benevolence. The angler and gunner will forgive his interludes of philosophy and astronomy because of his thorough sympathy with sport and knowledge of it; but Dr. Gray declares that he does not now believe in bringing down game himself, unless for sustenance, and delegates that work to some less advanced friend. The last poem, a long one, on "The Sugar Camp Fire," is truly noble and harmonious. — A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

The Lover's Lexicon.

"Love laughs at lexicons," says the proverb, and we are very sure that lovers will laugh at The Lover's Lexicon. It is a well-meant but, it seems to us, superfluous attempt on the part of its author, Mr. Frederick Greenwood, to add to the happiness of "the enamoured" by defining in precise terms all the subjects, emotions, and phrases which are relevantly or irrelevantly connected with their peculiar condition, a brief treatise being devoted to each in turn. Beginning alphabetically with Abhorrence, Absence, Affection, and Affinity, the work proceeds through Bereavement, Calf-Love, and Compliment, toward Coyness, Disdain, Engagement, and Flame, Jealousy, Misunderstandings, and Vows, to the grand wind-up alike of the alphabet and the "Affair" — Wife! The author spares us Xanthippe, which might have carried the volume a little farther. We can scarcely imagine lovers sitting down to enjoy this somewhat dull formulation of the phases of their passion, and people not in love are even less likely to do this; so we fail to see exactly where Mr. Greenwood is to look for his audience. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

Action in Art.

Mr. W. H. Beard has an almost national reputation both as an artist and as an instructor in drawing; any words of his on art matters deserve careful attention. This volume is written to present certain principles and rules for the student who desires to represent motion in art, drawn from the writer's lifelong experience. "This matter of action is one of the most important and at the same time the most neglected of all the elements of art. . . . It has never been treated systematically as a distinct branch of art education." The chapters discuss falling and precipitated bodies, action that cannot be represented, the requirements of art paramount to fact, movements in air, and similar topics. The book is fully illustrated and will be of great value to the student. The first illustration, called "The Spirit of the Storm," is full of action and movement. The artist who can draw such a spirited picture deserves to be listened to with patience even if some of his theories seem a little mechanical to the young enthusiast. — Cassell & Co. $1.50.

Some Minor Arts.

The minor arts, "as practiced in England," which Messrs. A. H. Church, W. Y. Fletcher, J. S. Garden, A. Hartshorne, and C. H. Read describe in this handsome volume are work in impressed horn, bookbinding, old pottery and fruit trenchers, effigies in wood, and enamels. The history of each art is briefly traced, its processes described somewhat, and notable specimens pictured with great success. Among the finest plates, in photogravure or collotype, are the heads of Frederick of Orange and his wife in horn; several superb representations of famous bookbindings in various colors; the old English slip-ware; two fruit trenchers; enamel work; and the effigy in wood of John de Sheppy, a former bishop, in Rochester Cathedral. These chapters have been reprinted from the Portfolio, and the name of the English publishers, Seeley & Co., is a warrant for thoroughly admirable work in every artistic respect. — Macmillan & Co. $7.50.

A Paradise of English Poetry.

Mr. H. C. Beeching, the compiler of this luxuriously habited anthology, has arranged his selections according to these divisions: Love, Home Affections, Friendship, Man, Patriotism, Art, Romance, Nature, Death and Religion. He gives long extracts as well as complete poems — living poets and matter protected by copyright are not to be found here. Notes and indexes (there should have been an index of titles) are appended. It is difficult to say of any such collection that it is positively the best, but Mr. Beeching has shown such skill and judgment that these volumes, printed in small type and with broad margins, stand in the front rank of works of the kind. — Macmillan & Co. $6.00.

Prof. Alfred J. Church is well known as doing good service to young people by placing before them clear outline pictures from the history of various countries. This, of course, is the true way of stimulating an interest which shall afterwards lead to more exhaustive study. In his latest volume, Pictures from Greek Life and Story, Mr. Church gives a series of twenty-four such vignettes, beginning with Solon as the first distinct historic figure of Greece, and ending with Epaminondas, "the one hero of Thebes." Brilliant statesmen and soldiers are presented with enough of their environment to make their doings intelligible; a poetical contest in which the young Sophocles is winner over Chærilus and Æschylus is described as if by one of the audience; and to Socrates three chapters are devoted. The numerous illustrations are from statues, busts, and the frieze of the Parthenon. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, the well-known minister of the church worshiping in Tremont Temple, Boston, attended the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, and on his return wrote out his impressions of the great gathering. This paper, filling thirty-three pages, serves as the introduction to an address on "Individuality in Religion." This is broken up into short chapters, in which Dr. Lorimer shows the great work done by the Baptists in History — his title. He sketches rapidly and brilliantly their origins, ideals, writings, doctrines, and benefactions, while correcting certain wrong impressions. He pays the tribute which all true scholars and men of research now gladly offer to the Anabaptists, who were apostles of soul-liberty long before Roger Williams. Some statistics and a bibliography are appended. — Silver, Burdett & Co. 75c.

The new Book of Prayer and Praise for Congregational Worship, issued by the American Unitarian Association, is the result of much pains spent by a large committee on the preparation of a liturgy. The non-Unitarian world, as well as a large part of the Unitarian body itself, will be surprised at the conservatism which appears to have presided over the undertaking. No material not already in existence has been used; the Psalms are given from the King James version substantially. There are five full services — one for each Sunday of the month — and four introductory services; following these is the usual Episcopalian service, somewhat modified. Special services, anthems, and Psalms are appended. An exacting taste and a strong liturgical inclination are visible throughout. The volume is admirably printed by the University Press. A Book of Chants, edited by Mr. Arthur Foote, is a natural and pleasing companion.

The sketch of Saskia, the Wife of Rembrandt, out of which Mr. Charles Knowles Bolton has made a small volume by the aid of broad margins and numerous appendixes, is cleverly written and shows industrious research among the authorities on the life of Rembrandt. Mr. Bolton could have added to the interest of his pictures by quoting freely from M. Michel the description of the delightful home which the great painter was forced to abandon to his creditors. M. Michel could have supplied other matter relating to Saskia which Mr. Bolton might have used to advantage. The volume is well illustrated with a dozen or so of portraits of Saskia, but the finest one given in the recent translation of M. Michel's work is not to be found here. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.

The oldest book on the horse, Xenophon's Art of Horsemanship, is still one of the best, and Prof. Morris H. Morgan of Harvard University has done all lovers of this noble animal a service by his excellent translation, which he has provided with a very full illustrative apparatus. This includes an essay on the Greek riding-horse, which was always meant for use in war, and was not, except in the case of Alexander's famous steed, Bucephalus, an object of affection to his owner; a collection of passages on the points of the horse from classical writers; forty pages of general notes and twenty-five on the illustrations, large and small, which have been drawn from many sources, and which make the volume attractive to others than horse owners. — Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

Mr. Mackenzie Bell is a minor poet among the minor poets. His verses in Spring's Immortality have neither the strong beat of passion, new revealings of insight, nor the fascination of fresh, melodious utterance; but within their own range they are all true and good, and they will doubtless please the many who like poetry chiefly as the expression of their own familiar thoughts in tender, familiar words. The religious poems teach the beauty of trust and courage, and the poems of nature show true appreciation of "woodland ways" and the charm of changing seasons. One of the best poems is a sonnet, "Old Year Leaves," which ends,

> And ever midst this stir and moil and strife,
> Fresh aims and growing purposes arise
> Above the faded hopes of yesterday.

— Ward, Lock & Bowden.

Woods and Dales of Derbyshire is a finely printed volume of travel and incident in the most picturesque county of England, by the Rev. James S. Stone, D.D. His style is very diffuse and it takes him a good while to get over the ground, whether telling a story or describing a scene. For readers who have as much time to spare as the author evidently has had, his pages on Ashbourne, Haddon Hall, and Balsover will have interest. The book is written out of deep affection for Derbyshire, and it will serve to refresh the memory of those who have driven through any part of its beautiful scenery. The occasional photogravures are excellent, and in the appendix is a selection of ballads of the shire. — Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co. $3.75 net.

Nursery Problems is made up of contributions offered to the public in the columns of that excellent magazine, Babyhood. The inquiries addressed to the medical editor by anxious mothers cover a wide range of topics relating to the care of young children. The mother who can afford a library on these subjects will find the book useful, but most mothers who can only afford one book had better buy Dr. Starr's Hygiene of the Nursery. The advice given here is for special cases. The title should not lead any mother to buy the book thinking to get sound, sensible general advice on the care of children; it is only a set of miscellaneous questions, sent by anxious mothers, wisely answered by the author, Dr. Leroy Yale. — Contemporary Publishing Co.

The second volume of the translation of Dr. Wilhelm Moeller's History of the Christian Church covers the Middle Ages, which are made to include the time from Gregory the Great to the Reformation. The whole work has so many good qualities, and is so distinct an improvement upon many of its predecessors that the publishers should have had the translation revised carefully by some person much better acquainted with German and English than Mr. Andrew Rutherfurd appears to be. The addition of a few titles of the best English works on ecclesiastical history would have increased its value much for students. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

Mr. Frank Yeigh's historical sketch of Ontario's Parliament Buildings gathers a good deal of general and political history around its description of the successive houses of legislation of Upper Canada. The year 1892 was the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Montreal and the one hundredth of the convocation of the first parliament of Ontario. The noble building in which the parliament now meets is fully illustrated, and numerous portraits of distinguished statesmen of Ontario are inserted. — Williamson Book Co. $2.50.

The volume of The Bookworm for 1893 is true to its sub-title, "An Illustrated Treasury of Old-Time Literature," and it also includes numerous brief articles on book-collecting in this country. Among its more practical articles none is more compact than Mr. Punch's "first lesson in book-keeping: Never lend one." — A. C. Armstrong & Son. $3.00.

For the Lenten season of 1894 the volume entitled Leaflets for Lent will be found a helpful and inspiring companion. The two pages of prose and verse given to each day are selected from the Bible, from the manuscripts of the Rev. W. P. Tilden, and from his favorite hymns. Noted divines of all denominations have testified to the value of this winning and quickening selection. — Lee & Shepard. $1.00.

The Complete Sportsman, by Howland Gasper, is one of the latest and, we should judge, one of the best manuals of scientific and practical knowledge of the gun, the dog, and the various kinds of wild-fowl, upland, and cover shooting. — Forest and Stream Publishing Co. $2.00.

How to Judge a Horse is a concise book on the most difficult of arts; it contains, beside much other valuable matter, numerous extracts from Rarey and Rockwell's method of training. The author is Capt. F. W. Bach. — W. R. Jenkins. $1.00.

Longmans, Green & Co. reprint from the original edition of 1881, in one convenient volume, Richard Jefferies' charming fable Wood Magic, one of the best of books for children of an ingenious mind. — $1.25.

PERIODICALS.

The midwinter number of the Century opens with a portrait of Alma Tadema, and an article upon the artist by Ellen Gosse. The short essay by James Russell Lowell on "Criticism and Culture" is the article of this month. It is large in spirit and condensed in expression. It is a lesson in criticism and a lesson in charity at the same time. The article is a plea for higher standards in literature and criticism, for more liberal standards, and for a true "hospitality of thought." These earlier essays of Lowell deserve a permanent place in our literature. His brilliant Letters and these critical papers are adding fresh laurels to the crown of our greatest American poet. Two contributions to Lincoln literature and an article on "The Unpublished Portraits of Washington" are additions to American history, while "A Study of Indian Music" will attract students of folklore. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett contributes an excellent short story called "The Guests of Mrs. Simms." "Pudd'n Head Wilson" continues to have the true Mark Twain flavor. Mr. Herbert Ward's "A Biblical Romance" is illustrated by A. Castaigne with rare skill. The current criticism of football receives a general summing up, and Josiah Flynt's article on "The Tramp at Home" is most timely. The poetry is below the average.

In the Forum for February Mrs. Josephine S. Lowell, in treating "Methods of Relief for the Unemployed," wisely discriminates between methods fitted to cope with acute disease and those suitable for a chronic condition; Dr. Lyman Abbott states vigorously "The Personal Problem of Charity;" Mr. James Schouler gives a dispassionate "Review of the Hawaiian Controversy;" Mr. Frederic Harrison writes an interesting paper on "English Literature of the Victorian Age," which he finds absorbed now "in the urgent social problem. . . . Literature is no longer 'bookish,' but practical, social, propagandist. It is full of life, but it is a dispersive, analytic, erratic form of vitality." Professor Woodrow Wilson's "Calendar of Great Americans" will not find universal acceptance, but he is not far astray when he accounts Franklin one of the first "to exhibit this American spirit with an unmistakable touch of greatness and distinction," and finds Lowell among men of letters "most typically American." A valuable article on "The Gold Basis Fixed by Commerce Itself" is by Mr. Edward Atkinson, and there are seven other articles on the tariff, the Nicaragua Canal, child-study, religion in the schools, consumption, the production of gold and professional incomes in England.

In the Review of Reviews for February Dr. Albert Shaw continues his valuable survey of "Relief Measures in American Cities," praising especially the methods practiced in Indianapolis. Mr. Carl Snyder describes and pictures "Our New National Wonderland" in the State of Washington. Mr. Grant Allen writes a "Character Sketch of Professor Tyndall," illustrated by an excellent portrait.

With the January number the Portfolio assumes a new sub title, "Monographs on Artistic Subjects," and takes another form — an octavo of ninety pages. "Rembrandt's Etchings" is the subject of this number, in which Mr. Hamerton considers very carefully the work of the great Dutchman as an etcher. In closing, he speaks of "the master's incomparable greatness, his sterling originality, and that wonderful quality in him by which he does not belong to the seventeenth century, but quite as much to the closing years of the nineteenth. In like manner, when it comes, he will be at home in the twentieth century, and in many another after it." Mr. Hamerton gives four large etchings and numerous other illustrations, all finely printed. The number is essentially a book in paper covers on Rembrandt as an etcher.

McClure's Magazine for February gives the report of a long "Conversation between James Whitcomb Riley and Hamlin Garland." A frontispiece of Mr. R. L. Stevenson accompanies the first installment of a new novel, "The Ebb Tide," by Mr. Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne. Mr. Philip D. Armour, the Chicago millionaire, his Mission-house, and his admirable Institute are fully described by Mr. Arthur Warren. McClure's Magazine is distinctively a cross between the daily paper and the usual illustrated monthly.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— It is quite decided that Mrs. U. S. Grant will not publish her memoirs of her husband. It is her wish now that this book shall not be printed until after her death. Several publishers have had an opportunity to look it over, and one, it is reported, offered the enormous price of $50,000 outright for the work.

— The Letters of Two Brothers, William T. and John Sherman, of which a foretaste was given in the Century, will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons. The letters cover a period of fifty years. They begin when General Sherman entered the West Point Military Academy and come down to the last years of his life. Mrs. Rachel Sherman Thorndike, the general's daughter, has edited the letters, which are connected by a thread of comment.

— The manuscript of Tennyson's first book, the Poems of Two Brothers, which was bought by Dodd, Mead & Co, a few months ago for about $2,500 and held by them at $3,500, has been repurchased by Macmillan & Co. of New York for their Cambridge firm, Macmillan & Bowes, from whom Dodd, Mead & Co. originally purchased it.

— The last volume of Taine's Modern Régime is now on the press of Henry Holt & Co; it has been translated by John Durand.

— A thorough working over of an older biography, by the same hand, the Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson, by William Winter, and Social Evolution, by Benjamin Kidd, are announced by Macmillan & Co.

— Archdeacon Aglen is going to edit a selection from Dean Stanley's writings which Mr. Murray will publish.

— Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton of London have brought out an English edition, gracefully illustrated, of Mr. E. Irenæus Stevenson's story, Left to Themselves; or, the Ordeal of Philip and Gerald, under the altered title of Philip and Gerald; or, Left to Themselves. The story appeared in this country some time ago.

— The Hon. Warren Vernon will shortly publish in two volumes his Readings in the Inferno of Dante, chiefly based on the Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola. This work, to which Dr. Moore, Principal of St. Edmund Hall, contributes an introduction, will be uniform with the previously published series of Readings in the Purgatorio.

— Mr. J. Churton Collins of Balliol College, Oxford, has been delivering some exceedingly interesting lectures in this country. He spoke on "Sophocles and Shakespeare" at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and in Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Lecture Association of the University of Pennsylvania, he gave a course on the Augustan Age, taking up De Foe, Addison, Pope, and Swift as representative writers.

— Dr. Lewis A. Rhodes, instructor in German at Cornell University, has edited Schiller's Maria Stuart, with introduction and notes, and the book is to be issued this month by D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, in Heath's Modern Language series. The work has been prepared with constant attention to the latest and best work in German on this drama.

— Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. will publish at once a work on Early Editions, "a biographical survey of the works of some popular modern authors," by J. H. Slater, editor of Book Prices Current. The work deals with the writings of Robert Browning, Mrs. Browning, Thackeray, Dickens, Coventry Patmore, Richard Jefferies, R. L. Stevenson, Andrew Lang, A. C. Swinburne, Leigh Hunt, Douglas Jerrold, George Augustus Sala, and others, and regards only such books as, by reason of their scarcity, are now in demand at enhanced prices by the present-day collector. These will be fully described and appraised, with special reference to the protection of the collector from spurious editions and imperfect copies.

— Mr. George W. Childs, who died in Philadelphia on the 3d inst., was born in Baltimore on the 12th of May, 1829, and was educated in private schools there, but soon revealed an aptitude for commercial life. As a youth he had a situation in a book store in Philadelphia, where he did all kinds of work, such as washing the sidewalk, sweeping out the shop, lighting the fire, and getting breakfast ready. From the first he began to put by money, and when he was eighteen years old he was able to go into business on his own account, setting up a small store in the old Public Ledger building, where he prospered steadily, his energy and attention securing him many customers. He was only twenty-one years old when he started in the publishing business under the firm name of R. E. Peterson & Co., afterwards Childs & Peterson. Almost immediately he made a great hit with Dr. Kane's Arctic Explorations, which had an immense sale, as may be proved by the fact that the author was paid $70,000 in copyright in less than a year. This was followed by the publication of a book of popular science, which sold very readily, and by Parson Brownlow's book upon the cruelties practiced in the South, which came upon the market at the outbreak of the Civil War and was in universal demand. The reputation of the firm was further increased by the publication of such works as Allibone's Dictionary of Authors, Lossing's Illustrated History of the Civil War, and Bouvier's Law Dictionary. In 1863 Mr. Childs already had amassed a respectable fortune, and he fulfilled the dream of his youth by purchasing the Public Ledger, which had then fallen to a very low estate. He began by eliminating all objectionable matter from the paper. His next step was to give it as much as possible the character of a family paper, and to raise its literary quality. In the course of a few years the success of Mr. Childs' journalistic venture was attested by the erection of the new Ledger building. Since then his career has been one of constant prosperity. His charities were upon a large and beneficent scale, and his hospitalities were unlimited. He put a stained glass window in Westminster Abbey to the memories of the poets Cowper and George Herbert; he erected monuments over the graves of Leigh Hunt and Edgar Allan Poe; he was the largest subscriber to the window placed in the church in Bromham, in memory of Tom Moore; and he presented a fountain to Stratford-on-Avon as a tribute to Shakespeare.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

General Scott. Great Commanders series. By Gen. Marcus J. Wright. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Writings of Thomas Paine. Collected and Edited by Moncure D. Conway. Vol. I, 1774-1779. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Samuel Taylor Coleridge. A Narrative of the Events of His Life. By James Dykes Campbell. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Economics and Politics.

The Union Pacific Railway. A Study in Railway Politics, History, and Economics. By John P. Davis, A.M. S. C. Griggs & Co. $2.00

Educational.

An Introduction to the Elements of Science. By St. George Mivart, F. R. S. With Illustrations. Little, Brown & Co. $2.00

School Management. A Practical Treatise. By Emerson E. White. American Book Co. $1.00

Musical Education and Musical Art. By Edith V. Eastman. Damrell & Upham. $1.25

Morceaux Choisis d'Alphonse Daudet. Edited by Frank W. Freeborn Ginn & Co. 85c.

Essays and Sketches.

Short Studies in Character. By Sophie Bryant, D. Sc. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Boys as They Are Made, and How to Unmake Them. By Franklin H. Briggs. Syracuse: C. W. Bardeen. 25c.

Bunyan Characters. Lectures by Alexander Whyte, D.D. Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.00

Blessed Be Drudgery. By William C. Gannett. 69th thousand. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 10c.

More than Kin: a Book of Kindness. By James Vila Blake. Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00

A Chronicle of Small Beer. By John Reid. Anglo-American Pub. Co. $1.00

Our Village. By Mary Russell Mitford. With Introduction by Anne Thackeray Ritchie. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Fiction.

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and Other Stories. By Gertrude Smith. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Gertrude Haddon. By Mrs. E. D. E.N. Southworth. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

A Protégée of Jack Hamlin's, and Other Stories. By Bret Harte. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

A Bundle of Life. By John Oliver Hobbes. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 50c.

The Strike at Shane's. Sequel to "Black Beauty." American Humane Education Society. 10c.

The Woman of the Iron Bracelets. By Frank Barrett. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00

A Superfluous Woman. Cassell Pub. Co. $1.00

Mr. Wayt's Wife's Sister. By Marion Harland. Cassell Pub. Co. $1.00

Romance of a Dry Goods Drummer. By Marie Walsh. Mascot Pub. Co. 50c.

Pax and Carolina. A Story. By Ernest Beckman. Illustrated. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.00

Sylvie and Bruno Concluded. By Lewis Carroll. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Swing of the Pendulum. By Frances Mary Peard. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Little Old Man. By Uncle Charley. Syracuse: C. W. Bardeen. 50c.

Earlscourt. A Novel of Provincial Life. By Alexander Allarbyce. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Greater Glory. A Story of High Life. By Maarten Maartens D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Waverley Novels. Dryburgh Edition. Vol. XVI. Quentin Durward. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Keith Deramore. By the author of "Miss Molly." Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

Her Provincial Cousin. A Story of Brittany. By Edith Elmer Wood. Cassell Pub. Co. 50c.

Richard Escott. By Edward H. Cooper. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Can Such Things Be? By Ambrose Bierce. The Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Charles Lamb's Specimens of English Dramatic Poets. Edited anew by Israel Gollancz, M. A. Two volumes. London: J. M. Dent & Co. New York: Macmillan & Co. $4.00

A Symphony of the Spirit. Compiled by George S. Merriam. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Two Lives. A Poem. By Reginald Fanshawe. London: George Bell & Sons. New York: Macmillan & Co. $1.75

The Longer Prose Works of Walter Savage Landor. Edited, with Notes and Index, by Charles G. Crump. Vol. II. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Humorous Poems. By Thomas Hood. With Preface by Alfred Ainger. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Religion and Theology.

The Dawn of Astronomy. A Study of the Temple-Worship and Mythology of the Ancient Egyptians. By J. Norman Lockyer. Macmillan & Co. $5.00

They Met in Heaven. By George H. Hepworth. E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

The Bible Catechist. By the Rev. W. H. Gill, D.D. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 15c.

The Bible Teacher's Guide. By James A. Worden D.D. Vol. II. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 25c.

The Westminster Question Book, 1894. Vol. XX. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 15c.

Burdens. By the Rev. Oliver A. Kingsbury, D D. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 15c.

A Chorus of Faith, as Heard in the Parliament of Religions. Unity Pub. Co. $1.25

God is Love, and Other Sermons. By the late Rev. Aubrey L. Moore. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

Scientific and Technical.

The Partridge. Natural History. By the Rev. H. A. MacPherson. Shooting. By A. J. Stuart-Wortley. Cookery. By George Saintsbury. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

The Fauna of the Deep Sea. By Sydney J. Hickson, M.A. D. Appleton & Co.

Miscellaneous.

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Edited by James A. H. Murray. Part VIII, Section 1. Cronchmas-Czech. Completing Vol. II, (C). Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Famous Adventures and Prison Escapes of the Civil War. The Century Co. $2.00

The Methodist Year-Book, 1894. Hunt & Eaton.

The Gist of Whist. By Charles E. Coffin. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 75c.

Greenhouse Construction. A Complete Manual. By L. R. Taft. Illustrated. Orange Judd Co. $1.50

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,

NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,

36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

G. P. Putnam's Sons,

27 WEST 23d ST., NEW YORK,

HAVE PUBLISHED:

Ships that Pass in the Night.

A Novel, by BEATRICE HARRADEN.

16mo, $1.00.

Ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing,
Only a signal shown, and a distant voice in the darkness;
So, on the ocean of life, we pass and speak one another,
Only a look and a voice, then darkness again and silence.

UNMOUNTED PHOTOGRAPHS

of Ancient and Modern Works of Art, reproductions of famous paintings, sculpture and architecture, with views from all parts of the world. Send 15 cents for catalogues of 14,000 subjects (including 1893 supplement).

World's Fair Views

- - AND - -

Art at the Fair

SPECIAL LIST OF 130 SUBJECTS.

Now Ready.

Lantern Slides to order from any of our Subjects. Glass Panels for Holiday Gifts. Photograph mounting in Albums or on Cards a Specialty. Albums Supplied. Yacht and Squadron Photos, New England Coast Views.

SOULE PHOTOGRAPH CO.,

PUBLISHERS.

338 L Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PRINCIPAL AGENCIES.

New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23rd Street.
Chicago: M. O'Brien & Son, 208 Wabash Avenue.
Philadelphia: J. E. McClees & Co., Ltd., 1417 Chestnut Street.
Washington: W. H. Veerhoff, 1217 F. Street.
San Francisco: W. K. Vickery, 224 Post St.

IF YOU ARE GOING

WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Advertising Rates:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

First Publications for the Spring.

The Writings of Thomas Paine.

Political, Sociological, Religious, and Literary. Edited by MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY. With Introduction and Notes. To be complete in four volumes, uniform with Mr. Conway's "Life of Paine." Price per volume, $2.50. Volume I. now ready.

The first volume covers the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1775. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine, these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The Writings and Correspondence of Thomas Jefferson.

Edited by PAUL LEICESTER FORD. Uniform with the sets of the "Writings" of "Hamilton," "Franklin," "Washington," and "Jay." To be complete in 10 vols., 8vo, half leather, gilt tops. The set, $50.00.

Volume III. now ready. Limited edition, 750 copies, printed from type; but a few sets remain for subscribers.

"The importance of the edition does not lie wholly in the form in which it is published or in the care with which the contents have been brought together and annotated. Mr. Ford has included in it a large mass of matter either new to print or new to an edition of Jefferson's writings."—New York Times.

The Religion of a Literary Man.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. 12mo, $1.00.

"Mr. Le Gallienne has produced a book well worth reading, particularly (so at least we should say) by those who are most disposed to differ with him. . . . The author treats of the hereafter with great courage, and says a good many things well worthy of the utmost attention. . . . The book is certainly a remarkable one, and we urge our readers not to trust to any second-hand account, but to make themselves acquainted with its contents by the ancient method of perusal."—London Speaker.

"Probably the sunniest book on religion ever published." —London Star.

Random Roaming.

By the Rev. AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D. D., author of "The Coming of the Friars," "Arcady," "Trials of a Country Parson," etc. 12mo, $1.75.

Piers Plowman—1363-1399.

A contribution to the history of English mysticism. By J. J. JUSSERAND, author of "The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare," "English Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages," etc. 12mo, $3.50.

Cicero:

And the Fall of the Roman Republic. By Prof. J. L. STRACHAN-DAVIDSON. (No. 10 in the Heroes of the Nations Series.) With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

The Story of the Nations.

38. THE STORY OF JAPAN. By DAVID MURRAY. 12mo, illustrated, cloth, $1.50; half leather, gilt tops, $1.75.

39. THE STORY OF SPAIN. Being a Summary of Spanish History from the Moorish Conquest to the Fall of Granada (711-1492). By H. E. WATTS. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

40. THE STORY OF AUSTRALASIA (New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, Western Australia, South Australia, Queensland, New Zealand). By GREVILLE TREGARTHEN, author of "New South Wales," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

The Venetian Painters of the Renaissance.

With an essay on their genius and a full list of their works in British and continental galleries. By BERNARD BERENSON. 12mo, with frontispiece, $1.25.

Authors and Their Public

In Ancient Times. A sketch of literary conditions, and of the relations with the public of literary producers from the earliest times to the invention of printing in 1450. By GEO. HAVEN PUTNAM, author of "The Question of Copyright," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

"The Knickerbocker Press appears almost at its best in the delicately simple and yet attractive form which it has given to this work, wherein the chief of a celebrated publishing house sketches the gradual evolution of the idea of literary property. . . . The book abounds in information, is written in a delightfully succinct and agreeable manner, with apt comparisons that are often humorous, and with scrupulous exactness to statement, and without a sign of partiality either from an author's or a publisher's point of view."—New York Times.

Art in Theory.

An Introduction to the Study of Comparative Æsthetics. By GEO. L. RAYMOND, Professor of Æsthetics in the College of New Jersey. 12mo, $1.25.

The Bayadere and Other Poems.

By FRANCIS S. SALTUS. 12mo, $2.50.

Secularism: Its Progress and Morals.

By JOHN M. BONHAM, author of "Industrial Liberty," etc. 12mo, $1.75.

The Evolution of Woman:

An Inquiry into the Dogma of her Inferiority to Man. By ELIZA BURT GAMBLE. 12mo, $1.75.

Ships That Pass in the Night.

A Novel. By BEATRICE HARRADEN. 16mo, $1.00.

"Ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing,
Only a signal shown, and a distant voice in the darkness;
So, on the ocean of life, we pass and speak one another,
Only a look and a voice, then darkness again and silence."

"Ships That Pass in the Night has made its success by purely legitimate methods. . . . The author has a story to tell, a theory to work out, a belief to impart, and that is all—except the important item that she is a good writer, keen and wise in observation and style, liberal and sympathetic in temperament. . . . I sat up half the night to finish the book." —Jeannette L. Gilder, in the World.

A History of Social Life in England.

A record of the progress of the people in religion, laws, learning, arts, science, literature, industry, commerce, and manners, from the earliest times to the present date. Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D. C. L. The work is to be completed in about six volumes. Volume I. (from the earliest times to the accession of Edward I.) now ready. $3.50.

"It has been primarily designed," says the editor, "to supply a clear and consecutive account of the progress of the people of England in the several departments and activities of human life. The subjects considered have been so framed and the material so arranged that the work can be read with pleasure and instruction by the general reader, while it has been planned expressly with reference to the requirements of students engaged in the investigation of the history of English letters and learning, English art and science, English industry and commerce."

Hours in a Library.

Literary Essays by LESLIE STEPHEN, author of "An Agnostic's Apology," etc. New and cheaper edition. Three volumes. 12mo, $4.50.

The Ariel Shakespeare.

The fourth group of the Ariel Shakespeare, comprising seven of the comedies, viz.: THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, MEASURE FOR MEASURE, THE COMEDY OF ERRORS, LOVE'S LABOURS LOST, TAMING OF THE SHREW, ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. Each play in a separate volume, pocket size, large type, complete and accurate text, illustrated with the celebrated designs of Frank Howard, and bound in flexible morocco. Sold separately, per volume, 75 cents.

This edition will include all of the plays, 28 of which have thus far been published.

Subscriptions are invited for the entire set to be delivered as published, and orders will be received for any volume or volumes. Descriptive prospectus sent on application.

⁂ Notes on New Books, a quarterly bulletin, prospectus of the Knickerbocker Nuggets, Heroes, and Story of the Nations Series sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

NEW YORK: 27 and 29 West 23d St. LONDON: 24 Bedford St., Strand.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

ESTABLISHED 1870. SECOND HAND BOOKS.
Catalogues issued monthly. Sent free to book buyers.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Ye Olde Booke Man,
☞ Books Bought. 53 & 55 State Street, Albany, N. Y.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $15,029,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,579,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $23,000,000,
$1,790,000 of it in 1892.

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 24 FEBRUARY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 4 Whole No. 500

Macmillan & Company's New and Recent Publications.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VOL. II.-C.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY

ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, B. A. Lond., Hon. M. A. Oxon., LL. D. Edin., D. C. L. Dunelm, etc. With the assistance of many scholars and men of science.

Imperial 4to, half morocco, $13.00. Also ready, Vol. 1—A, B. Imperial 4to, half morocco, $13.00.

⁂ Also still sold in parts as follows: Vol. 1, Part I., A—ANT; Part II., ANT—BATTEN; Part III., BATTER—BOZ, each $3.25; Part IV., §1, BRA—BYZ, $2.00. Vol. 2, Part IV., §2, C—CASS, $1.25; Part V., CAST—CLIVY, $3.25; Part VI., CLO—CONSIGNER, $3.25; Part VII., CONSIGNIFICANT—CROUCHING, $3.25; Part VIII., §1, CROUCHMAS—CZ, $1.00.

Economic Geology of the United States.

WITH BRIEFER MENTION OF FOREIGN MINERAL PRODUCTS.

By R. S. TARR, B. S., F. G. S. A., Assistant Professor of Geology at Cornell University. 8vo, $4.00.

The Study of the Biology of Ferns by the Collodion Method.

For Advanced and Collegiate Students. By GEORGE F. ATKINSON, Ph. B., Associate Professor of Cryptogamic Botany in Cornell University. 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

PROF. J. NORMAN LOCKYER'S NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

THE DAWN OF ASTRONOMY:

A STUDY OF THE TEMPLE WORSHIP AND MYTHOLOGY OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS.

With numerous Illustrations and full-page Plates. By J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F. R. S., author of "The Meteoritic Hypothesis," "The Chemistry of the Sun," etc. Royal 8vo, $5.00.

⁂ In this work the author embodies the result of attempts he has recently made to ascertain "the early astronomical views of the Egyptians by a study of their temples, and the mythology connected with the various cults." Full of striking fact and suggestion in what is a new field of inquiry, it appeals alike to the student of astronomy, archæology and mythology, as well as to readers taking only a general interest in these subjects.

President Hill's Important Work.

Genetic Philosophy.

By DAVID JAYNE HILL, President of the University of Rochester, author of "Elements of Psychology," "Social Influence of Christianity," etc. 12mo, $1.75.

"Will take rank among the more significant and important recent contributions to philosophical thought."—The Examiner.

Social Evolution.

By BENJAMIN KIDD. 8vo. Just Ready.

New Volume in the Ethical Library.

Short Studies in Character.

By SOPHIE BRYANT, D. Sc., London, Mathematical Mistress in the North London Collegiate School for Girls, and author of "Educational Ends." 12mo, $1.50.

Uniform with the Above.

The Civilization of Christendom, and Other Studies.

By BERNARD BOSANQUET, M. A. Oxon., formerly Fellow of University College, Oxford. 12mo, $1.50.

A COMMENTARY ON THE WRITINGS OF HENRIK IBSEN.

By H. H. BOYESEN, Professor of Germanic Languages and Literature at Columbia College, author of "Goethe and Schiller," "Essays on German Literature," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

The Lovers' Lexicon.

A Handbook for Novelists, Playwrights, Philosophers, and Minor Poets; but Especially for the Enamoured. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Second Edition Just Ready.

Seventy Years of Irish Life.

Being the Recollections of W. R. LE FANU. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.75

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE KING OF SCHNORRERS.

GROTESQUES AND FANTASIES.

By I. ZANGWILL, author of "Children of the Ghetto," "The Old Maids' Club," "Merely Mary Ann," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

⁂ In The King of Schnorrers Mr. Zangwill attempts a delineation of the Jewish "Schnorrer" of tradition—a personage "as unique among beggars as Israel among nations." The author conducts his hero through a number of amusing adventures, recounting these in that vivid style familiar to his readers. The shorter stories in the volume are both tragic and comic, Mr. Zangwill playfully delegating to the critic the task of "determining which is which."

Mark Rutherford's New Novel.

Catherine Furze.

By MARK RUTHERFORD, author of "The Revolution in Tanner's Lane." Edited by his friend, Reuben Shapcott. $1.00.

"'Catherine Furze' is one of the notable books of the season. There are two leading characters, Catherine and the rector 'Cardew.' They deserve a place as great character studies in classic literature."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Completion of "Sylvie and Bruno." By the author of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."

Sylvie and Bruno Concluded.

By LEWIS CARROLL. With forty-six illustrations by Harry Furniss. 12mo, cloth, extra, gilt, $1.50.

By the Same Author, uniform with the above.

Sylvie and Bruno, Part First.

With forty-six illustrations by Harry Furniss. 12mo, cloth, extra, gilt, $1.50.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal devoted to New and Current Literature. Single Numbers, 5 cents. Annual Subscription, 50 cents.

⁂ The March number will contain an article on Benjamin Kidd's forthcoming volume, "Social Evolution."

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, 66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

Science and Hebrew Tradition.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The fourth volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS: On the Method of Zadig—The Rise and Progress of Palæontology—Lectures on Evolution—The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature—Mr. Gladstone and Genesis—The Lights of the Church and the Light of Science—Hasisadra's Adventure—The Evolution of Theology.

Science and Christian Tradition.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The fifth volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS: Prologue—Scientific and Pseudo-Scientific Realism—Science and Pseudo-Science—An Episcopal Trilogy—The Value of Witness to the Miraculous—Possibilities and Impossibilities—Agnosticism—Agnosticism: A Rejoinder—Agnosticism and Christianity—The Keepers of the Herd of Swine—Illustrations of Mr. Gladstone's Controversial Methods.

The Fauna of the Deep Sea.

By SYDNEY J. HICKSON, M. A., Fellow of Downing College, Cambridge. A new volume in the Modern Science Series, edited by Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart. With 23 Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Our present-day knowledge of the physical conditions of the bottom of the deep sea and the animals that dwell there is by no means inconsiderable. . . . It is the object of this little book to bring together in a small compass some of the more important facts and considerations, and to present them in such a form that they may be of interest to those who do not possess a specialist's knowledge of genera and species."—From the Preface.

Benefits Forgot.

By WOLCOTT BALESTIER, author of "Reffey," "A Common Story," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

This is the story which attracted such wide-spread attention during its recent publication in the Century. It is a novel of American life, combining a command of incident and movement with a rare power of analysis and observation.

Natural Resources of the United States.

By JACOB HARRIS PATTON, A. M., Ph. D., author of "Four Hundred Years of American History," "Political Parties in the United States," etc. Revised, with Additions. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00.

"The intention of this volume is to give the American people a concise narrative of the natural resources of their own country, in all their numerous forms. . . . Attention is occasionally directed to the immense value of the natural resources of the United States when compared with those of other countries. Truth is not a braggart, and it is proper that the fact in this relation should be known, that the American people, especially the younger portion, may appreciate more fully the natural advantages of their own country."—From the Preface.

A History of Germany,

From the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By BAYARD TAYLOR. With an Additional Chapter by MARIE HANSEN-TAYLOR. With Portrait and Maps. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

This standard popular history of Germany has been carefully revised and brought down to date. Its value for general readers, and for the higher grade of schools and for colleges, has been generally recognized.

The Orthoepist.

A Pronouncing Manual, containing about Four Thousand Five Hundred Words, including a considerable number of the names of Foreign Authors, Artists, etc., that are often mispronounced. By ALFRED AYRES, author of "The Verbalist," etc. Revised and Enlarged edition. 18mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Mentor:

A Little Book for the Guidance of such Men and Boys as would Appear to Advantage in the Society of Persons of the Better Sort. By ALFRED AYRES, author of "The Orthoëpist," "The Verbalist," etc. New and revised edition. 18mo, cloth, $1.00.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,

1, 3, & 5 BOND STREET . . . NEW YORK.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Cartier to Frontenac.

A study of Geographical Discovery in the interior of North America in its Historical Relations, 1534–1700; with full cartographical illustrations from contemporary sources. By JUSTIN WINSOR, author of "Columbus," editor of "Narrative and Critical History of America." 8vo, $4.00.

A book of great value on account of its abundant contributions to our knowledge of American history and geography.

In Exile, and Other Stories.

A tasteful volume of excellent short stories, by MARY HALLOCK FOOTE, author of "The Chosen Valley," "The Led-Horse Claim," "John Bodewin's Testimony," "The Last Assembly Ball," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

A Poet's Portfolio: Later Readings.

By WILLIAM WETMORE STORY, author of "Roba di Roma," "Fiammetta," etc. 18mo, parchment paper or cloth, $1.00.

A delightful little book like Mr. Story's "He and She,"—a collection of charming lyrics strung on the silver thread of an entertaining conversation.

John Larkin Lincoln.

With two portraits. 8vo, $3.00, net.

A memorial of Mr. Lincoln, who for nearly fifty years was one of the most eminent professors in Brown University, and won an enviable reputation. It includes a Memorial Address by Professor George P. Fisher, extracts from Professor Lincoln's Diary and Letters, with twenty-one papers chosen from his writings.

THE
Atlantic Monthly
FOR MARCH

WILL CONTAIN:

Philip and His Wife. VIII.—X. MARGARET DELAND.

Talk at a Country House. Assyrian Arrowheads and Jewish Books. Sir EDWARD STRACHEY.

The Fore-Room Rug. KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.

On the Upper St. John's. BRADFORD TORREY.

Is the Musical Idea Masculine? EDITH BROWER.

At the Concert: A Wagner Number. MARION COUTHOUY SMITH.

Two Strings to His Bow. In Two Parts. Part Two. WALTER MITCHELL.

The City of the End of Things. ARCHIBALD LAMPMAN.

A Greek Prime Minister: Charilaos Tricoupis. JEREMIAH W. JENKS.

The Sapphic Secret. MAURICE THOMPSON.

The Reform of Secondary Education in the United States. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

His Vanished Star. XVIII., XIX. CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK.

A New Reading of Leonardo da Vinci.

Comment on New Books.

The Contributors' Club.

35 cents a number; $4.00 a year.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

The Life Here and the Life Hereafter.

An Easter Sermon by The Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D. D. In attractive paper covers, 25 cents.

The Easter Flower.

A New Carol by PHILLIPS BROOKS. Quarto, beautifully illustrated, $1.00.

They Met in Heaven.

By GEORGE H. HEPWORTH, author of "Hiram Golf's Religion." 16mo, 216 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"This is a tender and helpful study in religious experiences. . . . To many Dr. Hepworth's effort may be a hand stretched out from heaven. To all it will be a book of pure, gentle and persuasive Christian inspiration."—Independent.

"The reader will seldom find great truths presented more vigorously and refreshingly, or see them in a more practical light. Every lover of Christian literature will enjoy the book, and will find it abundantly suggestive."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Hiram Golf's Religion:
Or, The "Shoemaker by the Grace of God."

By GEORGE H. HEPWORTH. 8th Thousand. 16mo, 134 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"Plain talks of a shoemaker and a parson. They are in dialect; the style is both quaint and strong. A book that gives the reader something to think about. . . . The sterling, homely common-sense of the book is commanding wide attention."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Stephen Remarx.
The Story of a Venture in Ethics.

By JAMES ADDERLEY. 12mo, 150 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"The book is suggestive and pathetic."—The Critic.

"Is worth reading, not only by all who profess and call themselves Christians, but by all who take any interest in the social questions of the day."—Churchman.

"It is thrilling and inspiring. We predict, and wish, for it a wide reading and a lasting influence."—Congregationalist.

Pax and Carlino.

A Story by ERNST BECKMAN. 16mo, 196 pages, illustrated, cloth, $1.00.

"An ideal story for children. Carlino and his dog are lifelike pictures, and the Swedish uncle is better than a fairy god-mother. The illustrations are excellent, and a more entertaining book for boys and girls would be hard to find."—N. Y. Observer.

"A story for young readers, and one that will interest them intensely. Carlino is a little Swedish boy who is stolen and carried to America, and Pax is his dog."—Boston Transcript.

The Close of St. Christopher's.

A Story for Girls. By EMMA MARSHALL. 12mo, 346 pages, illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

"This favorite author, who describes girl-life with so much freshness and fidelity, will add to her reputation by 'The Close of St. Christopher's.' There is a quiet, steady, growing interest throughout the book which girls will appreciate."—London Bookseller.

When We Two Parted.

A Story by SARAH DOUDNEY. 12mo, 478 pages, illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

For sale at the bookstores, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.,

PUBLISHERS,

31 West 23d Street, New York.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 24 FEBRUARY 1894 No. 4

CONTENTS

The Land of Poco Tiempo 51
Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa 51
A New Study of Tennyson 52
Days Spent on a Dock's Farm 53
Germany and the Germans 53
Winfield Scott 54
In the Dwellings of Silence 54
A History of English Dress 55

Poetry:
  What, When, Who, etc. Mary Packard Rollins 56
London Letter 56
New York Letter 57
Fiction:
  A Bundle of Life 57
  The Rousing of Mrs. Potter 58
  A Superfluous Woman 58
  Two Offenders 58
  Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle 58
  Her Provincial Cousin 58
  Richard Escott 58
  Two 58
  The Close of St. Christopher's 58
Minor Notices:
  Wayside Music 59
  More Than Kin 59
  Wah-kee-nah and Her People 59
  The Humor of Holland 59
  The Ascent of Faith 59
Periodicals 60
News and Notes 61

THE LAND OF POCO TIEMPO.*

THIS is a handsomely illustrated work by a man who has a pair of keen eyes and a well practiced pen. It crackles with fun, sparkles with delightfully given information, and furnishes us with just the facts we want to know. Special monographs concerning peculiar portions of our great national domain are needed in order to give us people of the old ancestral seats, in the East and North, correct ideas. It is not well to rely too much on novelists for our impressions of either the newer or the older sections of the United States which are least like our own environment. Mr. Lummis has done most of his work and collected his data upon the ground. He is familiar with adobes, cacti, bronchos, Apaches, and Pueblos, and also with texts, documents, and the men who know best how to read, decipher, and critically compare these. The result is that, industry, opportunity, and talent being well combined, we have the book on New Mexico, or, as the author would express it, on Sun, Silence, and Adobe. Poco Tiempo means "pretty soon." Down in the oldest settled part of the United States, where civilization, such as it is, almost touches in point of chronology the hem of Columbus' garments, there is little need for split-second watches. Mr. Lummis declares that though New Mexico is pock-marked with cattle ranches and mines, where Experience has wielded his costly birch over millionaire pupils from the East and from abroad, the virus has never reached the blood — the pits are only skin deep. The Saxon excrescences are already asleep too. Even the cowboy is a broken idol; his day is done, and so is that of the Argonaut. "All are under the spell. Nature herself does little but sleep here, and the abrupt mountains, the echoing, rock-walled cañons, the sunburnt mesas, the streams bankrupt by their own Shylock sands, the gaunt, brown, treeless plains, the ardent sky, all harmonize with unearthly unanimity."

Though New Mexico may be the sleepy land and the anomaly of the Republic, there is no sleepiness in this book — it is full of snap and vigor all the way through. One chapter describes the Indian who is not "poor," and he is the Pueblo. Another tells of the city in the sky where live these cliff-dwelling Indians, who are the devoutest and most orthodox Catholics in their adobe churches and ancient pagans at home. The order of the Penitents, who carry crosses and tear their flesh with cactus spines and suffer crucifixion, is described with dramatic power. The Pueblo foot races — athletic serials — are given in a literary photograph. In telling us of the Apache warrior, now mainly a memory, the author fails not to pay the tribute of deserved praise to General Crook, who helped Phil Sheridan to win so many of his victories, and who, though probably not to be named among the "great commanders," is worthy of a statue, a biography, and enduring fame. There is a fascinating collection of Mexican folk-songs, given in the original and in translation and set to music. The final chapter deals with the forgotten cities whose ruins still strew the plains. Of the illustrations it is sufficient to say that they are from photographs by the author, are handsomely executed, and have a value that is suggestive as well as informing. Altogether, we pronounce this an exceedingly valuable as well as a highly enjoyable book.

REALITY VERSUS ROMANCE IN SOUTH CENTRAL AFRICA.*

THE journey across Africa is not quite so formidable an undertaking as it was when Commander Cameron essayed it, now twenty-five or more years ago; but it is a very respectable jaunt still, and if one wants to measure its possibilities just let him turn to page 42 of Dr. Johnston's narrative and read the account of his losing his way in the forest, groping through a swamp in the dark, falling into a deep game pit, encountering an angry snarl and a brushing of fur against his face, and escaping, as the expression is, by the skin of his teeth. The romance and adventure of African travel are not by any means exhausted yet, as almost every one of these three hundred and fifty-three large octavo pages will bear witness.

Dr. Johnston is an English physician who was driven to Jamaica in 1874 by pulmonary trouble. Already at that time, through the writings of Moffat and Livingstone, he had been ensnared by Afric's charm; his physical condition having been made good by the soft climate of the West Indies, he proceeded in 1891 to carry out his long cherished purpose of seeing the Dark Continent for himself. He came, he saw, and, it must be added, he conquered. It was a plucky trip, certainly; in some respects it was an original one, and the literary results are critical as well as descriptive. "Romance versus Reality" he calls his handsome volume; for, undertaking the expedition at his own charges, avoiding all embarrassing relations of church and state, going without any white companion, and so keeping himself in absolute independence, he proposed to see things for himself and to tell what he saw without fear or favor. In his narrative he professes to be and to write as a Christian man; he certainly traveled as one, for in all his long journey of nearly 4,500 miles on foot he "never once found himself prompted to fire a shot in anger, or compelled to do so in self-defense against a human enemy." Nor was this the only remarkable feature of his expedition. Another, surely, was the fact that he took six likely young Jamaicans — blacks, of course — with him. Another is that of all the native carriers who helped to make up his caravan of a hundred and twenty-five or fifty souls, he lost not one by death. He looked at what he saw with the combined eyes of agriculturalist, geologist, naturalist, hunter, trader, physician, and missionary; and if he tells the truth his testimony washes out some rose-colored pictures and somewhat modifies the accepted map of Africa. We should like to feel sure of his genuine sympathy with the evangelization of the continent and of his sound judgment as to men, measures, and means. But, these points assured, we should acknowledge the receipt of a deep impression from his book and somewhat of a change of view as regards the immediate future of African development.

It is this independent, unconventional, fearless, downright tone in his report which gives it its value. The serviceableness of the book is enhanced by an excellent map of South Central Africa from sea to sea; and its beauty and interest are materially increased by a series of fifty-one full-page photogravures in tints, reproduced from photographic originals taken by Dr. Johnston's own camera. These are very remarkable pictures, by far the most forcible, lifelike, delicate, and truth-telling views of African nature, animate and inanimate, that we have met with in literature. Whether we have in mind the pains and difficulty with which they were secured, or the artistic skill with which they have been wrought out in print, they are deserving of very high praise. The subjects are not always fitted to the drawing-room, it is true; the native African in his usual undress is not altogether an attractive figure; these rows and ranks of half draped male and female forms become monotonous after a time, but they serve their purpose; and such views as those of the Mission Station at Sefala (page 121), the two of the Victoria Falls (pages 205 and 210), and Livingstonia, on Lake Nyassa (page 284), are a delight to look upon, while all are interesting and instructive.

---

* The Land of Poco Tiempo. By Charles F. Lummis. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

* Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa. By James Johnston, M.D. Illustrated. Fleming H. Revell Co. $5.00.

Entering the Dark Continent on the west coast at Benguela in the early summer of 1891, Dr. Johnston took his way first due east, by a steady ascent on to the high tableland of Central Africa, as far as to Bihé; thence southeast to Lialui and Nalolo on the upper waters of the Zambesi; thence down the Zambesi, in the same general direction for perhaps two hundred miles, to the magnificent Victoria Falls, which pour their immense volume of water over a height of four hundred feet, or more than double that of Niagara. At this signal point, leaving the Zambesi, which here bends to the northeast, Dr. Johnston struck directly south, by a long stage of several hundred miles between the great and dreary Kalahari Desert on the west and the Matabele Country on the east, to the valley of the Limpopo, which is the northern boundary of the Transvaal. This was the southernmost point of his expedition. Glancing by a wide sweep away from the Limpopo, he returned toward the north and east directly through the Matabele land to Salisbury in Mashonaland on the eastern slopes of Mt. Hampden, where he might have considered himself "out of the woods," although a stretch of perhaps two hundred miles in a straight line still intervened before he could reach the coast of the Indian Ocean at the mouth of the Zambesi. His circuitous path thither, touching at Makaka and Gouveia, and making a long detour to the north to Lake Nyassa, which he traversed as far as Bandawé, ran on, of course, to several hundreds of miles.

We can only in a word allude to some of Dr. Johnston's conclusions. He reduces the general scale of missionary advances in the interior of Africa by a good many degrees. He pays hearty tribute to the spirit and aim of missionaries, whose common sense at the same time he sometimes questions, and whose practical methods he often deems unwise. He is especially severe on the untruthfulness and exaggerations which characterize too many reports of their progress. In particular, the wind is taken out of Bishop Taylor's sails. The fertility and productiveness of Africa he thinks are greatly overestimated. The advent of civilized nations, such as the English, has not been an unmixed blessing. Alas for the vices of the nominal "Christian!" Waste of resources and misdirection of energies enter into the indictment which Dr. Johnston brings against many of the missionary agencies; and his contempt for the paltry ritualism of the Universities Mission on the island of Lokoma on Lake Nyassa is not disguised, though moderately expressed. We have not the slightest idea to what sect of the church Dr. Johnston belongs; but he writes like an honest, sincere, plain-spoken man. To sum up the conclusions of his journey: it is dawn in Africa, but the sun rises slowly in those parts, and it will be a good while before day comes.

A NEW STUDY OF TENNYSON.[*]

MR. J. CUMING WALTERS is the author of an interesting volume entitled In Tennyson Land, which we had the pleasure of reviewing some two years since. It might seem after the volumes on Tennyson's work and thought by Mr. Waugh and Dr. Van Dyke that there is little need of a large volume devoted to the subject; but Mr. Walter's book fully vindicates its right to be. He has not attempted a biography; nevertheless, especially in the early chapters, he has given all the biographical information which throws any light upon the poems, and he has also supplied to some extent the deficiency in our knowledge of Tennyson's life during the period between 1833 and 1847. Mr. Walters is no dispenser of trivial gossip about the great man, and he warns off in his preface "those who desire to read about the tobacco he smoked, the hats he wore, and the beer or wine he drank at dinner."

The general plan of this volume is to devote a chapter to each great poem, and to accompany these with other chapters on Tennyson as a dramatist and as a student, his humor, his general literary characteristics, his pains in revision, and the question of his originality as a poet. There is, of course, much matter common to this volume and those mentioned above; but Mr. Walters, though not a great critic, is so far from being a servile admirer that his pages will commend themselves to all who wish to have Tennyson's poems well set in the framework of his life and general thought. One of the first points of more especial interest that we note is the comment on the gravity and pessimism, even, of Poems by Two Brothers:

> How curious it is to hear these lads between fifteen and eighteen gravely discoursing on philosophy, and from the depths of their experience teaching mankind the severe duties of life. It is scarcely natural to be tutored by youth and told that "life is but a scene of fallacy and woe," that "mortal man" should not "complain of death," and that
>
> Never from a withered heart
> The consciousness of ills shall part.
>
> The subjects of the poems are always somber. Death, sorrow, pain, exile, rage, remorse, and despair are the most constant of themes.

Edward Fitzgerald's opinion of The Princess is worth quoting and comparing with that of a famous mathematician. Fitzgerald asked a friend, "Have you seen The Princess? I am considered a great heretic for abusing it; it seems to me a wretched waste of power at a time when a man ought to be doing his best, and I almost feel hopeless about Alfred now — I mean about his doing what he was born to do. A. T. was born to do more than idyls." On the other hand, Sir William Rowan Hamilton, the great mathematician, himself a poet, was once heard to remark, "It deeply presses on my reflection how much wiser a book is Tennyson's Princess than my Quaternions." The curious story which Mr. Walters tells of a New England preacher and "The Charge of the Light Brigade," on page 82, we are inclined to think mythical. Certainly no one speaks about "chapel" here as the story does.

Mr. Walters makes a special point of considering fully Tennyson's political and religious views. The long chapter on In Memoriam follows familiar lines of exposition, but it is surely sound in its appreciation and praise. Tennyson was of course more of a patriotic than a political poet, and more inclined to conservatism than to radicalism in his views of contemporary events. His thoroughly English feelings explain better than any abstract views his vigorous expressions of dislike for revolution and change. But Mr. Walters remarks, as other critics have done before him, that the entire subordination of rank and wealth to love and patriotism, which makes Tennyson so humane a poet, is a matter of far more consequence than his opinions about monarchy and democracy. Mr. Walters quotes Dickens' declaration about his favorite child in his heart of hearts, "whose name is David Copperfield." "And if Tennyson had cared to take the world into his confidence it is not unlikely that he would have confessed — as we have good reason for believing was the fact — that in his heart of hearts he had a favorite child, and that child's name was Maud."

In connection with Mr. Henry Irving's

---

[*] Tennyson: Poet, Philosopher, Idealist. Studies of the Life, Work, and Teaching of the Poet Laureate. By J. Cuming Walters. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.75.

present visit to this country the amusing story on page 171 is of interest, for which Mr. Escott is authotity.

> Lord Tennyson is fond now of a glass of sound port. Upon one occasion he pressed Mr. Irving to take a glass of the precious liquid. Mr. Irving did as he was desired, but, not being a port wine drinker, sipped it very slowly. Before he had finished it, the decanter from which the bard had been automatically replenishing his goblet was empty. Lord Tennyson bade the butler bring a fresh supply, and turning to his guest said dryly, "Do you always drink a bottle of port, Mr. Irving, after dinner?"

The later chapters, treat of the extreme pains which Tennyson spent in correcting and revising his poems, under the title of "Labor Limæ" answer the question, "Was Tennyson an original poet?" and discuss Tennyson's humor; they supply, perhaps, more novel matter than any other part of the book. Mr. Walter's dictum in regard to Tennyson's humor is not far from right:

> Within limits and in his special domain we must regard Tennyson as a humorist of a genuine and uncommon order. As in other things, he was punctilious ever in his merrymaking, and in consequence it was only when really inspired that he was seen to advantage. The triviality or dullness which passes for humor in the dramas is the obvious result of a set task being formally carried out. The contrast is great indeed when the grim and subtle humor of the poems is turned to; and the Northern Farmer series alone would support Tennyson's reputation for keen wit and the masterly delineation of quaint characters.

Mr. Walter's volume, we have no doubt, will take a permanent place in Tennyson literature. It is full, fair, and penetrating; its admiration of Tennyson's poetry is not so extreme as to rob it of the great value of moderation. The only error of consequence we have noticed is on page 45, where the "Palace of Art" is, apparently, said to be one of the poems now gathered together under the heading "Juvenilia;" this may be due to an obscurity in the sentence.

DAYS SPENT ON A DOGE'S FARM.*

MISS MARGARET SYMONDS, daughter, comrade, and traveling companion of the late John Addington Symonds, has written a captivating book on a fresh and exceedingly picturesque subject. The "Doge's Farm" is the fanciful name she has seen fit to give to a tract in Lombardy owned by the Pisani family. It goes on the maps by the name of Basso Padovano — a vast, green plain bounded by the Euganean Hills and the Adriatic. It is in a certain sense an artificial country, the land having been reclaimed from the marsh with enormous pains and expense, and every rod of it cultivated for more than six hundred years. The Adige crosses it, carrying the waters of the Alps, which bring such accumulations of mountain sediment that the banks rise far above the level of the land and the church spires are shadowed by them. The vast, immeasurable plain is covered with fields of corn separated by ditches bordered by willows or mulberries. In the heart of this country lives and rules the Countess Pisani, who named her place "Gromboolia," from Edward Lear's fabulous land. The Pisani's tract is part of the old Venetian doge's land settlement.

Here, then, Miss Symonds was for months a favored guest, and in a sketchy, gossipy, and vivacious way she describes a kind of country few travelers have ever visited; the plowing, and harvesting, and the gleaning like that in Bible times; the wild flowers; the sunsets, and the wonderful atmospheric and scenic aspects; the farm buildings; the mode of life at the house of the countess, which was like a palace; the gardens luxuriant with their opulence of roses; and strangest of all, the journeyings and errands, the ordering and the executive management of that wonderful woman herself. The property of the Pisani's covers an area of about three thousand acres, with farmhouses scattered over it, and this widowed lady, English by birth, was in the habit of dashing off at a moment's call, in silk attire perhaps, to look after sick cattle, visiting the stables and with her own hands ministering to the wonderfully beautiful oxen and bulls she was so fond of. Miss Symonds accompanied her on these errands, visited the bailiffs, and saw the system of management. Other visits were to the palace homes of other landholders, to monasteries, to the Euganean Hills, to Padua. It is all like an idyl, like something far removed from the ordinary life of men and women. The very name, Gromboolia, gives an air of unreality. But with all the illusive effect there is an unmistakable sense of work and oversight and practical duties. The brilliant writer, who was admitted into the home intimacy, observed, enjoyed, and appreciated everything. Her sympathy, enthusiasm, and artistic feeling had boundless scope, and her book is full of warmth and color. She deprecates its crudities, but the reader will find too constant enjoyment to discover them. Several fine photogravures and abundant vignettes by the author illustrate the charming narrative.

GERMANY AND THE GERMANS.*

MR. DAWSON has previously made a reputation by his books on German socialism, and in these two imported volumes he extends his survey of the Germans to the whole range of contemporary life and institutions. He has particularly endeavored to avoid hasty generalization concerning a country and a people so varied as the German, and to refrain from judging the German character and institutions exclusively from the English standpoint. He seems to us to have been unusually successful in this endeavor, and he has certainly produced a work of the first order of interest for all who would understand the present life and tendencies of our Teutonic kindred. His volumes do not claim a rank with those of Mr. Bryce on our country, nor are they such a penetrating study of national character as Mr. Hamerton's and Mr. Brownell's expositions of French society; but as far as he goes Mr. Dawson strikes us as a very fair-minded and capable expositor. His volumes might be called a contribution to the highest department of journalism or to one of the lower departments of history. However they may be ranked, they are extremely informing and readable, and we know nothing in contemporary literature which will give a more reliable and complete idea of German institutions.

Mr. Dawson naturally begins with a brief chapter on patriotism, which is flourishing in Germany as never before. This is due to the great events of the last thirty years and to the inculcation of patriotic feeling in the schools. He passes then to the instrument which has made Germany so great a power in the Europe of today. He states the annual expense of the army and navy as more than $138,000,000 a year — this sum not representing the indirect cost of the nation through the withdrawal of a half million men from industry. He points out very candidly the physical and moral advantages which the system produces, but nevertheless declares that it "must be regarded as the curse of necessity." Going into details concerning the General Staff, which especially distinguishes the German Army from all other modern armies, he then gives an amusing description of the exclusive aristocracy which divides the officers from the civil population. No chapter goes deeper into the German character and life than the fourth, on patriarchal government. Here Mr. Dawson makes generalizations to which he is obliged more than once to return; they seem to be in accordance with the invariable report of other fair-minded observers:

> The Germans are a ruled and not a self-ruling nation. This fact the reformers of more liberal tendencies recognize and also lament. Yet they fail to allow to the fact its due significance. It is irrational to conclude that the mere passing of laws would at once alter national characteristics and habits — just as irrational as it would be to conclude that any man in the street would be able to read Greek if it were placed before him. The capacity for self-government must be developed before the free institutions common to democratic countries will be either practicable or appreciated, and for centuries the people of Germany have been taught, not independence, but its opposite. . . . This want of emulation owes its origin to the old patriarchal system and the bureaucratic system, which is its outcome. The worst result of these systems is the discouragement and destruction of public spirit. Germany suffers so severely from their fatal influence that decades, if not generations, must pass — even

---

* Days Spent on a Doge's Farm. By Margaret Symonds. London: T. Fisher Unwin. New York: The Century Co.

* Germany and the Germans. By William Harbutt Dawson. Two volumes. D. Appleton & Co. $6.00.

> after a reaction against the present régime shall have set in, and it has not yet appeared — before her citizens will be trained sufficiently in independence, enterprise, self-reliance, and resource to be qualified and anxious to take complete charge of their local affairs.

The Germans, Mr. Dawson tells us in another place, are properly described as a "police-governed people." The good results of the close supervision by the police he does not deny, as in the case of Berlin, which, he says, is probably the best governed city in the world. But the German is a man in whom long centuries of habit have bred an extreme respect for his superiors of every rank and an esteem for titles which must seem ludicrous to the Englishman or to the American. This being the position of the German man, it is not strange that the woman question is comparatively new in Germany. Mr. Dawson's conclusion is, however, that women have their destiny in their own hands. "Let it be understood, then, that where women are kept down it is not by superior intellectual or moral force. Not in the least. They are the victims of antiquated traditions and foolish social conventionalities, shared by both sexes alike and not by men only, and to some extent also of unequal laws." One of Mr. Dawson's few prophecies is, that when women have taken a more commanding position in German literature German style will be, what it never has been yet, clear and readable. It would be very easy to multiply quotations of a most interesting character from the chapters on the outdoor life, which has so many attractions for the poorly housed inhabitants of the cities; on the musical feeling so strong in the national character; on the long hours of work and the low but gradually rising wages of the German working people, who could improve their own condition considerably by abstaining more from drink — though intoxication is not frequent — and from the dance saloons; on the overproduction of educated people, which is one of the gravest problems in the Germany of today; on the crisis in the higher education; on the admirable systems of technical education prevailing in German cities; on the press, "which is so baited and badgered, so disparaged and slighted, by all the organs and officials of the state" that it has no great influence; and on the alienation of the larger part of the people from religion, which is one of the most striking results of the strict union of church and state.

The closing part of Mr. Dawson's work is a series of sketches of the present German emperor, for whom he has great respect, his father and grandfather, Moltke, Bismarck, and the three latest empresses. This portion of the work one could most easily dispense with, as it does not add much to our previous knowledge. The two preceding parts, on politics and parties and socialism, on the other hand, have considerable novelty in their details, and their matter is very well presented. Each of the parties is the subject of a separate chapter, going into details of its origin and policy. We can only mention Mr. Dawson's opening declaration about the National Liberal Party, that it is the German political party which can look to the future with greatest assurance; and his remark, sufficiently indicative of his position, on the Anti-Semitic party:

> The struggle between the Christian and Jewish populations of Germany constitutes the real and true Kulturkampf, or fight for civilization in this second half of the nineteenth century. It would be more accurately described as a fight against civilization.

Mr. Dawson is not a socialist, although his economic creed is by no means of the Bourbon order, but he presents with much candor and very clearly the present standing of the social democracy. We must close by quoting his prophecy that "the Social Democrats can never become a majority party in the legislature," though they may become strong enough to impede legislature for a longer or shorter period. The bad feature of the existing situation in the eyes of a man like Mr. Dawson, who believes in the ideal and in the great articles of universal religion, is elsewhere:

> If the possibility of economic socialism becoming a reality were all that Germany and German statesmen had to fear, the prospect would be altogether promising as compared with the actual fact. The real danger lies in the moral teaching of social democracy and its effect upon the minds, the characters, the lives of the people.

WINFIELD SCOTT.*

As a defeated candidate for the presidency of the United States, General Scott stands in the long list of shadows that have scarce a remembrance either among living men or in history. But as a patriot, an invaluable servant of his country, a brave warrior, a brilliant man of military science, a peerless strategist and tactician, how different is his record! In physical grandeur of appearance few men in American history have surpassed him; in length of service he holds almost a unique record. On one occasion it was Winfield Scott, with his impressive figure and imposing uniform as a substitute for an army not yet collected or mobilized, that averted war. In his youth he fought outside of his country, winning the victory of Lundy's Lane in Canada, and in his mature life he led the sons of his former comrades in arms to battle and victory in the heart of Mexico. Still active and vigorous at the breaking out of the war, he was one of the few men who saw the true proportions of the cloud that was to burst upon the country. When Grant had led the Union Army to victory, Scott presented him his autobiography, with the inscription "From the oldest to the greatest general in the world."

This book, like its predecessors in the series, is well presented. It has a first-rate steel plate portrait, showing a grand old hero of leonine aspect; there are five battle plans and routes. The author, General Wright, knows his subject well, though his familiarity with the pen is probably not equal to his knowledge of the sword. He gives a list of his authorities, which are well enough in their way, though it is almost a pity, since Scott's connection with the Mexican War was so important, that the Mexican side of the question could not also be presented from a knowledge of their own literature. Furthermore, like a true army officer, General Wright does not seem to know how largely the army was indebted to the navy for the successful landing of Scott's force, for the blockade and garrisoning of the ports, and the maintenance of those attacks along the coast which demoralized the Mexicans and enabled Scott to penetrate into the healthful interior. If General Wright had read carefully and with a judicial mind the official reports of the navy, the books written by the navy chaplains and others, who show what the work of the navy was, and especially if he had read the life of Matthew Galbraith Perry, his story of the landing at Vera Cruz and the bombardment and successful breaching of the walls by the navy battery would have been very different from what it is. The navy battery, which mounted the heaviest guns and which first breached the walls, does indeed have mention on the official map, but there is little or no reference to the superb work done by the navy at Vera Cruz and throughout the whole Mexican War. Justly did Matthew Perry demand that the flagstaffs captured at Vera Cruz should have inscribed on their brass plates the words "And navy," where Scott had already engraved the words "Taken by the American army."

IN THE DWELLINGS OF SILENCE.*

MR. WALKER KENNEDY has written a thrilling tale of Russian life. His story opens with a gay ball in Saint Petersburg and ends with a successful escape from Siberia. The hero is a young American diplomate, and the heroine a beautiful Russian girl who, on account of her presence at a nihilist meeting, was sentenced to the mines for life. The young American with great courage determined to rescue his fiancée from her Siberian exile, and the story of the escape is told with genuine dramatic skill. Never have the horrors of the journey to the mines been more graphically described. It makes the reader's blood curdle to hear of the frightful cruelties to which even the most delicately nurtured prisoners are exposed. The book seems like a record of the early days of martyrdom, and yet when we realize that the facts are those given in Mr. George Kennan's recent articles, and that these things are happening in this century — perhaps this very month — we must look upon the Russian form of government as tyrannical almost beyond the belief of modern civilization. Still, as Mr. Kennedy writes, "the conscience of the Czar still sleeps on."

---

* Great Commanders. Winfield Scott. By General Marcus J. Wright. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* In the Dwellings of Silence. By Walker Kennedy. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.

In the Dwellings of Silence is written with great intensity of feeling, with an exact knowledge of Russian laws, and with a burning hatred of their injustice. It is a story of great power, and will open the eyes of many to the true state of Russian politics. The popular idea of a "nihilist" is a false one, and this story is eminently fitted to eradicate incorrect and rose-colored impressions of Russian life. It will commend itself to readers who are interested in Russia, and to others who enjoy exciting stories of adventure. The description of the "Hunger Strike" in the mines of Siberia is haunting in its tragic horror.

A HISTORY OF ENGLISH DRESS.[*]

MISS HILL has written two very readable volumes on a subject which has interest for the severest of mankind, even, considering fashion in dress as an outcome of this curious human nature of ours. What wildest conception of the ugly, the grotesque, and the inconvenient in clothing could reach the height of absurdity actually attained by many of the fashions recorded in this vivacious chronicle! From the long pointed shoes of the Norman gentleman, which he tied by a chain to his knees to keep them up, and his sleeves falling to the ground; the stomachers worn by men in the fifteenth century; his sleeves and borders of gowns cut into the form of letters or leaves in the "Reign of the Roses;" the Elizabethan ruff and farthingale; the wig of the eighteenth century; the Fontange headdress; the patches for the face; down to the hideous fashions of forty years ago — it is a strange development of the fantastic and the ugly side by side with a slowly growing sense of convenience, healthfulness, and beauty. Miss Hill tells this history, marked by sudden revolutions and long conservatisms, with much skill. She has mastered her subject, and she has included much matter concerning the manners and customs of the various periods, their house architecture, their trade and commerce, and their broad social and political relations; she thus avoids the dryness of a more special treatise while keeping to her general subject. Throughout, her work is marked by good judgment, literary skill in arrangement and quotation, and an easy and graceful style. The only illustrations are thirteen excellent engravings of more or less noted persons in the dress of the periods between Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria. One can see at a glance that there has been some progress in rationality in dress by simply comparing the two portraits of these great queens, which are the frontispieces of these soberly elegant volumes.

A few quotations on points of interest we must make room for. At no time of the past, says Miss Hill, can we infer from the dress of English people the character of their material surroundings; there is no necessary connection between the love of fine array and household conveniences and comfortable furniture. In the brave Plantagenet days, for instance:

> Imagine the ladies in their trailing gowns stepping gingerly over the damp and often dirty rushes in the hall, sitting in carpetless, curtainless rooms on benches — for a chair was a special luxury — with the rain and the wind blowing in through the lattices. One would expect to find every one dressed in thick serge or coarse calico, with short gowns and strong, serviceable boots; instead of which, the ladies and gallants of that period were extravagantly fond of costly stuffs, long trains, and fantastic shoes.

Down to the middle of the fifteenth century English women were more moderate in their devotion to fashion than men:

> There was a time when women showed far less disposition than men to adopt new fashions. Because in the present day men have chosen to affect a certain rigor in dress which does not admit of much variation, they are pleased to forget the quality of their toilet in the past, the number and mutability of their fashions, the elaboration and costliness of their attire, which equaled, nay, exceeded, that of women. . . . With the influx of foreign goods and foreign fashions, and the growing taste in Western Europe for novelties and display, the classic simplicity of female costume was corrupted. Women began to dress to match the men. The French ladies succumbed earlier to the influences of the times, and, as most of our queens came from France, it was inevitable that great ladies should follow the example of the lords and gallants, and deck themselves in the new modes that seemed to have been gathered from all quarters of the world.

Anything like convenient dress for children, made expressly for them, and not a mere copy of their father's or mother's array, is a modern invention. But appropriate garments for boys and girls were not in vogue even thirty or forty years ago. It was an age of retrogression as concerned dress:

> The end of the forties and the whole of the fifties are more open to the charge of downright ugliness than any period in the nineteenth century. When the crinoline came, to the ugly was superadded the ridiculous. We who laugh at the whimsicalities of the eighteenth century ought to sit in dust and ashes for the barbarisms of our own age. Forty years ago both Paris and London had absolutely lost the art of dressing. Costume was shapeless; colors were crude and horribly mixed; and there was too much of almost everything. There were too many flowers, too many ornaments, too many ribbons, and, above all, too many petticoats and too much skirt. . . . There is, fortunately, one characteristic of that period which will always militate against its revival. It had the fatal quality of making all the young women appear middle-aged. There was no youthfulness in those days; the very children looked strangely grown up.

"The characteristic of modern fashion," Miss Hill finds, "is a taste for extreme simplicity. No costume has been more popular than the tailor-made gown in which the limit of plainness has been reached." But dress, "to our seeming more simple, is really more elaborate. Prices are lower, but needs are more numerous and pressing, because the changes of fashion are so rapid."

It is an extremely interesting question whether the fuller education and the larger business employment of women are making them more independent of irrational fashions of dress. Miss Hill notes an encouraging symptom in the recent successful stand made against the reintroduction of crinoline. Every man of sense must applaud such manifestation of resistance to mere slavishness.

— On the 19th of December, 1893, there passed away at Heidelberg, in his eighty-first year, in consequence of an attack of influenza, Dr. Alois Sprenger, one of the most distinguished of Arabic scholars. Born in Tyrol in 1813, he studied medicine at Innsbruck, but at the same time he devoted himself to Oriental languages, especially Arabic. In India Dr. Sprenger was for a long time director of the Mohammedan schools, and in this capacity acquired such extensive knowledge of Islamic sciences that he became famous in historical research, especially as regards Mohammed. He published in India a number of treatises, among which were his first attempt at a life of Mohammed and editions of Arabic and Persian works. His principal works are his Lebensgeschichte Mohammeds, in three volumes, and his Alte Geographie auf Grund des Ptolemäus.

— Renan's library, we are told, will be sold in a few weeks. The catalogue, now in preparation, will contain about seven thousand titles, being the pick of the collection. The unimportant books have already been weeded out and disposed of.

— The romance of Miss Elizabeth Peabody's life was not told at the time of her death. In her youth she was engaged to be married to Nathaniel Hawthorne, who had not then seen her younger sister Sophia, his future wife. The two met, fell in love, and strove in vain to conquer their sentiment. Miss Peabody discovered the true state of affairs and broke her engagement, leaving Hawthorne free to marry Sophia. Mrs. Browning's well-known "Bertha in the Lane" is based on this episode; but Miss Peabody, unlike the heroine of the poem, survived the sister for whom she sacrificed her own happiness.

— A new collection of Mr. Thomas Hardy's Wessex Tales will appear this month. Of Tess over twenty-two thousand copies have been sold in England.

---

[*] A History of English Dress from the Saxon Period to the Present Day. By Georgiana Hill. Two vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $7.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 24 FEBRUARY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

What, When, Who, etc.

A LITERARY POEM FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

Pray, what did T. Buchanan Read?
  At what did E. A. Poe?
What volumes did Elizur Wright?
  And where did E. P. Roe?

Is Thomas Hardy nowadays?
  Is Rider Haggard pale?
Is Minot Savage? Oscar Wilde?
  And Edward Everett Hale?

Was Laurence Sterne? was Hermann Grimm?
  Was Edward Young? John Gay?
Jonathan Swift? and old John Bright?
  And why was Thomas Gray?

Was John Brown? and was J. R. Green?
  Chief Justice Taney quite?
Is William Black? R. D. Blackmore?
  Mark Lemon? H. K. White?

Was Francis Bacon lean in streaks?
  John Suckling vealy? Pray,
Was Hogg much given to the pen?
  Are Lamb's Tales sold today?

Did Mary Mapes Dodge just in time?
  Did C. D. Warner? How?
At what did Andrew Marvell so?
  Does Edward Whymper now?

What goodies did Rose Terry Cooke?
  Or Richard Boyle beside?
What gave the wicked Thomas Paine,
  And made Mark Akenside?

Was Thomas Tickell-ish at all?
  Did Richard Steele, I ask?
Tell me, has George A. Sala suit?
  Did William Ware a mask?

Does Henry Cabot Lodge at home?
  John Horne Tooke what and when?
Is Gordon Cumming? Has G. W.
  Cabled his friends again?

— Mary Packard Rollins, in Good Housekeeping.

LONDON LETTER.

THE Christmas lull is over and the new books are beginning to drop in; there is nothing very notable yet, and the reviews are mainly of last season's books. Strictly speaking, there are supposed to be on this side of the water two publishing seasons, with a close time for authors between. They call the spring season May, and the autumn October; but the May books begin in February and dribble on till July, and the October books begin in August and are in full rush up to Christmas.

At present the talk is more of what last season brought forth than any fruit for the coming season. The new writer most spoken of is Mr. Francis Thompson, a welcome arrival after a long, long dearth of poets — that is, of poets who could sing more than a robin's song, as a few can, very sweetly. Mr. Francis Thompson is bound to be great or nothing. He has the magnificent Elizabethan manner, and at his sanest his diction suggests golden adventures in poetry. When he is least sane he has a riotousness of verbiage and imagery which must make the muse put her fingers on her lips in warning. His success with the critics has been astounding. For the past six or seven years his poems have been appearing in Merry England, a London magazine, without attracting attention except of a limited kind. The magazine is edited by his friend, Mr. Wilfrid Meynell, and I well remember the appearance of "Dream-Tryst," and my writing to the editor to ask "Who is Francis Thompson?" The answer was: "We picked up Francis Thompson holding horses in the Strand. We are glad that you think with us 'Dream-Tryst' so very beautiful.'' Since then, through my friendship with Mr. Meynell, I have traced every step of Mr. Thompson's career, and have even had the honor of having one of his poems inscribed to me. He has had as strange a history as Richard Savage or Chatterton. He is the son of a doctor practicing in a fashionable seaside resort. He was educated at the Catholic College of Ushant. After college he studied medicine for a while, but being desirous of emulating his admiration, De Quincey, he began opium eating. How low this habit brought him was shown by his straits at the time the Meynells discovered him. He had lived for some time then by holding horses and selling matches. I have often heard the story of "Dream-Tryst." It came written on the blue back of a bill — so slovenly and untempting a manuscript that it was pigeon-holed unread. Presently some lucky chance turned it out, and the quality was at once recognized. Search for the author at the address given — a chemist's shop in Drury Lane — was fruitless. He had long ceased to call for an answer. The poem was then published, and brought forth an irate letter from the poet on the discourtesy of using the poem without having acknowledged its reception. Since then the Meynells have been his unfailing friends. He is at present quietly living in the Franciscan Monastery of Pantasaph, in Wales, while his fame is on men's lips. In two of the January monthly reviews were articles devoted to his poetry by such noteworthy judges as Mr. H. D. Traill and Mr. Coventry Patmore.

Another sensation of the past season was the volume of short stories, entitled Keynotes, by "George Egerton." A woman who calls herself "George" provokes dangerous comparison with certain great masculinely endowed women. But "George Egerton's" sex is more pronounced in her book than was ever George Eliot's or George Sand's. The book is strikingly feminine, although it is femininity in a somewhat hysterical mood. Mrs. Clermont, to give the lady her real name, is as indiscreetly outspoken as the authoress of The Quick and the Dead, and with less excuse, since Mrs. Charles was Amélie Rives when she published that erotic romance, and so might, to some extent, be supposed to sin from ignorance. Mrs. Clermont's stories would be almost gross in their want of reticence if they were not so romantic. As it is, the passion and feeling in them carry one along like an adventure. Björnson is her master, but she improves on him in so far that she has no calm. One accepts a certain terrible final scene in the Heritage of the Kurts as one does the brutalities of Wuthering Heights, because of the wild power in them. But how intolerable is the quiet that follows in Björnson's romance, the quiet of mind that is noisome. Mrs. Clermont in her most Björnsonesque mood is at her finest. In Under Northern Sky the passion and drunkenness rage round one like a great storm high in clashing trees. The effect she produces has something of genius. Mrs. Clermont lives in the north of Ireland. Her father is a Dublin academician, a Mr. Dunne. She is, rather unexpectedly, a Roman Catholic. One would have thought the atmosphere of the old faith, with its certainties, a most unlikely cradle for all this Sturm und Drang. Mrs. Clermont, by the way, must come of a quite unliterary circle, for Keynotes was a manuscript sent to Mr. T. P. O'Connor to be adjudged upon in the Friends in Council department of the Weekly Sun. He was struck by the quality of the stories, and advised her to submit them to Mr. Richard Le Gallienne. That competent and generous critic in his turn recommended them to Messrs. Matthews & Lane for the three and sixpenny novel series they were projecting.

A new illustrated paper, St. Paul's, will appear about the middle of February. Its page much resembles a page of the Sketch. Its list of artists is a strong one, including as it does Messrs. Dudley Hardy, Phil May, Herbert Railton, J. F. Sullivan, and half a dozen others of the best black-and-white men of the day. The literary department is being specially looked after by Mr. Tighe Hopkins. His contributors for the first number include Madame Sarah Grand, Mabel Collins, F. C. Philips, Clement Scott, and L. F. Austin. The promoters hope to make St. Paul's "the most artistic paper in London." They are not deterred from using the title by the fact that Anthony Trollope's magazine of the same name died after a few years of existence. The old St. Paul's was, indeed, admirably conducted. People said it failed because of the editor's too great softheartedness. Old volumes of the magazine are very interesting now. The poetry was, perhaps, the strongest contributed to any periodical of our century except the Welcome Guest, to which Robert Browning, William Morris, and others contributed. You will find in St. Paul's many poems of George Meredith's, Austin Dobson's exquisite mediæval poetry, such as "Angiola on Earth" and "Angiola in Heaven," and many poems signed "John Leycester Warren," that being Lord de Tabley's name before he had come to his title.

A week or two ago Mrs. Singleton, whose verses under the pen-name of "Violet Fane" are well known, was joined in second nuptials to Sir Philip Currie, the new ambassador to Constantinople. Of the many London papers which chronicled the event not one that I have seen referred to the literary doings of the bride. Mrs. Singleton's success was, indeed, a success of esteem, or rather of beauty. To her Mr. Mallock's The New Republic, which made such a sensation in the later seventies, was dedicated, and she was the Mrs. Sinclair of the book. One of Mr. Mallock's characters describes her: "That lovely creature with a dress like a red azalea. What speaking eyes! And what hair too — deep, dead black, with those white starry blossoms in it. I don't think I ever saw any one move so gracefully; and how proudly and piquantly she poises —

> On her neck the small head buoyant, like a bell-flower on its bed."

Violet Fane's poetry had its vogue in those days like Mr. Mallock's own. But nowadays who thrills to Mallock's Owen-Meredith-and water, who to Mrs. Singleton's sentimental verses? The survival of her verse is in a vapid song, "Forever and forever." But she must have been printed in the seventies in limited editions for the aristocracy, or how else is it that her first editions are in demand in the book market?

Mr. Norman Gale goes to America in the autumn. While there he hopes to arrange for the publication of a book. His cricketing verses will be out in the spring. Curiously enough, this bard of milkmaids and thrushes and an Arcadia which is somewhat that of a Watteau fan is a devout athlete. He is a big fellow of over six feet, boyish in manner, and an adept at all games, from football to sliding, and from poker to pitch-and-toss. Happy Mr. Norman Gale! In his case the limited edition system has worked most happily. A set of his little books has just sold for ninety-five pounds of good British money.

KATHARINE (TYNAN) HINKSON.

NEW YORK LETTER.

MR. BRANDER MATTHEWS is one of the most indefatigable of authors. This does not mean that he produces books in large quantities, for his annual output is exceeded by many other writers of the present time; it means simply that he is always at work and that in everything he undertakes he is most conscientious and thorough. His recently published volume of essays on subjects relating to the drama is most welcome, for whatever Mr. Matthews has to say with regard to the theater of the present or of the past is sure to be well grounded on study and experience. He is one of the few writers of the present day who take a serious interest in the contemporary drama as well as in dramatic literature, and he is also one of the very few who have succeeded in writing popular plays.

Just at present Mr. Matthews is hard at work putting the finishing touches on a new novel. The scene is laid in New York, and the plot deals with the fortunes of an ill-starred Wall Street man. I have been told the title, but I am not as yet permitted to reveal it. I can say, however, that, like all of Mr. Matthews' titles, it is capital. The author, who was born and brought up in New York, and who is devoted to the city even as a Bostonian is to Boston, is sure to excel in his local color, and the theme of the book promises to give him full scope. Few writers have attempted to deal with Wall Street, perhaps because most of them never go there and are agreeably unfamiliar with its business methods. But surely, as has already been pointed out, it offers admirable material for plenty of "typically American" novels.

Columbia College is preparing for an elaborate celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Friedrich Diez, first of the romance philologists, who died in 1876 at an advanced age. The exercises will be wholly literary in character, and will include the reading of papers by well-known students of Romance languages, among them Professors Cohn, Todd, and Price of Columbia, Professors Kittredge and Sheldon of Harvard, and Professor Elliott of Johns Hopkins. For some time Professor Kittredge has been making a study of Sir Thomas Mallory, and it is said that he has found some new material regarding the personality of Mallory which he will embody in his paper. The celebration will call attention to the encouragement which Columbia has been giving to its literary departments during the past few years. These are now undoubtedly among the finest in the country.

A few weeks ago a successful French author died, yet his death was hardly noticed by the New York papers. His name was Eugène Nus. Nus had a genius for plots, and it is said that from one of his plays Charles Reade derived the scheme of his Hard Cash. At any rate, Nus claimed that Reade purchased the scheme from him, and when he had used it declined to hand over the purchase money. It is also said that Miss Braddon went to Nus for the story of one of her novels, and that the theme of Dion Boucicault's Streets of New York came from the same source. Nus was very well known in Paris, where at one time his plays enjoyed long runs.

The old story that Mr. F. Marion Crawford had received $250,000 for his novels down to 1893 I heard discussed at a literary gathering a few evenings ago. Several present scouted it, but others maintained that Mr. Crawford had probably received even a larger return from his books. "Why," exclaimed one of these, "the sale of Crawford's books is undoubtedly as great as those of any writer in this country; and if Mrs. Ward received $80,000, as I know she did for David Grieve, for one book only, mind you, it is probable that Mr. Crawford has received very much more than three times that amount for all the novels he has written." A second speaker called attention to the fact that if the author received twenty per cent on the sale of his stories, which are sold at one dollar each, and if the $250,000 story were true, just 1,250,000 copies of his books had been bought up to a year ago. But this calculation was spoiled by the announcement that Mr. Crawford always preferred to receive a lump sum for each of his novels rather than a royalty. As a matter of fact, there is no knowing for a certainty just how much any author receives for any particular book or books unless they themselves choose to tell, as they rarely do. There is no doubt, however, that both Mrs. Ward and Mr. Crawford have no reason to complain of the pecuniary rewards of literature.

There is a class of writers unknown to most of the readers of Robert Elsmere or of Saracinesca whose books bring to the authors very large returns. They appeal to that numerous class of people who read only for amusement, and who never think of calling their reading matter "literature." The extraordinary success of one of these was brought to my attention the other day. His real name is Linn Porter and his pen-name is Albert Ross. A few years ago he was a newspaper writer on the Boston Herald. But he undertook the composition of novels of a sensational character, and was so successful that he abandoned his newspaper work and gave himself wholly to authorship in the literary atmosphere of Cambridge. His stories are said to have good plots, though they would never be ranked even with Mr. E. P. Roe's works. However, Mr. Porter has accumulated a fortune, and with a portion of this he is building a finely equipped dormitory for the use of students at Harvard, from which he will add largely to his present store. It seems to me there is very grim irony in this.

One of the most successful books of the lighter sort during the past few months is Mr. E. F. Benson's Dodo, which has had a good sale both in England and in this country. Mr. Benson will soon make an effort to clinch his success by the publication of a second novel, which the Appletons are to bring out. The author has suffered with his first work from American piracy, but his new book will probably be protected thoroughly. As a matter of fact, the copyright law, though it has drawbacks enough, seems to be working very well. It has at least put a stop to the wholesale and shameless piracy of a few years ago.

"A Lady of Venice," the old-fashioned play presented here last week, has been severely criticised, and Mr. Richard Hovey of Boston, who adapted it to the current stage, has been severely and unjustly censured for his connection with it. It is apparently believed that Mr. Hovey discovered the play, which was written many years ago by an English clergyman named Traughton, and thought it worthy of being drawn from the oblivion where it belonged. But such was not the case. As a matter of fact, the work was placed in Mr. Hovey's hands and he was simply paid to straighten out the halting blank verse and to make a few other corrections. His revamping, however, was afterwards revamped by some of the actors, and in its present shape he can hardly be held responsible for the piece. Indeed, what with managers and actors and critics, the ways of the modern dramatists seem to be quite as hard in many respects as they were in the classic days.

Gen. Lew. Wallace has been spending a few days in town lately. I saw him just before his departure for Washington on the way to his home in Crawfordsville, Ind., and I was much struck by his fine, sturdy face and his military bearing. In spite of his success in literature, he is essentially a soldier. He naturally takes a great deal of pride in his literary work. For the past few months, he told me, he has been devoting all of his time to his new novel, quite different in character from Ben-Hur and The Prince of India. It will be a love story, with no historical background. So he will not be obliged to give to it years of research as he had to do with the others, and he hopes to complete it within a few months.

JOHN D. BARRY.

FICTION.

A Bundle of Life.

This new volume, by John Oliver Hobbes, in the Pseudonym Library is as brilliant as its predecessors and, if possible, more epigrammatic. In fact, it is a succession of verbal pyrotechnics from the first page to the last. Its plot is most unlikely and its action the reverse of natural, but the polished expression and the continual crackling of epigrams make it entertaining. "Reformation had meant," in Sir Sidney Warcop's case, "as in that of many, the substitution of many disagreeable virtues for a few atoning sins;" "the heart of Mrs. Portcullis was, as it were, a moral scent sachet, which she refilled with the fashionable perfume of each season, scattering the musk of the old year to make room for the myrrh of the new. This custom . . . is commonly called toleration;" Mr. Wiche, "abandoning himself to the intense pleasures of profound melancholy, became agreeably tired of existence" — these are specimens of the lively but not profound cynicism of the writer, which pleases in a small volume, but might well become wearisome in a developed novel. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 50c.

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter.

Magazine readers have become familiar with the name of Gertrude Smith, signed to stories of homely interest and genuine fidelity to nature. The present volume consists of eleven of these short tales, and is the first book she has sent out, though one may safely predict that it will not be the last. Like Miss Wilkins, Miss Smith often shows us common things in common lives in such a way as to reveal the humor or pathos where we might not have discovered it unaided. The restrained simplicity of "An Only Son" and "A Hope Deferred" accords well with the nature of these tragedies of disappointment. Other stories are equally good, though in a different way. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

A Superfluous Woman.

This novel, which is published anonymously, is written with earnestness, and is interesting both as a story and for its theories of life. The heroine, beautiful, young, and rich, was made for better things than the life of society dissipation to which she had been brought up. Afraid of being drawn into a loveless, mercenary marriage, she gives it up and takes refuge with a Scotch family in the Highlands, where she throws herself into all kinds of household and farm duties, seeking to find simplicity of life and to do serviceable work. Thus far there is nothing noteworthy in the book. The author has not yet gained the power to hold our attention from the outset, and the opening chapters have an incoherent, tentative quality; but here begins the love between the society woman and a simple Scotch farmer, and the chapters become strong, natural, and original in many respects. The character of Colin is effectively depicted, and his restrained devotion, to which he brings almost a religious fervor, is well contrasted with the passion of the young girl, who longs to give herself to the man she loves, but who cannot bring herself to accept his daily life. She leaves him to go back to London, and her later life is told in a few scenes, which one reads with interest, but which are not the strongest in the book. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

Two Offenders.

This is a title that tells nothing of the extreme pathos, the ineffable sadness, of the two stories which make up this little volume by "Ouida." No one who has read A Dog of Flanders or some touching episodes of child life by this writer will need to be reminded of her profound sympathy for those who suffer from injustice and her tenderness to dumb creatures. The two brief tales are "An Ingrate" and "An Assassin." The ingrate is a broken-down French artist who, having lost his right hand in the siege of Paris, is left starving in a garret with his grandchild and his dog. An officious magnate insists upon establishing him at a charitable institute, on the plea that in that way alone the child can be rescued. The bondage is heart-breaking to the proud artist, and what follows is told in words vibrant with pity and indignation. The story of Abbondio, the terribly wronged and outraged Italian peasant, is of a different kind — of a man baffled and beaten at every turn, whom the fates seemed to pursue, and for whom life held nothing. It is somber, intense, and painful alike in its tragic elements and its close. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle.

Rosa Mackenzie Kettle has written an interesting story of life on the Scottish border. A gentle English girl with a broken heart and an invalid father, a merry Irish cousin with the faculty of making people happy, and two Scotchmen living just across the line are the chief characters. The old border spirit of hostility, a family feud resulting in a broken engagement, some misunderstandings, much good sense from the pretty Irish cousin, and a happy ending to all make up the story. It is a pity that the author has put so many stilted remarks in the mouths of her characters. They would never have made them themselves. G. P. Putnam's Sons have imported the American supply of the book, which is published in London by T. Fisher Unwin.

Her Provincial Cousin.

Very slight and a little hackneyed is the plot of this story by Edith Elmer Wood, which relates to the loves of a girl from Paris and her cousin, a simple-hearted but beautiful Breton youth. It begins, continues, and ends after a fashion to which we have all grown accustomed. What gives the book point and value is its picturesque setting in the primitive coast country of Brittany and its pictures of peasant life and peasant character. Brittany is the land of legend, and fairies, imps, bogies, and other fabulous folk are still reverenced and believed in after a fashion difficult of understanding by more sophisticated nations. — The Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

Richard Escott.

This vigorous and strongly planned novel, by Edward M. Cooper, relates to the fortunes of the worthless son of a worthy peer and privy-councilor; his career from first to last was a terror and disgrace to his family. The tale is strictly kept on the realistic platform, and as a moral lesson has its value, since nothing could be a stronger determent from immorality than the sequence and finale of such a career. The lesson has the bitterness and astringency of quinine; its painfulness is quite unrelieved, since Richard Escott himself is, consciously or unconsciously, miserable at his best; and even his suicide does not make any one else very happy, though the reader draws a sigh of relief at having that safely over. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Two.

This is a story of English schoolboy life, and it gives the career of Cyril Verner and Graeme Kenriston from the days of their pupilage under the rector, Cyril's father, till the period when they are about to enter Cambridge. Utterly unlike though they are, they are inseparable friends, loyal and unfailing up to the fatal occurrence with which the story ends. Cyril has weaknesses of character that bring about his ruin. The faults of Graeme are very obvious and nearly bring him into serious difficulties, but his true manliness and truthfulness assert themselves ultimately. The strangest element in the development of events is introduced at the outset in the vagabond, Harry Burton, who, by a remarkable ordering of his life, becomes the intimate of the aristocratic Graeme, is educated at the same school, and enabled to make a man of himself in spite of the criminal associations of his youth. Boys who read the book will be apt to think, and rightly, that the author, Barry Pain, was too hard on poor Cyril, and that there was no need of the awful tragedy. With this exception they will like the story, which tells in such a brilliant way so much about the lives of English boys in good private and public schools, like those at Westlands and Desford. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.25.

The Close of St. Christopher's.

Mrs. Emma Marshall has here written a good, wholesome story for girls from fifteen to twenty. The scene is laid in a "cathedral close," where the heroine, Penelope, and her aged grandfather lived a life of comparative solitude. Their serenity was disturbed by the arrival of a new family in the quiet, old-fashioned town. Modern England as represented by "University Extension," and all the later nineteenth century "isms," was introduced by these newcomers. How Penelope began by disliking the strangers and gradually learned to make them her warmest friends is told by the writer with simplicity and skill. The book is especially written for Sunday-school use. It preaches a sensible little sermon. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

Marion Harland is not at her best in the three stories which compose the volume entitled Mr. Wayt's Wife's Sister. The longest, which gives the book its title, relates to the trials of a family whose head, a clergyman, is addicted to eating opium privately. He is detected and shoved on from parish to parish in consequence, always with a letter of commendation wrung from the compunctions of the flock which he is quitting to the flock which next receives him. Of the other tales, "A Social Success" is a story of New York fashionable life, told rather from the novelist's standpoint than that of real experience, we should suppose; and of the third, "The Articles of Separation," it may be said that if many members of "Sorosis" are as unutterably ill-bred and distasteful as the one described it cannot be wondered at that any man of sense should object to having his wife a member of such an organization. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

There is nothing novel either in plot or treatment in The New Minister, a tale of parish life by Kenneth Paul. The parish in question is a mill town not far from New York; the young minister, who goes there direct from the theological seminary, is named Charles Clayton. There are the usual progressive and nonprogressive deacons and a general atmosphere of theological squabble and didactic fencing, with which the school of polemical novelists has made us of late tolerably familiar. Some variety is given by the introduction of a double love affair and a villain of the melodramatic order, who does his best to entangle the pure young clergyman in a web of intrigue; but, as he subsequently repents and becomes a conspicuous member of his adversary's congregation, all ends as it should — in edification. — A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.00.

Can Such Things Be? by Ambrose Bierce, is a veritable chamber of horrors, wherein murders both grotesque and horrible, ghosts, hypnotizers, and haunted houses play their weird parts and add to the interest of the collection for such as enjoy these aspects of the supernatural. It is a relief to answer the title question in the negative, but one wonders at the incongruity of admitting such a book to the Sunshine series, which should try to live up to its name. — Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Wayside Music.

An excellent anthology of American sonnets brought its editor, Mr. Charles H. Crandall, into favorable notice as a man of fine taste and literary discernment and a good judge of the merits of the representative poems he had selected. He has now put forth a choicely made little volume of his own lyrics, songs, and sonnets. In the sonnet he is more successful than in other forms of verse, and it is evidently his favorite mode of expression. His list numbers sixteen, from which the two best are easily selected — that to Adelaide Neilson, and the closing one, "Waiting." In general, his verse is more commendable for the sentiment than the rhythm; the poetic and tender thought occasionally just fails of adequate expression. "A Picture" is a sweet tribute to his mother. "Fame" has a pretty climax, and a dainty piece of verse is "The Little Missionary," for which Rosina Emmet has made a quaint frontispiece. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

More Than Kin.

"All the world loves a lover" who can put into fitting and significant words the thoughts and fancies that are universal, and can express, with no undue revealment of love's inner life, something of the romance and chivalry that may brighten common firesides. No one who is at all familiar with the style of Mr. James Vila Blake could doubt, even before reading this book, its fitness for just this subject matter. Though often quaint and unusual, it seems to us always natural and unaffected, and never commonplace. The wisdom of these brief essays, pointed with fable and epigram, is not unlike that which we have had from him before, but the chapters have a certain unity, and are all informed with the spirit of "kindness," to use the author's own expressive word. They are all connected, too, in some delicate, unobtrusive fashion with the "dear and noble other one," by whom they seem to have been inspired and to whom they are dedicated. These are the thoughts of a poet unrestrained by rhythm or meter — not a poet who is held in the enchantment that "never was on sea or land," but one who has insight into the most real realities, and has learned to know the love which is none the less ideal for being "daily bread." — C. H. Kerr & Co. $1.00.

Wah-kee-nah and Her People.

The portrait of a beautiful Indian girl forms the frontispiece of this volume on the aborigines of North America, their customs, traditions, and legends. The author, Gen. James C. Strong, "began to live among the Indians of the Pacific coast in 1850, learned one of their languages, and for six years traveled with and among them." This fact and his interest in the subject afforded him peculiar advantages in the preparation of this work. While it has much historical matter already familiar to us, there is a great deal that is new or freshly given concerning the customs of some of the Northwestern tribes among whom the author sojourned. If he had given more space to the ceremonies, characteristics, and habits of the Dakotas, Chinooks, and others whom he knew, the value and attractiveness of his book would have been enhanced. As it is, he has, in addition, a summary of Indian history from one end of the continent to the other. His sympathy with the aborigines and his sense of the injustice done them even from the landing of Columbus are constantly apparent. In his opinion the natives of America were quiet and peaceable, and would have remained so and transmitted gentle traits to their descendants if the treatment they received from the white men had not made them savages. General Strong's book is, indeed, a plea for the Indians, and he closes with some suggestions on the proper course for the United States government to pursue towards them. Wah-kee-nah, whose name gives the title, the lovely, faithful friend who saved his life, shows in the story he tells of her what an Indian girl may become. — G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The Humor of Holland.

The most readable part of this new volume in the so-called International Humor series is the introduction by A. Werner on the nature of Dutch humor and a few of the authors of the Netherlands who can be called humorists. The Netherlander is said to have "a certain canniness and practical shrewdness," in common with the Scotchman; he "likes his fun pretty obvious and not too concentrated, and the main characteristic of the said fun is its breadth . . . long-windedness, combined with infinite multiplicity of detail — a gossipy, good-humored, complacent triviality, which is the essence of boredom." After this introduction, one is prepared for the flatness of nearly every page of the long extracts; even those from "Multatuli" fail to impress an American; certainly he was a very Dutch Heine. The prevailing "Dutch school" of writers of American history have wisely omitted to derive American humor from such feeble and inane attempts at wit as fill this volume. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

The Ascent of Faith.

This is a thoughtful and persuasive book, leading the reader with a confident grasp to grounds of certainty in religion. The author, Rev. A. J. Harrison, an English vicar and missioner on Christian evidences of the Church of England Parochial Mission Society, believes that certainty is as accessible in religion as in science. Only trained minds among those who reject or question the Christian faith are capable of following his greatly condensed argument, but holders of that faith who are laboring to prevent departures from it, or to bring doubters to the firm ground whereon they stand, will find it stimulating, confirming, and suggestive. Mr. Harrison takes little for granted. Some things all men believe, he says. This is his simple premiss. Starting with and from this he goes on to show what by their own confession they then ought to believe; presents next the new obligations and necessities of thought and act springing therefrom; and so leads on and out at last, as he thinks, upon the broad and unvexed highlands of the catholic faith. Not every one can or will follow him; but he does hew a straight, plain path. It is a brave, strong, bracing book; and where it finds sympathy, and perhaps in some cases where at first it does not, must do good. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.75.

Sylvie and Bruno Concluded shows how low it is possible for Lewis Carroll to sink in prose and poetry. The first part of the work was redeemed by considerable cleverness here and there, but this volume is the queerest conglomeration of fairy tale, love story, and tedious preachment that the hapless reviewer has yet met. It is not a book for children, nor a book for young folks, nor for any other age. Dreary twaddle is, perhaps, the fittest characterization one can give it, and it is a service to lovers of Alice in Wonderland to warn them off from this fatuous production. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

The illustrated edition of holy George Herbert's Temple, in blue binding and full gilt, deserves high praise for the number, excellence, and appropriateness of the illustrations. They "are almost all taken from engravings produced in the century before George Herbert's time, that is to say, from designs which he had seen or might have seen." Albert Dürer, Holbein, Martin Schongauer, Lucas van Leyden, Marcantonio, and George Whitney are the artists whose names occur most often. The mating of poem and picture is usually very felicitous, and even the typography of the book suits admirably with the style of the engravings. — Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

One would suppose that such scholars as Profs. Howard Osgood and W. H. Green and Rev. Dr. T. W. Chambers would object to having any of their essays on Biblical subjects edited by a person like Rev. L. W. Munhall. His "Introductory" to the volume entitled Anti-Higher Criticism; "or, Testimony to the Infallibility of the Bible," says that "many of the critics in this country are but theological scavengers," and that the analysis of the Pentateuch into several documents "is devoid of every principle of common sense." The gentlemen just named and the eleven other contributors to the volume are strangely blind if they do not see that an editor capable of such utterances does more harm to the cause they hold dear than any number of so-called "destructionist" critics can do. — Hunt & Eaton. $1.50.

The ability to compose jingling verses does not constitute a poet, but too often we see poetry written by young authors who have not even this faculty. M. A. B. Evans, the author of In Various Moods, has, however, a light touch and a sense of humor. "Her Creed" and "A Modern Rachel" are clever little vers de société, quite worthy of a corner in our best magazines. A "Salad" is particularly witty and spicy, while the poem called "Epithalamium" contains some much-needed good advice on the subject of marriage. All the verses are graceful and genuine. — G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Mr. James Dykes Campbell has reproduced in a fine volume his admirable biographical sketch of Samuel Taylor Coleridge prefixed to his one-volume edition of Coleridge's poems. This "plain and, as far as possible, accurate narrative of the events of his life" has been revised and expanded, and it will doubtless be the standard authority until the poet's grandson, Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge, gives to the world his full biography. To Mr. Campbell it seems that "Coleridge's failings are too obvious to require either all the insistence or all the moralizing which have been lavished on them, and that his fall is less wonderful than his recovery. His will was congenitally weak and his habits weakened it still farther; but his conscience, which was never allowed to sleep, tortured him, and after many days its workings stimulated the paralyzed will and he was saved." The speaking portrait here given is reproduced directly from the picture by Peter Vandyke, now in the National Portrait Gallery.— Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

"The low man" who "seeks a little thing to do, sees it and does it," never seems more admirable to the critic of modern literature than when he finds himself facing an ambitious book of poems by a new writer. To write adequately of "The Lotus of the Nile" and of the land of the Sphinx requires genius. The writer of the trivial verses in Lotus Life has something less worthy than talent. We use the word "trivial" with reference to the artistic merit of these verses. The writer's aims are of the highest. But a trip up the Nile, an intense enthusiasm for Egypt, and a fondness for metaphysics do not make a poet. Only the friends of L. Cleveland will enjoy her verses, and her friends would enjoy them more if she had been content with the simplicity which we find in "A Bubble" and avoided the mystical philosophy which abounds in the poem called "4440 B. C."— G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The new Cambridge edition of Longfellow's Complete Poetical Works is a handsome octavo of nearly seven hundred pages, based on the definitive Riverside edition in six volumes. The whole text is here reproduced, with numerous notes at the end in condensed form. There is an excellent biographical sketch by Mr. Scudder; a chronological list of all the poems; and an index of titles and one of first lines. "Juvenile Poems" and "unacknowledged and uncollected translations" are also given in the appendix. Alike for its thorough editing, its chronological arrangement, and the beautiful typography of its double-columned pages, this deserves to be the favorite one-volume edition of the most popular of American poets. A portrait faces the title-page, on which is a view of the Longfellow house at Cambridge. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

A book like Our Boys, by William Stoddart, ought to come with a breath of inspiration to such boys as are possessed of fair mechanical ability, some ingenuity and energy, and much patient perseverance. It will tell them how to make kites, aquariums, banjos, telegraphs, electric batteries, and photographic cameras, besides affording them numerous hints about swimming, riding, and various outdoor sports. Only actual trial, of course, can effectively demonstrate the practical value of all the directions here given. A few stories are scattered among the more instructive articles, forming a book that any boy will be glad to own, even if he never finds time to try half the experiments. — Hunt & Eaton. $1.00.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti's House of Life, consisting of one hundred and three sonnets and eleven lyrics, has been issued in an artistic form by Copeland & Day of Boston. The poems used in the volume of 1870 "are reproduced as they then appeared, not as they have appeared since," one of the sonnets having been withdrawn and others revised. "The makers of this edition revert by choice to the poet's original plan of work." The volume is finely printed on Japanese paper, with three ornamental borders and one hundred and fourteen initial letters designed by B. G. Goodhue. — $2.50.

Mr. Alfred Ayres' useful manual, The Orthoëpist, appears this year in a new and revised edition; its vocabulary now includes about 4,500 words, including a number of foreign names often mispronounced. Mr. Ayres errs, we notice, in giving the dicta of his authorities, sometimes, without qualification, as when he says that the Century Dictionary accents the second syllable of "vertigo;" it does so, but it adds "usually vértigo."— D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

The Introduction to Elementary Practical Biology, by Prof. Charles W. Dodge of the University of Rochester, is intended as a guide to actual work in the laboratory by students of high schools and colleges. Agassiz' saying, "Study nature not books," has dictated the contents of the volume, which is intended as a help to the knife and the microscope, not as a substitute for them. — Harper & Brothers. $1.80.

The Scribners have issued in pleasing style a cheaper edition of Dr. Benjamin Estes Martin's literary itinerary, In the Footprints of Charles Lamb, retaining some of the more important illustrations. — $1.50.

PERIODICALS.

In the Atlantic for March Mrs. Deland brings her two characters, "Philip and His Wife," apparently to an open rupture. Charles Egbert Craddock's serial, "His Vanished Star," is still a long while in vanishing. Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin has a pleasing story on a homely topic, "The Fore-Room Rug," and Walter Mitchell contributes the second part of his story, "Two Strings to Her Bow." Edith Brower answers the question, "Is the Musical Idea Masculine?" in a way to strike the ordinary woman suffragist dumb with amazement. It will be easier to denounce her as a traitor to the supposed "sacred cause" of women than to answer her arguments. There is good variety in the other solid articles of the number — Sir Edward Strachey's "Talk at a Country-House," on Assyrian Arrowheads and Jewish Books; "On the Upper St. John's," a Florida paper, by Bradford Torrey; "A Greek Prime Minister," a strong and appreciative sketch by Prof. J. W. Jenks of Cornell; "The Sapphic Secret," by Maurice Thompson; and "The Reform of Secondary Education in the United States," by Prof. Nicholas M. Butler. There is the usual variety of literary criticism in the several departments.

Dr. T. Mitchell Prudden has an article on "Tuberculosis and Its Prevention," in the March Harper's, which asserts that this disease, "in mild or severe form, affects at least one half of the whole human race." The manufacture of steel is described and amply illustrated in an article entitled "A Steel Tool," edited by Mr. R. R. Bowker. In his article on "The Russian and His Jew," Mr. Poultney Bigelow discusses the case from the Russian standpoint. The number contains five short stories: "The Buckley Lady," a love story of colonial New England, by Miss Mary E. Wilkins; "A Partie Carrée," a history of a yachting cruise in the Mediterranean, by W. E. Norris; "An Undivined Tragedy," a romantic tale of English country life, by Laurence Alma Tadema, daughter of the well-known painter; "At a Private View," a sketch of New York life, by Brander Matthews; and "Cache-Cache," a story of the French Revolution, by William McLennan. In an article on "The New England Negro," Mrs. Jane De Forest Shelton has collected some curious information regarding the Connecticut slaves and that unique custom — the annual election and inauguration of a "negro governor" of the State. Mr. William Hamilton Gibson contributes a paper on "The Welcomes of the Flowers," in other words, the cross fertilization of flowers.

The complete novel in the March number of Lippincott's is "A Desert Claim," by Mary E. Stickney. It is a charming tale of ranch life in Northern Colorado. Mr. Gilbert Parker's serial, "The Trespasser," reaches its ninth chapter. "The Inmate of the Dungeon," by W. C. Morrow, is a story of uncommon power. Joel Chandler Harris, in "The Late Mr. Watkins of Georgia; His Relation to Oriental Folk-Lore," compares a curious legend of his own State with one of India. In "A Prophet of the New Womanhood," Annie Nathan Meyer considers Henrik Ibsen from an unfamiliar point of view. Emma Henry Ferguson tells "More About Captain Reid," the Confederate blockade-runner. John Gilmer Speed describes "The Training of the Saddle-Horse." Dr. Charles C. Abbott writes of "Bees and Buckwheat," and Charles McIlvaine of "The Evolution of Public Roads." In "Talks with the Trade," the subject of "Literary Mendicancy" is presented. The poetry of the number is by Anna Robeson Brown and John James Meehan.

Poet-Lore for February gives a second installment of George Eliot's unpublished letters; an illogical paper, by Mr. John Burroughs, on "Walt Whitman and His Art;" the first part of an introduction to "Much Ado About Nothing," by C. A. Wurtzburg; "Poetic Characteristics of Matthew Arnold," by Clara G. Barnard; half a dozen pages more of Maeterlinck's "Seven Princesses;" a study of Whittier's "Snowbound;" and other minor matters in the field Poet-Lore cultivates.

Macmillan's for February opens with an admirable and lucid paper on "Lords and Commons." The very clear-headed writer, who does not give his name, is evidently conservative, with undisguised approval of the hereditary dignity, political training, and superior education supposed to belong to the representatives of the old nobility in the House of Peers. Yet, he is able to fairly estimate the relative positions of the two great bodies, showing clearly what are the advantages and also the difficulties and perils of the present form of British government. He considers the Peers wiser in their forecast, notably as proved in the repeal of the corn laws and the extension of the franchise. Mr. Blackmore furnishes two chapters of his novel, and an anonymous writer has a bright sketch, "An Oxford Idyl," in which an American girl is made to act a conspicuous part. Vernon Lee has a charming, off-hand article on "Modern Traveling." T. S. Kebbel writes enthusiastically of that shy "citizen of the world," the partridge. Other articles are on St. Francis of Assisi, the Greek and Latin inscriptions, and an East Indian "Moonshee."

The February issue of the Portfolio is an excellent monograph on "Malta and the Knights Hospitallers," by the Rev. W. K. R. Bedford, M.A. It covers the history as well as the present condition of this remarkable island, and is finely illustrated with four plates and a large number of other pictures of good size.

Dr. C. J. Dillon in the February Contemporary Review briefly expounds Prof. G. Bickell's views of the text of Koheleth, and then gives a full translation of much interest, in an article entitled "Ecclesiastes and Buddhism;" a lively and quietly satirical article on "The Young Men" in literature, by "A Fogey," is, according to internal evidence, to be ascribed to Mr. Lang; "The Eight-Hour Day and Foreign Competition" is Mr. John Rae's subject; Madame Belloc writes of "Dorothea Casaubon and George Eliot" from her intimate personal acquaintance with the latter; Rev. Brooke Herford favors "Religious Teaching in the Board Schools," but of an unsectarian kind. There are other papers of interest by Mr. Lilly, Mr. Pater, Mrs. Crackanthorpe, and others.

Mr. Herbert Spencer's tribute to "The Late Professor Tyndall" in the February Fortnightly is, inevitably, inferior to Professor Huxley's; but "Oxford Revisited," by Professor Goldwin Smith, and "Fabian Economics," by Mr. Mallock, are two brilliant papers. Mr. Walter Armstrong writes of "The Life and Works of Rembrandt" apropos of M. Michel's work; and G. Bernard Shaw gives a bright treatment of what he calls "The Religion of the Piano-forte."

The Nineteenth Century for February numbers among its more readable articles Mrs. Frederic Harrison's discussion in dialogue form of "Mothers and Daughters;" Prof. Max Müller's comparison of "Mohammedanism and Christianity;" seven reviews of "Noticeable Books" by as many critics of distinction; "Bores," a lively description of a dull subject, by Sir Herbert Maxwell; an account of "New Zealand under Female Franchise," by R. H. Bakewell; and two political articles, on "The Position of the Liberal Party," by the Rev. J. G. Rogers, and "The Political Future of Labor," by T. R. Threlfall.

The Yale Review for February seems to us the strongest number yet issued. It contains, as its longest article, a discussion of "The Ecclesiastical Treatment of Usury," by Mr. Henry C. Lea, whose name is sufficient witness to the great value of his contribution. "The Law and the Policy for Hawaii" are declared by Prof. T. S. Woolsey to be "Hands Off!" Dr. E. R. L. Gould presents the situation of "European Bureaus of Labor Statistics;" Mr. Edward Porritt, that of "English Labor in and out of Parliament;" and Prof. G. P. Fisher writes of "Jefferson and the Social Compact Theory."

In the Popular Science Monthly for March the principal articles are Mr. Appleton Morgan's vigorous paper entitled "Abolish all Prohibitive Liquor Laws;" Prof. J. Mark Baldwin's on "The Origin of Right-handedness;" a reprint of Professor Huxley's tribute to Tyndall; "The European Law of Torture," by A. W. Barber; "Customs and Superstitions of the Mayas," by Mrs. A. D. Le Plongeon; and "The Ice Age and Its Work, I," by A. R. Wallace. The subject of the usual sketch and portrait is Jean Martin Charcot.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Madame Eliza Wille, who was a native of Hamburg and the author of several novels and poems, has just died at Zurich, at the age of eighty-four. She had taken an active part in the movement of "Jung Deutschland," and was married to a journalist, Dr. François Wille, whose scar-covered face is described by Heine in Caput XXIII of his poem "Deutschland."

— The Marquis of Dufferin is going to furnish a memoir of his mother, Helen, Lady Dufferin (whose second husband was the Earl of Gifford), to the volume of her Poems and Verses which he is editing and Mr. Murray is to publish. Two portraits will be given.

— Mrs. Brookfield, Thackeray's old correspondent, and the wife of Rev. Mr. Brookfield, the novelist's bosom friend, is engaged in transcribing her reminiscences of Tennyson. Mrs. Brookfield is described as a beautiful old lady with charming manners. She is a cousin of the Hallam who lives in Tennyson's In Memoriam, and she is the mother of the member of Parliament for Rye, and of the clever actor, Charles Brookfield.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will soon bring out Cartier to Frontenac, by Justin Winsor; A Poet's Portfolio, by W. W. Story; and In Exile, and Other Stories, by Mary Hallock Foote.

— Mr. Frederick Douglass has written an introduction for a translation of the life of Toussaint L'Ouverture by the late M. Victor Schœlcher. The translation will be by Mr. Theodore Stanton.

— The Swiss historian, Georg von Wyss, died in Zurich, of which city he was a native, on December 17, in his seventy-seventh year. He held the chair of history in the university for several years, and had been president of the Swiss Geschichtsforschende Gesellschaft since the year 1854,

— It is stated that more than 200,000 copies have been sold of Hector Malot's Sans Famille, which has been translated into all the languages of Europe, and has obtained the flattering distinction of becoming a school class-book in England as well as France. M. Malot's recently published story En Famille was written in compliance with repeated requests for a sequel to Sans Famille. The principal character in the last named fiction was a boy, whereas the new volume is the story of a young girl, whose courage overcomes all the difficulties she encounters.

— Mr. Murray intends to follow up A Plea for Liberty with another series of essays, also edited by Mr. T. Mackay, and entitled A Policy of Free Exchange.

— The Deutsche Verlagsanstalt announces a new illustrated edition of the German translation of Gen. Lew. Wallace's popular religio-historical novel, Ben-Hur, which has already had a sale of more than 40,000 copies without illustrations. The artist employed to illustrate the story is A. C. Baworowski, and the work will be issued in twenty parts at fifty pfennige.

— The papers presented at the International Congress of Charities, Correction, and Philanthropy, held at Chicago, June 12–18, 1893, are now in preparation for publication at the Johns Hopkins Press.

— Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. will publish some time in March the first number of a quarterly magazine of bibliography. It will consist of a series of papers by writers of authority on various points of book-lore. A novel departure has been taken in fixing beforehand that the magazine is only to last for three years, ending, no matter what its success, with the appearance of the twelfth number in December, 1896.

— Professor Knight of St. Andrews is editing for publication a volume of lectures on English Literature under the Georges, by the late Professor Minto. Messrs. Blackwood will be the publishers.

— About 5,000 editions of The Imitation of Christ have appeared, but one now published by Mr. Fisher Unwin is a decided novelty. It is a facsimile reproduction of the first printed edition issued from the press of Günther Zainer at Augsburg about 1471 or 1472. As this is also one of the very earliest books printed, the facsimile has a double interest. It is a quarto in coarse, smudgy black letters, with scarlet capitals. Canon W. J. Knox Little supplies an introduction on the life of Thomas à Kempis and the religion of the book, which he vindicates from the charge of selfishness.

— In their Dilettante series, Messrs. Swau Sonnenschein & Co. will publish immediately a volume on the life and writings of Oliver Wendell Holmes, by Mr. Walter Jerrold. The book treats of the many-sided Autocrat under no fewer than five aspects. It must be remembered that Dr. Holmes has become famous as something more than poet and essayist. It is now considerably over half a century since he carried off three out of four medals offered at Boston for essays on medical subjects, so that, although the fame of the man of letters has overshadowed the fame of the man of science, the latter cannot properly be ignored in treating of Holmes' work, more especially as we find his scientific training and knowledge influencing his writing on well-nigh every page. Mr. Jerrold treats his subject "as Man" (a biographical sketch), "as Poet," "as Novelist," "as Autocrat," and "as Man of Science." — Publishers' Circular.

— If the English book trade is at present depressed, the French appears to be in a still worse condition. According to the Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, many of the publishers and booksellers of France are nearly idle, nor does there seem to be much prospect of an immediate improvement in business. Frenchmen are talking of the book crisis as last summer Englishmen talked of the coal crisis, and gloomy predictions are plentiful. Singularly enough, the difficulties are said to be mainly attributable to the collapse of fiction. For some years novels have been increasing at an enormous rate, but the demand seems to have fallen off suddenly, showing that in France readers are every whit as capricious as they are elsewhere. It is affirmed there are not half a dozen French novelists who could command £400 for a novel. This is a fall indeed. M. Zola or M. Daudet would of course receive a very much larger sum, but it would seem that these two fortunate writers practically divide the novel-reading public between them. It may be true that M. Zola still makes his £12,000 a year, and we hope M. Daudet will repeat the feat of making £40,000 by a single work, but the earnings of the average writer of fiction must be sinking with appalling quickness.—Publishers' Circular.

—Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish this day Cartier to Frontenac, a study of geographical discovery in the interior of North America in its historical relations, 1534–1700; William Lloyd Garrison, 1805–1879, the story of his life told by his children, illustrated with over forty portraits, views, etc., four volumes—till recently published by the Century Company and now reduced in price; A Poet's Portfolio: Later Readings, by William Wetmore Story; In Exile, and Other Stories, by Mary Hallock Foote; John Larkin Lincoln, 1817–1891, including a memorial address by Prof. George P. Fisher, extracts from Prof. Lincoln's diary and letters, and twenty-one papers chosen from the writings of Professor Lincoln; The Blithedale Romance, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, with an introduction by George Parsons Lathrop, Salem edition; and The Sir Roger de Coverley Papers in the Riverside Literature series.

—The Morse Lectures for 1894 are being delivered by the Rev. Dr. William Elliot Griffis, in the Adams Chapel of Union Theological Seminary. Dr. Griffis has chosen as his subject "The Religions of Japan." The lecturer was formerly professor in the Imperial University of Japan.

—The death is announced of Madame Blaze de Bury, the widow of M. A. H. Blaze, herself a contributor to the Revue de Paris and the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the writer of a volume of travels in Germany and Austria during the Revolutionary troubles of 1848–49. Mme. Blaze de Bury also wrote for the English magazines and reviews, and was well known to Americans abroad.

—Mrs. Tyndall, who is preparing a biography of the late Professor Tyndall, would be greatly obliged if correspondents possessing letters of his would kindly lend them to her. Any letters thus lent should be sent to her at Hind Head House, Haslemere.

—The Lucy family, like other landowning families, has been hit hard by agricultural depression, and the famous Charlecote estate near Stratford-on-Avon, where the youthful Shakespeare did—or did not—go deer stealing, is in the market. The Spectator pours out a Jeremiad over such a terrible shattering of sentimental associations as would be the removal of the descendants of Sir Thomas Lucy—by the way, they are very indirect descendants—from their ancestral home. Other landowners who are putting their estates on the market will probably envy the Lucys, who have sentiment as well as soil to dispose of. It was a modern Lady Lucy who made the remark, "It was an ancestor of my husband who brought out the famous Shakespeare."—Literary World, London.

—Mme. Sarah Grand's forthcoming book is to be entitled Our Manifold Lives. It is not a novel, but a collection of short stories.

—Mr. Blackmore's new story, Perlycross, will be published in May by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. An American edition will be issued simultaneously by Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

—The publication of Mrs. Humphry Ward's new book, Marcella, has been postponed until the last week in March or the first week in April.

—Charles Scribner's Sons have in press the second volume of the Pasquier Memoirs, (1812–1814) and Basal Concepts of Philosophy, by Prof. Alexander T. Ormond of Princeton.

—A new volume of short stories by Thomas Hardy was issued by Harper & Brothers, February 16. The tales are eighteen in number, and grouped under the title Life's Little Ironies. Mr. Brander Matthews has collected his Studies of the Stage into a volume, which has been published in the Harper's American Essayists series. Harper & Brothers have nearly ready for publication Our English Cousins, by Richard Harding Davis.

—A new novel by Dr. Georg Ebers, entitled Cleopatra, is in the press of D. Appleton & Co., the publishers of Dr. Ebers' works in this country, who will soon publish Mrs. Alexander's new novel, called A Ward in Chancery.

—Brave Little Holland and What She Taught Us is the title of a little book by William Elliot Griffis setting forth the concise history of the Dutch nation as read by an American, and showing how powerfully the United States, in colonial, revolutionary and constitution-making days, were influenced by the republic beyond the sea.

—Henry Holt & Co. have just published the second volume of Taine's Modern Régime. This is M. Taine's last work, and completes the treatise on "The Origins of Contemporary France" covered by his The Ancient Régime, The French Revolution, and The Modern Régime.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons announce that they are now printing the seventh thousand of the authorized American edition of Miss Harraden's clever story, Ships That Pass in the Night. Of the English edition, over 17,000 copies have been sold. To meet the popular demand for the book, Messrs. Putnam propose to issue immediately a railroad edition in paper covers.

—M. Maxime Du Camp, a member of the French Academy, died in Paris, February 9. He was born in Paris on February 2, 1822, and on leaving college traveled in the East for eighteen months. In 1849 he received a government mission to travel in Egypt, Nubia, Palestine, and Asia Minor, and made an immense collection of sketches and photographs, which he embodied in his history of his explorations. This was the first time that photography was applied to the illustration of books. After the suppression of La Revue de Paris, which he had helped to found, he became a frequent contributor to the Revue des Deux Mondes, and in 1867 he began the publication of a series of studies on public government, the result of many years' investigation. M. Du Camp devoted himself more and more to the study of contemporary history, and published Souvenirs de l'Année, 1848, Les Ancêtres de la Commune, L'Attentat Fieschi, and Les Convulsions de Paris, topics which he could treat with authority owing to his control of secret official reports and documents. He was elected a member of the French Academy in 1880. The list of his published writings is very long, and includes Souvenirs Littéraires, Théophile Gautier, and a number of volumes on artistic subjects.

—"A tall, sea-bronzed man, wearing a slouch hat, often tied on with a handkerchief, and wrapped in a big cloak, walking with shuffling gait, hobnobbing with the beachmen, among whom he had his favorites, recipients of his bounty in boats and gear—everybody knew old Fitz by sight, and many called him 'dotty.'" This portrait of Edward Fitzgerald, the author of the immortal paraphrase of the Rubaiyát of Omar Khayyám, Mr. Edward Clodd, who gathered it from the sailorfolk of Woodbridge, Lowestoft, and Aldeburgh, has inserted in an interesting sketch of the poet in the English Illustrated Magazine for February.

—Mrs. W. W. Story, wife of the American sculptor, died recently in Rome. Mrs. Story was born in Boston about 1822. Her maiden name was Emelyn Eldridge. She married Mr. Story in 1843, and in 1850 they went to Rome, where they have since lived. Mr. Story attained celebrity early in life, and their house was the meeting place for many illustrious men in art and letters. Among their intimate friends were Thackeray, the Brownings, Motley, Hawthorne, and Landor. In Hawthorne's The Marble Faun both Mr. Story and Mrs. Story figure, and their entertainments are mentioned in many collections of contemporaneous letters. On October 31st last they celebrated their golden wedding, and upon that occasion, the last at which Mrs. Story was able to assist, many celebrities were present. Three children of Mrs. Story survive her—Waldo Story, a well-known sculptor of Rome; Julian Story, an artist; and Mrs. Peruzzi, of Rome.—N. Y. Sun.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR MARCH.

Abolish all Prohibitive Liquor Laws. By APPLETON MORGAN.

A severe arraignment of Prohibition. Declares prohibitory laws to be ineffectual and inexpedient, and as standing in the way of real remedies for intemperance.

Professor Tyndall. By THOMAS H. HUXLEY.

The scientist as a man and a friend. Recollections of a long intimacy.

The Origin of Right-handedness. By Prof. J. MARK BALDWIN.

Are we born right-handed, or are we made so? This article contains the results of experiments upon the author's infant daughter, relating to the spontaneous use of the hands.

OTHER ARTICLES ON

INDUSTRIES OF ANIMALS (Illustrated); FOSSIL MAN (Illustrated); THE EUROPEAN LAW OF TORTURE. CUSTOMS AND SUPERSTITIONS OF THE MAYAS (Illustrated); BIOLOGY AND ETHICS; THE ACTION OF MASSAGE UPON THE MUSCLES; THE ICE AGE AND ITS WORK. I.; THE FOUNDER OF THE FIRST SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL; SKETCH OF JEAN MARTIN CHARCOT (with Portrait).

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.,

HAVE RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

IDYLS AND LYRICS OF THE OHIO VALLEY.

By JOHN JAMES PIATT. New Edition. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"Mr. Piatt's style is far from ornate. It is not even elegant. It is sometimes rough. Nevertheless it wins the reader by reason of the admirable simplicity of its diction and the directness of its methods. It is finely suited as to the homely, honest thought which it utters."—New York Times.

"It is an interesting volume, and contains some of the best work of a poet who has gained just distinction as a lyrist." —The Independent.

LITTLE NEW WORLD IDYLS.

By JOHN JAMES PIATT, author of "Western Windows," etc. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"It is a pleasure to commend work so good as his. Mr. Piatt does not essay lofty themes as a rule, but he seldom fails to touch the heart and the imagination, which is not the least satisfactory test of poetic value."—Boston Courier.

"It contains many poems which the author's admirers will remember and will meet again with pleasure. No higher praise can be written than to say that many of them are of the kind that no one would care to see blotted out."—New York Times.

AN ENCHANTED CASTLE AND OTHER POEMS:

Pictures, Portraits, and People in Ireland.

By SARAH PIATT. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

"They deal with present-day scenes and events, and with old legends and romantic lore, and in both descriptions of lyric the author's personality is strongly revealed, and often with delightful piquancy."—Saturday Review.

"In this volume she revels in pictures and portraits of the people in Ireland. . . . Some of her legends and ballads in these pages are everything that could be desired. . . . She has touched the hearts of the Irish people and brought them into closer relations with the world outside."—Boston Herald.

TERESA, and Other Poems.

By JAMES RHOADES. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

"The little tragedy which gives its name to the volume is spirited and artistic."—Times.

"Some of Mr. Rhoades's simpler pieces are excellent. His style is graceful, easy and attractive."—The Independent

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., Publishers, 15 East 16th St., New York.

Life and Works of Alexander Anderson,

THE

First American Wood Engraver.

By FREDERIC M. BURR, M. A. With three Portraits of Dr. Anderson, and numerous illustrations by himself. To which are added copious extracts from Dr. Anderson's diary for the years 1795–1798.

The edition is printed from TYPE on extra heavy superfinished paper, and is limited to 725 numbered and signed copies. Royal 8vo, half russia, gilt top, $4.00.

Special Edition de Luxe limited to 25 numbered and signed copies. Printed on Crane's parchment vellum paper, and bound in parchment, antique style, stamped with gold (in a box), $12 50.

Only Seven Copies of Special Edition Unsold.

"Mr. Burr has most conscientiously given us the life and work of our first engraver. . . . The character of the man is cleverly portrayed in the incidents narrated—a plan far preferable to any description based upon the author's own deductions. . . . Mr. Burr has chosen a good topic and has handled it well."—Public Opinion, Washington, D. C.

"The illustrations chosen for this volume are many in number and generally are interesting, They impress us again and again with the superior excellence of Anderson's work."—New York Times.

"The biography is that of a really remarkable man, and is published very handsomely."—Phila. Press.

For sale by

CHARLES T. DILLINGHAM & CO.

766 Broadway, New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

ESTABLISHED 1870. SECOND HAND BOOKS.

Catalogues issued monthly. Sent free to book buyers.

JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Ye Olde Booke Man,

☞ Books Bought. 53 & 55 State Street, Albany, N. Y.

FOR SALE.—Volumes 9 to 12, inclusive, LITERARY WORLD, June, 1878, to December, 1881, inclusive. Complete, unbound, good condition. Apply A. C. SEEMANN, 108 North 4th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets,	- -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities,	-	$13,808,000.00
Surplus,	- -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

LOVELL, CORYELL & CO.

HAVE PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING THE ISSUE OF THE FOLLOWING NOTABLE WORKS. . . . .

I.

A very tasteful and newly illustrated edition of Maxwell Gray's latest and most powerful novel. 12mo, handsome cloth, $1.50.

The Last Sentence.

By MAXWELL GRAY, author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland," etc., with illustrations by Albert Hencke.

Like "The Silence of Dean Maitland," "The Last Sentence" is a profound book; the story not only seizes upon but enthralls the reader. It is replete with picturesque situations, and has many and powerfully dramatic passages, culminating in a chapter—that in which the hero, now a learned judge, passes sentence of doom on his own child—of intense and virile writing.

II.

New and delightful novel by the author of "His Grace," "Miss Shafto," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

Countess Radna.

By WILLIAM NORRIS, author of "The Rogue," "Marcia," "Misadventure," etc.

A novel of the bright and enchaining kind, which we are accustomed to receive from the author of "No New Thing," upon whom the mantle of Thackeray seems to have fallen. Mr. Norris is not only a clever novelist but a keen observer of his fellows and a thorough man of the world. His plots are therefore fresh and natural, his characters real and lifelike, and the dialogue is crisp and entertaining.

III.

New and entertaining novel by the author of "Master of His Fate," etc. 12mo, handsome cloth, $1.00.

A Soldier and a Gentleman.

By J. MACLAREN COBBAN, author of "The Horned Cat," "A Reverend Gentleman," etc.

This is a bright, altruistic story, told in a frank, breezy, straightforward fashion, with no morbid introspections or trace of serious mental disquiet beyond what is common to an honest, manly, stalwart youth, who has seen service in the English army, and who, falling back again on civilian life, finds himself rather out of his element and exigently hard up.

IV.

Mrs. Curgenven of Curgenven.

By S. BARING-GOULD, M. A., author of "Urith," "Mehalah," "In the Roar of the Sea," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"Among his series of brilliant romances 'Mrs. Curgenven of Curgenven' is one of the best. A deep human interest, strong characterization, and picturesque descriptiveness render it both effective and interesting."—Morning Post, London.

V.

Mademoiselle Miss.

By HENRY HARLAND (Sidney Luska), author of "Mea Culpa," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

The title-story of the present volume, as well as those which follow it, show the same clear insight into character, the same strength and delicacy of description, and the same faculty of individualizing the personages of the narrative, as are manifest in Mr. Harland's earlier work.

VI.

A Daring Experiment and Other Stories.

By Mrs. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE, author of "Woman's Place To-Day." 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

A collection of tales of romance and adventure, set forth in the graceful style and with the dramatic effect which have given the cultured author her reputation.

For sale by all booksellers; or sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

Lovell, Coryell & Company,

☞ 310-318 Sixth Ave., New York.

"TRILBY is the best fiction of the older school that the magazines have permitted the public to enjoy for a long while."—N. Y. EVENING POST.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

MARCH

166 Pages; 73 Illustrations.

The Buckley Lady.
A story. By MARY E. WILKINS.

The Russian and His Jew.
By POULTNEY BIGELOW. With 5 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

An Undivined Tragedy.
By LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA. With 2 illustrations by ANNA ALMA TADEMA.

At a Private View.
By BRANDER MATTHEWS. With 5 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

"Cache-Cache."
A Story. By WILLIAM MCLENNAN. With an Illustration by C. S. REINHART.

The Welcomes of the Flowers.
By W. HAMILTON GIBSON. With 23 Illustrations by the Author.

Tuberculosis and Its Prevention.
By T. MITCHELL PRUDDEN, M. D.

The New England Negro.
A Remnant. By JANE DE FOREST SHELTON.

A Partie Carrée.
A Story. By W. E. NORRIS.

A Rodeo at Los Ojos.
By FREDERIC REMINGTON. With 10 Illustrations by the Author.

Trilby.
A Story. By GEORGE DU MAURIER. Part III. With 15 Illustrations by the Author.

Great American Industries: A Steel Tool.
By R. R. BOWKER. With 8 Illustrations.

The Weaver of the Snow.
A Poem. By WILLIAM SHARP.

Editor's Study.
By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

Editor's Drawer
Contains an illustrated story by RUTH MCENERY STUART and other humorous Sketches and Illustrations.

Literary Notes.
By LAURENCE HUTTON.

SUBSCRIPTION, $4.00 a YEAR.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

HARPER & BROTHERS'

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. Vol. I. On the Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duty of American Citizens. Vol. II. Addresses and Reports on the Reform of the Civil Service of the United States. Vol. III. Historical and Memorial Addresses. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $3.50 per volume. Vols. I. and II. are ready, Vol. III. is nearly ready.

Our English Cousins.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "The Rulers of the Mediterranean," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Nearly Ready.)

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes

Stories. By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "The Refugees," "Micah Clarke," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Uniform in style and price with "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.")

Horace Chase.

A Novel. By CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLSON. Author of "Anne," "Jupiter Lights," "East Angels," etc. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Science of the Earth.

Some Salient Points in the Science of the Earth. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C. M. G., LL. D., Author of "The Story of the Earth and Man," "The Origin of the World," etc. With forty-six Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2.00.

Letters of James Russell Lowell.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. With Three Photogravure Portraits. Two Volumes. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $8.00; Three-Quarter Calf, $12.50. (In a Box.)

Studies of the Stage.

By BRANDER MATTHEWS, Author of "Americanisms and Briticisms, with Other Essays on Other Isms," etc. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In "Harper's American Essayists.")

Italian Gardens.

By CHARLES A. PLATT. With Many Illustrations, including a Colored Frontispiece printed in Paris. 4to, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $5.00. (In a Box.)

Parisian Points of View.

By LUDOVIC HALÉVY. The Translation by EDITH V. B. MATTHEWS. An Introduction by BRANDER MATTHEWS. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the "Odd Number Series.")

Life's Little Ironies.

A Set of Tales; With some Colloquial Sketches entitled A Few Crusted Characters. By THOMAS HARDY, Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental. (Nearly Ready.)

The Masters and Masterpieces of Engraving.

By WILLIS O. CHAPIN. Illustrated with Sixty Engravings and Heliogravures. 8vo, Ornamenta Leather, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $10.00. (In a Box.)

A Child's History of Spain.

By JOHN BONNER, Author of "A Child's History of France," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

William Black's Novels:

New and Revised Edition. Latest Issues: THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.—THE PENANCE OF JOHN LOGAN, etc.—THE STRANGE ADVENTURES OF A HOUSE-BOAT. Post 8vo, Cloth, 80 cents each.

In Direst Peril.

A Novel. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Time's Revenges," "The Weaker Vessel," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Mystery of Abel Forefinger.

By WILLIAM DRYSDALE. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (In "Harper's Young People Series.")

The above works are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. HARPER'S CATALOGUE will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Public Library,
LAWRENCE MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 10 MARCH 1894 Vol. XXV No. 5 Whole No. 501

Charles Scribner's Sons' * * * Important New Books * * *

Second Volume Now Ready:

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by DUC D'AUDIFFRET-PASQUIER. With portraits. In 3 vols., 8vo. Vol. II., 1812–1814, now ready, $2.50; Vol. I., 1789–1812, $2.50.

"Its value is great. The author brings before us and illustrates with peculiar clearness the characteristics of an extraordinary time. He gives us vivid and thoughtful sketches of the First Empire."—Edinburgh Review.

"Memoirs which promise to be among the most valuable ever published concerning the Napoleonic period. Pasquier's account of the Empire is surely one of the best that any contemporary has left us. It will be found rich in material concerning the imperial régime, and in portraits of Napoleon's family and associates."—Atlantic Monthly.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF DEAN STANLEY.

By R. E. PROTHERO. With the co-operation of DEAN BRADLEY. Second Edition. With portraits and illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

"Perhaps no similar book since Trevelyan's 'Life of Macaulay' has been prepared with so much care or wisdom. It is a work that will be to many well-nigh indispensable."—Boston Journal.

"One of the most profound, scholastic and brilliant biographies ever written."—Chicago Daily News.

THE BARBARY COAST.

By Dr. H. M. FIELD. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

"A free and delightful series of chapters concerning Northern Africa. They are fresh and bright portraitures of a life entirely foreign to our own. The natives are pictured in all the lights and shadows of the African climate, and the scenery is described with power and enthusiasm."—Boston Herald.

THE JACOBEAN POETS.

By EDMUND GOSSE. University Series. 12mo, $1.00 net.

Mr. Gosse's little book directs critical attention to all that was notable in English poetry from 1603 to 1625, bringing fresh light to bear upon this great period of English poetry.

IN THE FOOTPRINTS OF CHARLES LAMB.

By B. E. MARTIN. With Bibliography by E. D. North. Cheaper edition, revised. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

"Such a book as Dr. Martin's will come like a personal favor to each of Lamb's lovers."—Mr. Howells in Harper's Magazine.

MEN, WOMEN, AND BOOKS.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. 16mo, uniform with "Obiter Dicta." $1.00.

"Augustine Birrell has won for himself an enviable reputation as an essayist, and his new volume will add to it. His pen sketches are wonderfully graphic."—Boston Advertiser.

IN UNIFORM BINDING: Obiter Dicta, two series, and Res Judicatæ, by A. BIRRELL; Letters to Dead Authors, by A. LANG, Views and Reviews, by W. E. HENLEY, each, $1.00; and Stelligeri, by B. WENDELL, $1.25.

Part I. in March.

BIBLIOGRAPHICA: A Magazine of Bibliography.

TO BE COMPLETED IN TWELVE QUARTERLY PARTS.

Messrs. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS beg to announce that they will issue in America a Quarterly Magazine of Bibliography in its Historical and Artistic Aspects, to be published in London by Messrs. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & Co. It will comprise a Series of Papers by Writers of Authority on various points of Book-lore which are of interest at the present day, and which require special treatment, without being of sufficient importance to be made the subject of separate works. The Magazine will be printed on Hand-made Paper, large imperial 8vo, and the price to subscribers will be $8.00 net per annum for four numbers. The edition for England and America will be identical in imprint and all other particulars. Subscriptions taken only for the complete work of 12 parts, payable in three annual payments of $8.00 in advance. Detailed Prospectuses may be had on application.

BAEDEKER'S EUROPEAN GUIDE-BOOKS.

Illustrated with Numerous Maps, Plans, Panoramas and Views. ALL PRICES NET.

United States,	$3.60
Alps (Eastern),	2.40
Belgium and Holland,	1.80
Egypt (Lower),	4.80
Egypt (Upper),	3.00
France (Northern),	2.10
France (Southern), from the Loire to the Spanish and Italian Frontiers, including Corsica. 12mo,	2.70
Germany (Northern),	2.40
Germany (Southern) and Austria,	2.40
Germany (Rhine, from Rotterdam to Constance),	2.10
Great Britain,	3.00
Greece (New Edition),	2.40
Italy (Northern),	$2.40
Italy (Central) and Rome,	1.80
Italy (Southern) and Sicily, etc.,	1.80
London and its Environs,	1.80
Norway and Sweden,	3.00
Palestine and Syria (New Edition),	3.60
Paris and its Environs,	1.80
Switzerland,	2.40
Travellers' Manual of Conversation, in English, German, French and Italian,	.90
Conversation Dictionary, in four languages, English, French, German and Italian,	.90

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

A History of the United States Navy.

From 1775 to 1894. By EDGAR STANTON MACLAY, A. M. With Technical Revision by Lieut. Roy C. Smith, U. S. N. In two volumes. Vol. I. With numerous Maps, Diagrams and Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $3.50 per volume.

For nine years the author has devoted himself to the task of supplying the want of a complete history of our navy. His researches in France, with the assistance of Admiral Aube, Minister of the Colonies and the Marine, and in England with the aid of the late Sir Provo Wallis and others, together with the use of private papers and unpublished documents in this country, the aid of descendants of naval heroes and the suggestions of naval officers who have taken part in some of the events described, render the results of his diligent labor complete and authoritative. The appearance of a standard history of the navy is a peculiarly happy accompaniment of the development of our new navy.

(Vol. II. will be published in May next.)

Maxims for Training Remount Horses for Military Purposes.

By J. Y. MASON BLUNT, Lieutenant Fifth Cavalry, U. S. A. Illustrated. 16mo, cloth, 50 cents.

This little manual will supply a want that has long existed among cavalrymen and others for an authoritative book of instruction in the training of recruit or "remount" horses. It deals with every stage of progress, from elementary exercise to the most advanced drill and discipline under fire. It will be found serviceable not alone in its military bearings but to all interested in the training of horses for the saddle.

RECENT ISSUES IN

Appletons' Town and Country Library.

No. 135. Lot 13.

By DOROTHEA GERARD, author of "Orthodox," "A Queen of Curds and Cream," etc. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"A new novel by this author is always something to be thankful for."—Providence Journal.

"Miss Gerard is a novelist who has made a place for herself, in which she stands alone. An excellent delineator of character, she has a charmingly fresh style and a knowledge of cosmopolitan life in all its phases which is hardly equaled by any other English writer."—London Morning Post.

No. 134. A Ward in Chancery.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER, author of "The Wooing o't," "For His Sake," etc. 12mo, paper 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The author of "The Wooing o't" needs no introduction to American readers. In her next book she offers a most sympathetic study of a woman's character, with a picture of an unconventional hero, the whole forming a story of sustained interest and merit.

No. 133. A Marriage Ceremony.

By ADA CAMBRIDGE, author of "The Three Miss Kings," "Not All in Vain," etc. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"This new story by Ada Cambridge is one of her best, and to say that is to at once award it high praise. Few writers better understand character and society sketching, while her style is delightfully fresh and simple, marked at the same time with genuine feeling. The scene of this her latest novel is laid in England and Australia."—Boston Advertiser.

"The book is very strong. . . . A pleasant and spirited love story."—Kansas City Star.

☞ Appletons' Monthly Bulletin of New Publications will be sent regularly to any address, free on request.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
1, 3, & 5 BOND STREET . . . NEW YORK.

UNMOUNTED PHOTOGRAPHS

of Ancient and Modern Works of Art, reproductions of famous paintings, sculpture and architecture, with views from all parts of the world. Send 15 cents for catalogues of 14,000 subjects (including 1893 supplement).

World's Fair Views - - AND - - Art at the Fair

SPECIAL LIST OF 130 SUBJECTS.

Now Ready.

Lantern Slides to order from any of our Subjects. Glass Panels for Holiday Gifts. Photograph mounting in Albums or on Cards a Specialty. Albums Supplied. Yacht and Squadron Photos, New England Coast Views.

SOULE PHOTOGRAPH CO.,
PUBLISHERS.
338 L Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PRINCIPAL AGENCIES.

NEW YORK: E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23rd Street.
CHICAGO: M. O'Brien & Son, 208 Wabash Avenue.
PHILADELPHIA: J. E. McClees & Co., Ltd., 1417 Chestnut Street.
WASHINGTON: W. H. Veerhoff, 1217 F. Street.
SAN FRANCISCO: W. K. Vickery, 224 Post St.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1, ...	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2, ...	85.00
New Special, No. 3, ...	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

LOVELL, CORYELL & CO.'S

New Books and New Editions.

Cheaper, One Volume Edition.

The Victorian Age of English Literature.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT, author of "The Makers of Florence," "The Makers of Venice," "Laurence Oliphant's Life," etc. Two volumes in one. Large 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

The charm of Mrs. Oliphant's style, as well as the justness of her criticisms, and the thorough knowledge which she possesses of English literature, particularly during the last two centuries, will make this new work from her pen much sought after by students of English literature. . . . The work is sober, well-informed, and sympathetic; its range is wide, and it has a patient as well as an industrious chronicler.

Fine uniform library edition, 5 vols., 12mo, cloth. Each, $1.75.

The Prose Works of Heinrich Heine.

Translated by E. GODFREY LELAND, M. A. (Hans Breitmann). Vol. I., Florentine Nights. Vols. II.–III., Pictures of Travel. Vols. IV.–V., Germany.

The translation of Heine's writings into Mr. Leland's delightful English is a noteworthy event in American letters.

Edition de Luxe, 8vo, with portrait, handsome cloth, $5.00.

The Drama.

Addresses delivered at Oxford by HENRY IRVING, the famous English actor and theatrical manager.

In this sumptuous volume Mr. Irving has collected four of the interesting and instructive addresses delivered by him on the annals of the stage and the art and traditions of acting. The addresses are marked by Mr. Irving's well-known enthusiasm as well as by his scholarly taste.

A very tasteful and newly illustrated edition of Maxwell Gray's latest and most powerful novel. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Last Sentence.

By MAXWELL GRAY, author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland."

The clever and cultured authoress who writes under the nom de plume of Maxwell Gray can be compared only with herself. Like "The Silence of Dean Maitland," "The Last Sentence" is a profound book. Her story not only seizes upon but enthralls the reader; it is strongly conceived and the plot is admirably wrought out.

New editions of Dr. Geikie's graphic and scholarly "Life of Christ." Popular Edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; Easter Edition, in white vellum cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

The Life and Words of Christ.

By CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D. D., author of "Hours with the Bible," "The English Reformation," etc.

Dr. Geikie's Life of Christ has taken a high place among the scholarly, critical, and expository narratives of the story of the Divine Life on earth. It has all the graphic and picturesque qualities of Canon Farrar's work, without that author's florid rhetoric and rather decorative prose.

A Daring Experiment and Other Stories.

By Mrs. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE, author of "Woman's Place To-day." 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

LOVELL, CORYELL & COMPANY,
310-318 SIXTH AVE., NEW YORK.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 10 MARCH 1894 No. 5

CONTENTS

St. Andrews 67
Flint's Philosophy of History 67
Louisiana Studies 68
Moltke's Letters, Essays, and Speeches . . 68
Goethe Sixty Years After 69
Richard Jefferies 69
Fiction:
  Ships That Pass in the Night 70
  A Chronicle of Small Beer 70
  In Direst Peril 70
  The Woman of the Iron Bracelets 70
  God's Will and Other Stories 70

Poetry:
  Minerva in Boston. Edward A. Church . . 72
New York Letter 72
Minor Notices:
  A Chorus of Faith 73
  The New Redemption 73
  Christ the Central Evidence of Christianity . . 73
  The Key of the Grave 73
  God is Love and Other Sermons 73
  Short Studies in Character 73
  History of Chile 73
  Russia and Turkey in the Nineteenth Century . 74
  A Random Itinerary 74
  On Sunny Shores 74
  Birds in a Village 74
  Studies of the Stage 74
  Curtis' Orations and Addresses 74
  A Century of Painters of the English School . 74
  The American Girl at College 74
  Brave Lads and Bonnie Lasses 75
  The Seeker in the Marshes 75
Periodicals 76
News and Notes 77
Publications Received 79

ST. ANDREWS.*

It is not necessary to say of any book by Mr. Andrew Lang that it is readable. This attractive volume of some three hundred and fifty pages has for its modest object the presentation of some pictures of the past of one of the most historic towns in Scotland. It saw many great events, but Mr. Lang laments that not until after the Reformation are there any lifelike details of these events. The town had no advantages of situation:

> Standing on a bleak and windy promontory in a remote nook severed from the main part of the kingdom by two wide firths, without a river, and with only such a harbor as the mouth of a small burn supplies, it seems cut off from every source of greatness. The treeless and shelterless slopes behind it offer no amenity, and our ancestors boasted no such love of the picturesque as to choose a site merely because it had an excellent view of the sea, of the estuary of the Eden, and of the distant Grampians.

Many famous names are more or less connected with the place:

> Hither came the companions of St. Columba, the Culdees, priestly fugitives from early England, pilgrims from Ireland, and, later, men and women famous in history — Malcolm the Maiden, Wallace, Edward I, Robert Bruce; Papal emissaries, Mary Stuart, Du Bartas, Cardan, Claverhouse, and Montrose; cardinals and martyrs, reformers and covenanters; a hundred famous people down to Dr. Johnson, and even to the noted people of today.

Mr. Lang begins in the age of myth and legend relating to the relics of St. Andrew, with which the name of the place was associated. In his chapter "The St. Andrews of the Bishops" he is on firmer ground, and when he reaches Bishop Lamberton, in the time of Edward I of England, he deplores the extreme patriotism which led the Scots to decline the alliance by marriage with England. Bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, was the one to grant privileges to a university which he intended to be "an impregnable rampart of Doctors and Masters to resist Heresy;" but, as with many another foundation, heresy was one of the earliest and most successful of intruders. Mr. Lang brings us down through the centuries, setting in vivid light the burning of Patrick Hamilton, Cardinal Beaton, and the residence of Mary Stuart of St. Andrews, and he enters into full detail concerning the university when he is able to draw from the diaries and account books of James Melville and the young Earl of Montrose. Then come two picturesque chapters on the Reign of the Saints, that is, the Covenanters, and the Reign of the Sinners under Archbishop Sharpe. Of course Mr. Lang could not omit to give the details of Dr. Johnson's visit to St. Andrews in 1773, where he was "gratified by every mode of kindness and entertained with all the elegance of lettered hospitality." Dr. Chalmers gives occasion for numerous interesting pages. The author only mentions the noted names of Forbes, Tulloch, Shairp, Ferrier Sellar, and Campbell, who have given the University of St. Andrews — the oldest foundation in Scotland — a reputation beyond its numbers; he might well have added the name of Prof. Henry Jones, the author of one of the best books on Browning and a rising metaphysician:

> The modern St. Andrews is a city of many schools, and in summer is a watering-place. Its antiquities are kept in good repair; its hotels do not invade the picturesque part of the town, the cathedral end, the beautiful Pends, the old abbey wall with its ivy-grown towers, the ruins of Kirkheugh and of the castle.

FLINT'S PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY.*

This handsome volume, over seven hundred pages in length, is to a large degree a reproduction of a book nearly twenty years old. Professor Flint's work on French and German philosophy of history published in 1874 has been a favorite volume, as it deserved to be, with students of this fascinating subject. Owing to a change of studies Professor Flint did not pursue his scheme, and the first volume of it has been out of print for a dozen years. Fortunately for all students of modern history he has taken up his task in a new form and with a better plan. He intends to describe the course of historical philosophy in the four great nations of Europe — France, Germany, Italy, and England — in such a way as to make the volumes contributions to the history of these countries as well as to the philosophy of history. Although he does not say so, we infer that a volume similar to the present will be devoted to each of the three other countries yet to be treated. Just as the present volume includes the philosophy of history in French Belgium and Switzerland, so the Dutch contributions will be treated in the volume on Germany, and the American in the volume on England.

This first volume has a long introduction to the general work, in which Professor Flint considers the various meanings of history and philosophy and the different manners in which they have been connected, and the position of history among the Greeks, the Romans, and the Europeans of the mediæval time. Then he considers broadly three great ideas which lie at the basis of the philosophy of history — the idea of progress, the idea of unity, and the idea of freedom. Before taking up French philosophical history he briefly discusses four writers who seem to have the best claim to special notice in the classic and mediæval periods. These four are Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, and Ibn Khaldun, a Mohammedan philosopher of the fourteenth century. It will surprise many that of these four writers Professor Flint gives the last named the highest place in many respects:

> The first writer to treat history as the proper object of a special science was Mohammed Ibn Khaldun. Whether on this account he is to be regarded or not as the founder of the science of history is a question as to which there may well be difference of opinion; but no candid reader of his "Prolegomena" (Mocaddemat) can fail to admit that his claim to the honor is more valid than that of any other author previous to Vico. . . . Had he known the classical and Christian worlds as well as he knew the Mohammedan world, and generalized and reasoned on them also with the same independence and insight, the treatise which he might have produced would have been one of the greatest and most valuable in literature. The one which he has left is, however, sufficiently great and valuable to preserve his name and fame to latest generations.

The first Frenchman to be considered is John Bodin, the earliest French writer who took a philosophical view of history:

> As a political philosopher, indeed, Bodin had no rival among his contemporaries, and none, at least in his own country, till Montesquieu appeared. He had great native force of intellect, great learning, especially in languages, law, and history, and large legal and political experience, having taught jurisprudence at Toulouse, practiced as an advocate in Paris, shared both in court favor and disgrace under Henry III, performed admirable service as a deputy of the Tiers État in the Assembly of Blois, and filled various important offices of state.

Of Montesquieu, who is naturally the next writer of world-wide fame to be named, Professor Flint's closing judgment, after a full exposition of his leading thoughts, is this:

---

*St. Andrews. By Andrew Lang, with illustrations by T. Hodge. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00.

*Historical Philosophy in France and French Belgium and Switzerland. By Robert Flint. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

> Montesquieu had no intention of founding the philosophy of history, and to pronounce him its founder, as Alison has done, is extravagant laudation. It appears to me to be even eulogy in excess of the truth to represent him, as Comte, Maine, and Leslie Stephen have done, as the founder of the historical method. But he did more than any one else to facilitate and insure its foundation. He showed on a grand scale and in the most effective way that laws, customs, and institutions can only be judged of intelligently when studied as what they really are — historical phenomena; and that, like all things properly historical, they must be estimated, not according to an abstract or absolute standard, but as concrete realities related to given times and places, to their determining causes and condition, and to the whole social organism to which they belong, and the whole social medium in which they subsist.

An especially interesting part of this highly valuable treatise is the chapter on the Socialistic Schools of History, in which Professor Flint expounds and criticises the works of Saint-Simon, Fourier, Buchez, Leroux, Louis Blanc, and Proudhon. In the preceding chapters he had already passed a judgment on the socialistic theory of history which appears to us entirely just:

> By the way in which Rousseau, Morelly, and Mably inculcated and diffused the idea of equality, they laid the foundation of the socialist theory of history. They ignored or implicitly denied progress in history; and, although they may have here and there verbally affirmed the perfectibility of man, the general tenor of their teachings as regards the course of human affairs in the past is inconsistent therewith. In words they glorified liberty as well as their contemporaries did, but they showed by the proposals which they put forth that they were ready to sacrifice it in any sphere of life and to an almost unlimited extent if the realization of equality could thereby be promoted. The equality, however, which involves the sacrifice of liberty must be also destructive both of social order and of social progress, and consequently its advocacy must be inconsistent with the admission of true conceptions of historical development, a process which can only be natural and normal where there is a due combination and correlation of factors and an appropriate interdependence and coöperation of functions.

We can only note further in this ample volume, crowded as it is with candid exposition and criticism for the most part keen and thoroughgoing, the pages devoted to the critical school of this latest generation, of which the most prominent representatives are MM. Augustin Cournot and Charles Renouvier; with the latter, of all the writers whom Professor Flint expounds and criticises, he finds himself most in agreement. In the short closing chapter on the history of philosophy in Belgium and Switzerland the great work of Laurent and the minor contributions of MM. Vinet and Charles Secrétan should not be passed over without mention.

A considerable part of the labor necessary for the preparation of his next volume on Germany Professor Flint must already have accomplished. He takes for the motto of his complete work Shakespeare's line,

> Too swift arrives too tardy as too slow.

We trust that he will avoid the latter extreme, for there seems to be no danger of his publishing too hastily. If he can complete the remainder of his great task in the same thoroughly admirable manner in which this volume has been written, he will lay the whole world of readers of history under a very heavy obligation.

LOUISIANA STUDIES.*

PROFESSOR FORTIER of the Tulane University of Louisiana has done a good thing in gathering together his studies, which finely illustrate that portion of our national domain in which French influence has been most pronounced. His work is divided into three parts — literature, customs and dialects, history and education — and makes an excellent handbook of information. The majority of us, who cannot get away from blizzards and galoches to enjoy the midwinter palms and spicy odors of the bayou lands, depend for this information upon such literary purveyors as George W. Cable, and if we are familiar with the writings of Gayarré we are probably superior to the average Northerner. Almost as a matter of course one turns to the page (which he has to find without an index) in which the author gives his opinion of Mr. Cable. In one place he tells us that Mr. Gayarré "refutes completely Mr. Cable's misrepresentations of Louisianians of French and Spanish descent." On page 117 he writes of a resident of Northampton, Mass., as follows: "He is a novelist of some talent, especially in his short stories, and presents tableaux with force, but his descriptions of Creole life and his types of the Creole gentleman and lady are utterly incorrect. They are misrepresentations of an honorable and chivalric race, and have excited the just indignation of every Louisianian of the Latin race and of many (sic) of the Anglo-Saxons." Thus doth the preserver of the fly in amber get rewarded!

Professor Fortier's chapter on the French language in the Pelican State is of interest, and his sketch of French literature, both in the Colony and State, is marked by knowledge and discrimination. It seems strange to read that not a few works have been written by Louisiana ladies, who, owing to the modesty of their sex, have never even attempted to publish their productions. There are informing sketches of the Acadians in Louisiana and their dialect, as well as of the linguistic and other peculiarities of the Creoles. The historical portion relates almost entirely to what happened during the Civil War, but the chapter on education gives a good bird's-eye view of the work of instruction from colonial times to the present day. The preparation and publication of monographs like this, which is excellent of its kind, are to be highly commended. While fiction is fascinating, it is almost certain to give the reader one-sided views of the people which it photographs.

MOLTKE'S LETTERS, ESSAYS, AND SPEECHES.*

ALTHOUGH we have no full biography of the great Field-Marshal of the Prussian Armies, there bids fair to be an ample literature of a more or less autobiographical character gathered about him. The three volumes named below are the latest additions. The letters given in the first work are not equal in interest to those written to his mother and brothers, previously printed. They are directed to his father, to his sisters Auguste and Magdalene, to his brother Fritz — who came near killing him once in a ball game — to his nephew Wilhelm and his children, and to various military and civil friends. Some occasional correspondence follows. In this division one notes with curiosity the short list of books which Moltke reread with most pleasure; it was made up of Schiller, Goethe, Shakespeare, Walter Scott, Ranke, Treitschke, and Carlyle. Here is George Bancroft's letter of February 18, 1885, to Moltke:

> We were born in the same month of the same year. I am twenty-three days older than you. I am in excellent health, and hope to hear the same of you. The remembrance of our friendship during my stay in Berlin is still a joy to me in my old age. I keep my former opinion that the union of Germany is the greatest event of our century. My wife, who, I am glad to say, is in good health, joins me in best wishes.

Here, too, is a letter of 1880 to Dr. Bluntschli, in which Moltke declares:

> I perfectly honor the charitable endeavor to lessen the sufferings which war carries in its train. Permanent peace is a dream, and not even a beautiful one, and war is a law of God's order in the world, by which the noblest virtues of manly courage and self-denial, loyalty and self-sacrifice, even to the point of death, are developed. Without war the world would deteriorate into materialism.

In 1841 he had written very differently in one of the essays reprinted in the collection named below:

> We candidly confess our belief in the idea, on which so much ridicule has been cast, of a general European peace. Not that long and bloody wars are to cease from henceforth . . . — that is too much to expect; but . . . wars will become rarer and rarer, because they are growing expensive beyond measure. . . . Has not the population of Prussia under a good and wise administration increased by a fourth in twenty-five years of peace? And are not her fifteen millions of inhabitants better fed, clothed, and instructed today than her eleven millions used to be? Are not such results equal to a victorious campaign or to the conquest of a province, with this great

---

* Louisiana Studies: Literature, Customs and Dialects, History and Education. By Alcée Fortier. New Orleans: F. F. Hansell & Brother. $1.50.

* Field-Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke as a Correspondent. Translated by Mary Herms. 8vo. Pp. 309. Harper & Brothers. $2.50.

Essays, Speeches, and Memoirs of Field-Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke. The Essays Translated by Charles Flint McClumpha, Ph.D.; the Speeches, by Major C. Barter, D.A.A.G.; and the Memoirs, by Mary Herms. 2 vols. 8vo. Pp. 308, 239. Harper & Brothers. $5.00.

> difference, that they were not gained at the expense of other nations, nor with the sacrifice of the enormous number of victims that a war demands?

None of the essays, strange to say, deals with a subject of a distinctly military character. They treat of the relations of Holland and Belgium, of Poland, of the Western Boundary, i.e., of Germany, of the choice of railway routes, and the Eastern Question. When they were written Moltke was between thirty and forty-five years of age. The point of view in the boundary essay is that of a true Gallophobist who believed that Germany was still entitled to the possession of provinces that had been French for centuries because they had once been, not German or Prussian, but — Teutonic. This metaphor relieves the discussion of the Eastern Question:

> The division of Turkey will be like the division of a diamond ring; the question is, who is to possess the most precious of solitaires, Constantinople?

Somewhat over one half of one of these volumes is occupied with Moltke's speeches in the Reichstag and the Prussian "House of Lords," as the translator calls it. He sat twenty-four years in the Reichstag and nineteen years in the upper house of the Prussian Diet. "He spoke but forty-one times in the former body and but three times in the latter." The speeches he made were for the most part very brief, those on military matters being naturally the longer. His toasts at banquets were famous for their brevity:

> The officers of the General Staff used to discuss among themselves the day before whether the toast would consist of eight or nine words. In 1884, the betting was nine words at most to an oyster breakfast. The field-marshal added "gentlemen;" by this word the bet was lost. But the unfortunate loser was of the opinion that the field-marshal "is getting old — he begins to be talkative."

The "Memoirs" in the third of these volumes are reminiscences by friends and relatives. His great and attractive qualities are accented none too strongly here, but they are already well known to those who know Moltke at all.

GOETHE SIXTY YEARS AFTER.*

THIS admirable little volume, by Professor Seeley, is a reissue, with changes and additions, of three articles on Goethe which appeared in the Contemporary Review for 1884. The preface declares his aim to be, not to prepare a key to Goethe, but a series of short chapters which might usefully accompany the reader in his studies of the great German. Professor Seeley questions "whether after all Goethe has been sufficiently domesticated among us;" and he has therefore thought it well to prepare a brief book which, avoiding the usual commonplaces, will set before us the main lines of a great genius and a great personality.

The general character of German literature, says Professor Seeley in treating some limitations of the genius of Goethe, is "somewhat pale and academic" and wanting in distinctive traits. While this is now true, after all that Goethe and his great contemporaries have done, it was far more the case when he began his literary career. The large body of excellent literary work and the grand literary tradition which, in Great Britain, lay behind such writers as Scott and Wordsworth were almost entirely lacking in Germany. There was one advantage, however, together with many serious disadvantages, in this situation. "A vast proportion of the poetry that is in the world is not serious. It expresses, not what the writer really thinks and feels, but what haunts his brain, the fancies that come to him unbidden; and these are usually an echo of former beliefs — the serious thoughts of one age walk, as it were, as the poetry of the ages that follow." Goethe was thus, in the absence of such hereditary poetic sentiment, driven to be original. Although not a cold realist, he was eager for facts, and a large part of the failure of Goethe's fictious work may be ascribed to the circumstance that "much more is fact and much less is mere fiction than the reader is apt to assume." All of his works taken altogether, as he said, make up a great confession. In his poetry Professor Seeley finds that Goethe does not rank in the same class as Scott mainly because "he has a vastly more abundant supply of what may be called new poetry, that is, poetry derived at first hand from nature, which is as a spring, chillingly cold yet so pure and refreshing! He is, indeed, not like Scott, but more like Wordsworth and Shakespeare compounded together."

Another great quality in Goethe was his wisdom in practical matters. This wisdom was not systematized after the manner of the metaphysicians, because he was supremely a lover of concrete wisdom. He is, Professor Seeley declares, the wisest, the most didactic, and the most serious of all the great poets. Readers of Matthew Arnold will recall how this keen critic likewise emphasized Goethe's wisdom by the side of his comparative weakness as a novelist, and his limitations, even, as a great poet. Professor Seeley has given us in this little book some of the best criticism of Goethe yet published. He traces three periods in the poet's development — the first romantic, the second classical, and a third in which, in some degree, Goethe went back to his early romanticism. The clue to all his many writings Professor Seeley finds in a movement, both in Faust and Wilhelm Meister, "out of what is described as a Gothic confusion into the antique world." Goethe was so profoundly preoccupied by this movement, and his care to have it continuous and uniform in his own case, that all other matters seemed to him of comparatively minor consequence. Professor Seeley does not consider him blameworthy for his great lack of interest in the French revolutions of 1789 and 1830. He was then pursuing a very serious aim of self-culture in a spirit which was fundamentally unselfish; but the critic cannot excuse his indifference to the War of Liberation in 1813.

Professor Seeley is not among those sworn devotees of Goethe who admire the second part of Faust without stint; he plainly calls it "prolix and fantastic," and, for the most part, "almost unreadable." But he points out its importance in the mind of Goethe. With him the first part, the Faust of which we all think in thinking of Goethe, was simply an introduction to the second part, in which the meaning of the whole composition was to be made plain. It would be easy to quote many admirable sentences and strong paragraphs from this thoughtful volume, but we must content ourselves with this paragraph from the closing chapter:

> If we try to sum up the general view which has been given of Goethe's philosophy, we shall see that on the one hand he has treated two or three topics with great originality and thoroughness, and also that he has been the author of a vast mass of pregnant sentences, some one of which usually rewards the student who gives an odd half hour to Goethe's works. But he is rather the greatest moralist, the most pregnant thinker among poets, than independently a great moralist or philosopher. His contempt for philosophic method deprived his thought of all systematic character, while at the same time he wanted the temperament of a reformer, which is almost necessarily more or less combative. His greatness is therefore, after all, in the main literary.

RICHARD JEFFERIES.*

THE Dilettante Library is very convenient in size, and thus far its issues have been unusually timely. The pathetic life of the great poet-naturalist, Richard Jefferies, has already received a just eulogy from Mr. Walter Besant; but as a man or as a writer Jefferies still has but a small circle of admirers. A real love of nature — of the blue sky, the wild woods, the green grass, the spring flowers, and the summer rains — is rarer than we are prone to believe. Only those who have this sincere love of mother earth will care for this man's writings. He was truly the "high priest of summer," and who else could have described as he has described "the life of the earth and the sea the glow of the sun, and the wind which came sweet and strong from the waves?" His prayer, like Shelley's, was "for fullness of life like to the sea and the sun, and to the earth and the air" — for "fullness of physical life, and mind equal and beyond their fullness."

---

* Goethe. Reviewed After Sixty Years. By J. R. Seeley. Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

* Richard Jefferies. By H. S. Salt. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

A country boy, with little of what the world calls education, but with an instinctive love of wild scenery and free, outdoor pursuits, Jefferies had a passion for nature which grew until it seemed to absorb his very soul. He rejected almost recklessly the teachings of experience. "If you wish your children to think deep things, to know the holiest emotions, take them to the woods and hills; therein shall they find a secret — a knowledge not to be written, not to be found in books." "It's indoors, sir, as kills half the people," he makes his gamekeeper say — "being indoors three parts of the day, and next to that taking too much drink and vittals."

There are few more heroic figures in literature than Richard Jefferies fighting the three giants, "disease, despair, and poverty," and yet believing with absolute confidence in the happiness of the future race. Mr. H. S. Salt, the author of this short sketch, considers Jefferies first as a man; then as a naturalist and poet-naturalist; lastly as thinker and writer. As a man, his life must win the sympathy of all who read it; as a naturalist, his books are gaining a wider and wider reading; while as a writer, his fine literary perceptions and his mastery of language have given his Pageant of Summer and The Gamekeeper at Home a permanent reputation. Nor must we forget to place among his best writings that wonderful autobiography, The Story of My Heart.

Mr. Besant's eulogy did something to increase the circle of Jefferies' admirers, and this new little pocket biography should do even more. If it send any reader to Field and Hedgerow or The Toilers of the Field to get somewhat nearer the philosophy of this modern worshiper at the shrine of nature, it will have been well worth publication. The author's estimate of Jefferies is a fair one. He does not hesitate to criticise some of his points of view and to condemn many of his theories.

FICTION.

Ships That Pass in the Night.

Because a book has many readers its intrinsic worth is not proven. The surprisingly large sale which has befallen this slight tale by Beatrice Harraden can only be accounted for by the universal love either for the pathetic or the humorous. In the present case pathos constitutes the basis of the story — the pathos of a conglomerate health cure (the book should have been dedicated to consumptives) of illness, death, and suicide. "The Disagreeable Man," the hero of the story, who has no other name, considers that his nonperformance of suicide is the greatest act of self-sacrifice he can make to his mother, who wants him to live for her sake. We find fault, not with the plot or its scantiness, but with the lack of simplicity in style and handling of material. The author is perpetually posing her characters for effect, thus vitiating her moral intent — the improvement of mankind. It is staccato work from beginning to end; short sentences, sudden changes, and epigrammatic remarks are piled one upon another that the story may be unique. When the heroine dies suddenly she sends an enigmatical message to the Disagreeable Man. It sounds well in print, but how could the nurse know who was meant? Withal, the tale has vitality, charm, and power. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

A Chronicle of Small Beer.

This is one of the slight books made attractive by the fashion of heavy paper and wide margins. Its name is unworthy of it, for its author, John Reid, writes of small things in a captivating style which has the air of distinction. The reader smiles and grieves with him as he tells of his boyish scrapes, his early loves, his dread of death, his affection and his hatred for various relatives, and his intimacy with his mother. Many of his phrases are epigrammatic, such as, "the airy serenity of my parent's immorality." Who does not know that provoking kind of person? — Anglo-American Publishing Co. $1.00.

In Direst Peril.

Before the reader has turned over half a dozen pages of this story he will be strongly reminded of the style which characterized Lorna Doone. Like that novel, this is full of freshness, sincerity, honest love, adventure, and plot. The author, David Christie Murray, makes the hero tell the story in the first person, with dramatic directness and force — the tale of the rescue of an Italian prisoner from an Austrian dungeon and the comical and necessary robbery of money. It is one of the best wrought stories that have appeared this season, and is without the bane of a moral purpose. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The Woman of the Iron Bracelets.

It is doubtful whether this story, by Frank Barrett, should be classed among detective novels or among those which deal with animal magnetism. Wherever it may belong the plot, which is sufficient for three ordinary tales, is rather skillfully unraveled; it shows the wiles of a wicked hypnotizer and deals with phases of English life. The heroine does not hesitate to falsify herself for the sake of others, but emerges triumphantly from all her woes. It is always a pity that when a dénouement is reached the road to it seems lengthy. Perhaps if there were more leisure and less important claims in life than the duty of reading such novels they would be more appreciated. This one certainly has the merit of inventiveness and good construction. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00.

God's Will and Other Stories.

There is a freshness of idea and treatment in these tales by Ilse Frappan, translated by Helen A. Macdonnell, which gives them charm. The scenes are German, but not the conventional German of the every-day novel. We particularly like the first story of the farmer's daughter, who, suddenly enlightened at the altar as to the state of her own heart and the nature of the vow that she is making, says "No," and thereby secures her own life happiness and that of her sister. — Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Mr. Frank W. Freeborn, a master in the Boston Latin School, has published a volume of extracts in French from the writings of M. Alphonse Daudet. It contains many selections from Tartarin de Tarascon and Tartarin sur les Alpes, and others from Lettres de mon Moulin, Le Siège de Berlin, and several other works. A brief biography accompanies the compilation and very full notes. M. Daudet is so great a master of fiction that it seems almost a pity to introduce his writings into our schools in this mutilated form. The selections are all excellent, and it may be that they will be appreciated by beginners in French and serve as a good introduction to this great writer's masterpieces. But selections from writers of fiction are not easy to make or to use. To appreciate M. Daudet or Thackeray a reader must read at least one complete novel. M. Daudet's luxuriant vocabulary makes his style difficult and at the same time profitable for beginners in the French language. — Ginn & Co. 85c.

Mr. George H. Boughton, A.R.A., has provided fifty-three illustrations for a pretty edition of Irving's Rip Van Winkle and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow, in full gilt, with a poppy design on the front cover. It may be because Mr. Jefferson has made Rip Van Winkle peculiarly his own that one is disappointed in Mr. Boughton's designs for the first of the stories, while Ichabod Crane seems to be hit off more successfully. One expects a great deal from Mr. Boughton, however, after his fine pictures of Puritan men and maidens, and charming as this volume is it cannot be pronounced a triumph for the artist. — Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Mr. Bret Harte's latest volume, A Protégée of Jack Hamlin's and Other Stories, shows no failure in cunning of the hand of this adept at the telling of tales. The five stories of California life and their companion, "The Heir of the McHulishes," a Scotch-English-American episode, derive their readability from the same careful selection of details, the same steady movement of the action to a surprising dénouement, and the same finish of style which have given Bret Harte so firm a hold on the reader of short stories. The artistic elaboration of these narratives is great, but the effect of ease is due to long practice by a skillful hand. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

There is a sweet homeliness about the little story, by the author of Miss Toosey's Mission, called For the Fourth Time of Asking. An honest and loving old couple are suddenly parted, to the extreme misery of both, by the appearance of a convict husband long supposed to be dead. The picture of the poor woman, severed by propriety and the law from her "old man," only seeing him in church, where she notes his cough and quiver and added gray hairs, and their final reunion, is full of pathos. — Roberts Brothers. 50c.

One of the most pleasing volumes of fairy-lore that we have lately met is Fairy Tales of a Parrot, which A. Condie Stephen, C.B., has adapted from the Persian and Tristram Ellis has effectively illustrated with colored plates and smaller pictures set in the text. The talkative parrot exerts his talent to detain the heroine of the story from attempting to escape with her lover, as her enemy, the Vizier, desired her to do, leaving the way entirely open for her. Of course, here as elsewhere, the wicked Vizier comes to a bad end and Feerooze and Meemoon are united. — E. P. Dutton & Co.

Pax and Carlino is a pretty tale, in a pretty binding, by Ernst Beckman; it is well translated by Florence K. Upton. It deals with the fortunes of a stolen child and its recovery by its parents. There are the usual accessories of a bad man, a dog, a little girl, and a kind uncle. Children will enjoy reading it, as its happy ending atones for the pathetic passages, which, however, are not so overwrought as to be painful. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.00.

Quentin Durward, deservedly a prime favorite with all lovers of Scott, is the new volume in the Dryburgh edition; the spirited illustrations were drawn by H. M. Paget. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

—There is to be a Kelmscott Shelley. Mr. Morris has consented to print an edition of the poet's works, which will be arranged and edited by Mr. F. S. Ellis, whose edition of Keats has just been completed for press. The Shelley is to be issued in three volumes, which will contain the whole of the longer works, together with most of the lyrics and other minor poems. Mr. Ellis intends to omit all the translations and comicalities (such as "Peter Bell" and "Swellfoot the Tyrant"), and also the fragments and unfinished work generally. These are well and rightly put into an edition which is at once literary and biographical, but are entirely out of place in one which is purely poetical and destined for the general reader. The sweepings of a poet's notebooks can never rightly be considered as his poetic work, interesting as they certainly are from a biographical and literary history point of view. — The Bookman.

—The literary activity of modern Greece is simply phenomenal, all things considered. Few but specialists know how actively the Greeks take part in the learned discussions of the day. They are in touch and tone with the researches of Western scholarship, and are particularly active in utilizing the old libraries and manuscripts which are found in the convents and other sites in the Levant. A fair idea of what the Greeks are actually doing in this line can be gained from such sources as the latest catalogue of Mr. Spirgatis of Leipzig, No. 15, covering the Holy Land, Byzantium, Turkey, and modern Greece. In this list of important publications Greek scholars are represented by scores of excellent works.

—The public has long been accustomed to have an annual drink bill; the nation's book bill comes with something of novelty and perhaps also a more legitimate interest. With the object of obtaining some idea of the amount of money spent in England every year on books, a Daily Chronicle representative has interviewed two London publishers, Mr. Andrew Chatto and Mr. W. Swan Sonnenschein, and the statistics are remarkable, although of course no claim to exactness is made. Mr. Chatto, assuming that the annual turnover of publishers is five millions sterling, adds £750,000 as retail booksellers' profits, and £500,000 spent on secondhand books, with the result that he estimates the nation's book bill at £6,250,000 — a trifle compared to some of our other national bills. Mr. Sonnenschein, while admitting the very great difficulty of getting at the true figures in such an estimate, is less sanguine than Mr. Chatto. He assumes that we spend £1,800,000 on new literature, a similar amount on not new literature, and one million overturn in secondhand books — a total of £4,600,000. It will be noticed that there is a difference of over a million and a half sterling between the two calculations, although Mr. Sonnenschein is careful to explain that his figures are probably below the actual amount. Taking Mr. Chatto's figures, therefore, as approximately correct, will the British nation be surprised at the generous support it gives to literature? One hundred and forty millions on drink — six millions on books! — Publishers' Circular.

—Mr. Arthur S. Way, M.A., who some years ago did Homer, both the Iliad and the Odyssey, into English verse, has now translated the tragedies of Euripides, and his publishers (Messrs. Macmillan) claim that his is the only complete verse translation of Euripides that has appeared in England for more than a hundred years.

—Mrs. Mary Hemenway died in Boston on the 6th inst. She was seventy-two years of age, and throughout her long life had been active in promoting works of a charitable and beneficent character. One of the richest women in Boston, she was able to engage in many helpful enterprises and assist them to a successful issue. When, in 1876, the existence of the Old South Meeting House was threatened, she gave one half of the $200,000 that had to be raised in order to save the historic old edifice from being torn down. Scarcely were the negotiations completed for the purchase of the building and its preservation when Mrs. Hemenway projected her plan for an institute for the encouragement of the study of American history among young people. As early as 1878, at her request, Miss C. Alice Baker gathered an audience of the school children of Boston in the Old South on Saturday forenoons and began a series of talks on topics connected with early New England history. This was called "The Children's Hour." The floor and galleries of the church were filled with relics of colonial days, which had been exhibited at fairs held in aid of the preservation fund. These at first formed topics for the discourses, and added much to the interest of the occasions. The next year a course of lectures on "The Discovery and Colonization of America" was given here by John Fiske, which was followed in subsequent years by others on kindred topics by the same speaker. This was the inception of the Old South work, which has gained such proportions and which was supported wholly by Mrs. Hemenway. Besides this home work, Mrs. Hemenway, who took a lifelong interest in American archæology and ethnology, contributed largely to the support of archæological expeditions to and explorations in the Southwest. The work of Mr. Cushing among the Zuñi Indians, which attracted so much attention some years ago, was the result of Mrs. Hemenway's enthusiasm and generosity. Subsequent expeditions to kindred regions were supported largely by her, as an enthusiastic contributor to the funds of the American Archæological Institute. She was also the patroness of the Journal of American Ethnology and Archæology, edited by Dr. J. W. Fewkes, whose utterances upon these topics are authoritative, and she succeeded in attaching Prof. J. K. Hosmer to her interests and imparting to him much of her enthusiasm. She was the prompter and patron of several of his most interesting and important historical writings, notably his Life of Sir Harry Vane and his Anglo-Saxon Freedom. — Boston Transcript.

—In Mr. Stockton's contribution to The Authors' Book, "Pomona's Club," Pomona is made to preach a clever sermon on a burning literary question of the day:

> The human race is divided into women and men, and literatoor is divided into romantickism and realistics. And the great trouble with both of them is that sometimes there is too much of one and not enough of the other. Everybody knows that we can't git along without realistics, — that is, a certain amount of 'em; but if a boy puts too much rag-tag and bobtail to his kite he can't make it fly. There's times when you might git a kite up into the air without any tail, though it would be apt to spin about in an uncertain way. But nobody could make a tail fly without any kite. In my opinion, the worst thing about facts is that they are too common. Everybody's got 'em piled up around 'em and all over the ground. . . . But when the beautiful snows of romantickism come floatin' down and cover up all them facts, and spread a lovely white veil, like the icin' on a poundcake, over all nature and art, then them facts is of some use; they make a foundation for the snow and keep it from blowin' away. And what was perfectly horrid a little while ago becomes like dazzlin' mounds, and domes, and minarets a-sparklin' in the sun.

— A letter was recently delivered at the Bible House, New York, which bore the following direction: "Mir Giovanni Diodati, Societa Biblica Americana. Italian. Nonp. 32mo. New York City." The name was not recognized as belonging to any person employed in the building, but could readily be identified as that of an eminent Italian divine who lived three hundred years ago, and whose translation of the Holy Bible into his native tongue was printed in 1607. His name happens to appear on the title-page of an Italian Testament published by the society, and the writer of the letter, who had a copy of that book and desired to obtain the entire Bible, sought to accomplish the purpose by writing to the translator and affixing the society's imprint to make sure of its reaching its destination. — Bible Society Record.

—Henry Savage Landor, the author of the important work on the Hairy Aino recently published by the Murrays, is a grandson of the famous Walter Savage Landor. His father is Mr. Charles Savage Landor, a virtuoso living in Florence, where he has picked up a unique collection of Florentine antiquities and cinque cento pictures. His mother was an Italian. Mr. Landor keeps up the family connection with Florence by having been born there. He was also educated in its university as an engineer. He can speak six or seven languages.

—A collection of all Mr. Ruskin's scattered sayings about the art of music, extracted from his numerous works, will appear shortly in a volume edited by Miss Mary Wakefield, who adds to her distinction as a musician the qualification of being a neighbor and friend of Mr. Ruskin in North Lancashire.

— THE HEIGHT OF EGOTISM.— Cora: "How is it that when a man writes one famous story he very seldom writes another?"

Merritt: "Because he devotes the rest of his life to telling us how he came to write it." — Puck.

The Literary World

BOSTON 10 MARCH 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Minerva in Boston.

My Minerva flouts the graces, and forgets how fair her face is,
But the higher criticism she entirely comprehends;
So she dresses very plainly, after some reform ungainly,
And looks on Briggs and Spencer as her intimates and friends.

She's indifferent to ices and confectioners' devices,
But on esoteric Buddhism she loves to ponder well;
And though she never glances at the popular romances,
She indulges on occasion in a "study" or "pastel."

She's superior to flirtation; she contributes to the Nation,
And she'd be a rank agnostic if she didn't know so much;
She declines in social duty to display her modest beauty,
But she's put a poem of Browning into genuine low Dutch.

She is musically clever, and the "tune" taboos forever,
For to "Vagner" she is faithful, and to Brahms she gives her heart;
Then at art's high altar kneeling she will talk "technic" and "feeling,"
And if I say, "It's pretty," will reply, "But is it art?"

Dare I ever hope to hold her in the arms that would infold her?
Or, with Plato for my pattern, must I tell my love in Greek?
Let me curb this crude young passion, and, since courting's out of fashion,
Woo Minerva with a problem, and of Eros shyly speak.

Most persistently I'm cramming, but I weary of my shamming,
And am not intoxicated with Castalia's bitter cup;
I might win the maid's affections through a course in conic sections,
But I wonder if, once married, I could keep the blamed thing up.

—Edward A. Church, in the March Century.

NEW YORK LETTER.

PROF. N. S. SHALER of Harvard College is editing for the Appletons what promises to be a notable work. It will be issued in two volumes and entitled The United States of America, and it will deal with the agricultural, mineral, and commercial resources and the literary and artistic achievements of this country at the present time. Each chapter has been written by a specialist in the subject which it treats, and the papers when collected will make a most valuable book of reference.

Most readers of the LITERARY WORLD will probably take greatest interest in the chapter devoted to literature, which Mr. Charles Dudley Warner has prepared. Mr. Warner, it would appear, takes a somewhat pessimistic view of his subject. An author of this city who has seen his paper informs me that the author maintains that most of our American writers do not pay so much attention to the finish of their work as they ought. This is a little surprising, in view of the fact that the short story has attained an excellence in this country that makes it comparable with much of the work of a similar kind done by contemporary French writers, and that the magazines have made a notable advance in literary style during the past twenty-five years. Indeed, editors now complain that ability to write well is becoming so common that they are flooded with good matter which they cannot possibly use for want of space. One of the editors of the Century told me some time ago that a second magazine of really excellent quality might be published from material that he and his associates were obliged to reject.

Mark Twain, James Whitcomb Riley, and Douglas Sherley have been giving some readings here to gratified audiences. Mark Twain's deliciously unconventional and droll manner suits his humor perfectly, and his stories are always received with rapturous applause. Some of these stories, by the way, are far, far from new, and a few of them are like household words; but when they fall from the humorist's lips they are welcomed by his admirers as fresh utterances. As for Mr. Riley, to be appreciated he must be seen and heard. His style is unique and wonderfully attractive; his rendering of his verses about children is especially fine. Indeed, if he were not a writer he might win as brilliant a reputation as an actor as he now enjoys in a literary capacity.

To New Yorkers Mr. Douglas Sherley was a revelation. A few days before he was announced to appear many people here began to ask who he was. After his appearance they were content to accept him without a literary indorsement, for he told capital stories and he told them well. However, there is nothing mysterious about Mr. Sherley, except possibly the fact that a man of his cleverness is not as yet generally celebrated. He comes from Louisville, where he is very well known for his hospitality—he is said to be rich and fond of entertaining extensively—and for his gifts as a story-teller. Many authors of the present day become famed as readers after winning their spurs in literature; but Mr. Sherley, apparently, intends to reverse the process.

It is probable that Mark Twain will not be heard as a reader for some time to come, if at all, after the present season. Like several other authors, he has wearied of the platform, and he says that his present appearances are his last. Whether he will keep his resolution or not remains to be seen; he will find it difficult to do so, as his readings are much sought after. Early in the spring he expects to sail for the south of France, where his family now are. He is not so fond of living in Europe that he will not be glad to take up his permanent residence in this country in another year.

Mr. L. J. B. Lincoln, whose success with "Uncut Leaves"—readings by authors from their unpublished manuscripts—has been very great, is trying a new and interesting experiment. This consists of the reading by professional actors, before an audience of people interested in the drama, of plays of a distinctly literary character; of the kind, in other words, which managers usually reject on the ground that they are "too literary." The other night a notably fine audience heard a play written by Miss Margaret Sutton Briscoe of Baltimore, well known through her short stories in the magazines. There was no doubt that it was "literary," but, unfortunately, it seemed not to be much of anything else. There were no female characters, but each of the three male characters was as garrulous as Sairy Gamp. The work, to all intents and purposes, was a short story told in the form of dialogue by a very sentimental young lady. Moreover, with its insistence upon disease and the paraphernalia and jargon of the doctor's room, it plainly showed the influence of Ibsen. A suggestion of humor on the author's part would have vastly relieved the somberness of the work; but the existence of the humor might have prevented the writing of the piece altogether. It was admirably given. Mr. Richard Hovey, who combines with his literary talent a gift for acting, and who has had some experience on the stage, read the part of a high-strung poet with fine discrimination.

Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts, one of the younger group of Canadian writers, whose Songs of the Common Day has met with very warm appreciation, is spending a few days here. Mr. Roberts is professor of literature at King's College, Windsor, Ont., and he also lectures there on economics and international law. He finds the severe winters of Canada very trying to his health, and he has just received a leave of absence from his post for a couple of months, most of which he will spend in the South. Though he has already won a reputation as writer and teacher, Professor Roberts is scarcely more than thirty. He has written, in addition to his poems, most of which appear in the American magazines, many short stories; and he is now engaged on a larger work of fiction, dealing with a historical subject, than he has previously undertaken.

Mrs. Burton Harrison is hard at work on a new novel. The theme has not as yet been revealed, but it will in all probability be another effort to hold the mirror up to New York society. Both Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Cruger like to reflect the world they move in; but the pictures they present are so unlike each other that they seem to be of quite different worlds. Mrs. Cruger, by the way, is said to be laboring at the present time in the field of biography. This field ought to give some scope for her exuberant rhetoric, though it will necessarily restrict to a degree her riotous imagination.

Bishop Potter's recent advocacy, in an interview, of the founding of an American Westminster Abbey has excited interest in literary circles here. This interest, however, is hardly likely to take practical shape in this season of commercial instability or, indeed, for some time to come, though no one doubts that the proposed institution would be a very fine thing. Mr. E. C. Stedman, by the way, hearing of the bishop's views on the subject, sent word to him that he should be most happy to kill off the first ten poets for the Poets' Corner!

C. L. Webster & Co. have sold their rights to Mr. Bliss Carman's first volume of poems, Low Tide on Grand Pré, to the new and enterprising firm of Stone & Kimball of Cambridge and Boston. The first edition of the book, which appeared only a few months ago, has already been exhausted, and a new and handsome edition will soon be brought out. Messrs. Stone & Kimball, who in a remarkably brief period have won a reputation for the artistic finish of their books, are two undergraduates of Harvard who will take their degrees at the close of the present college year.

Mr. Howells' short play "Bride Roses," which appeared in Harper's Magazine last summer, was given at a special matinée at Daly's Theater last Monday afternoon. Though not written for stage production, the performance was most interesting and effective. It was delightful to hear its natural dialogue and to see its fine characterization. Moreover, the genuine dramatic quality of the theme and the perfect simplicity of its treatment were most impressive. The chief female character was admirably played by Mrs. James A. Herne, who interpreted the exact spirit of the piece.

Major Pond has secured Dr. Conan Doyle for a series of readings next winter. It is thought that Dr. Doyle, who is said to be a man of delightful personality and of a rare affability, will be a great success here. Furthermore, it is reported that Mr. Rider Haggard, who paid us a flying visit three years ago, may come over again in a year or so. Though the great Haggard boom is over the Haggard books are still popular, and if the author exhibits himself here there will doubtless be some curiosity to see him.

John D. Barry.

MINOR NOTICES.

A Chorus of Faith.

This is the fitting and attractive title given by Rev. Jenkins Lloyd Jones, the compiler, to a volume of extracts from the addresses delivered at the World's Parliament of Religions. The book ought to be intensely interesting to the bigot, as it is a prophecy and a harmony to the liberal mind. "The Prelude" is a poem by W. C. Gannett, while the prose introduction is by Mr. Jones, an eloquent Unitarian preacher of Chicago. He has arranged the contents under the headings "Harmony of the Prophets," "Holy Bibles," "Unity of Ethics," "Brotherhood," "The Soul," "The Thought of God," "The Crowning Day," "Farewell," and "Greeting." The work of selection has been so admirably performed that there is unity, sequence, and inspiration throughout the volume, which might well serve for daily reading instead of the usual, more conventional type of books for morning service and praise. — Unity Publishing Co. $1.25.

The New Redemption.

This is a series of six sermons by Rev. George D. Herron, D.D., on the Gospel and Social Life. In the first sermon the preacher announces the imminent social revolution; in the second, he sets forth the Christian doctrine of property; and in the remainder of the book he expounds fundamental Christian doctrines in terms of social relationship and experience. Dr. Herron belongs to the advanced school of political economists, but he conceives and treats economic questions from the view-point of the ardent Christian rather than from that of the philosophic student. Some of his statements will strike many readers as extreme, but all reasonable readers will respect his deep and genuine moral earnestness, and few can help feeling that again and again he utters the truth with penetrating insight and extraordinary force. It is a prophetic book, which might well be read by very many ministers and laymen. These two sentences especially deserve to be quoted: "The dangerous classes of every age and nation are they who, in the interest of religious or political parties, say that the wrong cannot be set right." "If we are to find a way out of social confusion, if we are to achieve industrial freedom, we must cease to look at the mere rights of capital, or the rights of labor, and look in the direction of the duty of man to man." — T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

Christ the Central Evidence of Christianity.

Rev. Principal Cairns, who is widely read on both sides of the Atlantic, has given especial attention to the defense of Christianity against modern hostile theories. In the present book, which is a collection of papers or tracts, he argues for the reasonableness of Christianity and miracles in the light of the present day. In the second chapter he shows that the unity of the character of Jesus is one of the most singular features in each gospel narrative. He seems to demonstrate that no other religion has such a mass of evidence in its favor — historic, prophetic, doctrinal, moral. No other religion, as Principal Cairns insists, could centralize all in the person of its founder. The great religions of the nations lie mainly outside of the lives of their human authors. Christianity is unique among religions as having at once an Alpha and an Omega. Even as the master works of Handel are now even more fully disclosed as he conceived them, so the future is to develop the still grander proportions of Christianity. Devoting a chapter to the success of Christianity and modern explanations of it, and another to the present state of Christian argument from prophecy, the author then discusses the question whether the evolution of Christianity from mere natural sources is credible, and concludes that it is not. This is, probably, his ablest chapter. The conclusion is an argument from the experience of Christians, which may be read as an appendix illustrating the late Professor Stearns' volume. — F. H. Revell Co. $1.00.

The Key of the Grave.

While there are living, there will also be mourners. To be able to comfort the sorrowing, either by the spoken word when grief is fresh, or through the printed page in the sad hours when the soul is willing to receive comfort, is a gift not to be despised. Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll possesses the power of consolation in eminent measure. His book is written directly for those who are discovering by actual experience what bereavement and death really are. Like a bee in the Scripture garden, able to extract from each flower of promise its richest honey, he has gathered together nectar for the sad soul. He quotes felicitously from those thinkers and speakers whose tongues are many but whose hearts are one in power of help and sympathy. The closing chapter is a pæan of faith and triumph. Bitter as death is, the author prefers to die with Christ rather than to live without him. Instead of the Buddhist prayer, "Deliver us from existence," he, with Amiel and with the Christian ages and with the Christ, prays "Deliver us from evil." — London: Hodder & Stoughton.

God is Love and Other Sermons.

A collection of twenty-two sermons by the late Rev. Aubrey L. Moore, honorary canon of Christ Church and fellow and tutor of St. John's College, Oxford, is presented in this comely volume. With distinct intention and uncommon effect they are tuned to the keynotes of the Church of England. From that point of view we pronounce them excellent — excellent both in form and manner; short, clear, direct, instructive, cheering, and helpful toward character and life. Some of them, like the opening one on the doctrine of the trinity as related to the divine love, are theological. Others, like that on the commination service, are explanatory and apologetic. Others, again, like those on "A Good Man," "The Dignity of Womanhood," Simon Magus, Abraham, and John the Baptist, are of practical import. Several relate to the life after death; that on the intermediate state of the blessed dead presents some views which will be new and striking to many of our readers. These last named discourses are peculiarly fitted to comfort those who mourn. All are full of the flavor of the New Testament. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

Short Studies in Character.

The value of this excellent book is weakened by its lack of distinction in style. It has little vivacity and few anecdotes or epigrams. It is heavily packed with valuable observations after the manner of sermons or treatises on moral philosophy. It is one of the series in the Ethical Library, edited by J. H. Muirhead. The author, Sophie Bryant, is "Mathematical Mistress in North London Collegiate School for Girls," and she deals here "with considerations of character as such" and "with educational problems arising therefrom." The essays on "Self-Development and Self-Surrender" and on "Causes and Cure of Moral Defects" are very good. The lecture on the "Inverse Socratic Method in Teaching" is the best statement of pedagogic method that has appeared within two or three years. It is so admirable that it should be printed separately and circulated among all teachers. Socrates was the true preceptor, inasmuch as he taught philosophy not as a fixed dogma but as true thinking activity. The author analyzes the difference between the Athenian youth and the modern child. The former had his opinions all formed, the latter has to make his; therefore, whatever is to be done is to be wrought by the child himself. Our problem is to wake up the child's mind and get it to ask questions — the inverse of the Socratic method, where the teacher questions. In this way the best self is developed, and the universal type may be eventually realized. — Macmillan & Co.

History of Chile.

It is well that light is being turned on the Central and South American Republics, for it will do them good and us good. A History of Chile, by Anson Uriel Hancock, a stout octavo of 470 pages, with a map and illustrations, is, however, a history, strictly speaking, and not a description, and will interest and repay the student rather than the reader of travel. It belongs to a series on Latin-American Republics, in which it was preceded by Markham's Peru. The subject is not an easy one. It is not without a picturesque background and much dramatic detail, but it is too near in time and too remote in space to touch vitally our sensibilities. The greater value of the work lies in its treatment of recent periods of war, revolt, and bloodshed; while statistics, the Chilean constitution in full, and a bibliography make it useful for reference. In short, this is a work for North American libraries, in every considerable one of which it ought to have a place as a vehicle of information which it would hardly be possible to find in any other single volume. — Charles H. Sergel & Co. $2.00.

Russia and Turkey in the Nineteenth Century.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wormeley Latimer has a happy faculty of combining and compiling facts garnered by the historians and putting them into a readable and popular form. The great difficulty with this volume is that it covers too much ground. Russia and Turkey are both huge countries, and their problems are gigantic. Some of the first chapters in the book are hard reading because they are highly condensed. On the other hand, the account of the assassination of Alexander II is dramatic, and the chapter on Siberia is intensely interesting. That fascinating creature Madam de Krüdener is well described. The writer tells the story of modern Russia better than she does the story of modern Turkey. Perhaps this is because Russia has, for an uncivilized country, produced an unusual number of remarkable men. Turkey, except in its relation to Russia, has much less interest for us. There is such an admiration for Russian literature in this country and such a dislike of the Russian government that this volume will probably find many readers. It presents a picture of Russia and Turkey as they exist today, and on the whole the picture is fair and impartial. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.50.

A Random Itinerary.

Under this name Mr. John Davidson gives his impressions of certain days with a picturesque beauty of wording which atones for the want of weighty matter. The book reminds one of the two volumes by the late Frank Bolles which are made impressive by their sincerity. Mr. Davidson is almost as close an observer of nature's moods as Mr. Bolles, but the Englishman writes for effect. He poses with heavy jocoseness in his imaginary (or real) conversations, and moralizes with levity, though he says bright things, as when he terms the London suburb "a great personality." However, the little volume will serve as a charming guide to a rambler. The closing poem, on the Browning theme of the music never brought to fruition on earth which becomes the music of the spheres, is truly noble and melodious. The edition, attractively bound, is limited to six hundred copies. — London: Elkin Matthews & John Lane; Boston: Copeland & Day.

On Sunny Shores.

Mr. Clinton Scollard's book with this title is at first exceptionally striking to the eye, by reason of its brilliant lilac cover touched off with white and gilt; but it is a cover far too delicate for ordinary handling. It next strikes the eye by reason of the pretty little woodcut vignettes scattered through the text, wherein Margaret Sanders Randolph has furnished dainty, sympathetic illustrations to the author's text. The text itself is mainly prose, consisting of a series of fifteen lightly written chapters of travel, beginning with the River Wye in England and ending in a Damascus garden. No chronological or otherwise logical narrative of travel is here; rather a portfolio of such pen and ink sketches as a poetically minded artist might paint — gentle, refined, warm with kindly sentiment, alive to the beauty in natural scenes, to the picturesque in human form and action, and to brightness of color. Each sketch ends with a little song in italic type, wherein the poet that is in Mr. Scollard spreads his wings of fancy and soars in graceful flight into the empyrean. After this manner he touches, in those two hundred or so of pages, the English Lakes, the Wordsworth Country and the Isle of Wight, the Neckar and the Tyrol, the Splügen and the Lake of Como, Milan and Verona, Athens and Corinth, and a few sacred points in the Holy Land. — Charles L. Webster & Co. $1.00.

Birds in a Village.

Mr. W. H. Hudson, the author of these papers on bird life, which are both scientific and popular, is well known as the author of Idle Days in Patagonia and The Naturalist in La Plata. The longest paper of the seven, which gives the title of the volume, is an interesting account of Mr. Hudson's observations of birds in a village not far from London. The other papers treat of Exotic Birds, Moor Hens in Hyde Park, the Eagle and the Canary, Chanticleer, and Birds in a Garden. The book belongs in the same delightful company with which Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller and Mr. Bradford Torrey have made us familiar. Mr. Hudson's previous books have shown how amply competent he is to such a task through his keenness of observation and his wide sympathy with animate life — a sympathy which is shown especially in his denunciation of the fashion of wearing stuffed birds and birds' wings on the hat or bonnet, which we may well hope with him has gone out for good. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.25.

Studies of the Stage.

The first and the final impression created by this little book, a series of essays by Professor Brander Matthews, is that of his sympathy with playwrights. He clearly indicates the difference between the art of the drama and that of prose fiction. The first has logic, movement, and synthesis; the latter is analytic. We are reminded of the Greek tragedies in the claim that "a drama must have the cumulative force of a heroic struggle against a foreseen catastrophe." The critiques on Lamb, Sarcey, and Lemaître are marked by true insight into the genius of the French and English nations. It is Molière more than Shakespeare who has formed modern English comedy. Lamb totally failed. Invention, ingenuity, and humor are more native to an American than to an Englishman, and therefore the farce flourishes with us. No little book has been written with more comprehension of what makes an "actable" drama than this. A drama, it is well said, must first render itself acceptable as drama before it is converted into the literature of a novel, notwithstanding the mercantile manner in which popular novels are rendered into plays. — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

Curtis' Orations and Addresses.

The second volume in the fine library edition of George William Curtis' Orations and Addresses is given up to addresses and reports on the reform of the civil service of the United States. Of this most important reform, indispensable to the preservation of our national integrity and to the success of many other much-needed reforms, Mr. Curtis was preëminently the spokesman. With masterly ability he drew upon the history of the spoils system and its thousandfold evils for illustrations of the vital need of a thorough change of methods. This reform is one that appeals most to those who realize the remote moral results of practices long familiar in the field of American politics; its business character offers, moreover, little opportunity for emotional display. When, then, a man of Mr. Curtis' oratorical power and moral fervor took up the task of exposing the corruptions of public and private honor due to the doctrine of Marcy and Jackson, it was a great piece of good fortune for the cause of good government. In his first address on the subject, in October, 1869, and the five other general reviews of the spoils system, here given, and the eleven annual addresses before the National Civil Service Reform League, of which he was the president, Mr. Curtis made a contribution of inestimable value in the application of morals to politics — an application needing all the time to be made, and which those noble discourses will assuredly do much to promote. — Harper & Brothers. $3.50.

A Century of Painters of the English School.

This second edition of Mr. Richard Redgrave's work is considerably shortened, and is arranged in a single volume for the convenience of art students. Hogarth, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Lawrence, Turner, Howard, Hilton, Haydon, Etty, Leslie, Newton, Constable, Landseer, Eastlake, and the Pre-Raphaelite school are carefully studied, and there are more than two dozen illustrations in the volume. No student of art in England can afford to be without this work by an R. A., who is also a C. B. His historical survey is thorough, and his knowledge of art enables him to criticise the different periods with sympathy and justice. An artist who is so catholic in his taste that he can appreciate Gainsborough and Lawrence without despising Rossetti and Turner is well fitted to write a history of painting. We commend the volume to all lovers of art. It is a distinctly valuable addition to art literature. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.75.

The American Girl at College.

Lida Rose McCabe has an excellent subject, and one about which very many people will welcome full and accurate information. It is a pity that her book is the outcome of only a flying visit to the women's colleges in New England and South, for a more careful study would have saved her from numerous slight mistakes of statement and enabled her to give her matter in a less journalistic form. Mrs. Palmer, the former president of Wellesley, will be surprised to find herself located at Chicago University, and Mr. Arthur Gilman, of the Annex at Cambridge, does not claim the title of professor which is freely bestowed upon him here. Under such headings as physical development, æsthetic culture, social life, aid from scholarships and fellowships, specialized work, and relative cost the author gives, in a somewhat miscellaneous manner, a considerable amount of information of great interest to young women looking forward to a college education and of no slight interest to many others. One notes casually, in reference to a point often raised in respect to college education for women, that the sophomore year at Smith is known as "the matrimonial epoch," as many students leave college then to be married; and that the latest figures show that college-bred women are marrying more now than formerly. At Bryn Mawr the arrangements for "hearers" at the college lectures is one that other colleges might well imitate. The president of Smith College, it appears, was once asked by a citizen of Northampton if "the first and only ball team at a female college" would not tend to make the girls masculine. He slyly inquired of the citizen if he had ever seen them bat a ball. "If you had," said he, "your fears would be allayed!" A more likely danger to the college girl, in the writer's view, is an excess of club life. She heartily favors coeducation, and in her closing chapters she points out the good that graduates of women's colleges have done in such directions as the Rivington Street Settlement in New York and the New England Kitchen in Boston. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.

Brave Lads and Bonnie Lasses.

We imagine that not a few of Mr. Frederick Myron Colby's lads and lasses are pure inventions; but in a way he may be said to be justified in their creation, since it is, of course, possible that a boy or a girl may have been present and taken part in any of the great events which have happened since the beginning of the world. The connection of the children with the narrative and their presence on the scene are often far-fetched and unlikely, and seem dragged in for the purpose of furnishing a taking title, as in "Two Noble Names," where the boys depicted are Barthes, younger brother of Cambyses, afterward king of Babylon, and an unknown Jewish youth called "Abihud," whom he saves from being run over by a chariot; neither name being "noble" enough to make any figure in history or be recognizable by any reader of the book. The same may be said of "How Two Boys Helped with Magna Charta," the presence of the boys being purely accidental, and all their assistance in the scene consisting in their being sent to prison for a week. — Hunt & Eaton. $1.50.

The Seeker in the Marshes.

Marshes imply mud, and there is more than the suggestion of a moral slough in these compositions by Daniel L. Dawson. Their animus is of the flesh, and their inspiration is mainly from Mr. Swinburne, with perhaps occasional assistance from the Widow Clicquot, to which inspirer of song frequent allusion is made. Love and its results form the theme of most of the poems, and there is a great deal about kisses and "bare, white smoothnesses," the curves of breasts and the cling of arms — all the amorous particulars, in fact, of which the fleshly school of rhymesters is so fond. Here and there a fresher and healthier note is heard, but the main melody is of wanton youth, prematurely old youth, which set sail on

> Styx's somber sea
> Today, sad heart, at twenty-three!

— Philadelphia: Rees, Welsh & Co. $1.25.

Very different in quality is the second edition of The Olive and the Pine, by Martha Perry Lowe, a volume of rhymed reminiscences of old and new Spain, sent out in the Columbian year as a fitting souvenir of the land of Columbus. They are absolutely deficient in passionate features, and thus furnish a certain relief after the hot fervors of Mr. Dawson's music; but they are also too much lacking in poetic quality and the power of picturesque portrayal, and their cadences make them hard to read aloud. — D. Lothrop Co. $1.00.

The Rev. Minot J. Savage of this city is in the habit of delivering one or more courses of sermons each year, which are bound up as books. His latest volume of this kind is entitled Jesus and Modern Life; the more appropriate title first chosen was "The Teaching of Jesus," but as this had been taken by the translator of Dr. Wendt's treatise, another name had to be selected. Mr. Savage considers, from the standpoint of a believer in the proper humanity of Jesus of Nazareth, the ideas which he seems to have held concerning the world, God, man, the kingdom of God, prayer, wealth and poverty, nonresistance, and woman and the marriage relation. Other sermons, on "Finding What Jesus Taught," "The Man of Nazareth," "The Sermon on the Mount," "Jesus and the Christ-Ideals," and "Christianity and the Religion of Jesus," precede or follow this main exposition. As a rationalist, Mr. Savage naturally points out that the opinion and practice of modern men are often at variance with the letter of the teaching of Jesus, and here he sides with the modern man. Much, if not most, of the preacher's declarations are unassailable, his premisses being granted; and there is no room for criticism on the score of unwillingness to recognize the greatness of Jesus. A more philosophic or a more spiritual-minded expositor would, however, often lay the emphasis in a different place. What Mr. Savage gives is the popular rationalism at its best; if all rationalism were as well informed and as reverent, the world would be much farther along than it is now theologically. — George H. Ellis. $1.00.

The volume entitled simply Discourses, by Rev. Edward H. Hall, lately pastor of the First Parish of Cambridge, Mass., contains some of the most virile and thoughtful sermons preached in America. Mr. Hall was an army chaplain in the Civil War, and one of these discourses, "An Indignity to Our Citizen Soldiers," is a strong protest against the prostitution of the pension system by politicians eager to make votes and veterans accepting government money when they are in comfortable circumstances. In "Justice to the Laborer" Mr. Hall, with the same strength of individuality and preference for truths and virtues neglected by the majority, declares the rights of the workman who does not join a trade union. In more strictly religious and theological fields these sermons display an intellectual strain of a very rare kind. Mr. Hall was (he has now retired from the pulpit to take up some scholarly task) a preacher to the reason preëminently, seeking to convince by weight of rational argument. While the majority of the laity might pronounce these discourses lacking in sentiment (which they confound too often with sentimentality), we can imagine no better intellectual tonic for the clergyman who wishes to command the respect, above all, of the most thoughtful element in his congregation than the reading and pondering of these sermons, manly in every good sense of the word. — George H. Ellis. $1.50.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who needs no introduction to the people of the United States, has issued a revised edition, based on the census of 1890, of his volume on Triumphant Democracy. This glowing and quite uncritical account of "sixty years' march of the Republic" has a distinct value as a compendium of facts and figures relating to the marvelous material progress of the United States in the last two generations; it has been compiled with pains, and for the most part is entirely reliable. Mr. Carnegie has adopted a style of declamation, however, which makes the thoughtful American smile, it reminds him so much of the conventional Fourth of July oration, especially in the days before the war. The volume belongs distinctively to what Mr. Bryce calls "the trumpeting school," less politely known as "spread-eagle" and "Yankee doodle-doo." Mr. Carnegie has very solid reasons for satisfaction with his adopted country; but a great many Americans are led by the very prosperity of such men, however well they spend their fortunes (and Mr. Carnegie deserves respect for what he has done), to serious reflection on the present state of things, political and industrial. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.

School Management, a volume by Emerson E. White, widely known by his Mathematical series, adds another to the increasing number of books on pedagogy; fortunately for that science, they are not all marked by originality, though none of them should ever be written except through inspiration. The present treatise is practical, suggestive, and methodical. The book will be especially useful for teachers of ungraded rural schools. The author claims that the formation of character is "the central function and duty of the school." From such a position many will dissent. He finds the material for moral training in the use of "literary gems," history, and the like. He argues that for such training the highest motives must be used — the religious; therefore religion, as a means not as an end, is to be taught, in very much the way in which it is now taught — through devotional exercises and a reverent spirit. — American Book Co. $1.00.

A series of a dozen volumes is projected by Messrs. G. Lafenestre and E. Richtenberger under the general title of "Painting in Europe," of which the first volume, The Louvre, has been published. It is the intention of the two authors to furnish a kind of superior guidebook to the great collections of Europe, in which the plan is followed of taking the various rooms of the great galleries in order, so that the tourist will have the least possible trouble in consulting his guide as he goes through the gallery. Out of the three thousand pictures in the Louvre this volume gives more or less detailed accounts of two thousand; the particulars given are the number, painter, and dimensions of the picture; its title, particulars concerning its later sales, and a brief description, varying from two or three to a dozen lines, of a picture itself. There are one hundred more or less successful typogravures of the more important canvases. We should say that such a series of guidebooks, if equally well executed with the first issue, would be a great convenience to the European tourist — Paris: Ancienne Maison Quantin.

Mr. Louis C. Elson of the New England Conservatory of Music in this city is one of the most interesting as well as reliable writers on music. His volume published by the Conservatory, and entitled The Realm of Music, consists of an entertaining and instructive series of essays, brought together from various periodicals, on such subjects as reformers in music, the rise of the sonata, the relations of law and music to medicine, musical instruments, royal musicians, the evolution to Verdi, musical novels, our national anthem, and the like. The majority of the papers are historical and educational, and they are within the easy comprehension of any reader at all interested in musical matters. Mr. Elson's European Reminiscences is a still more readable and entertaining volume, based on letters to several American papers during vacation tours in England, Germany, France, and Italy. Mr. Elson was at Bayreuth during the lifetime of Wagner, and at Naples shortly after a great earthquake. Wherever he went he made the acquaintance of the great musicians of the day, of whom he gives a vivid description. The abounding good cheer of the writer is evident in every chapter. It is distinctively as a book of impressions of a musical travel that the book is of value. — Chicago Manual Publishing Co.

The anonymous work in three volumes which G. P. Putnam's Sons publish in this country, under the title The King and the Kingdom, is a study of the Four Gospels, apparently made by a layman of leisure in England. His method is to base his continuous commentary on the narratives of the Four Gospels woven together in a probable chronological order. The chapter and verse are given in the margin. There is no division of the exposition itself by chapters or sections. The author appears to be an "evangelical" Christian of wide sympathies; but his scholarship is evidently limited, and few of his comments or remarks suggested by the text possess much force or novelty. A study of more than one thousand pages in length needs to have more freshness and vigor of scholarship than these volumes show to be an addition to either the scientific or the popular literature of the Gospels. — $4.20.

Dr. Charles Waldstein in his thoughtful discussion of The Work of John Ruskin treats Ruskin as a writer on art, as "the founder of the phenomenology of nature," as a prose poet, and as a writer on social, political, and economic questions, with more moderation than the majority of his expositors. He perceives the gross exaggeration of much of Ruskin's denunciation of opinions that he does not hold, and points out the inadequate allowance made for the play element in life. Ruskin's greatest achievement Dr. Waldstein holds to be the endowment of man "with a new habit of mind and the laying of a foundation for a new class of observation . . . midway between science and art." — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

The sixth part of the valuable Dictionary of Political Economy, edited by R. H. Inglis Palgrave, F.R.S., brings the work to the end of E. Hereafter the publication in parts will be discontinued, and only complete volumes will be issued. In this section exchange and English economic history are the two most prominent subjects treated; but Mr. John Rae's short article on the eight-hour movement, which he decidedly favors, will be of great interest to many. The article on employers and employed recognizes, as well as others, the great services of Pres. F. A. Walker to economic theory. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

We infer, without being distinctly so informed, that the paragraphic papers which make up A String of Amber Beads are gathered from the newspaper. Mrs. Martha Everts Holden — whose photograph enriches the volume — treats upon such topics as "I Didn't Think," "Mind Your Own Business," "What I'm Tired Of," and "Blessed be Bashfulness," after a sketchy and rather slangy fashion, but with a certain amount of insight and good sense. The propriety of putting such a mélange of disjointed thoughts into book form is questionable. — Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

The second and concluding volume of Mr. C. G. Crump's edition of The Longer Prose Works of Walter Savage Landor contains "The Pentameron," five additional "Conversations," and three critical essays on Theocritus, Catullus, and Petrarca. An index to the whole set of Landor's works in ten volumes. as edited by Mr. Crump, is found at the end. Its main object is stated to have been "to indicate as far as possible allusions to Landor's own life scattered throughout the volume and to illustrate his opinions." — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Bon-Mots of Sidney Smith and R. Brinsley Sheridan and Bon-Mots of Charles Lamb and Douglas Jerrold are two pretty volumes, edited by Walter Jerrold and illustrated by Aubrey Beardsley. The latter's grotesques have no pertinency or suitableness to the humorous pages they disfigure; but Mr. Jerrold has done his editorial work much better, and the two selections are entertaining books to take up occasionally. — Macmillan & Co.

Ursula N. Gestefeld's Modern Catechism is a rather peculiar compound of rationalism and mysticism. "God" and "the Lord" spoken of in the Bible are not the same, it appears, and diseases are healed by healing the soul. Adam is "the first note of the human octave," and the performer is the I. The inadequacy of such a creed as is here professed is most forcibly felt when it is reduced to the form of a catechism. — Lovell, Gestefeld & Co. 25c.

Afterglow is a small book made up of four manly and feeling sermons by Frederic A. Hinckley. The sudden death of his daughter furnished the tragic occasion for the first discourse, "Voices Out of the Silence," and its influence is to be seen or felt in the other three, on "All Things in Common," "Spiritual Awakening," and "The Star! the Star!" — George H. Ellis. 50c.

Mr. William Moodie's collection of stories, anecdotes, legends, and similar illustrative material for teachers in Sunday schools, entitled Tools for Teachers, seems to have been compiled with much taste and good sense. Its range is very wide through history and biography, and the varied material is rendered easy of reference by an index of persons and another of subjects. — Thomas Whittaker. $2.00.

The widow of Bayard Taylor has added a short chapter, a dozen pages in length, to his History of Germany in one volume, first issued in 1874. Her work has been done with the same candor that marked the original work; but the publishers would have done well to revise the style, as it shows numerous marks of inexpertness in such good English as Bayard Taylor himself wrote. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

The Essay on Judicial and Unconstitutional Legislation, by the late Brinton Coxe of the Philadelphia Bar, is a legal commentary on those parts of the Constitution which treat of the judicial power, State and national, in its relation to the Constitution. We can only call attention here to the nature of the work, which is one that lawyers alone can well determine the value of. — Philadelphia: Kay & Brother.

The Insight of Faith is a little volume of thoughts from the sermons of Henry Wilder Foote, the last pastor of King's Chapel in this city; they are true to the title given them, as they came out of faith and will surely go to increase it in the minds of those who read. — George H. Ellis. 50c.

Keep Your Mouth Shut is a vigorous little treatise on the causes, effects, and treatment of mouth breathing, by F. A. A. Smith, an English M.D. He points out the many diseases, of children especially, which arise from breathing through the mouth, and an appendix is devoted to ophthalmia in newborn children. — Roberts Brothers. 50c.

The Argument for Immortality, the fine address given at the Parliament of Religions, Chicago, September 13, 1893, by the Rev. Philip S. Moxom, D.D., has been printed by the Riverside Press in its usual good form; it is for sale by Damrell & Upham, Estes & Lauriat, N. J. Bartlett, and the American Unitarian Association, Boston. — 10c.

The Universities and the Churches is an address, delivered at the thirty-first University Convocation (Senate Chamber, Albany, N.Y.) by Prof. R. T. Ely, which deserves the attention of all friends of education in the West. Professor Ely shows convincingly the evils wrought by sectarianism in education and the extreme desirability of making the State universities as strong as possible.

The Bibliography of Wisconsin Authors whose publications are in the library of the State Historical Society fills 263 well-printed pages, making a record of no small importance and of which Wisconsin may be justly proud. — Madison, Wis.: Democrat Printing Co.

Two choice volumes of love poems in the Cameo series, published by the Cassell Company, are Love-Songs of Robert Burns, selected by Sir George Douglas, and Irish Love-Songs, selected by Katharine Tynan. The latter volume has special freshness and beauty. — Each, $1.25.

PERIODICALS.

In the March Century Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden's crusade against the "Anti-Catholic Party" will provoke great interest and discussion. As he writes, it is discouraging that "the year of the Parliament of Religions in this country" should witness also a great outburst of religious rancor. The A. P. A. he condemns heartily and cannot understand why it should be approved by sensible people. The interesting article on "A Pilgrimage to Lourdes" shows how very far from holding a reasonable religious faith the larger part of the world still is. Twenty thousand pilgrims in one day visited this wonderful pool and one mail brought five hundred letters addressed to "Our Lady of Lourdes." "The City Tramp" is sure to interest many readers, as the tramp is a problem facing them almost daily. "The Street Beggar" Mr. Josiah Flynt considers "the cleverest all-round vagabond in the world." This series of articles on "Tramp Life" is really educational to the public. The reports of Charity Organization societies are usually left unread by the intelligent public, who permit themselves to be deceived over and over again by beggars that are deliberately trying to get the best of them. Another lecture by James Russell Lowell, on "The Imagination," is full of thought and imagery. The article on "Earthquakes," by Edward S. Holden, is historical and scientific and full of facts unknown to most of us. The fiction of this number is not remarkable, although Mary H. Foote's continued story and Mark Twain's "Pudd'n Head Wilson" are interesting.

In Scribner's for March Joel Chandler Harris contributes a second paper on "The Sea Island Hurricanes," his special subject being the more cheerful topic, "The Relief." Two recent phenomena of American city life, "The High Building and its Art" and "The Cable Street-Railway," are treated by Mr. Barr Ferree and Mr. Philip G. Hubert, Jr.; Mr. Ferree looks with most favor on the plainest of the "sky-scrapers," though he praises the Ames building in Boston as it deserves. "Milton Visiting Galileo," by Tito Lessi, is the frontispiece chosen by Mr. Hamerton, who sketches Lessi's life and work. "On Piratical Seas," the account of a merchant's voyages to the West Indies in 1805, by Peter A. Grotjan, is continued, and "Subtropical Florida" is described by Charles R. Dodge. The first installment of "A Pound of Cure," a story of Monte Carlo, by W. H. Bishop, six chapters more of Mr. Cable's "John March, Southerner," and "The Summer Intimacy," by George A. Hibbard, are the fiction of the number. Octave Thanet describes "The Farmer in the North" as an "American Type" in a manner more entertaining than satisfactory.

The New England Magazine for March has a varied and attractive list of articles. Among them the more notable are "Vermont at the World's Fair;" "Christian Socialism," by Rev. P. S. Moxom, D.D., with a portrait; "Exeter and its Academy," by S. Alice Ranlett, an excellent account of this fine old New Hampshire town and its famous school; "Holbein's Portraits," fully illustrated, by Abby F. Ferry; "The Fabian Society," by William Clarke; and "Spring Days at Nassau," by W. H. Downes.

In the March McClure's there is a short story by Mr. Kipling and another by Octave Thanet. Dr. Conan Doyle's contribution, "The Glamour of the Arctic," is an account of Arctic whaling written from his own personal experience. The Stevenson-Osbourne serial, "The Ebb Tide," grows in interest. Herbert Spencer writes of his intimate friend of forty years, the late Professor Tyndall. Closeness and sympathy of personal relation gives a special value also to a biographical and character study of Ruskin, by M. H. Spielmann, editor of the Magazine of Art. Several portraits of Ruskin and pictures of his home and country add interest to the article. In freshness and importance of information Miss Ida M. Tarbell's account of the scientific method of identifying criminals in France is the leading article of the number. It is illustrated from photographs especially provided by M. Bertillon, the inventor of the method. The subjects of the "Human Documents" portraits are Andrew Lang, J. T. Trowbridge, and Renan.

The reasons for and against "An Income-Tax" are presented in the Forum for March by Hon. U. S. Hall of Missouri and Mr. David A. Wells; Mr. Wells' argument has much less than the usual force of his positions, as he has many of the economists against him and has to make his fight on other than properly economic grounds. Mr. Simon Sterne writes ably on "Recent Railroad Failures and Their Lessons." Mr. Godkin's paper on "The Duty of Educated Men in a Democracy" is a strong but temperate plea for more criticism, by such men, of the government they live under. Prof. F. G. Peabody favors "Colonization as a Remedy for City Poverty." First among "Current Plans for Reforming Society," Mr. Bellamy's "Nationalism" is presented by him, and criticised in a very unfeeling and logical manner by Prof. W. G. Sumner of Yale. Dr. E. R. L. Gould describes and commends "The Gothenburg System" of dealing with the liquor traffic. Rev. J. W. Chadwick happily sets forth "Lowell in His Letters." Dr. H. D. Chapin presents a record of six hundred cases of "Child-Study in the Hospital." Two papers that shed very different lights on religion in our country are Dr. H. K. Carroll's on the "Stability of the Great Religious Sects" and Rev. W. B. Hale's keen "Religious Analysis of a New England Town," i.e., Middleboro, Mass.

In Poet-Lore for March the best thing is Mrs. Isabel Francis Bellows' paper on "Pippa Passes," read before the Boston Browning Society in December last, though there is an ambitious essay on "Literature and the Scientific Spirit" of somewhat doubtful value, by Prof. Oscar L. Triggs, and a discussion of "Character in 'Much Ado about Nothing,'" by C. A. Wurzburg. The translation of Maeterlinck's "Seven Princesses" is concluded.

The March number of the Political Science Quarterly opens with "Some Ideas on Constitutional Revision," by J. B. Uhle of the New York bar; Mr. A. D. Noyes, financial editor of the evening Post, presents a critical study of "The Banks and the Panic of 1893;" Prof. John Dewey of Michigan University examines anew "Austin's Theory of Sovereignty;" Mr. C. M. Platt contrasts and compares "Positive Law and Other Laws;" Mr. Edward Porritt, the veteran English journalist, describes the earlier and the current phases of "The Revolt Against Feudalism in England;" Mr. G. H. Blunden, the British expert, contributes the first installment of an elaborate study of "British Local Finance;" and Prof. W. G. Ashley of Harvard sums up the latest knowledge as to "The Village in India." Some forty book notices close the number.

In the Review of Reviews for March Mr. Talcott Williams describes the many and perpetual generosities of "Childs the Giver;" the editor gives the outlook for "A New Constitution for New York;" "The Story of the World's Parliament of Religions" is told again by Rev. F. H. Stead apropos of the volume by Dr. Barrows, with many portraits; and "Miss Clara Barton and the Red Cross" are the subject of Sophia W. R. Williams' paper.

The Harvard Graduates' Magazine for March is of more than usual interest to the world in general, as it contains articles on "Francis Parkman," by James Schouler; "How to Reform Football," by Lorin F. Deland; "Radcliffe College," an account of it from the very beginning, by J. B. Warner; and "Frank Bolles," by the editor, W. R. Thayer. There are portraits of Mr. Parkman and Mr. Bolles. The usual full review of the doings of the university and of Harvard men everywhere is given.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Among the interesting memoirs announced for publication the coming spring is Sir John Astley's Fifty Years of My Life. The author was an officer in the guards during the Crimean War. Messrs. Longmans have in the press Further Recollections of a Busy Life, consisting of social, political, agricultural, and sporting records, by Mr. J. Kersley Fowler, author of Echoes of Old Country Life.

—There will shortly be published by Messrs. Williams & Norgate a new work by the Rev. Charles Voysey on Theism; or, The Religion of Common Sense. The author claims for his book that it is a plain and concise statement of the principles and beliefs of the Theistic Church, which, he explains, was founded in 1871 to establish "a true religion on grounds of reason, conscience, and love, apart from so-called revelation."

—The History of the United States Navy, upon which Mr. Edgar Stanton Maclay has been engaged for the last nine years, is now nearing completion. It is a curious fact that no complete history of the navy has been published since Fenimore Cooper's time, and Mr. Maclay's elaborate work will meet a demand which has grown stronger since the public became interested in the building up of our new navy. Mr. Maclay's history comes down to 1894. It will be published by the Appletons.

—The statement that Prince Bismarck's memoirs have been sold to the firm of Cotta of Stuttgart has been semi-officially denied. It is declared that they have not been finished, and that no sale has been effected. Further, an English publisher is said to be angling for the great catch, and baiting his hook heavily for the purpose.

—Mr. Walter Besant has recently gathered together the short stories which he has from ime to time published during the last two or three years in various journals and periodicals. They will be issued shortly in volume form by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, the title being that of the most important story, "In Deacon's Orders." Mr. Besant also proposes to publish at early dates two volumes, entitled respectively Literary Essays and Social Essays.

—Messrs. Chapman & Hall, London, have in press an edition in two volumes of An American Peeress, by Mr. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor. The American publishers, Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co., have in press a second edition of the book.

—Macmillan & Co.'s announcements of forthcoming books include the following titles, among numerous others: American Book-plates, by Chas. Dexter Allen; Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, edited by A. W. Pollard; Village Sermons, second series, by R. W. Church, D.C.L.; The Raiders, being some passages in the life of the Faa Lord and Earl of Little Egypt, by S. R. Crockett, author of The Stickit Minister; The Divine Comedy of Dante Alighieri, a version in the Spenserian stanza, by George Musgrave, M.A., St. John's College, Oxford, and barrister-at-law, Part I, "The Inferno;" Elements of Metaphysics, by Prof. Karl Deussen of Kiel, authorized translation; the remaining volumes of the new and popular edition of the novels and other works of Charles Dickens; Life in Ancient Egypt, by Adolf Erman; in the Ex Libris series, edited by Gleeson White, Dürer's Little Passion, and The Decorative Illustration of Books, by Walter Crane; Specimens of French Literature in the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, edited by G. Eugène Fasnacht, author of The Progressive French and German Courses; The Letters of Edward Fitzgerald, edited by W. Aldis Wright, two volumes, new edition; Western Europe in the Fifth Century and Western Europe in the Eighth Century, two volumes of lectures delivered at Oxford, by E. A. Freeman, D.C.L.; The Life of Sir A. C. Ramsay, by Sir Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.; Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, by Alice Stopford Green, in two volumes; The Way, The Truth, The Life, Lectures on Judaistic Christianity, and Introductory Lectures on St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans and to the Ephesians, by the Rev. F. J. A. Hort, late Lady Margaret professor of divinity, Cambridge; Logic, by Prof. Williston S. Hough; Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, a series of essays selected from the Spectator, by Richard Holt Hutton, M.A.; Social Evolution, by Benjamin Kidd; The Principles of Psychology, by G. F. Stout, M.A.; Dictionary of Political Economy, by R. H. Inglis Palgrave, F.R.S., Vol. I; The Life of Henry Edward Manning, Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, by Edmund Sheriden Purcell, member of the Roman Academy of Letters; the Cambridge Shakespeare, édition de luxe; Oxford and Her Colleges, a view from the Radcliffe, by Goldwin Smith, D.C.L.; Sources of the Constitution of the United States, by the Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens; Questions of the Day, sermons on social and other questions, by the Rev. David J. Vaughan, M.A.; The Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson, by William Winter; History of Anglo-Saxon Literature, by Richard P. Wülcker; Lectures on Human and Animal Psychology, by Prof. Wilhelm Wundt, translated from the second and revised German edition (1892) by J. E. Creighton and E. B. Titchener.

—A life of Dr. J. G. Holland, by Mrs. Thomas F. Plunkett, is in the press of Charles Scribner's Sons. Mrs. Plunkett was an old and intimate friend of Dr. Holland's, and his family have placed in her hands all the material necessary to make an interesting life of this popular author.

—Miss Olive Schreiner is engaged to be married to Mr. Cron Wright, the son of a well-known South African farmer and member of the Cape Parliament. He is four or five years her junior, a successful farmer and a clever speaker, and will probably enter parliamentary life. It is said that more than 70,000 copies of An African Farm have been sold.

—A new work by Mr. Ruskin will be published next month, entitled Verona and Other Lectures, and illustrated with frontispiece in color and eleven photogravure plates from drawings by the author. It will consist of five chapters, four of which were prepared to be delivered as lectures during Mr. Ruskin's tenure of the Slade professorship at Oxford. One has been written since his resignation. The lecture which gives its title to the volume, "Verona and its Rivers," was delivered at the Royal Institution in 1870, and is now printed in extenso for the first time. The second, "The Story of Arachne," dealing with Greek mythology, was read at Woolwich in 1870, and has hitherto been represented only by a brief report in a daily newspaper. "The Tortoise of Ægina" was prepared for the Oxford course on Greek sculpture known as "Aratra Pentelici," but it was not delivered, and has remained until now in manuscript. The last two chapters of the book are connected with the projected series of Our Fathers Have Told Us, "Candida Casa," treating of the beginnings of Christianity in Britain, and "Mending the Sieve," a lecture on the Cistercians and their architecture given at the London Institution in 1882.—Literary World, London.

—T. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately, in connection with the Irish Literary Society, a volume of addresses under the title of The Revival of Irish Literature. These will include two lectures by Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, delivered within the last two years; one by Mr. George Sigerson, on "Irish Literature: its Origin and Environment;" and one by Dr. Douglas Hyde, on "The Necessity for de-Anglicizing Ireland."

—Prof. Richard T. Ely's Social Aspects of Christianity, published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., has been placed by the religious denomination known as the United Brethren in Christ in their course of study for theological students. The Methodists have also adopted it in their prescribed course of study, and it has likewise found its way into the Bible classes of several of the Western churches.

—Among the books announced by Mr. Murray are: Correspondence of Mr. Joseph Jekyll with his Sister-in-Law, Lady Gertrude Sloane Stanley, 1818–1838, edited with memoir by the Hon. Algernon Burke; The Epistles of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, Galatians, and Romans, with notes and dissertations, by the late Professor Jowett, including the famous "Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture" (which appeared originally in Essays and Reviews), Professor Campbell of St. Andrews having edited and condensed the materials; a second volume of The Scientific Papers and Addresses of Werner von Siemens; and a new library edition, with considerable additions, of Sir Alfred Lyall's Rise of the British Dominion in India.

—The recently published nineteenth annual issue of the Report of the Department of Education in Japan gives some interesting data from that interesting country. The report, among others, contains a history of the modern educational movement in Japan. Through the energetic agitation of the new Minister of Education, Kono Tokama, who entered upon his duties in August, 1892, educational matters in Japan are progressing most auspiciously. Native teachers are better paid, while fewer foreign teachers are employed than before. In fifteen of the larger cities there are public libraries, that of Fukushima containing 18,225 volumes and that of Miyagi, 3,719. In the Royal University Library there are 187,551 volumes, of which 81,986 are in European languages. The library at Tokio contains 31,629 volumes, and of these 2,332 are in European languages.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish at once The Story of Margrédel, being a fireside history of a Fifeshire family, by a new writer. They have also in press The Natural Law of Money, by William Brough, and The Sphere of the State; or, The People as a Body Politic, with special consideration of certain present problems, by Frank Sargent Hoffman, A.M., professor of philosophy in Union College.

—American book-lovers will be interested to learn that the List of Private Libraries in America, now being compiled by Mr. G. Hedeler of Leipzig (Poststr. 3), already includes five hundred considerable libraries. The happy possessors of libraries with whom Mr. Hedeler has been unable to communicate are requested to furnish him with a few details as to the extent of their treasures and the special direction to which they devote themselves. It is obviously for the interest of bibliographical science that a work of this kind should be as complete as possible, and it is advisable not to delay sending the information, or the editor may, to his regret, be compelled to go to press without it.

—The Washington Publishing Co. will soon publish a book on Washington life, by L. A. Coolidge, the Washington correspondent of the New York Recorder, and J. B. Reynolds, the Washington correspondent of the Boston Advertiser; its title is The Show at Washington, and it will contain sketches, stories, and pen pictures of the celebrities at the nation's capital.

—During his life M. Renan wrote and circulated among his most intimate friends a little book entitled Henriette Renan: Souvenir pour ceux qui l'ont connue. Only a hundred copies were printed, but Madame Renan will give it to the public as soon as her son, M. Ary Renan, shall have completed five pictures for its illustration. These pictures will include the birthplace of Renan in Brittany, and also one or two Syrian pictures. This charming little book of Renan's will not only introduce his readers to a woman of fine temperament, whose life was characteristic of her race, but also contain some of those local descriptions and portraitures in which he is always felicitous. A volume of M. Renan's philological memoirs will appear soon.

—Robert Clarke & Co. have in press or in preparation for early issue Queen Moô and the Egyptian Sphinx, by Dr. Augustus Le Plongeon; a reprint of Key to the Hebrew-Egyptian Mystery in the Source of Measures, originating the British inch and the ancient cubit (by which was built the Great Pyramid of Egypt and the temple of Solomon, and through the possession and use of which man, assuming to realize the creative law of the Deity, set it forth in a mystery, among the Hebrews called the Kabbala), by J. Ralston Skinner; The History of Illinois and Louisiana under the French Rule (embracing a general view of the French dominion in North America, with some account of the English occupation of Illinois), by Jos. Wallace; Recollections of Life in Ohio, from 1813 to 1840, by William Cooper Howells, with an introduction by his son, Mr. W. D. Howells; and Judaism at the World's Parliament of Religions, to contain the papers read at the Jewish Denominational Congress, the Jewish Women's Congress, the Jewish Presentation at the Parliament, and the Parliament proper.

— D. Appleton & Co. will issue next month an English translation of Baron Claude-François de Méneval's Memoirs Pour Servir à l'Histoire de Napoleon Ier, 1802–1815, a work written about fifty years ago by one of the most trusted of Napoleon's private secretaries, which has now been wholly remodeled and revised by his grandson; Memoirs of Edward L. Youmans, by John Fiske; Symbolic Education, by Susan E. Blow; and Aphorisms from the Writings of Herbert Spencer, selected and arranged by Julia Raymond Gingell. The Town and Country Library will also shortly receive additions in Dorothea Gerard's Lot 13; Sarah Grand's Our Manifold Nature, a Collection of Short Stories; Rhoda Broughton's A Beginner; Maxwell Gray's A Costly Freak; and Gilbert Parker's The Trespasser.

— Copeland & Day, 69 Cornhill, Boston, will shortly put their imprint on an edition of Oscar Wilde's one-act tragedy of Salome, translated by the author from his original French version, with illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley; on a volume of poems by Francis Thompson; on a volume of verse by Miss Katherine Tynan; and on the third edition of Le Gallienne's poems. Their first American book will be Vagabondia, a book of poems by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey, in which it will be left to readers to trace the separate verses to their author, for they will not be signed. Messrs. Copeland & Day have an æsthetic little office on Cornhill, and announce that they hope to need very large, not very limited editions of their publications. They intend to get out books, as they should be manufactured in times when paper, type, and binding have reached almost perfection, in as large editions as may be called for.

— The third volume of Mr. George William Curtis' Orations and Addresses will issue from the press of the Harpers about the middle of March. It will contain the more important historical and memorial addresses delivered by Mr. Curtis, including among others orations on the "Centennial Celebration of Concord Fight," "Burgoyne's Surrender," "The Unveiling of the Statue of Washington" on the spot where he first took the oath of office in New York, and the eulogies of Sumner, Garfield, Bryant, Lowell, Wendell Phillips, and Robert Burns. It will also contain a photogravure portrait of Mr. Curtis.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

In the Footsteps of Charles Lamb. By Benjamin Ellis Martin. New edition. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

The Political Economy of Natural Law. By Henry Wood. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Primary Elections. A Study of Methods for Improving the Basis of Party Organization. By Daniel S. Remsen. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

Dictionary of Political Economy. Edited by R. H. Inglis Palgrave, F.R.S. Sixth Part. Drengage–Eyton. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Educational.

Guide to the Study of Common Plants. By Volcey M. Spalding. D. C. Heath & Co. 85c.

Lælius. A Dialogue on Friendship. By M. Tullius Cicero. Edited by E. S. Shuckburgh, A.M. New edition, revised and enlarged, by H. C. Johnson, A.M. Macmillan & Co. 40c.

Riehl's Das Spielmannskind. Der Stumme Ratsherr. Edited by Abbie Fiske Eaton. D. C. Heath & Co. 25c.

Introduction to Elementary Practical Biology. By Chas. Wright Dodge. Harper & Brothers. $1.80

The Orthoepist. A Pronouncing Manual. By Alfred Ayres. New and Revised edition of 1894, much enlarged. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

A First Book in Algebra. By Wallace C. Boyden. Silver, Burdett & Co. 60c.

The Progressive Speller. By F. P. Sever. D. C. Heath & Co. 30c.

Essays and Sketches.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Vol. II. Harper & Brothers. $3.50

Parisian Points of View. By Ludovic Halévy. Tr. by Edith V. B. Matthews. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Science and Hebrew Tradition. Essays. By Thos. H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Studies of the Stage. By Brander Matthews. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

A Random Itinerary. By John Davidson. London: Elkin Mathews & John Lane; Boston: Copeland & Day.

The Jacobean Poets. By Edmund Gosse. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00 net.

Oliver Wendell Holmes. By Walter Jerrold. With portrait. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

Fiction.

Countess Dynar; or, Polish Blood. By Nataly von Eschstruth. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

The Penance of John Logan, and Two Other Tales. By William Black. New and revised edition. Harper & Brothers. 80c.

Horace Chase. A Novel. By Constance Fenimore Woolson. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

In Direst Peril. A Novel. By David Christie Murray. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes. By A. Conan Doyle. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

Ships that Pass in the Night. By Beatrice Harraden. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Egyptian Harp Girl. A Mystery of the Peristyle. By "Quondam." Laird & Lee.

God's Will, and Other Stories. By Ilse Frapan. Tr. by Helen A. Macdonnell. Cassell Pub. Co. 50c.

Sell Not Thyself. A Novel. By Winnifred Kent. Laird & Lee. $1.00

A Marriage Ceremony. By Ada Cambridge. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Last Sentence. By Maxwell Gray. Illustrated. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.50

David of Juniper Gulch. By Lillian Shuey. Illustrated. Laird & Lee.

John Ingerfield, and Other Stories. By Jerome K. Jerome. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

VICTORS are Standard Value.

The standard price of Victor Bicycles is $125.00. No deviation, and Victor riders are guaranteed against cut rates during the current year.

OVERMAN WHEEL CO.

BOSTON. PHILADELPHIA. DETROIT.
NEW YORK. CHICAGO. DENVER.
SAN FRANCISCO.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England, France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

IF YOU ARE GOING WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston. J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

FRANK T. SABIN'S Catalogue of Fine and Rare Books, Engravings, Autographs, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

Important New Books.

Discovery of Lakes Rudolph and Stefanie.

An Account of Count Samuel Teleki's Exploring and Hunting Expedition in Eastern Equatorial Africa in 1887 and 1888, by his Companion, Lieut. LUDWIG VON HÖHNEL. Translated by Nancy Bell (N. D'Anvers). With 179 illustrations and 2 large and 4 small colored maps. 2 vols., large 8vo, 865 pp., $12.00.

"A splendid book of travel. . . . The illustrations are themselves of the highest interest. No such series of pictures have we ever found in a book of travel; full of life and vigor they are, and without an apparent element of exaggeration, though many of them make the nerves thrill with a sense of almost personal danger. The sympathy thus excited is sustained by the text, and as we read on and on we feel that we are learning by the pleasantest process possible in following the details of personal experience in a land for the most part wholly new to European eyes. What these travelers have to tell is of deep interest not only to statesmen who have to deal with the African problem, to geographers, to naturalists, but to philologists, and in an especial sense to sportsmen. . . . From all points of view—general interest, scientific value, exciting adventure, and perfect illustration—Lieutenant Von Höhnel's work is not far from the best that have been produced out of the Dark Continent."—Daily Chronicle.

Legends of the Micmacs.

By the Rev. SILAS TERTIUS RAND, D. D. With introduction by Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Professor of Comparative Philology in Wellesley College. (Wellesley Philological Publications.) 8vo, xlvi–452 pages, $3.50.

Wills, and How Not to Make Them.

With a Selection of Leading Cases. By B. B. WEST, author of "Half-Hours with the Millionaires." Fcap. 8vo, $1.00.

Deeds of Montrose:

The Memoirs of James, Marquis of Montrose, 1639–1650. By the Rev. GEORGE WISHART, D. D. (Bishop of Edinburgh, 1662–1671). Translated, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, and the Original Latin (Part II. now first published), by the Rev. Alexander D. Murdoch, F. S. A. Scot., and H. F. Morland Simpson, M. A. (Cantab.), F. S. A. Scot. Fettes College. With a portrait from Gerard Honthorst's painting of the Marquis (1649), Plans of his last campaign, etc. 4to, $10.00 net.

Madoc:

An Essay on the Discovery of America by Madoc ap Owen Gwynedd in the Twelfth Century.

By THOMAS STEPHENS, author of "The Literature of the Kymry." Edited by Llywarch Reynolds, B. A. Oxon. 8vo, $2.50.

Varieties in Prose.

By WILLIAM ALLINGHAM. 3 vols., crown 8vo, $6.00. Vols. I. and II.—Rambles by Patricius Walker. Vol. III.—Irish Sketches, etc.

"These essays and descriptive papers, some of which are new to us, being now first published, are happily named. Various, indeed, are they in scope as in value and interest. The charming "Irish Sketches" in the third volume are doubtless familiar to many readers, and deserve the attention of all who know them not. Not less characteristic, and certainly not less enjoyable, are the "Rambles by Patricius Walker," which occupy the first two volumes. There is a peculiar charm, which we have proved once more to be an abiding charm, for us in these delightful records of impressions of places at home and abroad, their antiquities, history and literary or artistic associations."—Saturday Review.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S ROMANES LECTURE ON

EVOLUTION AND ETHICS.

For a full discussion from the Opposite Point of View of the Important Questions Involved see chaps. II., III., IV., and V. of Part VI. of Civilization and Progress.

By JOHN BEATTIE CROZIER.

Revised and Enlarged, and with New Preface.

More fully explaining the nature of the New Organon used in the solution of its problems. 8vo, $4.50.

The Rev. H. R. HAWEIS, M. A., says:

"This is the most remarkable and important work of the last twenty years. It is not too much to say that Mr. Crozier can enter the lists with men like Carlyle, Comte, Herbert Spencer, and John Stuart Mill, all of whom he treats sympathetically and holds his own."

The SPECTATOR says:

"The book of a very able man. . . . The testimony which we are compelled to give to the high ability of this ambitious work is completely impartial. . . . Full of original criticism. . . . Great literary faculty. . . . A book far less superficial than Mr. Buckle's."

Mrs. LYNN LYNTON says:

"The book seems to me to be one of the most original and remarkable of the present day. There is not a dry page from cover to cover."

"KNOWLEDGE" says:

"No one can rise from the perusal of this work without the conviction that its author has established a claim to stand high among the most profound and original thinkers of the day. He has set himself an ambitious task, and he has very narrowly indeed escaped entire success. . . . Will repay perusal and reperusal."

Published by LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.,
15 East 16th St., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

FOR SALE.—Volumes 9 to 12, inclusive, LITERARY WORLD, June, 1878, to December, 1881, inclusive. Complete, unbound, good condition. Apply A. C. SEEMANN, 108 North 4th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

Literary Curios,

Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.
Send stamps for separate lists.
Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.
Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

LAWRENCE Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 24 MARCH 1894 Vol. XXV No. 6 Whole No. 502

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Mr. Isaacs," etc. With illustrations by Alfred Brennan and a new portrait of the author. In two volumes. Small 12mo, in box, $2.00.

Mr. F. Marion Crawford, in the new novel on which he has been at work during the winter, has forsaken the haunts of Roman life, with its high-born knights and dames, for the more interesting, if seemingly less romantic, scenes of New York. It is always the New York of the upper classes that Mr. Crawford shows to us; and yet even here, commonplace and conventional as it may be thought, he reveals the same undercurrent of strife and intrigue, of love and jealousy and hatred, that lent to his tales of Roman life their peculiar power and fascination. Not even the Saracinesca series are more alive with romance than are this and its companion story which Mr. Crawford promises us, and in which he follows the fortunes of the Lauderdales and Ralstons — the family to which this his latest heroine, Katharine Lauderdale, belongs. The interest of this book, especially to New Yorkers, will be enhanced by the fact that it is to be illustrated by a New York artist.

A New Novel by the Author of "The Stickit Minister."

THE RAIDERS.

Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt. By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister and Some Common Men." 12mo, $1.50.

The Scotsman, reviewing Mr. Crockett's new and important novel, says: "It is safe to say that this tale of the Galloway of the early part of last century will bring him at a bound into the front rank of those writers of the day who may be said to have founded among them a new school of Scottish romance. 'The Raiders' is alive, and throbbing with the Gallowgian spirit; the strong and wholesome air of the hills and seas of the Stewartry blows through it. . . . Although of wild adventure there is full measure, heaped up, and running over, . . . you instinctively know that in its marrow the tale is true — true in the scenery, in the local traits of character, dialect and customs, and in the human nature which it contains."

By the Same Author. Fifth Edition.

THE STICKIT MINISTER AND SOME COMMON MEN.

12mo, $1.50.

Mr. Zangwill's New Book.

THE KING OF SCHNORRERS.

Grotesques and Fantasies. By I. ZANGWILL, author of "Children of the Ghetto," "The Old Maids' Club," "Merely Mary Ann," etc. With numerous illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

"Exceedingly clever, . . . full of that rarest of good qualities, humor — always tinged here with the grotesque, but none the less delightful."— Boston Daily Traveller.

"This work of Mr. Zangwill's will, we are confident, become classic."— Boston Daily Advertiser.

"One of the most delightful books of the day."— Chicago Herald.

THE DELECTABLE DUCHY.

Stories, Studies and Sketches. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH, author of "Noughts and Crosses," "The Blue Pavilions," etc. 12mo, $1.00.

"The sketches can hardly be excelled in pathos, in true human interest in the undying elements of power found in common life."— Public Opinion.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

By BENJAMIN KIDD. 8vo, $2.50. The scope and importance of this volume may be partially gathered from some of its chapter titles, as follows:

The Outlook.
Conditions of Human Progress.
The Central Feature of Human History.
The Function of Religious Beliefs in the Evolution of Society.
Western Civilization.
Modern Socialism.
Human Evolution is Not Primarily Intellectual.

"The name of Mr. Benjamin Kidd, author of a very striking work on Social Evolution, is, so far as we know, new to the literary world; but it is not often that a new and unknown writer makes his first appearance with a work so novel in conception, so fertile in suggestion, and on the whole so powerful in exposition as 'Social Evolution' appears to us to be."— The Times (London).

THE ENGLISH TOWN IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

By ALICE STOPFORD GREEN. 2 vols., 8vo. Just Ready.

SOURCES OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

By the Rev. Dr. C. ELLIS STEVENS. 12mo. In the Press.

PROFESSOR SKEAT'S MONUMENTAL WORK.

THE OXFORD CHAUCER.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited from Numerous Manuscripts by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt. D., LL. D., M. A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. In six volumes, demy 8vo, with Portrait and Facsimiles.

NOW READY. VOLUME I.

ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE. MINOR POEMS.

8vo, buckram. Price, $4.00.

The remaining five volumes will be published at short intervals during the present year. The complete set of six volumes is offered to subscribers at $17.50 net, payable strictly in advance. Payment in full must accompany each subscription. Subscriptions may be sent in through booksellers if the above conditions are strictly complied with.

New Book by Professor Goldwin Smith.

OXFORD AND HER COLLEGES.

A View from the Radcliffe. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D. C. L., author of "The United States: An Outline of Political History, 1492-1871," etc. With Frontispiece. 18mo, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

Professor Boyesen's New Book.

A COMMENTARY ON THE WRITINGS OF HENRIK IBSEN.

By H. H. BOYESEN, Professor of Germanic Languages and Literature at Columbia College, author of "Goethe and Schiller," "Essays on German Literature," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

THE TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE.

In small, inexpensive volumes.

Edited by ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, M. A. With concise Preface, full Glossary, and such brief Notes as are requisite for the thorough elucidation of the Text, which is that of the Cambridge Edition, the lines being numbered as in the Globe Edition, line for line. Each volume to have a Photogravure Frontispiece — either one of the accepted portraits of Shakespeare, or some topographical illustration connected with his life — and a title-page by WALTER CRANE, with different and appropriate vignette to each. Printed in red and black, on handmade paper. Imperial 32mo, cloth, gilt top, 45 cents; paste grain roan, gilt top, 60 cents.

Now Ready. Volume I.

THE TEMPEST.

And two other volumes will be issued each month, the order of publication being that of the Folio Editions.

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, 66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

A New Work of Importance.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY.

A Study in Railway Politics, History and Economics. By JOHN P. DAVIS. 1 vol., 8vo, with maps, price, $2.00.

Thomas M. Cooley, LL. D., Chairman of Inter-State Commerce Commission, says: "I have read 'The Union Pacific Railway' with great interest. It is an important contribution to an important subject. The history of this enterprise is of especial importance at the present time, and indeed must always remain in some respects one of the most instructive episodes in our history."

"Has the fascination of a novel. The treatment is a full, clear and practical presentation of the origin, development and present status of the Pacific railroads."—The New York World.

"A volume of absorbing interest and fully as important as interesting. Mr. Davis tells the story from the beginning to the receivership which has been ordered and the reorganization which is imminent."—New York Independent.

Just Issued:

A SYLLABUS OF ETHICS.

By WILLIAM M. BRYANT, M. A., author of "World Energy and Its Self-Conservation." Paper, 25 cents.

The work omits minor details and emphasizes recognized fundamental principles with reference to their practical application. A selected list of reference books at the close of the work, with an outline of what is taught in each, will prove helpful to all who wish to enter upon an extended study of ethics.

Other Recent Works by Mr. Bryant:

A SYLLABUS OF PSYCHOLOGY.

Second Edition. Paper, 25 cents.

THE WORLD ENERGY

and its Self-Conservation.

1 vol., cloth, price $1.50.

An examination of the constitution of nature and of man's place in it, showing the common ground and essential unity of the speculative and empirical methods of inquiry, and leading logically to the conclusion that nature is not something apart from mind, but that it is nothing else than the outer mode of, and hence has its only truth in, mind.

"Certainly worthy of careful study. It presents the Theistic argument from a new standpoint."—The Christian Union, New York.

A STUDY OF GREEK PHILOSOPHY.

By E. M. MITCHELL. With an Introduction by W. R. Alger. Cloth, $1.25.

"It is the best work for general students we have ever read. It is a popular treatise in which we find most charmingly presented a discussion of the various schools of Greek thought, with biographical representatives from Thales to Proclus. In this brilliant volume the reader is introduced to such master minds as Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Zeno and Epicurus. It is clear, crisp, compact. To those who have a taste for philosophy we can heartily recommend this admirable volume."—The Arena, Boston, Mass.

MANUAL OF CLASSICAL LITERATURE,

Comprising Biographical and Critical Notices of the Principal Greek and Roman Authors, with illustrative extracts for popular reading. By CHARLES MORRIS. 12mo, 420 pages, $1.50.

"The book presents a more complete survey of classical literature than can elsewhere be found in the same compass."—Scotsman, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"Of sterling value. A complete treasure-house of quotations, apt illustrations, and famous utterances of the most brilliant minds."—Christian at Work, New York.

For sale by booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price by the publishers.

S. C. GRIGGS & COMPANY,
262 and 264 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

April Atlantic

Will contain, besides other interesting articles,

Philip and his Wife. XI.—XIII. MARGARET DELAND.

General Lee during the Campaign of the Seven Days. EBEN GREENOUGH SCOTT.

War's Use of the Engines of Peace. JOSEPH L. BRENT.

The Oath of Allegiance. A Story. ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

Nature in Old English Poetry. RICHARD BURTON.

The Secret of the Wild Rose Path. OLIVE THORNE MILLER.

Early Latin Poetry. Prof. R. Y. TYRRELL.

The Referendum in Switzerland and America. A. LAWRENCE LOVELL.

The Windigo. MARY HARTWELL CATHERWOOD.

Some Causes of the Italian Crisis. WILLIAM R. THAYER.

Opinions. AGNES REPPLIER.

Jerry—A Personality. ELISABETH CAVAZZA.

Supplication. A Poem. JULIA C. R. DORR.

The Shepherd-Girl. A Poem. JOSEPHINE PRESTON PEABODY.

35 cents a number; $4.00 a year.

NEW BOOKS.

An Island Garden.

By CELIA THAXTER, author of "Among the Isles of Shoals," etc. With twelve full-page illustrations in color, and several smaller ones, by Childe Hassam. 8vo, attractively bound, $4.00, net.

Mrs. Thaxter, who has spent a large part of her life on Appledore, the largest of the Isles of Shoals, here tells the secret of the flower-garden by her cottage which is one of the chief attractions of the islands and the wonder of the thousands who visit them every summer. Colored Illustrations add greatly to the attractiveness of the engaging volume.

Brave Little Holland, and What She Taught Us.

By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS, D. D., author of "Japan," "The Lily Among Thorns," "Matthew Calbraith Perry," etc. With Illustrations. 16mo, $1.25. In Riverside Library for Young People, small 16mo, 75 cents.

By three visits to Holland, and careful study of Dutch-American archives, Dr. Griffis has gained material for a very interesting account of Holland and the debt we owe her for her contribution to American liberty and order.

Bayou Folk.

By KATE CHOPIN. 16mo, $1.25.

A pretty book of tales drawn from life among the Creoles and Acadians of Louisiana. They represent with fidelity and spirit characters and customs unfamiliar to most readers; they are admirably told, with just enough dialect for local color; and they can hardly fail to be very popular.

A Bird-Lover in the West.

A delightful book of bird experiences and observations in Ohio, Utah and Colorado, by OLIVE THORNE MILLER, author of "In Nesting Time," "Bird-Ways," "Little Brothers of the Air," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

A. C. McCLURG & CO.'S

RECENT BOOKS.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By ELIZABETH WORMELEY LATIMER, author of "France in the Nineteenth Century, 1830–1890." Handsomely illustrated with 23 portraits of celebrated characters. 8vo, $2.50.

"There would be more readers of works of history if all works of history were written in the glowing, picturesque and animated style which distinguishes this book."—Evening Post, Chicago.

"There is in this book a very large amount of useful and interesting information, skillfully arranged and condensed and presented in very readable form."—Public Opinion, New York.

THE BOOK-HUNTER IN PARIS.

Being Studies among the Bookstalls of the Quays. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With an Introduction by Augustine Birrell and 144 characteristic illustrations interspersed in the text. Large 8vo, net, $5.00.

"The pages are sprinkled with anecdote, with observation of the casual and altogether entertaining sort. M. Uzanne is erudite, sympathetic, enthusiastic; everything but sentimental or dull. He has imbued the whole with his characteristic vivacity."—New York Tribune.

THE SPANISH PIONEERS.

By CHARLES F. LUMMIS, author of a "New Mexico David," etc. With nine full-page half-tone illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

"It will be found of real moment to students and richly entertaining to the cursory reader. . . . The book, which, by the way, is amply illustrated, is in every respect worth reading and preserving as a work of reference by students of early American history."—The Evening Bulletin, Philadelphia.

RUMOUR.

By ELIZABETH SHEPPARD. With an Introduction and Notes by Harriet Prescott Spofford. With two portraits. 2 vols., 12mo, gilt tops, $2.50.

"'Rumour' glows with the evidence of Miss Sheppard's rich, musical and poetic nature. . . . It is a book to which the reader should unquestionably yield himself and enjoy to the fullest. . . . It is the outpouring of the brilliant imagination of a sensitive mind."—Public Opinion, Washington.

THE BAILIFF OF TEWKESBURY.

By C. E. D. PHELPS and LEIGH NORTH. A story of English life of the time of Shakespeare. Illustrated. 16mo, $1.00.

"The authors are to be congratulated upon the achievement of a decided success. . . . The tale has plenty of incident, the dialect is well done, and altogether it is in its way a most ingenious and entertaining literary performance."—Beacon, Boston.

GARRICK'S PUPIL.

By AUGUSTUS FILON. Translated by J. V. Prichard. A study of London life in the eighteenth century. Illustrated. 16mo, $1.00.

"It is interesting, decidedly so. . . . For change and variety of scene, for interest attaching to the characters, for swift, condensed narrative, it is as thoroughly entertaining, not to say instructive, a bit of fiction as one could wish."—The Interior, Chicago.

AN AMERICAN PEERESS.

By H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR, author of "With Edge Tools." 12mo, $1.00.

"The pictures of English society life are wonderfully strong. . . . The style is easy and graceful and the people are natural and fresh in drawing, which is frequently not the case when English and American types are portrayed together."—Boston Times.

LOST CANYON OF THE TOLTECS.

An Account of Strange Adventures in Central America, by CHARLES SUMNER SEELEY, author of "The Spanish Galleon." 12mo, $1.00.

"This Crusoe-like tale is told in so straightforward a fashion that one is half convinced of its truth, and follows the Northerners through their hairbreadth escapes with active interest. It is a book which will make any boy breathless with excitement."—The Critic, New York.

For sale by booksellers generally, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price by the publishers,

A. C. McCLURG & CO.,
CHICAGO.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 24 MARCH 1894 No. 6

CONTENTS

The Greater Glory 83
The Story of Two Noble Lives . . . 83
The Christian Recovery of Spain . . . 84
Horace Chase 85
Economic Legislation of the States . . 85
Civilization during the Middle Ages . . 86
Cartier to Frontenac 86
The Story of Japan 87

Poetry:
  Philosophic Obscurity. John Kendrick Bangs, 88
London Letter 88
Philadelphia Notes 89
New York Letter 89
Fiction:
  Benefits Forgot 90
  John Ingerfield 90
  A Little Widow 90
  A Tragic Blunder 90
  Parisian Points of View 91
  A Marriage Ceremony 91
Minor Notices:
  History of Federal Government in Greece and Italy 91
  The Jacobean Poets 91
  The Gods of Olympos 91
  The Trial of Dr. Briggs 91
  Famous Adventures and Prison Escapes of the Civil War 92
  A Roadside Harp 92
Periodicals 92
News and Notes 93
Publications Received 94

THE GREATER GLORY.*

THE Dutch novelist who calls himself Maarten Maartens, and who uses the most vigorous and picturesque English for his stories of life in Holland, has given to the world another remarkable novel, which deals at close range with the world as it is and as it ought not to be much longer. He calls it "a story of high life," adding that it is also "a story of the life that is higher still," and hardly any characterization of it could be terser or more effective. The same thought is expressed in the quotation from which the title is taken, "So doth the greater glory dim the less." "There is one glory terrestrial," says Wendela in the story, "and another glory celestial, and the glory of man is as the flower of the field." This is enough, perhaps, to indicate that the book has been written by a man in earnest, but his earnestness is not that which satisfies itself by working out and illustrating carefully chosen moral precepts. It is shown rather in an appreciation of the complexity of each individual life, a consciousness that eternal principles are involved in this slow development of civilization, a sense of the greatness of man blended with a half-despairing pity and wonder that men so fail to recognize this greatness. The writer is undoubtedly a realist when he depicts the vanity and hollowness of artificial barriers between man and man; but he is an idealist when he dreams of the "beautiful, sorrowful hope," of "a world in which all men are brothers — great and strong and greatly worthy — a world at which the cynic laughs with tears for his laughter." He is a poet, too, as he claimed in a poem which appeared a few months ago in Temple Bar.

The central figure of the book is Reinout van Rexelaer, heir to a great name and large fortune, who grows up with unbounded confidence in the family traditions and honor, and with eager, boyish desire to make himself worthy of them. An adventure in childhood fixes the words "à gentilhomme devoir fait loi" firmly in his mind, and gradually wider ideas of life and different standards of honor take possession of him. Soon after he leaves the university, the falseness in the lives of those nearest to him is forced on his knowledge, until he comes reluctantly to recognize that his name, estates, and position are all stained by unforgetable wrongs done to others. His emancipation from these bonds forms the main interest of the story, but there is no lack of interesting plot and counterplay besides. It is a book well worth reading, and goes to sustain the writer's claim to the name of poet in the poem of which we have just spoken and from which we quote the closing lines:

Because my thoughts are splendor, because my thoughts are sin,
With a shock as if of armies amid the battle's din;
Because the shades of former days go with me on my way,
And because tomorrow's sunshine is on my path today;
Because my heartstrings tremble to the pressure of thy hand,
And because I live a sorrow which none can understand.

THE STORY OF TWO NOBLE LIVES.*

IN the last half of the last century the singular spectacle presented itself of a procession of boys and girls walking in single file along a desolate road in Scotland, the eldest boy at the head of the line carrying the baby gypsy fashion on his shoulders. These were the eleven children of Anne, Countess of Balcarres, going forth into the world to make their fortunes and escape from her harsh treatment. One of the younger boys a short time before having displeased this autocratic mother, she ordered a footman to throw him into the pond in front of the house. Twice this was done and twice the child managed to scramble out; when a third immersion was commanded he rebelled, saying solemnly, "Woman, wad ye droon your ain son?" This biblically phrased protest had the effect of making her relent, but the children could not forgive, and hence the attempt at escape.

One of the queer little procession was afterward Lady Anne Barnard, who wrote the ballad of "Auld Robin Gray." There were three girls, and the youngest, Elizabeth, married, in 1782, Philip Yorke, who fourteen years later succeeded to the earldom of Hardwicke. Lord and Lady Hardwicke had four daughters, all of whom seem to have inherited the warmth, cleverness, and vivacity of their Scotch mother. Three of these married, respectively, Lord Somers, Lord Mexborough, and Earl Caledon; the fourth, Lady Elizabeth Yorke, wedded, in February, 1816, Sir Charles Stuart, grandson of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, recently appointed British ambassador to Paris.

It was at the British embassy, therefore, that the charming sisters who form the subject of Mr. Augustus Hare's interesting record were born. They inherited on both sides from a line of brilliant quality; and on both sides was a still more valuable inheritance — a rich group of illustrious friends. The famous Misses Berry were their mother's intimates, and she was a favorite among the brightest society in London and in Paris alike. With no personal beauty, Lady Elizabeth Stuart (afterward Lady Stuart de Rothesay) possessed much captivation of manner and a remarkable conversational charm. She spoke French like a native, and was probably the most popular ambassadress ever sent from England to the court of France.

It is somewhat extraordinary that so plain a pair (for Lord Stuart was uglier than his wife, we are told) should have children so little resembling themselves, for Charlotte and Louisa Stuart even in infancy gave the promise of remarkable beauty. Most carefully and exactly educated, with every talent cultivated and expanded, and every sweet quality of mind and heart fostered in the sunshine of love and home, they grew up admirable specimens of the best which England can do in the way of womahood. On September 5, 1835, "in the supreme loveliness of eighteen," Charlotte Stuart, the elder, married the Hon. Charles Canning after some opposition on the part of her father, gradually overcome by the persistent and ardent attachment of the youthful couple. In the following year the bridegroom became Viscount Canning.

Three years later Lady Stuart took her younger daughter to Scotland, and they were present at the celebrated "Eglinton tournament." Louisa Stuart was exquisitely beautiful at that time, and so far surpassed Lady Seymour, the chosen "queen" of the fête, that it is said she would certainly have been proclaimed queen of beauty in her stead had it not been for the rule which made married women only eligible for the honor. It was on this occasion that she first met Henry, Marquis of Waterford, who two years after became her husband. He was known because of his breakneck exploits at hunting and steeple-chasing as "the mad marquis." The glorious loveliness of Louisa Stuart flashed like a ray of sun into his heart, and from that moment he only lived to win her. After their marriage Lady Waterford went with her husband to his Irish estates, where henceforward she was as a good angel to his peasantry and tenants, training them in habits of thrift and cleanliness, starting new industries for their employment, nursing them in illness, and in the time of the potato blight devoting her whole strength to the relief of the famine-stricken sufferers. Benevolence, religion, the love of friends, and the love of art were all her life long the ruling motives of this noble and beautiful creature, who seems never to have had a selfish instinct or an unworthy desire, and who was to the end completely unconscious of her own excelling attractions. Her talent for painting was remarkable; she sang beautifully, and had the most intense enjoyment of nature and of flowers; withal, she was singularly modest and simple in her tastes, devout and spiritual, the very breath of heaven in all her acts and thoughts.

---

*The Greater Glory. By Maarten Maartens. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

*The Story of Two Noble Lives: being Memorials of Charlotte, Countess Canning, and Louisa, Marchioness of Waterford. By Augustus J. C. Hare. In three vols. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $8.00.

In 1855 Lord Canning was appointed governor general of India. The sisters who loved each other so well were called upon to part, and, as it proved, the parting was a final one. In 1857 the Indian Mutiny broke out, and Lady Canning threw herself with all her might into helping and supporting her noble husband through the terrible strain of the time. How bravely and firmly he met the crisis, with what a tempered evenness of soul he withstood the frantic demands for universal punishment in the first place, and later when the irrational British public having cooled down passed into the other reaction of imbecile good nature — the demand for a senseless amnesty — has become history. What history says less about is the work done by his lovely wife in supporting his efforts, holding up his hands in all ways, leading and enlightening public opinion, and ministering to the need and suffering of the moment. We seem to share in the heartbreak of the friends at home when we read that just as these terrible things were surmounted and the deferred return to England was close at hand the sweet creature, whom her mother always calls "dear, dearest Char," died rather suddenly of the exhaustion of a slight fever, her strength worn out by the long struggle which she had undergone. She was buried in India, and not even her dust returned to lie beside its kindred dust in England. "She was a staff to lean upon to all who came within the range of her affections," a friend writes of her; "she never changed, she never hardened." Her husband, who returned home soon after her death, survived her but seven months.

Lady Waterford lived till 1891. Her long widowhood was chiefly spent at Ford Castle in Northumberland, which had been bequeathed to her by her husband, and which she delighted to beautify. Her love of art and her extraordinary personal beauty survived to the last. Her religious life deepened and grew richer with the years. Mr. Hare tells a charming story of her reading from Mrs. Kemble's Records of Later Life to a circle of visitors one day and coming upon a description of herself, which all present instantly recognized, while she herself was perfectly unconscious of it. In this passage Mrs. Kemble says:

> I have seen a good many handsome people, but there was a modesty, a grace, a dignity, and an expression of deep latent sentiment in her countenance that, combined with her straight nymph-like figure and the sort of chastity that characterized her whole person and appearance, fulfilled my ideal of female beauty. Her sister, who is thought handsomer, and is a lovely creature (and morally and mentally as worthy of that epithet as physically), has not this severely sweet expression, or sweetly stern, if you prefer it, though this implies a shade of volition which falsifies the application of it. This is what I especially admire in Lady ——, who adds to that faultless Greek outline, which in its integrity and justice of proportion seems the type of truth, an eye whose color deepens and a fine textured cheek, where the blood visibly mantles with the mere emotion of speaking and being listened to.

Mr. Augustus Hare's share in these records is extremely well done, though, except for the insistent English determination to have three volumes, the whole might have been shortened with advantage both to the book and the reader.

THE CHRISTIAN RECOVERY OF SPAIN.*

UNDER this title Mr. Henry Edward Watts contributes to the "Story of the Nations" a careful study of Spanish history from the Moorish conquest in 711 to the fall of Granada in 1492. The story of early Spain, we are told, is that of four or five nations springing from a common root but developing differently and finally uniting by accident rather than by natural process. In the difficult task of presenting these confused elements as a whole Mr. Watts believes that he has no predecessor. Dunham's laborious history was written without the light which recent Arabic scholars have turned upon the subject. The work of comparing the two sources of Spanish history — the Christian and the Moorish — has never been fully done, although the late Professor Dozy of Leyden is entitled to gratitude for his services in this direction. The modern native historians of Spain are pronounced scarcely superior to the older writers as regards the sense of proportion, while they are far less picturesque. A great mass of material is buried in the volumes which the Royal Academy of History is publishing.

Among the conditions pointed out as leading to the fall of the Gothic kingdom and the triumph of the Moors were the corruption of the court and the lack of sympathy between the Gothic nobles and the people at large, who were really their slaves. What chiefly prolonged the minority rule of the Moors in Spain for nearly eight hundred years was the incessant quarreling among the Christian princes. Moreover, Mohammedan tolerance made the position of the Christian artisan and husbandman better than under the Spanish kings of Castile or Aragon. "To suppose that the two races were in perpetual conflict is to misread history." The union of kingdoms under Ferdinand and Isabella, which put an end to political differences among the Christians, enabled Spain for the first time to make a systematic crusade against the unbelievers.

In this story of ruthless or perfidious or incompetent rulers, relieved by the presence of some chivalrous and famous figures, the slow development of law, of letters, and of art is noted. The reader gains a good impression as to the spirit of each age through which he is led. In the fifteenth century, for instance, it is a spirit of "mingled faithlessness, mutual mistrust, unveracity, and exaggerated sense of honor," as exemplified in the Pact of Tordesillas. When, however, Isabella and Ferdinand come into view, civilization seems to dawn. In treating of the Inquisition, Mr. Watts remarks that it does not become us, "in times which have witnessed the deportation of a whole people from their country and homes by the arbitrary decree of a monarch who ranks among the greatest of European princes, to be too severe on Isabella because, true to the creed in which she had been suckled, she resolved upon the forcible conversion of the Jews." She long resisted the importunities of her ecclesiastical advisers in this direction. "First introduced into Aragon in the early part of the thirteenth century for the special benefit of the Albigenses, the Inquisition, contrary to what its apologists have maintained, was never to the taste of the Spanish people." All the authority of the church was required to force it upon a reluctant nation.

The plan of this history and the research and acumen manifest in its execution commend the book as one of great value to the general public, for whom it is prepared. It is well furnished with illustrations, calendar of leading events, and a genealogical table showing the connection between the royal houses of Castile and England — a connection which gave "to Spain at least two of her best queens, and to England the beloved and worthy consort of the best of the Plantagenets."

---

*The Christian Recovery of Spain. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

HORACE CHASE.*

THE interest always belonging to the work of Miss Constance Fenimore Woolson is deepened by the tidings of her death. Horace Chase, her last story, is upon the whole characteristic of its author, although dealing with a hero who is far from being her ideal. Her keen perception of details, her sensitiveness to beauty, and her humor find full scope in describing the life of the agreeable, rather indolent Franklin family and indicating the peculiarities of their neighbors.

The Southern scenes in which Miss Woolson usually groups her figures evidently suit her temperament — that of an artist who fully appreciates all outward grace. The story opens in a mountain village of North Carolina on a cool day when the "people who never succumb to mere comfort did not relight their fires. But to the Franklin family comfort was a goddess. They would never have thought of calling her 'mere;' 'delightful' was their word, and Ruth would probably have said 'delicious.'" Ruth "never went out from a sense of duty, and for her there was no pleasure in doing battle with things that were disagreeable for the sake merely of conquering them." In this sentence is the germ of the beautiful girl's life drama. As a foil to her youthful insouciance we have the sharp prevision of Dolly, the elder sister, by whom the mild eccentricities of their friends are exposed with entertaining raillery. Conversation, as her readers know, forms a large and spicy element in Miss Woolson's writings. Dolly says of Achilles Larne, a cold-blooded acquaintance: "With him it is never warm, but warmish; the bluest sky is bluish; a June day, fairish; a twenty-mile walk, longish. In this way he is not committed to extravagant statements. When he is dead he won't be more than dead-ish. But he's that now."

Thus Dolly's comments strengthen the impressions made by the various talkers. We can distinctly hear the amiable and absurd Mrs. Kip say: "Unusual words are full of dignity. I don't know what I wouldn't give if I could bring in, just naturally and easily, when I am talking such a word, for instance, as jejune! And for clergymen it is especially distinguished."

Miss Woolson's cleverness in individualizing minor characters was one of her most noticeable traits. She was also equal to the sustained presentation of certain larger types. There is no lack of distinctness in the portraiture of Horace Chase, the energetic millionaire. Entering this leisurely society, he is pronounced ordinary in appearance and manners; but by his masterful good nature and the generosity with which he uses his wealth he so dazzles the ease-loving Ruth that she becomes his wife, believing herself "the happiest girl in the world." Chase's part in conversation is so real that one feels as if it had been stenographically reported. Offhand, genial, savoring of the street, it reflects the prompt habits of thought and action which have made him a successful business man. It shows his profound affection for Ruth and his kindliness toward all that belongs to her. We are permitted, also, a glimpse at the front of adamant that he could present to men whose interests clashed with his own. When his nerve in rescuing Ruth's delirious brother from a perilous position on the roof called out hearty congratulations he exclaimed impatiently, "Come, now, if the roof had been only three inches above the ground, how then? The thing itself was simple enough; all that was necessary was to act as though it was only three inches."

This powerful manipulator of men and things, prosaic, yet full of tenderness for his girlish wife, enlists sympathy as the reader perceives that the undisciplined Ruth has fallen in love with a young man whose ambitious plans for making a fortune led him into Chase's neighborhood. When at last Ruth confesses her infatuation, declaring that she has not outgrown it, the husband's anguish and forgiveness crown him with dignity:

> His face showed how profoundly he had suffered; it was changed — changed for life. "After all this that you've told me, Ruth, I don't press myself upon you. I never shall again—I couldn't; that's ended. . . . It just about kills me! But as to condemning, coming down on you out and out, I don't do it — I haven't got the cheek! Who am I that I should dare to? Have I been so faultless myself that I have any right to judge you?" And as he said this his rugged face had for the moment an expression that was striking in its beauty — its mixture of sorrow, honesty, and grandeur. Ruth gazed at him. Then she gave an inarticulate entreating cry and ran to him.

Such is the dénouement of a story which would not be Miss Woolson's if it were without passages of intense emotion and thrilling incident. In her nature there was such sympathy with the tropical currents of life that one almost wonders at her choice of a Philistine as the central figure of this novel. But the tropical currents were sure to sweep about him however cool and clear-headed he might be. With all Miss Woolson's realism and searching wit she was a romanticist. Her central theme was passionate love even when, as in this book, there was a great deal of amusing byplay and comment. No character of marked elevation belongs to the group portrayed in Horace Chase. The easy-going Franklins are strong chiefly in their family affections. They have principles indeed, but principles so interpreted according to their temperaments that their story is a picture interesting rather than inspiring.

Miss Woolson's palette always abounded in color, her drawing was vivacious, and her sketchbook was full of studies. Thus, although her motifs have not great variety nor her types exalted beauty, her work will long retain its charm.

ECONOMIC LEGISLATION OF THE STATES.*

THE LITERARY WORLD is not in the habit of reviewing law books, the great majority of which are as unattractive in their subject as they are unreadable in their style. But the work which is named in full below is of such unusual interest and value to students of social questions and is, moreover, for the most part couched in such a readable form that it may well be made an exception.

Mr. Foote has hitherto handled in various publications such questions as the administration of gas and electric light companies by the city. He has here supplied a great body of well-classified information of primary importance to the counsel for and against such companies as are named in the title, but of much importance, also, to every student of politics interested in the much-debated matter of the extension of the present functions of the American municipality. The greater part of these three thousand pages consists of a digest of the law of incorporated companies operating under municipal franchises in the different States and Territories. These digests are made by practitioners of each State interested in the questions considered and well prepared to present them. They treat historically and descriptively of every particular coming under the head of franchises granted by cities, and they discuss the tendency in each State to supersede private corporations by municipal ownership. Forty-eight writers have coöperated in this work, and they cite more than four thousand cases bearing upon the questions involved. Among the various States Massachusetts, perhaps in consequence of having two editors assigned to it, has the largest share of space, occupying 240 pages, while New York, which comes next, has 148. The index, printed in the usual ample style of indexes to law books, occupies the third and smallest volume of some five hundred pages.

The two divisions of this work which will be of special and immediate interest to general students of municipal government are

---

* Horace Chase. By Constance Fenimore Woolson. Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

* The Law of Incorporated Companies, Operating Under Municipal Franchises, such as Illuminating Gas Companies, Fuel Gas Companies, Electric Central Station Companies, Telephone Companies, Street Railway Companies, Water Companies, etc. Preceded by a Suggestive Discussion of the Economic Principles Involved in the Operation, Control, and Service of such Companies. By Allen Ripley Foote, author of "Economic Value of Electric Light and Power." Charles E. Everett, A. M., LL.D., Editing Attorney, with a resident Attorney in each State as Coeditor. 3 vols. Robert Clarke & Co. $15.00.

Mr. Foote's discussion of the economic principles and Mr. Everett's general exposition of the law and legal principles involved in the problem. Confining ourselves here to the first of these two parts, we may briefly state that Mr. Foote considers that municipal governments are municipal trusts; that for various reasons the economic administration of these trusts has not been sufficiently studied by the taxpayers of our cities; and that under present conditions there is no city where "the heads of departments, superintendents, and wage workers in its employment, taken as a whole, from highest to lowest, are fair representatives of the best talent, skill, and character to be found in the municipality or in the employment of industrial corporations." It is no disparagement of the average municipal authorities to say that they are not and are not likely to be as disinterested and capable as army and navy officers, the judges of our courts, teachers, and scientific investigators. Mr. Foote's remedy for these great weaknesses and defects is a department of municipal administration created by the State for the purpose of exercising jurisdiction over the management of municipal, political, and industrial corporations chartered by it. To this department he would give all the powers of a court of equity of final resort. He considers that the economic law of labor and property would dictate the grant to industrial corporations of exclusive, untaxed, and perpetual franchises. He would have this department of municipal administration exercise such a measure of strict control over these corporations that the public interest would be fully respected — much more fully than at present.

We recommend to all students of the municipal problem these two elaborate volumes. Only lawyers will need to read them through or to own them, but the general matter contributed by Messrs. Foote and Everett can hardly have too wide a reading. They supply a kind of preliminary information and discussion which cannot be found elsewhere in so good a shape.

CIVILIZATION DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.*

IS not the picture of the Middle Ages exaggerated in the minds of most Protestant people? The dazzling light which has fallen upon us through the agency of the printing press, the cheapness and multiplication of books, and the development of the sciences and popular education forms an amazing contrast to the times prior to the use of movable type. Nevertheless, it is a fair question to ask whether men according to their ability did not then live up to their light as well as now. It is also a fruitful subject of inquiry whether our barbarian "forbears" did not make as good a use of their talents as we do of ours. Certainly the tendency in some quarters to depreciate the value of the civilization in the Middle Ages is to be condemned. Too many writers and teachers speak of our modern civilization in terms which suggest mythology rather than the processes of nature. Minerva springs in full panoply from the brain of Jove, and in fairy tales pumpkins and mice at a touch are transformed into chariots and horses, but in nature blossom and fruit come only after a growth that is often long and silent. The reasons for June and October are to be sought in January. To the intelligent student our civilization is rooted in the Middle Ages. In history there are few or no inventions, but there are many evolutions.

Prof. George Burton Adams of Yale University has made a profound study of the Middle Age civilization, especially in relation to modern civilization. He shows that the foundations of the latter were laid in the past. His purpose has been to depict the progressive development of the mediæval elements until they flowered into the characteristics of our present day civilization. He does not state in detail the facts. He assumes that the reader is familiar with these, and his purpose is rather to show their force and movement. He shows what the Middle Ages started with — the Greek element with its art and science, much of it for the time forgotten; the Roman, with its political institutions and legal ideas, furnishing the empire as the common ground upon which all stood; the Christian, with its religious and moral ideas; and the German, with other political and legal ideas, and a reënforcement of fresh blood and life. By the end of the sixth century these all existed side by side in the nominal Roman Empire. It was the work of the remaining centuries of the Middle Ages to unite them into a single organic whole — the groundwork of our modern civilization.

The chapters on the formation of the papacy are very luminous, and show how well the torch of a single-minded investigator can light up the great caverns of erudition. In writing of the feudal system the author shows remarkable good sense, blowing to the winds the idea that the perfected form which the lawyers finally gave to the feudal theory as a matter of land law and of social rank was ever the reality of practice. The writer of this review happens to have lived for a time under a real feudal system on a national scale in which thirty millions of people were concerned, and he has also made a minute study of the feudalism of one portion of Europe to which Professor Burton scarcely ever refers in his volume. What impresses the reviewer is the vast variety and complication of the system, whether Oriental or European. Yet when one reads Blackstone's Commentaries he gets an idea of the feudal system as a perfected crystal, with all its lines and angles of ideal length and symmetry, instead of the average crystal which forms under pressure and under natural rather than ideal conditions. Very properly, we think, and contrary to some recent German scholars, the author sets great store by the Crusades as powerful forces in the making of modern Europe. These great upheavals, which broke the old lines of framework and direction, not only enriched the West with ideas and object lessons from the East, but also enabled the men of the late Middle Ages to enter into judgment upon the papacy and the empire, kindled in them the sense of nationality, and enabled them to lay the foundations of their newer and larger life. Other fascinating chapters treat the growth of commerce and its results, the Renaissance, the papacy in the new age, and the Reformation.

Space will not allow us to quote passages which show the keen insight of the author and his ability to illuminate great fields of history by a single paragraph. As a trained engineer on entering the interior of a modern Atlantic steamer is able to put his hand right on the buttons and levers and to read aright the gauges, so Professor Adams touches for us the keys of the whole movement of mediæval history. We cannot but pronounce this book one of the very best yet produced by an American author in the field of the philosophy of history.

CARTIER TO FRONTENAC.*

THIS volume, which in every mechanical feature is another triumph of the Riverside Press, but especially in its handsome binding and admirable reproductions of ancient charts and maps, must greatly enhance even the high reputation of its author. Mr. Winsor does not undertake to traverse again the ground which Francis Parkman made so thoroughly his own, but it has been unavoidable for him to tell much of the history of French colonization as connected with the slow process of geographical discovery. His work, indeed, is an admirable supplement to Parkman's history for those who desire the most exact and complete information concerning the geography of the early pioneers and settlers. It is difficult to realize but for Mr. Winsor's repeated notices how very gradually the notions of North America as an island, or a country of great length but slight breadth, or even as an archipelago, yielded to the progress of knowledge.

In his first chapter, "From Columbus to Cartier," Mr. Winsor states his belief that

---

* Civilization during the Middle Ages. By George Burton Adams. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

* Cartier to Frontenac: Geographical Discovery in the Interior of North America in its Historical Relations. 1534-1700. With full cartographical illustrations from contemporary sources. By Justin Winsor. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00.

Columbus, dying in 1506, really knew that it was a new continent which he had at last discovered, but thought it for his own interest that the Spanish sovereigns should not be undeceived. However this may be, there was certainly no right conception of the geography of the St. Lawrence region and the Mississippi, the other great highway of waters for the interior of the continent, which was destined to be explored not from the south but from the north. Jacques Cartier sailed from St. Malo April 20, 1534, in order to raise the French arms in that Newfoundland region which the French fishermen had known for years, but which they had not explored in the interest of science. Cartier failed to discover on his first voyage that he had nearly circumnavigated the island of Anticosti, but on his second voyage he went up the St. Lawrence to the Indian village of Hochelaga:

> When Cartier was conducted within the gate of this Huron village, he found a public square round which the huts of its inhabitants were grouped. In this space he was welcomed by men, women, and children with signs of emotion and confidence. The white strangers were evidently looked upon as superior beings, capable of healing by the hand, for the palsied were brought to be touched. The chieftain of the savages was borne into the throng upon the shoulders of men, and he offered a shrunken limb to be stroked. In recognition of the potency of the Frenchman's charm, the Indian lifted his wreath of authority from his own head and placed it upon the brow of his visitor. Cartier, in fulfillment of the missionary spirit which he had avowed to the French king, began to repeat the Gospel of St. John. Then, making the sign of a cross, he uttered a prayer, and afterwards read the Passion of Christ. . . . Cartier's eye must all the while have wandered away to the conspicuous lookout which the neighboring eminence afforded. He tells us of its imposing character when he says that he gave it the name of Mont Royale. The capital town which the traveler finds today on the site of Hochelaga is a reminder of the first European who surveyed the site of Montreal. As Cartier gazed from the summit of this hill — for his new-found friends soon conducted him thither — he scanned the hazy distance, in which on the one hand the St. Lawrence and on the other the Ottawa lost themselves, and we can well imagine that he asked, "Which way must I go to seek Cathay?"

Mr. Winsor through this whole period of 166 years neglects not one of the least of the voyagers to this region of the St. Lawrence. A very considerable part of his space — one would say fully a quarter part — is taken up by excellent reproductions of all the maps made by successive discoverers or in accordance with their information. The first actual colonizer, Gravé, was not to come before 1600. He was followed by the most commanding figure in the early history of Canada, Samuel de Champlain, who was admirably equipped by nature for the difficult work committed to him by Henry IV of France. The work of Champlain and the later discoveries and explorations of the Jesuit fathers in the Mississippi Valley are so familiar to readers of Parkman that we may well prefer to give here a few details concerning less known explorers. The young Norman, Nicolet, had reached the Straits of Mackinaw in 1634, and the reports which he brought back greatly excited Champlain's hopes of a French empire in America. But the French were not made of colonizing stuff. They were never lacking in courage and persistence as explorers, but they failed in the more slow and painful process of actual settlement. St. Lusson at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, is a good type of the French discoverer. Mr. Winsor describes the ceremonial with which St. Lusson took possession of the soil at the Sault for his Most Christian Majesty, but even the wildest imaginations of the French did not match the reality:

> There was something fortuitously grand in the geographical conception of these Frenchmen at the Sault Ste. Marie. There was hardly a spot on the continent that opened more striking vistas of domination along such lines of transit as nature had provided here. Marquette had divined it in relation to the missionary service. "Mackinac," he says, "is the portal of the southern tribes, as the Sault Ste. Marie is of those of the north and west, and many nations pass these gates to reach the settlements of the French."
>
> Talon could but have an inadequate conception of what his representatives had done. In making a report to the home government of what St. Lusson had accomplished, the intendant had expressed the opinion that this officer had penetrated to a point not more than three hundred leagues from the "extremity of the land" at the Vermilion or South Sea, and that thence one would have to sail fifteen hundred leagues to reach China and Japan.

Only a person who has made a specialty of cartography will attempt to criticise such a work as this from any standpoint of equality. It is evident to the ordinary critic that Mr. Winsor has placed all students of early American history under fresh obligation by the investigations which he sums up in this scholarly and judicial volume.

THE STORY OF JAPAN.*

IN traveling over ground made so familiar by the modern multitude of writers on Japan circumspect walking is necessary. Globe-trotters and temporary tourists make so many silly mistakes, and those who imagine themselves literary artists indulge so freely in either rose color or pitch, that the work of a true painter in words is to be commended. Doctor Murray excels as a story-teller, but his long training as a scientific man and his excellent judgment incline him to prefer truthful colors. Moreover, one who lives long among the educated Japanese becomes unconsciously a lover of low tones and sober tints. The flamboyant style and dazzling dyes of the cheap stuff from Japan which parades itself in our American shop windows are mostly the result of prison contract work and not the real expression of the refined Japanese taste.

Discontented with any but the best authorities and studious of accuracy, Dr. Murray has had no ambition to write anything sensational; but in linking together in the form of one continued story the early myths and traditions, he reproduces with life and color what the mass of the Japanese believe to be history. In his footnotes, indeed, the former professor of mathematics in Rutgers College shows that these vessels of story are, like those dippers used by the Heiké ghosts, bottomless. He thrusts the needle of unanswerable arguments right into the most delightfully prismatic bubbles, so that the critical student is not misled, while the average reader who does not care to be disenchanted gets what he wants. Especially full is the chapter on myths and legends, for the story-teller has made himself familiar at short range with the work of the literary critic and translator as well as of the archæologist. Hence those who look for and take delight in knowing the basis for the legends will find that on which they rest.

The chapter on Native Culture and Continental Influences is of unusual interest. It shows how greatly the primitive Japanese borrowed from their Chinese neighbors — as eagerly, indeed, as they do today from Europe and the United States — while it also demonstrates that the Japanese receive little without either improving or, as it must be acknowledged, occasionally degrading. The description of Feudalism is clear and informing. In writing of Revolutionary Preludes, and especially of the Restored Empire, there is an increase of temperature, so to speak, for here the author is writing of men with whom he has been personally acquainted. The usual helpful equipment of maps, appendixes, and illustrations make this a most excellent handbook. It has not the glow and fire which the subject kindles in some writers who handle this theme, but it is a thoroughly satisfactory book within the limits imposed upon the author.

---

* The Story of the Nations. — Japan. By David Murray, Ph.D., LL.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

* * *

— The Gutenberg House at Mayence was burned down February 9. A statue of Gutenberg stood in its courtyard. Gutenberg's uncle had let this house to the inventor of "printing with movable metal types." The first presses, which Gutenberg very likely constructed at Strassburg, were put up there, and forty years ago some remainders of these presses and tools which Gutenberg had used were still to be seen in one of its cellars. The inhabitants of Mayence had so little regard for this old historic house, where the greatest invention mankind ever made had taken its rise, that they permitted it to be converted into a brewery. The disappearance of the old familiar place is, under these circumstances, hardly to be regretted.

— A French translation of Miss Mary E. Wilkins' stories has been published in Lausanne, and is said to be very generally appreciated.

— Apropos of a recent performance of Ibsen's play "Ghosts" in New York, a witty woman formulated her objections to the morality of the play by saying it was a little too "Ibscene."

The Literary World

BOSTON 24 MARCH 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Philosophic Obscurity.

Essays and novels and poems I've penned,
Autobiographies, histories three,
Jokelets and verses, and such without end,
Letters of travel on land and sea.

No one has seen them, and see them none may;
Locked in my closet the manuscripts lie,
Sealed with instructions to fire the day,
Distant or present, on which I die.

Fame I care not for, and fortune is mine,
Hence under lock and key let the lines rest.
Why should I give the world one single line —
World that has often neglected the best?

Why should I drive them, offspring of my brain,
Into the world with its critics severe?
Why should I seek for the woe and the pain
Certain to follow the theorist's leer?

No, I will keep them; unread let them lie;
Then, when I pass through death's mysteried portal,
How 'twill console me reflecting that I
Could, had I chosen, have been an immortal!

—John Kendrick Bangs.

LONDON LETTER.

MR. GLADSTONE has gone from the stage of politics with a suddenness and an absence of public excitement which have greatly relieved the hearts of the publishers, for did he keep expectation on the rack the book market would be seriously affected. Even as it was some publishers, panic stricken, put back their new books till after Easter; but lo! the matter has settled itself. Exit the old premier of eighty-four, enter Archibald Primrose, Earl of Rosebery and author of a statesmanlike Life of Pitt, all with an amazing quietness. No one could have believed in such a change being accomplished without enormous popular excitement. But we think everybody necessary till they go. There was Bismarck, the biggest figure of the nineteenth century. Folk thought Europe would drop to pieces if his iron hand ceased from clasping the kingdoms. But the years of his retirement grow and the public eye is filled by his imperious young master, a romantic figure stepped from the Middle Ages into a bourgeois European royalty. So Mr. Gladstone has gone, without a panic on the money market or even a little crisis in the book trade. Why such things should affect the book trade in steady, easy-going England is not easy to understand, but so it is. A change of ministry means depression; a general election spells blue ruin.

However, the book season this year is not an early one. A couple of novels by women which have taken the town, one or two agreeable volumes of correspondence, a Life of Dean Stanley, and a couple of volumes of short stories by young men are about all so far. The novel of the hour is A Yellow Aster, by "Iota," which is the pseudonym of Mrs. Mannington Caffyn, the Irish wife of a returned Australian doctor.

A Yellow Aster is another variation on the woman question, which is for the moment the motif in all the novels. "A Yellow Aster" is supposed to symbolize a girl brought up entirely without love and apparently, as a result, possessing none of the softer womanly qualities — a sort of modern Undine, in fact. I have not read the book and reserve my judgment as to its literary qualities. "Iota" apparently rivals the indiscretions of "George Egerton," whose Keynotes I told you about in my last letter. The indiscretion may have as much to do with the book's vogue as anything else. One is rather tired of the somewhat morbid coarseness of a good many women's books nowadays. Why, Mrs. Aphra Behn was at least gay and witty and rollicked through her indecencies, but the modern novelist has no robustness in her infringements of good taste and decency. Yet one may take the vogue too seriously. It would be easier killed by a jest, and that was a happy one which referred the other day to "the author of 'Latchkeys.'" There was so much verisimilitude that one had to think for a few minutes what the real name was. But it will not appeal so much to you who are not in the midst of the clamor of revolting daughters, evoked by Mrs. Crackanthorpe's article in one of the reviews on the friction between mothers and daughters, which is, it seems, a serious question. Most of us never knew till Mrs. Crackanthorpe appeared that there was a revolt of the daughters. But such an unnatural trouble must arise out of the unhappy fate which brings up girls of the gentler classes idle and empty-handed. What is to be done? The labor market cannot be flooded with the millions of superfluous women. One wonders whether the most right-minded church man or woman considering these things does not sometimes sigh for the convent system, which satisfies the need for devotion and sacrifice inherent in every woman, even though she be of the superfluous and cannot hope for the natural outlet for such divinely implanted feelings.

By the way, another clever novel of the day bears the title A Superfluous Woman, and has a good deal of bearing on some of the vexed modern questions with which Ibsen has taught us to perplex our souls.

It is good to fly from these things to such a generous, high-hearted, wholesome book as Mr. Stanley Weyman's Gentleman of France. Mr. Weyman's Middle Ages stories of devotion and fighting are reading virginibus puerisque, for the old as for the young. They have the mediæval glamour so enchanting in our huckstering days. They fulfill the ideal with which Mr. Henley undertook his Lyra Heroica — "to set forth as only art can the beauty and the joy of living, the beauty and blessedness of death, the glory of battle and adventures, the nobility of devotion to a cause, an ideal, a passion even, the dignity of resistance, the sacred quality of patriotism." Mr. Weyman has not the exquisite prose style of a Stevenson, but he has an even nobler spirit of adventure. In reading A Gentleman of France one's literary palate does not receive the exquisite literary sensations that accompany the reading of a Stevenson book, yet one lives in the reading even more fully; and

> One crowded hour of glorious life
> Is worth an age without a name,

as Sir Walter hath it.

Apropos of Mr. Stevenson, his approval has helped to "boom" a book — The Raiders: Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt, by the Rev. S. R. Crockett, author of The Stickit Minister. The large first edition of this book has been sold out before publication, so one is not in a position to judge of its advance on The Stickit Minister. The latter was a collection of short stories published a year ago and very much in the manner of Mr. Barrie. It was, however, Mr. Barrie with the genius left out, some of us think. One story, "Accepted by the Beasts," had an amazingly pathetic and powerful idea, but the workmanship was not equal to the conception. As some famous critic said of a book which had that baffling sense of inadequacy, "Hang it all, it wants that!" Mr. Crockett's work lacked the indefinable that, though Mr. Stevenson, a competent critic, did not seem to think so. In thanksgiving Mr. Crockett has transferred his allegiance from Mr. Barrie and is now a true blue Stevenson person. Judging from some extracts I have seen in an early review he has caught his new master's manner with curious and fortunate felicity. Mr. Crockett may be like that young poet of whom it was prophesied that, having caught the notes of others so exquisitely, he would some day sing a full song of his own.

The fashion of reminiscences in the form of letters is a revived one. There are at present two memorable volumes of letters being eagerly read here, to wit, The Correspondence of Mr. Joseph Jekyll with His Sister-in-Law, Lady Gertrude Sloane Stanley, 1818 to 1838, and The Letters of Harriett, Countess Granville, 1810–1845. Both make delightful reading and reflect the manners and the celebrities of the time in their leisurely pages as we can scarcely hope our periodical press will do in our age of hurry.

No poetry of any moment as yet. Mrs. Meynell has edited a selection from the poems of the venerable Dr. Gordon Hake, and Messrs. Matthews & Lane have published an English version of Oscar Wilde's Salome with queer illustrations by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley. Mr. Beardsley works after the manner of Japan, and queer enough it is to see the slanting eyes, the glossy hair, the square feet on the daughters of Herodias and many another unexpected person. Messrs. Matthews & Lane have gathered round them at the Bodley Head, their publishing house in Vigo Street, a session of eccentric artists as well as of minor bards. Of the artists Mr. Beardsley is king, but there are also Mr. Laurence Housman, Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Shannon, Mr. Amring Bell, and others. For some of these gentlemen one requires a trained appreciation. The Bodley Head will soon have its organ for poets, artists, and writers generally in The Yellow Book, a monthly review of a special kind which is to be edited by your countryman, Henry Harland.

Perhaps the most consummate of our younger poets, Mr. W. B. Yeats, is to have a poetic drama produced shortly at the Avenue Theater. Mrs. Emery, who, under her maiden name of Miss Florence Farr, has proved herself an admirable ideal actress, is taking the Avenue for a series of poetical plays. A play by Dr. Todhunter, whose "Black Cat" was so unequivocal a success, is to be another item. Mrs. Emery is the author of the next story to be published in Messrs.

Matthews & Lane's Novel series, in which Keynotes was the first volume. Her book, which is said by those who know to possess very striking qualities, will be called The Silver Faun.

KATHARINE (TYNAN) HINKSON.

London, March 10.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

THESE notes have in other years spoken furtively of the Pegasus Club, and I wonder if the nature of that circle has ever been fully understood? It is, in fact, a club of poets formed for the consideration of their own verse. They meet in a Bohemian quarter, smoke the weed, and drain the mug — all the while uttering sage criticisms on each others' work, and finally accept or reject the rhythmic offerings. The plan under which this is done may be helpful to unorganized poets elsewhere and interesting to an unsongful world. An archivist is chosen each year whose duty it is to call on a number of the members for contributions to each stated meeting. These poems are printed on small slips anonymously, and prepared for distribution to the members present. They are read aloud by some one chosen for that duty and eagerly listened to by the cluster of poets. After this proceeding the first one read is taken up and passes through a scathing critical ordeal. The author, who is probably present, must have steady nerves and a minimum of conceit, for he is often compelled to listen silently to a storm of disapproval and sometimes of ridicule. As a compensation he occasionally offers a good thing, which is recognized at once and wins him the most flattering kind of applause — that which is wholly unbiased by personal consideration. If the verses are accepted there is a cry of "Author! author!" accompanied by an impatient pounding on the table. Then, if the author chooses, he reveals himself; and, human nature being what it is, he usually does. If the contribution is not accepted, fellowship draws a veil of oblivion over the unhappy poet.

These meetings have been going on with more or less regularity since 1885, when the club was formed, and a great body of verse, good and bad, has accumulated toward a book, which has always appeared to be the goal of the ambitious authors. More than ever within reach seems this consummation now, when a committee is actively at work culling the available material from the big scrapbook where it has reposed for seven years. It is purposed to issue a small, select volume in the fall, and the present membership, including the best of the new literary life of the city and a half dozen contributors to the foremost magazines, gives pledge of a collection of poems of unusual value and interest. When it is said that Mr. E. C. Stedman and Dr. S. Weir Mitchell are contributors, the character of the selections will be opined.

Speaking of poetry brings one to Mr. E. F. Fenollosa of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, who has been in the city for a fortnight lecturing on his specialty, Japanese art. On Saturday evening, 10th inst., he read his musical poem on the "Discovery of America" before a large number of invited guests at the house of Miss Helen Bell, president of the Browning Club. It made a singularly happy impression, with its peculiar beauty of rhythm, and was repeated on the Wednesday following at the new Century Club. Mr. Fenollosa has won many friends during his brief stay, and his lectures have been thoroughly successful. They were made the nucleus of a fine loan exhibition of Japanese art objects at the Academy of the Fine Arts, where they were given.

Another literary visitor shortly expected is Dr. Conan Doyle; and still another who has come and gone is Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts, the Canadian poet, who stopped off for two days on his way to Washington, where he is to visit Mr. Bliss Carman. Mr. Roberts received much attention from his fellow poets of the younger school, and expressed a gratifying satisfaction with things Philadelphian. He was the guest of Mr. Jos. M. Stoddart, editor of Lippincott's, and of Mr. Francis Howard Williams.

As a costly offset to these amenities I must record the early departure of Miss Agnes Repplier for Europe. The author of Essays in Idleness goes abroad for eighteen months early in May, and expects to spend a part of her vacation in Egypt. "The season" in London will be taken in first, where Miss Repplier may look for an ovation from her throng of English readers.

Miss Anne Hollingsworth Wharton promises her eager public fond of things colonial another volume early in the fall, and the Lippincotts will put it forth in an attractive dress to vie with that of Through Colonial Doorways. The recent novel by Miss Corelli, entitled Barabbas, which the Lippincotts published, has had a very large sale and is still in great demand. A cheaper edition will shortly be brought out.

The Browning Club is preparing for a unique rendition of Maeterlinck's symbolist drama, L'Intreuse, at the anniversary meeting in May.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

NEW YORK LETTER.

STONE & Kimball have engaged Mr. Bliss Carman as their literary adviser, and Mr. Carman will begin his new duties on the first of next month. The firm is to be congratulated on the acquisition of one so admirably equipped for the position both by natural gifts and by experience. Mr. Carman's friends here, however, will regret his departure from New York. He will be located in the Boston office of the house, but his work will take him frequently to this city.

No one can doubt, by the way, that most of the publishing business of this country is tending strongly to New York. This has been true even since Mr. Hamlin Garland began to plead for a Western literature that should be more exclusive than any literature ever known before and to go about establishing imaginary "literary centers" in the Western States. Much of this Western literature, with singular perversity, insists upon making its entrance into the world by way of New York. I heard on good authority the other day that Houghton, Mifflin & Co. had difficulty in keeping most of their business from coming to their New York office.

One of Mrs. Burton Harrison's friends has informed me that her forthcoming novel will not deal extensively with New York society as her later work has done. It will be devoted to the history of a party of Americans who travel abroad, chiefly in the south of France, Spain, and in North Africa. The book is the result of Mrs. Harrison's tour of a year ago. Of course the love interest will be strong, and there will be many bits of picturesque description.

Major Pond told me the other day that Dr. Conan Doyle had decided to devote himself chiefly to story-telling while traveling in this country. This does not mean that he will read from his manuscripts or from his published books; it means that he will relate quite informally experiences in the life of a new character that he has recently invented. This character is a little like Sherlock Holmes in the number and variety of his experiences. Major Pond is very sanguine about Dr. Doyle's success in this country. "By the way," he said, "it's quite true that authors are driving elocutionists out of the field nowadays. People do not care for professional readers any more unless they are professional writers too."

The most successful of the authors in this country who give readings are Mark Twain, George W. Cable, James Whitcomb Riley, F. Hopkinson Smith, and Eugene Field. Efforts have been made to secure Rudyard Kipling for the platform, but they have failed. He would, doubtless, attract larger audiences than any other living writer, so great is the curiosity to see him. It is not his hatred of publicity alone that keeps him from accepting the generous offers he has received from managers; he is afraid that extended travel would impair his health and interfere with his literary work. Mr. Richard Harding Davis has been doing some reading this winter, and he is considered a good attraction; he reads in a straightforward fashion, without any attempt at elocutionary effect, that is agreeable.

Mr. Gilbert Parker, the Canadian novelist who has been spending the past few weeks in Mexico, is now on his way to Cuba, where he will make a short visit. From Cuba Mr. Parker will go to Florida and thence come to New York. He expects to sail for London before the first of May. During part of his recent stay in this city he devoted himself assiduously to some dramatic work, and it is not unlikely that we shall see the result before very long. Several of his plays have already been given in London.

Miss Beatrice Harraden, author of the popular novel with the capital title Ships that Pass in the Night, is soon to leave England for a visit to this country. She will be the guest of friends living very near New York City, and during her stay here she will doubtless be much fêted. The popularity of her story seems to be increasing every day, and the sale is extremely large. Just how much this success is due to the attractive quality of the title it would be most interesting to know; there is no doubt that the catching name was a factor in it.

Mr. L. J. B. Lincoln gave the last of his dramatic readings of the season at the Waldorf last Thursday evening. Several well-known actors and actresses interpreted an American comedy by Miss Edith Carpenter, who has won a reputation by her work in the magazines. Before the reading Mr. Lincoln announced that Miss Carpenter's play was just the kind of play that the managers of the present time would not produce and that the managers of the future probably would produce. This was another way of saying, what was undeniably true, that the literary quality in the work was stronger than the dramatic quality. But it was distinctly clever in dialogue and the characterization was good. If Miss Carpenter will obey the rules of dramatic construction as they are understood by most of the modern dramatists, which, after all, are about as good as any that have as yet been devised, she will doubtless produce a good actable drama.

Mr. Lincoln's "dramatic evenings" this winter have been experimental, and they have been so successful and so interesting that it is to be hoped that he will continue them next year. His "Uncut Leaves," as he calls the readings by authors from their own unpublished works, have been notably supported here, and now may be regarded as a permanent institution. Mr. Lincoln is to take "Uncut Leaves" to Boston next week, and their merits will surely find the recognition there that they deserve.

Mr. Lincoln has in preparation a new undertaking of a literary character of peculiar and novel interest. It is the establishment of a school for the training of writers conducted by experienced authors and editors. "All of the arts have training schools," he says, "with the exception of the art of literature. Many of the best of our American artists, for example, give instruction in the art schools. My plan is to establish an institution where the pupils shall have their literary work subjected to criticism of the best sort from those best fitted to give it — the men in current literary life." Mr. Lincoln has already submitted his plan to several prominent authors and editors, and from these he has received hearty approval and encouragement. It is his intention to open the school next fall. "I don't believe in the cultivation of genius," he says, "but I do think that young writers can be taught to rid themselves of faults and to work along the right lines." He hopes to include among his pupils not only young literary men and women of talent, but the younger newspaper writers who are ambitious to do literary as well as journalistic work.

The Harpers will publish serially a new story by Mr. Richard Harding Davis with the happy title "The Writing on the Wall." The action takes place in Egypt, where Mr. Davis spent several weeks during his trip abroad last year.

The 4th of April has been definitely chosen as the date of publication of Mrs. Ward's new novel, Marcella. The orders for the book have been so large that its success is practically secured in advance. The Macmillans also bring out this week the first edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's Katherine Lauderdale. This has already been sold and a large part of the second edition has been disposed of in advance. Mr. Crawford recently completed the second in the series of the three volumes of American life which Katherine Lauderdale inaugurates, and this will begin to run serially in the Ladies' Pictorial, one of the most popular of the English periodicals, about the first of July. I asked Mr. Brett, the head of the American branch of the Macmillans, the other day what effect serial publication had on the sale of Mr. Crawford's novels. "Apparently none whatever," he replied. "Those of Mr. Crawford's novels that have appeared as serials previous to their publication in book form sell just about as well as those that are first brought out as books. In the case of a well-known writer this, I think, is the rule. But serial publication is a distinct help to one whose work is not generally known, for the people who read the periodicals are not as a rule the buyers of books, and the advertising that the periodicals give to their novels helps the sale of these when they are made into books."

Mr. Stephen Crane, the young writer whose first novel, Maggie, won warm praise from Mr. Howells and from Mr. Hamlin Garland last year, recently completed two new books, a novel of the Civil War and a volume of poems. Mr. Crane has already shown what he can do in fiction. His book of verse, however, represents his first effort as a poet. Like his prose, it is of the realistic school and it is also marked by uncompromising unconventionality in form. It has been very highly commended by Mr. Howells, and when published it will doubtless create considerable discussion. Mr. Crane is only twenty-two years of age, and the originality and vigor of his work make him a most promising man.

Mr. Howard Seely, author of A Border Leander and several other popular novels, is making a collection of the poems of the late John Moran for publication in a volume. Mr. Moran was an Irish poet who lived here for many years and contributed frequently to the periodicals. He died three years ago. He had genuine talent, and Mr. Seely hopes to win for him the recognition that was his due.

John D. Barry.

FICTION.

Benefits Forgot.

In reading this novel, by Wolcott Balestier, it is impossible not to think of Silas Lapham. Both are American novels in all that concerns the localities and external conditions of their characters. Both are universal in the ethical problems presented, for the ethics of business is the underlying motive of both. In both books the problems are solved by a woman's clear insight into right and wrong abstracted from all financial considerations. But Mr. Balestier has gone farther than Mr. Howells. In Benefits Forgot the author has brought the forces of forgiveness and personal affection to bear upon the decision of what is right, and herein he showed his skill as a novelist and connoisseur of human hearts. Because the woman still loves the wrongdoer she forgives him. Such is the logic of love and of ethics, says Mr. Balestier. We allow the first and confess that the world is at least a more comfortable place in which to live when wrongdoers are still loved despite our deprecation of their bad deeds. By reason of its plot, for it is a financial-ethical novel, this book requires careful reading. Ethics predominate only in the pleading of love for rightdoing. The setting of the scenes among mines, ranches, and raw Western towns is admirable. The father's passionate love for his sons, which even his second marriage does not lessen, the sudden change from this feeling to the desire to get even with the boy who goes back on him, the love of the two brothers for the same girl, the constant suspicion which finally becomes definite proof that all the misery of the book dates from the father's changed mind, the final working out of love and right, and the widening and imperative obligations of gratitude — all this is told with subtle effect. Benefits Forgot is a story of rare power, which will interest men by its intricacy and which will make women pause at seeing how much they can forgive. It is not an epoch-making novel. It has had predecessors in Professor Royce's story of California, Mr. Howells' volumes, and in many another, but it is a striking addition to virile fiction. Affection rather than passion is the current running through the book, as it does through the life of average persons. Mr. Balestier was too wise an artist to ignore it, as many do in trying to make other issues more attractive. He takes love and winds it along with the business interest of life, one or the other alternating in importance just as it does in reality. It is a pity that a writer so broad-minded in his treatment of human existence could not leave many other novels to delight and instruct us.— D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

John Ingerfield.

In the preface to this little volume Mr. Jerome K. Jerome is careful to explain that three of the five stories it contains were never intended to be amusing. The explanation seems to have been made necessary by his past experience, but in this case it might have been more to the point had he labeled the other two, since the serious tales are really less likely to be mistaken. "John Ingerfield" is a charming story of love between two who had fancied themselves incapable of sentiment or unworldliness, but who were revealed to themselves and to each other in the typhus fever days of George the Third's reign. "The Woman of the Saetor" is a weird, ghostly tale of the Norwegian mountains. It is quite possible that the British public, who have shown themselves willing to be captivated by Mr. Jerome's humor, will prefer "Variety Patter" and "Lease of the Cross Keys" to the other tales — the one with its description of invective as brought to a fine art in a music and dance hall, the other with its picture of a bishop suspected of getting drunk. — Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

A Little Widow.

Mr. William Tirebuck, the author of Sweetheart Gwen and other novels, has collected under the above title a dozen "episodes, English, Irish, Welsh, and Scotch," of different characters. None is more touching or more effective than the short story of "A Little Widow." Mack Hugh, a coal heaver in Liverpool, dies, and his mates take up a collection to buy a mourning bonnet for his widow. She dies herself soon after, and little Bridget, the only child, arrays herself for her mother's funeral in the same bonnet. "M — mother was widder to father, and — I — thought — I thought she'd like me to be widder to her." Mr. Tirebuck's range is wide, and in such stories as "A Printer's Error," "Our Belina," "Comedy and Tragedy," and "Donald and Jean," one is attracted by the beginning of each story, held throughout by its development, and invariably amused or touched by its close. Among the many collections of short stories of the present day there are few of English origin that are better wrought or show a more diversified talent than this. — Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.

A Tragic Blunder.

Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron has had considerable experience in the province of light novel-writing, and she passes the hero and heroine of her present book dexterously through the successive stages of confession, misunderstanding, recklessness, complications, and final explanation and reconcilement. Her heroine is the young girl met periodically in fiction who resents the thought that one man has treated her badly, and tries to revenge herself by the wholesale subjugation of mankind in general until she flirts her way through to repentance and final happiness with the first lover. It is not worth while to take these books very seriously, but they maintain an undeniable popularity with the patrons of circulating libraries. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Parisian Points of View.

Here is a fresh reminder that verve and chic, and traits expressed by other not quite translatable words, belong preëminently to the Gallic pen. Nine brilliant little sketches and stories by Ludovic Halévy have been translated by Miss Edith V. B. Matthews and introduced by Mr. Brander Matthews in an interesting essay which touches admiringly upon Halévy's gentle irony, his firm dramatic grasp, and the buoyancy of his style. "More than Maupassant or Flaubert or Mérimée is M. Halévy a Parisian," we are told. Happily he is a Parisian of the better sort. "We do not find in his pages," says Mr. Matthews, "any of the pessimism which is, perhaps, the dominant characteristic of the best French fiction of our time. . . . He is not disillusioned utterly; he is not reduced to the blankness of despair as are so many of the disciples of Flaubert, who are cast into the outer darkness and who hopelessly revolt against the doom they have brought on themselves."

With delicate satire and abounding humor, M. Halévy tells the romance of young love among heiresses and millionaires, or shows the insecure position of "The Most Beautiful Woman in Paris." In "The Insurgent" and "The Chinese Ambassador" he throws a flash light upon the kaleidoscopic nature of French politics. One graceful chapter is the story of a dog's accomplishments; another recounts the services of a circus charger in bringing about a marriage. Usually the touch is gay, but in "The Insurgent" the sarcasm is grave throughout. The book is well named, for, as Mr. Matthews remarks, whether or not the characters of M. Halévy's "tale are dwellers in the capital, whether or not the scene of his story is laid in the city by the Seine, the point of view is always Parisian." — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

A Marriage Ceremony.

In her latest novel Ada Cambridge has told a vivid story upon the basis of a very simple plot. A rich old man who desires his fortune to remain intact leaves it to his niece and his sister's stepson upon condition that they marry each other within three months from the time of his death. Otherwise the money was to endow a hospital. The young people, being high-minded, are shocked upon discovering such an attempt to control their lives. The woman's wounded dignity and attitude of repudiation completely win the man's affection. He at last persuades her to let the marriage ceremony be performed with the understanding that they shall then immediately part. Betty's latent love for Rutherford grows during their long separation and culminates when he follows her from England to Australia and skillfully wooes her. It may be pointed out as an improbability under the law of chances that Betty and Hilda should both have fled to the antipodes, and meeting there for the first time should have become close friends without learning until Rutherford's arrival of his relation to either of them. This we maintain in spite of the remark dropped upon page 79 by way of forestalling "the captious critic." For it is not simply a question of one improbability, but of several linked together. The conversations are lifelike and the characters are interesting. Without wishing to be captious, we may suggest that they would be still more interesting if their outlook were not distinctly bounded by this world. The verses on page 80, written "in an hour of spiritual exaltation in which" Hilda "was able to imagine that all was well," strike a note that is lacking in the love of Rutherford and Betty. But they will gain it as their life proceeds. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Mrs. Alexander's facility in constructiveness, simplicity, and goodness is unfailing. Her characters are never very bad, their affections are honest and wholesome, merit always meets with its reward, and middle-class life is made attractive. Certainly women owe her a debt of gratitude for making their sex appear in a favorable light. But when all this is said there is not much left to say concerning A Ward in Chancery, whose heroine loses her money and gains a lover. She is a remarkably excellent maiden and her fortunes interest us unto the end of the pages. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Judging from the numerous books of travel and wild adventure written for boys, it would almost seem as if one of the chief uses of the world is to furnish literature for them. The Mystery of Abel Forefinger, by William Drysdale, is irreproachable, but as it lacks sensational features it fails to be exciting. An uncle, with his son and nephew, takes a voyage to the West Indies and at last finds the negro who knows how to make good flour out of bananas. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

MINOR NOTICES.

History of Federal Government in Greece and Italy.

This is the second edition of the late Prof. E. A. Freeman's well-known work, of which only one volume was ever written, appearing in 1863. The manuscript of a chapter which was to have been the first of Volume II, on Federalism in Italy, was discovered among Mr. Freeman's papers, and it fills some sixty pages of this edition. It contains a full account of the forms of federalism which have appeared in Italy. A fragment on the German federations is the other feature of the text which distinguishes the second edition from the first. The editor, J. Bury, M.A., a fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, has, however, corrected a few mistakes in the original text, revised the references to authorities, and added some twenty pages of notes in the appendix. Mr. Bury reminds the reader that no references to temporary events have been altered in the book, and that the reader must remember it was written in 1862 and 1863. The original title, indeed, of the work showed that Mr. Freeman had overconfidence in his powers as a prophet since it included the words, "to the disruption of the United States of America." It would have been well if Mr. Bury had included Mr. Freeman's subsequent apology for his mistake — a mistake which of course in no wise affects the substantial value of Mr. Freeman's work. It is altogether the best treatise on the subject in our language. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

The Jacobean Poets.

In his latest volume, published in the University Extension series, Mr. Edmund Gosse directs the attention of his readers to the years between 1603, the date of Queen Elizabeth's death, and 1625, which closed the reign of James. Mr. Gosse justifies this empirical division of literary history by characterizing the leading features of the Elizabethan and the Jacobean periods and showing how they differ from each other. There are various advantages in considering the poets of this time by themselves rather than grouping them with others under the general name Elizabethan, as is usually done. Straightforwardness and simplicity had visibly begun to give way to more brilliant writing and to appeals to less primitive ideas and feelings. To express this in Mr. Gosse's own words, "What were lost were the clear morning note, the serenity, the coolness, and sober sweetness of poets who had no rivals in the immediate past; what were gained were passion, depth of thought, a certain literary cleverness (which was in itself a snare), and a closer pertinence to passing events." Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, Heywood, Middleton, Massinger, and many others come within the lines drawn by this little volume, and all are treated with originality and fresh literary judgment. Mr. Gosse's critical estimates of drama and song are so suggestive and interesting that one would be willing to sacrifice for more matter of this nature somewhat of the biographical and bibliographical portions, which are yet, doubtless, desirable and even necessary in a book of this kind. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

The Gods of Olympos.

This finely illustrated volume is a manual of Greek and Roman mythology, translated and edited by Katherine A. Raleigh from the twentieth edition of the standard work of Dr. A. H. Petiscus. Mrs. Jane E. Harrison, the well-known writer on Greek mythology and archæology, furnishes a preface, in which she explains that the author wrote at a time when the Indo-European theory and the cosmical theory had not come up, and of course the prevailing folklore method of interpreting mythology was not known. An elementary book on mythology such as this does not need to explain the origin of the gods, but simply to set forth the substance of the accounts given in the classic authors. This duty Dr. Petiscus and his editor and translator have done very well. Most of the references which have been added refer to German volumes which are not in the reach of most readers. Practically this is a manual of mythology on the old-fashioned lines, with the exception of the Greek spelling of many of the names. — Cassell Publishing Co. $2.00.

The Trial of Dr. Briggs.

This little book of four less than two hundred pages seems to be all the better for appearing some time after the trial. The smoke of the battle has cleared and things have cooled off. Prescott the historian used to say that he wanted his heroes under the ground at least two hundred years before he wrote about them! The sub-title of this book is "A Calm Review of the Case by a Stranger who attended all the sessions of the Court." After photographing, as it were, the various attitudes of the plaintiff, defendant, and looker-on, the six charges are then taken up and considered. The author, whose preface is signed R. J. L., considers that the prosecutors were far more "orthodox" than he had been trained to be at Princeton or had become after more than twenty years of study and pastoral work. He was impressed with the clearness of Dr. Briggs' statements and the directness with which he met every charge. What interested him most was the remarkable agreement of Dr. Briggs upon several of the doctrines on which he had been arraigned with the views he had been taught at Princeton and which he had himself taught freely to intelligent and "orthodox" congregations during twenty years. From a reading of this calm, clear, and judicial book it seems certain that Dr. Briggs was tried at a time when the air, as well as the brains of the brethren, was heated with controversy and when the minds of those who tried and condemned him were unbalanced by the excitement attending the revision movement. Moreover, underneath all, besides the other human prejudices, were the rivalry and jealousy between the two leading seminaries of the Presbyterian Church. "When the real position of the Rev. Dr. Briggs comes to be known, the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America will, without doubt, accord him that justice to which he is sacredly entitled and remove the sentence passed upon him." — A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 50c.

Famous Adventures and Prison Escapes of the Civil War.

Readers of the Century Magazine have not forgotten these accounts of adventure written by those who could indeed say with truth, "Quæque ipse miserrima vidi et quorum pars magna fui." Their appearance in this convenient and permanent form is to be welcomed. "The War Diary of a Union Woman in the South," edited by George W. Cable, holds the first place, and is followed by "The Locomotive Chase in Georgia," a story of spirited, concerted action which for brilliancy of conception and unusual daring could hardly be excelled. In the article entitled "Col. Rose's Tunnel at Libby Prison" the difficulties that had to be overcome before the famous 109 could grope their way through Rat Hell and the horrible passage leading to the outer air are described with graphic realism by Frank E. Moran, one of the last to make the journey. This story of patience and heroism will never lose its power to stir the hearts of readers. The "Escape of Gen. Breckinridge," "A Romance of Morgan's Rough-Riders," "A Hard Road to Travel Out of Dixie," and a brief account of "Mosby's Partizan Rangers" complete the collection, each chapter of which is full of interest. — Century Co. $2.00.

A Roadside Harp.

Miss Louise Imogen Guiney is a real singer, and it is a pity that she is not content to sing less artificially. Her thought seems charged with the mannerisms and conceits of that school of English poets of which Waller is an example. Following their pattern, she confects and twists her phrases into a simulated quaintness which often robs them of their real charm and not unfrequently of their clear meaning. This imitation is often of an excellent sort; the regret is that after all and when all is ended it is but an imitation. Cowley and Waller and Lovelace (who, Miss Guiney contends, "hold the pinnacles of song") wrote after the strain of their time. The far-fetched metaphors and amorous quirks, the tortuous rhymes and "ringleted" phrases, were natural to them and sprang from every-day conditions; they cannot come naturally in our nineteenth century, though a little, a very little, of them gives a spice of new-old flavor which is enjoyable. We like Miss Guiney so much that we should like to have her for once "let her voice out" in the accent and with the feeling and passion of the real moment. Whenever she does this the world will find her much more of a real poet than it has yet discovered her to be. Meanwhile, as a specimen of the true beauty to be found in this charmingly printed little volume, we will quote this "Nocturne":

> The sun that hurt his lovers from on high
> Is fallen; she more merciful is nigh,
> The blessèd one whose beauty's even glow
> Gave never wound to any shepherd's eye.
> Above our pausing boat in shallows drifted
> Alone her plaintive form ascends the sky.
>
> O sing! the water-golds are deepening now,
> A hush has come upon the beechen bough;
> She shines the while on thee, as saint to saint
> Sweet interchanged adorings may allow;
> Sing, dearest, with that lily throat uplifted —
> They are so like, the holy Moon and thou.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

Mrs. Deland brings Roger Carey and Alicia together in the April Atlantic in more cheerful chapters than the recent installments have been. Mrs. Phelps-Ward's story, "The Oath of Allegiance," needs only to be compared with experience to show how exaggerated her method is. Mrs. Catherwood furnishes a pathetic tale of an Indian woman, "The Windigo." Mr. A. Lawrence Lowell's paper on "The Referendum in Switzerland and in America" lets in a good deal of cold reason on the subject; his conclusion is that the institution is not adapted to the United States, the initiative being, indeed, a failure in Switzerland. Mrs. Cavazza shows herself a great lover of that noble animal the horse in her sketch of her strawberry roan, "Jerry: a Personality." Mr. W. R. Thayer in treating "Some Causes of the Italian Crisis" ascribes it in large degree to Jingoism. Other articles in a very good number are "General Lee during the Campaign of the Seven Days," by Eben Greenough Scott; "War's Use of the Engines of Peace," by Joseph L. Brent; "The Secret of the Wild-Rose Path," by Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller; "Early Latin Poetry," by R. Y. Tyrrell; and "Opinions," by Miss Repplier. The review of the Life of Bronson Alcott reduces his claims as a thinker to small dimensions.

The complete novel in the April number of Lippincott's is "The Flying Halcyon," by Col. Richard Henry Savage, author of My Official Wife. It deals with treasure hunting and the rescue of a political prisoner in Sonora, and has three dashing naval heroes with heroines to match. Gilbert Parker's serial, "The Trespasser," reaches its twelfth chapter. Other stories are "Cap'n Patti," by Elia W. Peattie, who touches upon the Salvation Army, and "For Remembrance," by Elizabeth W. Bellamy. P. F. de Gournay supplies an interesting account of "The F. M. C.'s of Louisiana," a class which lost its distinctive existence by the war. Under the heading "The Librarian among His Books" Julian Hawthorne describes the Library of Congress and its distinguished custodian. Chief Justice Abraham Fornander tells about "Hawaiian Traditions." H. C. Walsh explains an interesting experiment in "Coöperative Housekeeping" now being made at Brookline, Mass., and George J. Varney writes learnedly of "Storage-Battery Cars." In "Heroines of the Human Comedy" Junius Henri Browne contributes a study of Balzac and his feminine characters. The poetry of the number, besides an Easter hymn by M. S. Paden, comes from Celia A. Hayward and Charles Calvin Ziegler.

In the New World for March, 1894, we have an array of names new and old in its list of writers which stand for mastery in their lines of thought. Prof. Henry Jones of St. Andrews University, Scotland, the author of a fine volume on Browning, contributes a searching yet appreciative review of "Lotze's Doctrine of Thought." Dr. Philip S. Moxom of Boston and Springfield treats in a frank and candid spirit of "The Human Element in the Bible." He shows that this element involves progress, and that in the long run it will have no destructive influence on the authority of the Bible in the minds of those who most recognize this human element. "Universalism a Progressive Faith" is a very interesting article for many reasons; Rev. A. N. Alcott of Elgin, Ill., proves his point, we think. Prof. Karl Budde of the University of Strassburg writes of the "Song of Solomon." He considers that the Song of Songs "has been constructed out of a large circle of single songs and fragments of songs," and that, as the book contains elements of sensuality, special editions of the Bible properly expurgated should be printed "for minors and others who may be in danger of injury," but that we should be grateful because "this fine memorial of truly genuine folk-poetry has been preserved to us only through a misunderstanding." The versatile Boston preacher, Minot J. Savage, gives a study of "The Origin of Goodness," believing that the ultimate solution of the question is to be obtained by "following the order of the growth of life." The literary reader will be charmed and delighted by Prof. Josiah Royce's paper on "The Problem of Paracelsus;" the style of the paper is as delightful as the insight into Browning's problem and his treatment of it are profound. Rev. Thomas R. Slicer of Buffalo discusses, with brilliant reflective lights from contemporaneous social and religious history, "The Ante-Nicene Doctrine of the Unity of God." The author of The Continuity of Christian Thought, who writes too little, contributes a brilliant and solid paper on "Dean Stanley and the Tractarian Movement." Prof. A. V. G. Allen declares that Dean Stanley was "the greatest humanist since the days of Erasmus." The page which contains this sentence is a brilliant miniature biography of the great churchman. The book reviews are numerous and important; men of varied ability put the serious literature of the day under the search light of the specialist.

To the Popular Science Monthly for April Dr. A. D. White contributes another chapter in the Warfare of Science series, dealing with "Theological Teachings Regarding the Animals and Man." Under the title "Trusts Their Own Corrective" Mr. George A. Rich shows that combinations which have sought to make unreasonable profits have worked their own destruction. In "New Lights on the Problem of Flying," an illustrated article, Prof. Joseph Le Conte discusses some recent experiments by Professor Langley, and admits that human flight is not the impossibility that he has declared it to be. "The Method of Homing Pigeons" is described with many diagrams by Prof. C. F. Hodge, who shows that the birds have no such inscrutable instinct as they have been credited with. This number contains also the second portion of Alfred R. Wallace's paper on "The Ice Age and its Work." The system of aërial telegraphy invented by Claude Chappe is described by Walter Lodian in a fully illustrated article entitled "A Century of the Telegraph in France." In "An Illustrative Chapter on Legal Development" some facts concerning the ownership of land that will surprise the average real estate owner are given by William W. Billson. The tribute of Herbert Spencer to "The Late Professor Tyndall" is printed in this number. Prof. James D. Dana discusses the question whether there were one or two glacial epochs, under the title "On New England and the Upper Mississippi Basin in the Glacial Period." The subject of the usual sketch and portrait is Rev. L. D. von Schweinitz, one of the earliest botanists to study American fungi.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Harper & Brothers have nearly ready a work on The Jewish Question and the Mission of the Jews, by an anonymous author who, it is said, has made a careful and peculiarly complete study of the Jew as a type, an influence, and a "problem" of increasing importance in the history of civilization; The Wee Ones of Japan, a study of the Japanese child in babyhood and just beyond, by Mae St. John Bramhall, with illustrations by C. D. Weldon; For Honor and Life, a military tale of the eighteenth century, by William Weston; and The Expert Waitress, by Anne Frances Springsteed.

— William Frederick Poole, LL.D., the noted librarian, died March 1 at his home at Evanston, Ill. His Index to Periodical Literature is known to every user of large libraries as "Poole's Index." His Ordinance of 1787 is a valuable work, while his Cotton Mather and Salem Witchcraft give to the world an insight into certain peculiarities in American religions hitherto unknown. He was born at Salem, December 24, 1821, and was a member of the class of 1849 of Yale. Mr. Poole was assistant librarian of the Boston Athenæum in 1851, and in 1852 became librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, where he remained four years, and printed a dictionary catalogue of the library on the "title a-line" principle, which has since been largely followed. From 1856 to 1869 he was the librarian of the Boston Athenæum. He began in October, 1869, as librarian of the organization of the public library of Cincinnati, and in January, 1874, the organization of the Chicago Public Library. He resigned this position in August, 1877, and has since been engaged in the organization of the library at Chicago founded by Walter L. Newberry. Mr. Poole devoted much attention to the study of American history, and was president of the American Historical Association and a member of many similar societies. He was president from 1855 till 1887 of the American Library Association, and vice-president of the International Conference of Librarians in London in 1877. He has published many papers on literary and historical topics, including the construction of buildings and the organization and management of public libraries. These include, beside those already mentioned, the chapter on witchcraft in the Memorial History of Boston, the "Popham Colony," and "The Anti-slavery Opinion before 1800."

— Macmillan & Co. will publish early in the spring the second volume of the revised edition of Bryce's American Commonwealth.

— The Burrows Brothers Co., Cleveland, have in preparation a handsome reprint of the Lincoln and Douglas debates, limited to 750 copies, sold to subscribers.

— The essays and sketches contributed by Mme. Modjeska to various magazines and reviews have been collected, and will be published in book form by Rand, McNally & Co. of Chicago.

— Miss Sarah Jeannette Duncan, whose name in real life is Mrs. E. C. Cotes, has written a novel called A Daughter of To-Day, which Messrs. Chatto & Windus will publish in two volumes.

— The granddaughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne, Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne, is about to publish her first book. It is to be called The Fairest of the Fair, and is to contain a record of her experiences in Chicago last summer.

— William Watson the poet is again ill and rather seriously so.

— Dr. William H. Burk, for a number of years an associate editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, died suddenly at his home in Philadelphia on the 3d inst., aged thirty-six years. Dr. Burk was engaged in writing a work on The Life of George W. Childs.

— Col. Frederick D. Grant has prepared a new edition of his father's Memoirs, which will be issued this year.

— Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have in the press an authorized translation, in four volumes, of Prof. Adolf Holm's History of Greece, extending from the earliest times to the destruction of Greek independence.

— M. Zola has been again defeated in his endeavors to become an academician — the successful candidate being José Maria de Heredia.

— W. & R. Chambers announce that they have in the press a Gazetteer of the World, Topographical, Statistical, and Historical.

— Mr. Andrew Lang is about to publish a new volume of poems under the title of Ban and Arrière Ban: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. He has also in preparation a book of studies in psychical phenomena and human credulity. This is to be called The Cock Lane Ghost and Common Sense.

— Messrs. Stone & Kimball of Chicago and Cambridge have in preparation a definitive edition of the writings of Edgar Allan Poe, edited by Edmund Clarence Stedman and George Edward Woodberry. It will be complete in ten volumes, illustrated with portraits, facsimiles, and so forth. The printing is done on specially made paper. This firm is about to publish: Lincoln's Grave: a Poem, by Maurice Thompson; The Quest of Heracles, and Other Poems, by Hugh McCulloch, Jr.; Sonnets and Other Poems, by George Santayana; and A Lover's Diary, by Gilbert Parker.

— Prof. Lewis Campbell has written a biographical sketch of the late Prof. Thomas Spencer Baynes for a volume of essays written by the latter, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. under the title of Shakespeare Studies and Other Essays. Professor Baynes was editor of the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica and wrote the article on Shakespeare contained therein. The essays to be reproduced in this volume consist of the article just mentioned and three essays that appeared in Fraser's Magazine, 1879–80, entitled "What Shakespeare Learned at School."

— Sorrow and Song is to be the title of a new book of essays by Mr. Coulson Kernahan, of Dead Man's Diary and Strange Sins fame. The last-named book has been sent into a third edition — thanks, perhaps, to the attack in the London Quarterly.

— Noah Farnham Morrison, 877 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., publishes an interesting catalogue, dated this month, of rare and curious books and pamphlets, including Americana, travels, biographies, and general literature.

— Dean Hole of Rochester, whose proposed visit to the United States has been postponed until next autumn, will publish next week a volume of Addresses to Working Men through Thomas Whittaker, New York.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co. announce for immediate publication a little volume containing seven essays under the title Social Reform and the Church, by John R. Commons, professor of economics and social science in Indiana University.

— Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. will issue immediately a translation of a very popular novel by the celebrated Hungarian writer Maurice Jokai, In Love with the Czarina, and a story by Henry Herman, entitled A Dead Man's Secret.

— Under the title Joanna Traill, Spinster, Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co. will publish April 1 a novel by Miss Annie E. Holdsworth, which treats the question of individual rescue work among fallen women with power and at the same time with delicacy.

— The Jewish Publication Society of America announces Vol. III of the History of the Jews, by Prof. H. Graetz, and papers of the Jewish Women's Congress held at Chicago in connection with the Parliament of Religions.

— The Cassell Publishing Co. has ready the much-discussed series of articles on the Experimental Novel, by Émile Zola, translated by Belle M. Sherman, who has also added a number of other essays by the author of the Rougon Macquart series; Tolstoï's latest book, The Kingdom of God is within You, Christianity not as a mystic religion but as a new theory of life, translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett; and 'Lisbeth, a new novel by Leslie Keith, author of The Chilcotes.

— A life of the late Lucy Larcom is being prepared by the Rev. Dulaney Addison of Beverly, Mass., who asks for the loan of letters in possession of her friends that may be helpful to him.

—The venerable M. Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire is hard at work on his Life of Victor Cousin, which he hopes to complete before he dies. M. Saint-Hilaire, who was Cousin's favorite disciple, sits in that philosopher's big armchair while he writes.

—The centennial of William Cullen Bryant's birth will be celebrated on November 3 at Great Barrington, where the poet was married and lived for several years. His house is still standing, but not in its original place. It was moved some years ago to make room for a hotel.

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish this day An Island Garden, by Celia Thaxter; Brave Little Holland, and What She Taught Us, by William Elliot Griffis, D.D.; Does God Send Trouble? by Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D.; A Bird-Lover in the West, by Olive Thorne Miller; Bayou Folk, by Kate Chopin; Memoir Concerning the Seabury Commemoration, held at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, the fourteenth day of November, A.D., 1884; and A Satchel Guide, for the vacation tourist in Europe, edition for 1894 revised to date.

—D. Appleton & Co.'s spring announcements include the Memoirs of the Baron de Meneval, Private Secretary of Napoleon I, in three volumes, with portraits; The History of the United States Navy, by Edgar Stanton Maclay, Vol. II, from the close of the War of 1812 to 1894; The Life of Edward L. Youmans, by John Fiske; Smith's Classical Dictionary, a new edition, thoroughly revised; General Washington, a new volume in the Great Commanders series, by General Bradley T. Johnson; A Daughter of To-day, a novel, by Mrs. Everard Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan); Cleopatra, an Egyptian romance, by Dr. Georg Ebers; Creatures of Other Days, by the Rev. Dr. H. N. Hutchinson, author of Extinct Monsters; Symbolic Education, by Susan E. Blow; Aphorisms from Herbert Spencer, by Julia R. Gingell; Aërial Navigation, by J. G. W. Fijnje, translated and revised by Colonel George E. Waring, Jr.; Evolution of the Public School System in Massachusetts, by G. F. Martin; a new novel by E. F. Benson, author of Dodo; The Trespasser, by Gilbert Parker; Red Diamonds, by Justin McCarthy; Outlaw and Lawmaker, by Mrs. Campbell-Praed; Dust and Laurels, by Mary F. Prenderel; A Beginner, by Rhoda Broughton; A Yellow Aster, by Iota; The Trail of the Sword, by Gilbert Parker; and A Costly Freak, by Maxwell Grey.

—The J. B. Lippincott Co. will shortly issue Travels in a Tree-Top, by Rev. Charles C. Abbott, the success of whose Recent Rambles is a guarantee of many readers for any new work; Pain, by J. Leonard Corning; A Man of To-Day, a copyright novel by Helen Mathers; The Mystery of the Patrician Club, by Albert D. Vandam; and The Queen of Love, by S. Baring-Gould.

—Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co. have now in press a Laboratory Course in Physiological Psychology, by Dr. E. C. Sanford of Clark University.

—James Montgomery Bailey, widely known as the "Danbury Newsman," died in Danbury, Conn., on the 4th inst., aged fifty-three years. After the close of the war he purchased the Danbury Times, which he conducted until he acquired the Danbury Jeffersonian in 1870. The two papers he consolidated under the name of the Danbury News. His quaint and original humor soon made him and his paper famous. He published several humorous books, such as Life in Danbury and England from a Back Window, which were well received, and delivered humorous lectures. In recent years he had done no literary work.

—A selection from the poems of A. H. Clough will shortly be published as a new volume in the Golden Treasury series.

—Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch is about to publish a short novel, entitled The Bishop of Eucalyptus.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Life and Works of Alexander Anderson, M.D., the First American Wood-Engraver. By Frederic A. Burr, A.M. New York: Burr Brothers. $4.00

The Story of two Noble Lives: being Memorials of Charlotte, Countess Canning, and Louisa, Marchioness of Waterford. By Augustus J. C. Hare. In three vols. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $8.00

Educational.

Contes de Balzac. Edited by George McLean Harper and Louis Eugene Livingood. New York: William R. Jenkins; Boston: C. Schoenhof.

A Short French Grammar. By C. H. Grandgent. With French Lessons and Exercises. D. C. Heath & Co. 80c.

Le Francais par la Conversation. Par Charles P. Du Croquet. New York: William R. Jenkins; Boston: C. Schoenhof.

Short Selections for Translating English into French. By Paul Bercy. New York: William R. Jenkins; Boston: C. Schoenhof.

Economics and Politics.

Secularism: its Progress and its Morals. By John M. Bonham. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

The Evolution of Woman. An Inquiry into the Dogma of Her Superiority to Man. By Eliza Burt Gamble. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

The Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America. By John F. Dillon, LL.D. Little, Brown & Co. $4.00 net.

Essays and Sketches.

Pain, Pleasure, and Æsthetics. An Essay Concerning the Psychology of Pain and Pleasure, with Special Reference to Æsthetics. By Henry Rutgers Marshall, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Selections from the Essays of Francis Jeffrey. Edited by Lewis E. Gates. Ginn & Co. $1.00

The Venetian Painters of the Renaissance. With an Index to Their Works. By Bernhard Berenson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Science and Christian Tradition. Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Social Evolution. By Benjamin Kidd. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

The Mentor. By Alfred Ayres. D. Appleton & Co $1.00

Art in Theory. An Introduction to the Study of Comparative Æsthetics. By George Lansing Raymond, L.H.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

Fiction.

The New Prince Fortunatus. By William Black. New and revised edition. Harper & Brothers. 80c.

The Mystery of Abel Forefinger. By William Drysdale. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Little Widow and Other Episodes — English, Irish, Welsh, and Scotch. By William Tirebuck. London: Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.

In Exile, and Other Stories By Mary Hallock Foote. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Waring's Peril. By Capt. Charles King, U. S. Army. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Ten Notable Stories from Lippincott's Magazine. By Kate Jordan and others. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Crime and Punishment. A Novel. By Fedor Dostoieffsky. Illustrated. Laird & Lee. 50c.

Tempe. By Constance Cotterell. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

A Sleep-Walker. By Paul H. Gerrard. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XVII. St. Ronan's Well. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The Holy Cross, and Other Tales. By Eugene Field. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

The King of Schnorrers. Grotesques and Fantasies. By I. Zangwill. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

A Modern Love Story. By Harriet E. Orcutt. Chas. H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

Fairy Tales from the Arabian Nights. Edited and arranged by E. Dixon. Illustrated by J. D. Batten. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2 00

A Ward in Chancery. By Mrs. Alexander. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Benefits Forgot. By Wolcott Balestier. D. Appleton & Co $1.50

The Rose of Paradise. By Howard Pyle. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

History.

The Home Life of the Ancient Greeks. Tr. from the German of Prof. H. Blumner by Alice Zimmern. Illustrated. Cassell Pub. Co. $2.00

The Christian Recovery of Spain. Being the Story of Spain from the Moorish Conquest to the Fall of Granada (711–1492 A.D.). By Henry Edward Watts. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

A Child's History of Spain. By John Bonner. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $2.00

The Modern Régime. By Hippolyte Adolphe Taine, D.C.L. Tr. by John Durand. Vol. II. Henry Holt & Co. $2.50

A History of the Mental Growth of Mankind in Ancient Times. By John S. Hittell. In four vols. Henry Holt & Co. $6.00

Social England. A Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Industry, etc., from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By various writers. Edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. Vol. I. Second edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

The History of Australia and New Zealand from 1606 to 1890. By Alexander Sutherland and George Sutherland. Longmans, Green & Co. 90c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

The Poems of William Browne, of Tavistock. Edited by Gordon Goodwin, with an introduction by A. H. Bullen In two vols. Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3 50

The Lyrics and Ballads of Sir Walter Scott. Edited, with an introduction, by Andrew Lang. Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.75

Book-Song. An Anthology of Poems of Books and Bookmen from Modern Authors. Edited by Gleeson White. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1 25

A Poet's Portfolio. Later Readings. By William Wetmore Story. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Vistas. Written by William Sharp. London: Frank Murray. 5*s.* net

Religion and Theology.

The Spirit of God. By P. C. Mozoomdar. George H. Ellis. $1.50

The World's Congress of Religions. Edited by Prof. C. M. Stevans, Ph.D. Laird & Lee. 50c.

None Like It; a Plea for the Old Sword. By Joseph Parker. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25

The English Church in the Nineteenth Century. 1800–1833. By John H. Overton, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00

The Historic Episcopate By Charles Woodruff Shields, D.D., LL.D. Chas. Scribner's Sons. 60c. net

Theosophy or Christianity, Which? By Rev. I. M. Haldeman. Croscup & Co. 40c.

The Hebrew Twins. A Vindication of God's Ways with Jacob and Esau. By the late Samuel Cox, D.D. Thos. Whittaker. $1.50

The Psalms. By Alexander McClaren, D.D. Vol. II. Psalms 39–84 A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Inspiration. Eight Lectures on the Early History and Origin of the Doctrine of Biblical Inspiration. Bampton Lectures for 1893. By W. Sanday, M.A., D.D., LL.D. Second edition. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00

Religion in History and in Modern Life. By A. M. Fairbairn. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50

The Epistles of St. Peter. By J. Rawson Lumby, D D. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Scientific and Technical.

Some Salient Points in the Science of the Earth. By Sir J. William Dawson. With forty-six illustrations. Harper & Brothers. $2.00

Travel and Observation.

My Arctic Journal. A Year among Ice-Fields and Eskimos. By Josephine Diebitsch-Peary. Contemporary Publishing Co. $2.00

Australia as It Is. With Notices of New Zealand. By a Clergyman. Third edition. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

Miscellaneous.

The Philosophy of Mental Healing. By Leander Edmund Whipple. Metaphysical Publishing Co. $2.50

Pocket Maps of Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri, Tennessee. Rand, McNally & Co. Each, 25c.

Contributions Towards a Dictionary of English Book-Collectors. Part V. London: Bernard Quaritch. 1*s.* 6*d.*

The Principles of Strategy. Illustrated mainly from American campaigns. By John Bigelow, Jr. Second edition, revised and enlarged. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. $5.00

A Standard Dictionary of the English Language upon Original Plans Prepared by more than 200 Specialists and Other Scholars, under the supervision of Isaac K. Funk, editor in chief. In two vols. Vol. I. Funk & Wagnalls. $7.50

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

Symbolic Education.

By SUSAN E. BLOW. Volume 26, International Education Series. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

This book discusses in a practical way the foundations of the philosophy of Froebel as found in "The Mothers' Songs and Games"—Mutter-und Koselieder—and shows in a clear manner the significance of the kindergarten and its claims for the important place of corner stone of education. It is emphatically a book for mothers as well as for teachers, as it gives the desired aid and interpretation of the actions, feelings, and thoughts of infancy, and unfolds the true method of training as taught by Froebel.

Our Manifold Nature.

Stories from Life. By SARAH GRAND, author of "The Heavenly Twins," "Ideala," etc. No. 136, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, with portrait of author, $1.00.

In these stories the author of "The Heavenly Twins" shows some of her strongest and most impressive work. The great number of readers who have been charmed with her previous books will not fail to discern in this new volume the qualities which have gained for her such prompt and widespread recognition.

A Costly Freak.

By MAXWELL GRAY, author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland," "An Innocent Impostor," etc. No. 137 Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

This story demonstrates that the author's power to hold her readers' closest attention has not diminished since the appearance of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." It is a novel which compares more nearly to that remarkable book than does any other of her writings.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,

1, 3, & 5 BOND STREET, . . . NEW YORK.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR APRIL.

Theological Teachings regarding the Animals and Man. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., L. H. D.

Dealing with the structure and habits of the original serpent, the unicorn, the dragon, and the seven-headed beasts mentioned in Scripture, modes of accounting for hurtful and "superfluous" animals, etc.

The Late Professor Tyndall. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Some characteristics of the departed scientist depicted by his eminent associates.

New Lights on the Problem of Flying. (Illustrated.) By Prof. JOSEPH LE CONTE.

A re-examination of this fascinating problem, which now seems in a fair way to be solved.

The Method of Homing Pigeons. (Illustrated.) By C. F. HODGE, Ph. D.

A result of tests which shows the real character of the homing faculty in these birds.

OTHER ARTICLES ON

TRUSTS THEIR OWN CORRECTIVE; INCIDENTS OF CAMBODIAN LIFE; THE ICE AGE AND ITS WORK, II; A CENTURY OF THE TELEGRAPH IN FRANCE (illustrated; AN ILLUSTRATIVE CHAPTER ON LEGAL DEVELOPMENT; THE BEAVER EATER; ON NEW ENGLAND AND THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI BASIN IN THE GLACIAL PERIOD; THE ORIGIN OF ART; SKETCH OF L. D. VON SCHWEINITZ (with Portrait);

EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

The Englishman at Home:

His Responsibilities and Privileges.

By EDWARD PORRITT, formerly London Editor of the Manchester Examiner.

The author's aim has been to make the book not only of use and interest to students of civics and of English history and contemporary politics, but also of value to American visitors to England and to readers of English news in the American press. His accuracy and carefulness of statement may be subjected to the most critical test. The style is good and entertaining. The book cannot fail to be a welcome addition to every library. One volume. Cloth, 12mo, xiv + 379 pp. Appendices, Index. $1.75.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

New York, 46 East 14*th St.*
Boston, 100 Purchase St.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Industries of Russia.

Manufactures and Trade—Agriculture and Forestry—Mining and Metallurgy—Siberia and the Great Siberian Railway.

Prepared by the Russian Department of Trade and Manufactures, Ministry of Finance, and by the Department of Agricultural Ministry of Crown Domains.

Editor of the English Translation,

John Martin Crawford,

U. S. Consul-General to Russia.

With many maps printed in colors, charts and statistical tables.

Volumes I. and II.—Manufactures and Trade. Volume III.—Agriculture and Forestry. Volume IV.—Mining and Metallurgy. Volume V.—Siberia and the Great Siberian Railway.

5 vols., octavo, paper covers, $6.00.

As a monumental and exhaustive work on the Russian industries has never before been attempted in the English language, it is thought that this work, in the preparation of which the Russian Government has been long interested, will prove invaluable to all those who are in any way interested in the resources, trades, industries and wealth of Russia.

Send for descriptive prospectus.

We have been appointed by the Russian Government agents for the above work, a limited number of copies of which have been placed in our hands for sale.

G. P. Putnam's Sons

NEW YORK AND LONDON.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

Literary Curios,
Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.
Send stamps for separate lists.
Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.
Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.
ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

APRIL

166 Pages: 64 Illustrations.

A Battle-Ship in Action.

By Lieut. S. A. STAUNTON, U. S. N. With 10 Illustrations by R. F. ZOGBAUM.

The Writing on the Wall.

A Story. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

The English Senate.

By GEORGE W. SMALLEY.

The Monument to Corder.

A Story. By EVA WILDER MCGLASSON.

Yale University.

By Professor ARTHUR T. HADLEY.

Spring in a Side Street.

A Vignette of Manhattan. By BRANDER MATTHEWS. With 4 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

The Winter's Tale.

Nine Illustrations by EDWIN A. ABBEY. With Comment by ANDREW LANG.

An Interrupted Story.

By WILLIAM MCLENNAN. With an Illustration by C. S. REINHART.

Emperor William's Stud-Farm and Hunting Forest.

By POULTNEY-BIGELOW. With 13 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

Their Story.

By GEORGE A. HIBBARD. With an Illustration by W. H. HYDE.

An Affair of the Heart.

A Story. By GRACE KING.

The Promised Land.

A Story. By OWEN WISTER. With 4 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

A Vigorous Politician of the Olden Time.

By JOHN GILMER SPEED.

A Pale Girl's Face.

The History of a Scoop. By EWAN MACPHERSON.

Trilby.

A Story. By GEORGE DU MAURIER. Part III. With 15 Illustrations by the Author.

Poems.

By W. D. HOWELLS, ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS and JAMES E. LEARNED.

Editor's Study.

By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

Editor's Drawer.

Contains an illustrated story by F. HOPKINSON SMITH and other humorous Sketches and Illustrations.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers' New Books

Orations of George William Curtis.

Orations and Addresses of GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS. Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. Vol. I. On the Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duty of American Citizens. Vol. II. Addresses and Reports on the Reform of the Civil Service of the United States. Vol. III. Historical and Memorial Addresses. With Photogravure Portrait. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $3.50 per volume. (Vol. III. Nearly Ready.)

Our English Cousins.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "The Rulers of the Mediterranean," "Van Bibber and Others," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Horace Chase.

A Novel. By CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLSON, Author of "Anne," "Jupiter Lights," etc. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

For Honor and Life.

A Novel. By WILLIAM WESTALL, Author of "A Phantom City," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Expert Waitress.

A Manual for Pantry, Kitchen and Dining-Room. By ANNE FRANCES SPRINGSTEED. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00. (Nearly Ready.)

The Science of the Earth.

Some Salient Points in the Science of the Earth. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C. M. G., LL. D., Author of "The Origin of the World," etc. With forty-six Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2.00.

In Direst Peril.

A Novel. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Time's Revenges," "The Weaker Vessel," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A Child's History of Spain.

By JOHN BONNER, Author of "A Child's History of France," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

The Mystery of Abel Forefinger.

By WILLIAM DRYSDALE. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. ("Harper's Young People Series.")

Letters of James Russell Lowell.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. With Three Photogravure Portraits. Two volumes. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $8.00; Three-Quarter Calf, $12.50. (In a Box.)

The Jewish Question.

The Jewish Question, and the Mission of the Jews. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.75.

Life's Little Ironies.

A Set of Tales; With some Colloquial Sketches entitled, A Few Crusted Characters. By THOMAS HARDY, Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Studies of the Stage.

By BRANDER MATTHEWS. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the Series "Harper's American Essayists.")

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes.

Stories. By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "The Refugees," "Micah Clarke," etc. Illustrated, Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Uniform in style and price with "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.")

The Wee Ones of Japan.

By MAE ST. JOHN BRAMHALL. Illustrations by C. D. WELDON. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (Nearly Ready.)

The Rulers of the Mediterranean.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "The West from a Car-Window," etc. Illustrated. Pp. 238. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Parisian Points of View.

By LUDOVIC HALÉVY. The Translation by EDITH V. B. MATTHEWS. An Introduction by BRANDER MATTHEWS. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the "Odd Number Series.")

Riders of Many Lands.

By THEODORE AYRAULT DODGE, Brevet Lieutenant-colonel U. S. Army. Illustrated with Numerous Drawings by FREDERIC REMINGTON, and from Photographs of Oriental subjects. pp. vii, 486. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $4.00.

The above works are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. HARPER'S CATALOGUE will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 7 APRIL 1894

Vol. XXV No. 7 Whole No. 503

Charles Scribner's Sons' New Books.

FOR LOVERS OF FLOWERS.

According to Season.

Talks about the Flowers in the Order of their Appearance in the Woods and the Fields. By Mrs. William Starr Dana. 16mo, 75 cents.

"The charm of this book is pervading and enduring as is the charm of nature."—N. Y. Times.

"Most charming. A fitting supplement to Mrs. Dana's previous book, and the two together constitute one of the most truly delightful descriptive studies of nature which has made its appearance in recent years."—Boston Advertiser.

FOURTEENTH THOUSAND.

How to Know the Wild Flowers.

A Guide to the Names, Haunts, and Habits of our Common Wild Flowers. By Mrs. William Starr Dana. With over 100 illustrations by Marion Satterlee. Square 12mo, $1.50 net.

"It is exactly what has long been wanted by one who loves nature and longs to be formally introduced. . . . Your arrangement by colors is a great help to ready reference, and the illustrations are invaluable."—From Olive Thorne Miller.

A SELECTION OF FIFTY PLATES FROM

"How to Know the Wild Flowers."

Printed on special paper, suitable for coloring by hand. The set in a portfolio, $1.00 net.

Beyond the Rockies.

A Spring Journey in California. By Dr. Charles A. Stoddard, Editor of The Observer. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

This new book by the author of those two popular volumes of travel, "Across Russia" and "Spanish Cities," gives Dr. Stoddard's experiences, and describes the interesting places he visited in a journey by the southern route to California, to all the beauties and wonders of which he brings an appreciative mind and a fresh eye.

Josiah Gilbert Holland.

A Memoir. With portraits and illustrations. By Mrs. H. M. Plunkett. 12mo, $1.50.

Mrs. Plunkett's long friendship with Dr. Holland makes her specially fitted for the task of describing the sources of his great and lasting influence with the "plain people." An unusual interest also attaches to the biographical narrative, which describes his early struggles, his prompt successes in various educational and literary fields, his own views of his aims and accomplishment and the testimony of his contemporaries to their elevation and importance.

On the Offensive.

An Army Story. By George I. Putnam. 12mo, $1.25.

Mr. Putnam's new army story is varied and adventurous in character, including among its exciting incidents a hunting trip and an expedition against the Indians. The story, like the author's "In Blue Uniform," has a thread of sentiment and presents with rare fidelity an interesting picture of Army life on the plains.

A NOTABLE CONTRIBUTION TO NAPOLEONIC LITERATURE.

The Pasquier Memoirs.

The Revolution.—The Consulate.—The Empire. Edited by Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier. With portraits. In 3 vols., 8vo. Vol. II., 1812–1814, now ready, $2.50; Vol. I., 1789–1812, $2.50.

"Its value is great. The author brings before us and illustrates with peculiar clearness the characteristics of an extraordinary time. He gives us vivid and thoughtful sketches of the First Empire."—Edinburgh Review.

"Memoirs which promise to be among the most valuable ever published concerning the Napoleonic period."—Atlantic Monthly.

Life and Letters of Dean Stanley.

By R. E. Prothero. With the co-operation of Dean Bradley. Second Edition. With portraits and illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

"Perhaps no similar book since Trevelyan's 'Life of Macaulay' has been prepared with so much care or wisdom. It is a work that will be to many well-nigh indispensable."—Boston Journal.

"This biography is perhaps the most notable work of its kind since Dean Stanley's own life of Dr. Arnold appeared. The work passes at once into the list of the few great biographies of modern times."—Boston Herald.

The Barbary Coast.

By Henry M. Field. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.00.

"Alert and interesting travel observations. It abounds in picturesqueness of description and illustration of nearly all portions of the once great empire of the Moors."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Land of Poco Tiempo.

By C. F. Lummis. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.50.

"A series of interesting sketches of New Mexico. They are picturesque, poetic, glowing in local color, and have a genuine ethnological value, truth in every touch, showing familiarity with the country, the people, and their traditions."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Men, Women, and Books.

Essays by Augustine Birrell, M. P. Elzevir 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

"Augustine Birrell has won for himself an enviable reputation as an essayist, and his new volume will add to it. His pen sketches are wonderfully graphic."—Boston Advertiser.

The Jacobean Poets.

By Edmund Gosse. University Series. 12mo, $1.00 net.

"Mr. Gosse is methodical and painstaking and exact. His views are moderate, and it is an excellent plan to set off the poets who distinctively belong to the reign of James I. from their Elizabethan predecessors."—New York Tribune.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

REMOVAL.

The Store and Offices of the American Tract Society have removed to 10 East 23d St., near Broadway, opposite Madison Sq.

NEW BOOKS
OF THE
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
10 East 23d Street, New York.

 Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.

ASSYRIAN ECHOES OF THE WORD. By Thomas Laurie, D. D. Illustrated. 8vo, 380 pp., $2 00.

This volume presents for general use the progress and the results attained by explorations and excavations in confirmation of the Biblical narrative.

THE STARRY SKIES. By Agnes Giberne. 12mo, 234 pp., $1.00.

A very delightful book on astronomy, attractive and instructive equally for a child of twelve or a reader of sixty. The illustrations add to its interest.

RACHEL'S FARM. By Miss A. L. Noble. Illustrated. 12mo, 223 pp., $1.00.

A fresh, breezy, country book by a clever writer. With many blessed lessons of Christian truth.

AMERICAN HEROES ON MISSION FIELDS. Edited by Dr. Haydn. Series I. 12mo, 362 pp., $1.25.

Containing very interesting biographies of Eliot, Zeisberger, Williamson, Mr. and Mrs. Spalding, Titus Coan, Mrs. Armstrong (mother of the late Gen. Armstrong), Logan, Judson, and Boardman.

CONSOLATION FOR MOTHERS WITH EMPTY ARMS. By Mrs. G. A. Paull. Dainty white cloth, 30 cts. The title tells its purpose.

CRADLE THOUGHTS. By Mrs. Paull. Paper, 10 cts. Loving words for mothers.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY
Have Just Issued

A Man of To-Day.

By Helen Mathers, author of the famous story, "Comin' Thro' the Rye." Bound in paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

A brighter story has seldom found its way from an English author into American covers. The tale is a diverting one, but it is borne along by the liveliness of the text until the reader forgets that it is a made-up story at all, so much of actual reality does it possess.

Mrs. A. L. Wister's Translations from the German.

Reduced in price to $1.00 per volume.

"There is no translator so trusted by the public, or, indeed, who occupies any such position as that which Mrs. Wister's good work has secured for her. The stories are out of the common course of German romances, and are drawn with great delicacy and finish."—New York Publishers' Weekly.

Countess Erika's Apprenticeship. By Ossip Schubin.
"O Thou, My Austria!" By Ossip Schubin.
Erlach Court. By Ossip Schubin.
The Alpine Fay. By E. Werner.
The Owl's Nest. By E. Marlitt.
Picked Up in the Streets. By H. Schobert.
Saint Michael. By E. Werner.
Violetta. By Ursula Zoge von Manteufel.
The Lady with the Rubies. By E. Marlitt.
Vain Forebodings. By E. Oswald.
A Penniless Girl. By W. Heimburg.
Quicksands. By Adolph Streckfuss.
Banned and Blessed. By E. Werner.
A Noble Name. By Clare von Glumer.
From Hand to Hand. By Golo Raimund.
Severa. By E. Hartner.
The Eichofs. By Moritz von Reichenbach.
A New Race. By Golo Raimund.
Castle Hohenwald. By Adolph Streckfuss.
Margarethe. By E. Juncker.
Too Rich. By Adolph Streckfuss.
A Family Feud. By Ludwig Harder.
The Green Gate. By Ernst Wichert.
Only a Girl. By Wilhelmine von Hillern.
Why Did He Not Die? By Ad. von Volckhauser.
Hulda. By Fanny Lewald.
The Bailiff's Maid. By E. Marlitt.
In the Schillingscourt. By E Marlitt.
Countess Gisela. By E. Marlitt.
At the Councillor's. By E. Marlitt.
The Second Wife. By E. Marlitt.
The Old Mam'selle's Secret. By E. Marlitt.
Gold Elsie. By E. Marlitt.
The Little Moorland Princess. By E. Marlitt.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France. Vol. VII.

By L. A. Thiers, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated from the French with the sanction of the author, by D. Forbes Campbell. An entirely new edition, printed from new type, and illustrated with thirty-six steel plates printed from the French originals. To be completed in twelve octavo volumes. Cloth, $3.00 per volume.

Pain.

By J. Leonard Corning, A. M., M. D. 8vo, cloth, $1.75.

"The author of this valuable work, which treats of pain in its relation to disease, is a physician who has already commanded respect and gained repute because of earlier publications, which embody the results of his own experiences and that of the ablest physicians of the day. His book, therefore, is sure to be received with interest by medical men and create something of popular interest as well. The doctor's experiments with compressed air have caused much discussion in medical circles."—New York Letter in Philadelphia Press, April 1.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by the publishers postpaid, on receipt of the price.

J. B. Lippincott Company,
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"I tell you that when we have settlements of true men and women put right down among these hopeless creatures, then, and not till then, shall we touch the sore to heal it."

Joanna Traill, Spinster.

BY

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH,

Author of "Bonnie Dundee," "Belhaven," etc.

Miss Holdsworth is one of the most popular of the younger English novelists, and in "Joanna Traill, Spinster" she has treated the now widely agitated question of individual rescue work among fallen women with great power and at the same time with delicacy. The book presents a possible solution of the question, but is primarily a well-planned and interesting novel.

Cloth, 12mo, price, $1.25.

* Our publications are for sale by all booksellers, or are mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.*

Charles L. Webster & Co.,
67 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. City.

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.
Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 7 APRIL 1894 No. 7

CONTENTS

Santayana's Sonnets and Other Poems . . 99
Marcella 99
Our Floating Fortresses 100
The Village Rector 101
Social Evolution 101
The English Church in the Nineteenth Century 102
The Standard Dictionary 102
Tennyson's Idylls 103

Original Poetry:
  To a Canty Chiel. Edward A. Church . . 104
Katharine Lauderdale 104
Tolstoi's Kingdom of God 104
New York Letter 105
Fiction:
  Lot 13 106
  Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes 106
  Earlscourt 106
Minor Notices:
  Our English Cousins 106
  Travels in America 100 Years Ago . . . 106
  John Larkin Lincoln 106
  The Spirit of God 107
  They Met in Heaven 107
  Genetic Philosophy 107
  Appearance and Reality 107
  The Philosophy of Individuality . . . 107
  The Law of Psychic Phenomena . . . 107
  English Economic History and Theory . . 108
  Osborne's Principles of Economics . . . 108
  The Railroad Question 108
  The Repudiation of State Debts . . . 108
Correspondence.—Facts vs. Fiction . . . 109
Periodicals 109
News and Notes 110
Publications Received 111

SANTAYANA'S SONNETS AND OTHER POEMS.*

IT has been a pleasure to read these poems in the exquisite setting which the young firm of Stone & Kimball are giving to their publications. Dr. Santayana was born, so we learn from one of the poems in this volume, "where first the rills of Tagus turn to the westward," but he is now an assistant in the philosophical department at Harvard. The collection is a small one, seemingly made up of only the choicest poems in the poet's portfolio, chosen according to rigorous standards. First we have a sonnet sequence, noble alike in form and substance. We accompany the poet down "the long descent" from the heights of old belief,

> Where gentle music were accounted prayer,
> And reason, veiled, performed the happy rite,

to the eternal mother nature for the healing of sun and sea. Profoundly true and finely expressed are these thoughts of regret for all that at times seems hopelessly lost, of longing for the days "when man was in the world a wide-eyed boy," alternating with insight into the truth that "it is not wisdom to be only wise" and dreams of "high perfection." These thoughts, learned from the sun and sky and from human experience, sensitive to "the fair reasons of the spring" and to "the summer's tender argument," continue through twenty sonnets, until comfort comes and grieving ceases. There is comparatively little of the joy here that sometimes comes with wider vision, but this serious calm is in its own way a thing as good. Many will say, doubtless, that the comfort is too vague a fancy for sustained solace and call the conclusion "only pantheism"—if even that:

> The soul is not on earth an alien thing
> That hath her life's rich sources otherwhere;
> She is a parcel of the sacred air.
> She takes her being from the breath of Spring,
> The glance of Phœbus is her fount of light,
> And her long sleep a draught of primal night.

Some, reading this, would declare that the poet might better have stopped with No. III, wherein he would trust the soul's "invincible surmise," like Columbus, who

> Found a world, and had no chart,
> Save one that faith deciphered in the skies.

Nevertheless it remains true that all this is soul experience, uttered in a language that others may understand. Not less beautiful, only in another way, are the four sonnets written in memory of W. P., initials of "the happy name of one so gently true" that of him or of her it could be written,

> Living, you made it goodlier to live;
> Dead, you will make it easier to die.

Small space is left wherein to speak of the remaining poems of this little volume. Five of them are sapphic odes, serious in form, classic in imagery, and written with much of Matthew Arnold's large yet mournful outlook on nature and civilization. One sighs a little at the end for a clear, final strain that might signify a buoyant acceptance of conditions or even a daring challenge to the unknown and the unseen; but at least it is better that the poet should remain true to himself and to his own thought than that he should utter the word of a conventionalized hope. For ourselves, indeed, we have only gratitude for the fresh, strong notes of a true poet, who ought not to forget his high calling in other duties.

MARCELLA.*

IT is easy to see that Mrs. Ward's fame will be greatly increased by this new book. She could hardly write a novel without a purpose, but in respect to freedom from theological disquisition, over-elaborate detail in description of nature, and too extended conversations on things that do not count in the development of the story, Marcella is much the superior of its noted predecessors. Considerably shorter, it is still written on that large scale which Mrs. Ward finds necessary for the complete development of her characters and her plot. The thousand pages have for their main matter the growth of Marcella Boyce, a beautiful and fascinating girl of twenty-one, out of her crude notions of socialism as a working code of life into a deeper perception of the moral and spiritual complexities of existing society. This involves a juster judgment on her lover, first of all, from whom she had parted indignantly because, in fact, he would not surrender his own more mature convictions of duty to her own generous but less trustworthy impulses. Readers of David Grieve do not need to be told that Mrs. Ward views social problems in city and country with large knowledge, deep sympathy for the poor and suffering, and, what is far more rare in women novelists, a keen sense of the great difficulties of radical social change. She is neither an individualist nor a socialist, but a most earnest, tolerant, and sympathetic student of things as they are, without regard to theories.

Marcella Boyce finds herself at Mellor Park at twenty-one, the future mistress of a run-down estate some thirty miles from London. Her father, Richard Boyce, had blighted a promising career by frauds committed in early life, which took him out of the pale of English society. His brother's death makes him master at Mellor, and his one child, who had been brought up in schools, altogether apart from her parents, comes home to those who had never acted the parents' part. For the last two years the ardent and brilliant young creature had been in London studying art and imbibing social theories and enthusiasms from the Craven family and the Venturist (Fabian) Society, of which she was a member. She is full of zeal to realize her visions among the agricultural laborers living in the unsanitary cottages of Mellor. She soon fascinates Mr. Aldous Raeburn, a thoughtful, quiet, strong, and philanthropic man of thirty, the heir of old Lord Maxwell of the vast neighboring estate. After Aldous has told his grandfather of his hopes, Marcella is invited to Maxwell Court. Here is a part of the conversation at table, where the high-spirited girl champions her sacred cause:

> "Ah, well," said Lord Maxwell, wincing at last under some of her phrases in spite of his courteous savoir faire, "I see you are of the same opinion as a good man whose book I took up yesterday, 'The landlords of England have always shown a mean and malignant passion for profiting by the miseries of others.' Well, Aldous, my boy, we are judged, you and I; no help for it."
>
> The man whose temper and rule had made the prosperity of a whole countryside for nearly forty years looked at his grandson with twinkling eyes. Miss Raeburn was speechless. Lady Winterbourne was absently staring at Marcella, a spot of red on each pale cheek.
>
> Then Marcella suddenly wavered, looked across at Aldous, and broke down.
>
> "Of course you think me very ridiculous," she said, with a tremulous change of tone. "I sup-

---

* Sonnets and Other Poems. By George Santayana. Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

* Marcella. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

> pose I am, and I am as inconsistent as anybody — I hate myself for it. Very often, when anybody talks to me on the other side, I am almost as much persuaded as I am by the Socialists; they always told me in London I was the prey of the last speaker. But it can't make any difference to one's feeling — nothing touches that."
>
> She turned to Lord Maxwell half appealing:
>
> "It is when I go down from our house to the village; when I see the places people live in; when one is comfortable in the carriage, and one passes some woman in the rain, ragged, and dirty, and tired, trudging back from her work; when one realizes that they have no rights when they come to be old, nothing to look to but charity, for which we, who have everything, expect them to be grateful; and when I know that every one of them has done more useful work in a year of their life than I shall ever do in the whole of mine — then I feel that the whole state of things is somehow wrong and topsy-turvy and wicked." Her voice rose a little, every emphasis grew more passionate. "And if I don't do something — the little such a person as I can — to alter it before I die, I might as well never have lived."
>
> Everybody at table started. Lord Maxwell looked at Miss Raeburn, his mouth twitching over the humor of his sister's dismay. Well! this was a forcible young woman. Was Aldous the kind of man to be able to deal conveniently with such eyes, such emotions, such a personality?

Lord Maxwell, a true nobleman, is won over. Marcella, who does not appreciate the modest manliness and the catholic judgment of Aldous, accepts him, hoping to do much good through her high position, but by no means loving him as such an impetuous woman would naturally love.

Mr. Boyce, who is not socially reinstated with his wife and daughter, shows his dislike of the Maxwells by inviting to his house the clever and audacious Radical candidate for Parliament, Mr. Wharton. He soon gains an intellectual mastery over Marcella from his greater knowledge and logical power, and when she returns from a ball at the court a strong scene occurs in the moonlit library of Mellor Park, which closes with his kissing her. That same night a poacher, Hurd, in whom Marcella had become greatly interested, kills a keeper of Lord Maxwell's game. He is justly condemned for murder, but Marcella pleads with her lover and his grandfather to aid her in getting him free. Their consciences will not allow this, and she breaks off her engagement, telling her lover of the library scene — it is now some weeks afterward. Raeburn is sternly indignant. He who had always indulged her now rebuked her. "You have done me wrong," he said. "I pray God you may not do yourself a greater wrong in the future." His friend, Edward Hallin (who reminds one of Mr. Gray in Robert Elsmere as an inspiring force), warns Marcella against Wharton, who is in truth an unprincipled self-seeker, but of a very complicated nature. She goes up to London, takes a year in a hospital, and then goes to work among the poor. Her work, which has many fatigues and occasional dangers, brings her closer to life than she had been before. She realizes the immense importance of personal character in the social evolution, and when she hears Wharton's brilliant speech in Parliament on the eight-hour bill she followed him "with all her passionate heart,"

> Yet, at the same time, with an amount of intellectual dissent every now and then as to measures and methods, a skepticism of detail which astonished herself! A year before she had been as a babe beside him, whether in matters of pure mind or of worldly experience. Now she was for the first time conscious of a curious growth — independence.

Wharton at length proposes, she has so strong a hold on his better nature; but she refuses him, and at the same time his corruptness in betraying the labor cause in his Clarion is exposed. Marcella returns to Mellor, as her father is fast failing. She had deeply repented the wrong she did Raeburn in promising to marry him without love and preferring Wharton to him:

> The rich, emotional nature had "suffered conviction," had turned in the broad sense to "religion," was more and more sensitive, especially since Hallin's death, to the spiritual things and symbols in the world.

She had come to love Raeburn, who had borne himself nobly, had distinguished himself in politics, but had applied himself closely to his estate since his grandfather's death. She told Hallin her secret on his death-bed, but it died with him, as he could not tell it, speech having failed him. His last words are most pathetic when he says:

> Take my poor witness. There is one clew, one only — goodness — the surrendered will. Everything is there — all faith — all religion — all hope for rich or poor. — Whether we feel our way through consciously to the Will — that asks our will — matters little: Aldous and I have differed much on this — in words — never at heart! . . . We Christians — are orphans — without Christ. There again — what does it matter what we think — about him — if only we think — of him.

Purified by suffering and ennobled by thoughts that take deep hold of the issues of life, the noble, beautiful girl and her worthy lover come together again. She makes a long confession, which he seeks to cut short, and at last when she asks him to forgive:

> "Forgive?" he said to her, scorning her for the first and only time in their history. "Does a man forgive the hand that sets him free, the voice that recreates him? Choose some better word, my wife!"

In all artistic qualities, in coherency, unity, steadiness of movement, firmness of hand, and sureness of stroke, Marcella is a great advance on David Grieve and Robert Elsmere. There is more restraint in the pathetic scenes and less of retarding discussion. Consequently, as a book of reflection Marcella does not give us so much to think about as its predecessors. But as a novel it has more felicity and artistic strength. Mrs. Ward could not write without strong feeling and a force of thought that lift her far above the novelists of the day. These powers and her firm advance in her art give her rank with the foremost writers of fiction in our tongue. She has made plain her claim to stand there, with a voice and a spirit all her own.

OUR FLOATING FORTRESSES.[*]

MR. EDGAR STANTON MACLAY, son of the well-known missionary of Japan and China and brother of the author of Mito Yashiki, has completed his nine years of study, and sends forth the first volume of a history of the United States Navy. Though himself a landsman, it is evident that his acquaintance with our national ships is not that of the cloistered student merely, but that he has trodden the decks of many of our floating fortresses. He knows well the difference in the conditions of life between the old sailing frigates and the modern steel ships. His researches have been carried on on both sides of the water, especially in France and England. It is not altogether to the credit of the British government that it does not allow access to its naval archives later than the year 1800. Nevertheless, Mr. Maclay has, for the material of his first volume, gathered abundant data not only on the American side of our early naval battles, but from the centenarian, Sir Provo Wallis, and others in England. He gives new facts which shed brilliant light upon such combats, for example, as that between the Chesapeake and the Shannon. The portly volume is a credit both to the author and to American historical scholarship.

The history is not, and does not pretend to be, a philosophical treatise showing how and why the United States has been from the first one of the notable naval powers of the world. It is rather, in the main, a clear, straightforward story of our navy and of the men who have shed such luster upon the American name and flag at sea. Nevertheless, though the narrative moves along the lines and in the general methods of Cooper, the author's only real predecessor, and though the work lacks the philosophical insight and fascinating style of Roosevelt's Naval Campaign of 1812, yet there are not lacking brilliant and informing passages that reveal the causes of those effects which have so impressed the world. For example we may name the pages which so clearly set forth the difference between gunboats and regular ships of war and the first two pages of the opening chapter, which show that the people of the United States have inherited an aptitude for the sea from five of the greatest maritime nations of the world — the Spanish, Portuguese, French, Dutch, and English.

The bulk of the work is taken up with descriptions of battles. These are given not in sensational or exaggerated style, but in clear and accurate language and with an eye to those details which lend so great a charm to historical narrative. The work has had the advantage of technical revision by Lieut. Roy C. Smith of the United States Navy, but we are very glad that the author has used his own judgment as to the matter of technical phrases. Indeed, he has made his descriptions as clear as descriptions could be made to the average landsman. The maps and diagrams are commendably clear, and the full-page engravings are from the pencil of Mr. J. O. Davidson, who enjoys deserved fame as the artistic historian of our American Navy. The second volume, which is promised in May, is to have the revision of living officers and to be furnished with an index to the whole work.

---

[*] A History of the United States Navy from 1775 to 1893. By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A.M. Vol. I. 8vo., illus., pp. 577. D. Appleton & Co. $3.50.

Apart from the interest of the dramatic episodes of our naval history and the fascination which fighting on the water always has, even above a land combat, one is impressed with the excellence of the floating fortresses as a school of character. Mr. Maclay does not, indeed, conceal the seamy side of his theme, and his story of the old-fashioned flogging is blood curdling. Nor can it be doubted that from the records of the United States Navy as well as from that of England some of the most awful scenes of brutality and cruelty known in human history could be transferred by pen or pencil. The nobler side of naval war comes out in the thrilling pictures of discipline and self-control, which tell their own story. To be on the deck of a war ship with matches all blown and powder laid on the touchholes, and stand nonresistant as a Mennonite while the enemy's broadsides are strewing the deck with blood and splinters, and comrades are being carried to the surgeons, requires the finest nerve. Yet this is the story again and again of what took place in the American Navy. As handsomely as the Union Army at Gettysburg took the long pounding of the Confederate batteries without reply, so on the deck of the Constitution American sailors waited until Captain Hull gave the word. Three times Lieutenant Morris, who had calmly stood both the double fire of the Guerrière and the more searching inquest from the eyes of his impatient men, asked if he could open fire. Three times he was answered with Captain Hull's calm "Not yet, sir." But when forty yards off from the enemy's port-quarter the word was given. The effect of the American gunnery at short range was terrific. Splinters were seen to fly over the British frigate like a cloud, some of them reaching as high as the mizzentop, while the cheers of her men abruptly ceased and the shrieks and groans of the wounded were heard. This was the first blow struck full and fair at British insolence, which since Trafalgar had grown intolerable. In the naval campaign which followed the American cruisers, so long sneered at by British newspapers and naval officers, reduced to firewood some of the best of England's ships and struck more flags from her mastheads than had been lost in a whole century in European waters.

Probably for the first time we now have a nearly full and correct history of our navy during the Revolution. Equally full and interesting is the story of the humbling of the piratical states of Barbary. The War of 1812, described at length and in detail, completes the fourth epoch of the activities of our naval arms, counting in as one the war with France at the opening of the century, which is handsomely described. Mr. Maclay, at the end of his narrative of each war, sums up the results, showing the vast influence which the navy had in extending American commerce and developing the resources of the nation. We await the issue of the second volume with interest, and congratulate publishers and author upon a work so accurately and judicially written.

THE VILLAGE RECTOR.*

IN the Brotherhood of Consolation, that exquisite romance of philanthropy, it was the needs of the unfortunate poor — those, perhaps, who had seen better days — hidden away in the nooks or corners of Paris, which Balzac described with wonderful skill and pathos. In The Village Rector it is the needs of the country poor which he brings to our notice. The first part of the book is a novel, and finely exhibits the writer's story-telling faculty; but the last two thirds of the book reads like an essay on the condition of the peasant classes in the rural districts of France half a century ago. There is too much social science in the novel, and it is social science which is behind the times. In The Brotherhood of Consolation the problems were our problems, so we forgave the author for discussing them. But in this book the reader wearies of the schemes, excellent as they were, by means of which the writer makes Madame de Graslin expiate her sin. But if the reader finds parts of the book tedious he certainly does not find Balzac anything less than a genius in his successive portraits of Madame de Graslin. We see her as a young girl; we study her home and her early surroundings; we follow her when she is sold in a loveless marriage to a beastly husband, and then we see her driven into a sin which had most hideous consequences. Finally we see a wretched woman tortured by remorse, a delicate moral nature suffering inconceivable pangs and endeavoring to expiate her crime by her interest in philanthropy. How Balzac can paint mental suffering! He holds his victim up and piles on the agony until we are fain to cry "Stop, we cannot bear to see this human being suffer one moment longer!" This moral dissecting room is abhorrent to us. But Balzac is at his best in these grewsome psychological studies. His genius seems to revel in displaying the capacity for suffering which exists in a sensitive human soul. The village rector is a noble character, but it is Madame de Graslin whose tragic experiences give the story its strength.

As one after another of these excellent translations appear we find our admiration for Balzac steadily increasing. No novelist in any country equals him in fertility of imagination, in range of character, or in knowledge of the vagaries of the human heart.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.*

THIS volume, by an author quite unknown to fame, is a contribution of extreme interest to the discussion of the "social problem." It shows much knowledge of natural science and a deep respect for the moral and religious forces. If Mr. Kidd were a scientist by profession, the combination would be remarkable; but our inference is that in science he is a brilliant amateur, his studies having been more predominantly historical, philosophical, and even theological. His positions briefly stated are these.

> Progress everywhere from the beginning of life has been effected in the same way, and it is possible in no other way. It is the result of selection and rejection. . . . If the continual selection which is always going on amongst the higher forms of life were to be suspended, these forms . . . must actually go backwards.

But these conditions of progress have no rational sanction, i. e., the reason of the individual bids him enjoy himself and make the most of his own life while it lasts, without troubling himself greatly as to the coming generations. Mr. Kidd takes "reason" and "rational" throughout in this restricted sense of the intellect of the person seeking his immediate good. But the tremendous force of such selfishness, enlightened or unenlightened, is counteracted by religion, and religion alone. Viewed as a social phenomenon,

> A religion is a form of belief providing an ultra-rational sanction for that large class of conduct in the individual where his interests and the interests of the social organism are antagonistic, and by which the former are rendered subordinate to the latter in the general interests of the evolution which the race is undergoing.

The difference between religion thus conceived and true socialism is that the latter "has always one definite object in view . . . the final suspension of that personal struggle for existence which has been waged . . . from the beginning of life," while the former tends to make men subordinate their immediate interests to those of the race, and to humanize, not destroy, the struggle for existence. The tendency of the development of civilization now is not to political equality, which has been largely achieved, but to "equality of social opportunity." This effort is bound to be a natural and orderly development, through such an adaptation of old institutions to new wants as the Anglo-Saxon peoples have always shown a genius for making — it is the secret, indeed, of their political ability.

---

*The Village Rector. By Honoré de Balzac. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

*Social Evolution. By Benjamin Kidd. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

Again and again Mr. Kidd assures his readers with great force that the progress of civilization is conditioned by the moral character and the religious strain of peoples, not by their intellectual ability alone. This position he supports by such historical instances as the Greeks and by such contemporary examples as the French. The peoples that manifest "social efficiency" in the highest degree are alone sure to endure and to command the situation:

> It is qualities such as humanity, strength and uprightness of character, and devotion to the immediate calls of duty . . . which have largely contributed to render English rule in India successful. . . . It is upon just the same qualities, and not upon any ideal schemes for solving the social problem, that we must depend to carry us safely through the social revolution which will be upon us in the twentieth century, and which will put to the most severe test which it has yet had to endure the social efficiency of the various sections of the Western peoples.

Mr. Kidd has more respect for socialism than this last quotation taken by itself would imply, but he believes it anti-scientific and anti-religious in the broad, social sense of religion. We might quarrel with his use of the words "reason" and "rational" to signify the limited view of individual selfishness. But it would be easy to substitute other terms more exactly expressive of his thought which would leave the substance of his argument unimpaired. He does not, again, do justice to the natural Calvinism, so to speak, which induces many men to prefer "bitter duty to sweet lusts," and which is no more superrational than eating or drinking, but is simply the higher nature of man emerging and taking control. With all qualifications, however, Social Evolution is one of the most original and stimulating books we have met for a long time, and we look with confidence for further and riper discussions of social problems from this able hand.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.[*]

THE reader of this instructive book will need to take notice that by a parenthesis on its title-page the scope of its inquiry is limited to the first third of the present century. Missing this limitation he would look in vain for mention of some very important facts which belong to the history of the English Church in the nineteenth century. The treatment stops short, of course, of the Tractarian Movement, and does not come anywhere near the great missionary activities that have marked the later period. Dr. Overton, who is a canon of Lincoln and joint author of a similar work, The English Church in the Eighteenth Century, is a High Churchman and unmistakably writes as such, and we do not always feel sure that he is free from bias, though his intentions are obviously sincere and clear of fault. But no man who belongs to any party in the Church of England can dispassionately and with perfect candor write the history of that church, even in the form of a slight sketch.

Dr. Overton's method is largely the biographical; his work is, in fact, a series of portraits bound together by a slender historic thread. The men of the English Church are the units in the story, and these pass before us in close and orderly procession. The work consists of ten chapters. The first sketches the general state of the church as the eighteenth century left it and the French wars found it — a most critical period. The second takes up the "Orthodox" school, under such leaders as Joshua Watson, Christopher Wordsworth, and Hugh James Rose. In the third we have a vigorous and, on the whole, kindly portrayal of the "Evangelicals," under the lead of such master spirits as Simeon and Wilberforce, Stephen, Venn, and Gisborne, and others of the once famous and influential "Clapham Sect." Paley, Dr. Parr, Sydney Smith, Edward Stanley, the father of the Dean, Whately, and Arnold appear in the fifth chapter as leaders of the "Liberals," and the reader may depend upon it that the "coldness" and "breadth" of such men as Whately and Arnold get their full measure of characterization from the Lincoln canon. One of the more interesting chapters is the next, the sixth, on "Church Services and Fabrics," which gives an excellent idea of the public worship of the time as an index to its religious temper. That it was far, far away behind the present nobody can deny. "Church Literature" and "Education" occupy the next two chapters, and the first of these is especially valuable, while Dr. Arnold's enormous influence is not underestimated in the second. In the eighth chapter we have a survey of the organization and work of the great societies, the S. P. G. and the C. M. S., with other and lesser agencies for the promotion of Christian work at home and abroad. The struggles between "Church and State" come in for notice in Chapter IX, and "Intercourse with Sister Churches" — Ireland, Scotland, and America — in Chapter X.

Altogether, there is a good deal of history in these 350 pages, a great deal of biography, much just criticism and sound reflection, and an amount of information which it would be hard to find elsewhere in similar compass. The book does not pretend to be a brilliant one, but it is clear, simple, instructive, and in the main trustworthy. It fills a gap, and should find a place on the shelves of ecclesiastical students and other readers of current history. We hope to see it continued.

THE STANDARD DICTIONARY.[*]

THE first volume of the Standard Dictionary, concerning the progress of which its publishers have kept the public well advised, has appeared, and the second volume is promised for May. This one is a little taller than one of the six volumes of the Century Dictionary, but its 1,060 pages of three closely printed columns invite comparison with the International Webster rather than with the Century. The latter is much more of a cyclopedia, and the ample scale on which it was planned and its much greater cost make comparison with it unprofitable. At the same time the editors of the Standard have plainly profited greatly by this notable predecessor as well as by the other important dictionaries which have been so numerous of late years; this is the good fortune of every dictionary which comes last.

Typographically the Standard presents a crowded page, much of the matter being unleaded and several varieties of type being used to secure the insertion of a large amount of material on each page. If the articles were long, the strain on the eye would be severe; but, compared with an encyclopedia proper, most of the entries are short; the type used, moreover, is evidently new and the impression is extremely clear. The press is not named, but it deserves credit for its good work. A new feature of the Standard is a considerable number of full-page plates grouping a number of cuts, such as those devoted to dogs, horses, and cattle, to architecture and to coins. Some of these are gayly colored, as those devoted to birds, flags, and gems. Here the publishers have evidently endeavored to improve upon Webster in appealing to the popular eye. Under the entry "apple" a long list of 150 varieties is given, and the geological chart occupies two full pages. It is not always easy to detect the scale of importance according to which the editors have enlarged here and condensed there, one may remark in passing, but they have everywhere succeeded in packing a large amount of information into a small space by cultivating terseness.

---

[*] The English Church in the Nineteenth Century (1800–1833). By John H. Overton, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00.

[*] A Standard Dictionary of the English Language upon Original Plans, designed to give, in complete and accurate statement, and in the readiest Form for Popular Use, the Meaning, Orthography, Pronunciation, and Etymology of all the Words and the Idiomatic Phrases in the Speech and Literature of the English-speaking Peoples. Prepared by more than Two Hundred Specialists and other Scholars under the Supervision of Isaac K. Funk, D.D., Editor in Chief; Francis A. March, LL.D., L.H.D., Consulting Editor; Daniel S. Gregory, D.D., Managing Editor. Vol. I. Sold only by Subscription. Single-Volume Edition, $12.00 Two-Volume Edition, $15.00. Funk & Wagnalls Co.

One is not favorably impressed in the case of a dictionary so plainly bidding for the general public with the statement that it contains more than twice as many terms in its vocabulary as Webster's International. It claims to give four thousand words relating to electricity alone. Such an abnormal enlargement of the vocabulary from the special dictionaries is to be condemned rather than praised. The space which most of these electrical terms, for instance, take up would be much better filled with quotations from the best authors illustrative of the more common words that really belong to the general language.

The method of the editors of the Standard is to follow the word, in bold-face type, with the pronunciation in a transliterated form according to the scheme of the American Philological Association; in case there are differences among the authorities those which give the pronunciation favored here are presented, with superior figures to indicate their preferences, if they have any; then, in parentheses, come the pronunciations rejected by the Standard, similarly marked. In spelling the reformers are favored in such particulars as giving e simply instead of æ or œ in numerous words; and some 3,500 words are inserted in the spelling favored by the Philological Association, being also entered in the ordinary form.

From the pronunciation each entry proceeds directly to definition; the etymology, which, as a rule, is cut short severely, is placed at the end. The definitions are studiously compact, but we have not in a brief examination noted any that are actually obscure from this cause. Where there is a number of definitions the classes are marked by bold figures, but the line runs on — with the intent to save space. The quotations illustrating the use of a word are usually restricted to one under each leading definition, "genius" being one of the few exceptions. A peculiar characteristic of the Standard is that the definition first given is that which defines not the original or primitive meaning or use of the term but the one most common at present. The oldest meanings, including, of course, those now obsolete, are given at the end of the entry. However justifiable this arrangement may be on the score of convenience and the saving of time, we cannot commend it in a work claiming, and rightly in other respects, a scientific value. A dictionary of this size should show the history, always interesting and usually important, of its various changes in meaning of words. The elucidation of these is a great aid to clearness of expression and to soundness of logical distinction; the careful reading of the etymology and the definitions of disputed terms arranged in their historical order and well illustrated by quotations in a large dictionary is a most useful exercise in rhetoric and logic. But this highly valuable discipline cannot be gained from the Standard, which here fails to give help that no large dictionary should withhold. The quotations here found have the merit of comparative novelty, the effort being to avoid those already given in other dictionaries; but we have noticed a considerable number which do not from their authors or their literary value deserve insertion, and it would have been better to repeat an old quotation with substance and good form than to seek variety only. The general level of the quotations from a literary point of view is not high. It is not a little curious that a considerable amount of space has been sacrificed by inserting after every quotation, as a rule, the initials of the publishers. In a work which pays no regard to history in the order of its definitions this seems misplaced precision and savors too much of advertising.

The general impression left by the Standard, which may be modified favorably or unfavorably by that daily use which is the severest test of a book of reference, is that it is an addition of interest and value to the list of encyclopedic dictionaries; stronger on the side of inclusion of terms than on the side of selection; comparatively weak in its quotations; very convenient for reference by the busy man, but, for the same cause, unscientifically arranged in its definitions and of inferior educating power; and extraordinarily full of compacted knowledge. Whether it will take a place as an authority in etymology or definition by the side of the latest Webster or the Century remains to be seen. Undoubtedly it will have a large sale; the multitude of buyers of large books of reference is now great, and there is ample room for the Standard by the side of the competitors whom it now finds in the field and of others quite sure to appear in time. The attention paid in this volume to antonyms and to the matter of compounding words should not fail of favorable mention.

TENNYSON'S IDYLLS.*

THIS new book on the Idylls of the King comes from the antipodes, the author being professor of modern literature in the University of Sydney, and it is the most notable work on the subject which we have met with. An introduction of about a hundred pages traces the origin and development of the Arthurian legends from early Celtic times through the romantic historians and the modifications they underwent in the age of chivalry to the period of Malory's compilation and the English ballads. Successive chapters then follow the phases of the story from the Reformation to the Puritan Revolution, from the Restoration to the French Revolution, during the Romantic Revival, and down to our own day. Other chapters are devoted to Tennyson's contemporaries on the continent and at home, to the laureate himself as Arthurian poet, to the general meaning of the Idylls, and to their relations as a series. An appendix gives further illustrations of Blackmore's forgotten epics on Arthur and of Sebastian Evans' poems on the subject, with a "time-analysis" of Tennyson's cycle.

The "great and epoch-making version" of the Arthurian story was in Geoffrey's History of the Kings of Britain, completed about the year 1135. The appearance of this book was "the literary incident of the twelfth century." Geoffrey was "the pioneer and sponsor, if not the father, of Arthurian romance." In his narrative the British hero first appears as "the flos regum, the Christian warrior, the incarnation of knightly valor, the champion of female honor, who attains a European empire and renown" — the conception which in our time has been revived with a difference by Tennyson. Malory's Morte d'Arthur was, however, the immediate source of most of the laureate's material; but, though he often "follows Malory very closely in plot, in idea, even in expression," he is not a copyist, much less a bad copyist, as he has been often described. What he borrows has gained new luster from his touch; his chief excellences are his own; and his method of treatment is entirely original. This is illustrated by a minute comparison between a chapter of Malory and The Passing of Arthur.

The use of Arthurian legends by Spenser, Drayton, Dryden, and Blackmore is critically discussed, as well as the more recent treatment of themes from the same stock by Wagner (in his operas), Matthew Arnold, William Morris, R. S. Hawker, A. L. Gordon, F. Millard, G. A. Simcox, Swinburne, and John Veitch. Some of these poets are almost unknown in this country, but the extracts from them and the comments upon their work are extremely interesting. All are vastly superior to Blackmore, who only at rare intervals lapsed into poetry in his hundreds of pages of verse, though his "dead poetical mammoths" had a respectable lease of life in their day, and were praised by Addison in the Spectator. "If Blackmore had not much poetry to give, neither was very much poetry desired" in that day.

The chapters on Tennyson comprise a third of the volume, and are a fresh and invaluable contribution to the literature of the Idylls, with much excellent criticism of the laureate's other works. The book as a whole has almost an encyclopedic importance and interest.

---

*Tennyson's Idylls of the King and Arthurian Story from the Sixteenth Century. By M. W. Maccallum, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 7 APRIL 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

To a Canty Chiel.

O "Land o' Cakes" and kilts and clans!
Wild nurse of soldier, saint, and sage!
Whose hills Romance's breath still fans —
Whose action crowds the historian's stage!
To your illustrious heritage
Another magic name is won,
And brightly on the enduring page
Shines — Robert Louis Stevenson.

In his brave words again I hear
The note of Burns, the tone of Scott;
Touches of stern Carlyle appear,
With all his bitterness forgot.
Yet his fair fabrics mimic not —
Unique the varied patterns run;
No copied style, no pilfered plot,
Has Robert Louis Stevenson.

"Strange Case of Jekyll and of Hyde,"
And strange each "New Arabian Night,"
But stranger he who turns aside
From these begetters of delight —
I follow the "Black Arrow's" flight,
On "Silverado" hillside's sun,
And visit "Treasure Islands" bright
With Robert Louis Stevenson.

To children we his tales rehearse,
And when, full late, to bed they creep
From the fair "Garden" of his verse
Bring buds that blossom into sleep.
The elders from his pages reap
Grave thoughts and high, gilt-edged with fun,
And, toddling down life's weary steep,
Bless Robert Louis Stevenson.

Brave holder of "that fort of clay,"
Ingenious spirit, sturdy heart,
Still tell the tale and lilt the lay
And preach to fireside and to mart!
And should again those "Travels" start —
Might such companionship be won —
I'd play — as now — the "Donkey's" part
To Robert Louis Stevenson.

Edward A. Church.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE.*

THE change of scene which the latest of Mr. Marion Crawford's novels presents, when contrasted with most of its predecessors, is very decided. In place of the picturesque setting of southern continental conditions, we have the crowded streets and the restless society of cosmopolitan New York. Instead of sunny Italian skies and golden atmosphere, we have the alternating sun and cloud most familiar to us, and the comparative indifference to weather that must characterize those whose occupations or amusements go on unchanged by the changing seasons. It is true that Mr. Crawford has treated certain phases of life in New York before, but never with the same breadth of view and attention to detail. His genuine and ever-increasing popularity will only gain by this variation. Fascinating and artistic as have been his graphic pictures of Roman life, for instance, this realistic delineation of American society will not suffer in comparison, at least with those who always welcome fresh insight into familiar conditions and enjoy a new combination of the kaleidoscopic fragments of humanity. Romance and passion may influence lives that often seem to be dominated by conventional restraint and self-control. Fashionable club life, society balls and dinners, the unembarrassed intercourse of people belonging to "the same set," and that a good one, are indicated, not described, with a touch-and-go quality that removes them far from the stock material of those writers who seem to consider the description of London or New York "functions" an end rather than a means. Society here is but a background, and the interest is in men and women as such. Characters are shaped by surroundings to a certain degree, but human nature is human nature still, whether under Italian or American skies, and Mr. Crawford is too vital a thinker and too close an observer not to extend his conquests over provinces not yet subjugated.

As for plot, the new novel is very simple in its main thread. The entire book covers the action of only five days, and a single conversation extends through nearly thirty pages without becoming wearisome or seeming unnecessarily long drawn out. (It is true that these pages are not formidably large, and it is indeed much better to have two volumes of this convenient, tempting size than one that would be heavier and more crowded.) Katharine Lauderdale and John Ralston for certain reasons, which may or may not seem good and sufficient to the reader, according to his point of view, plan and carry out a secret marriage, depending on Katharine's uncle to set things straight later. This he declines to do in just the way Katharine has hoped. Almost immediately a series of occurrences places John Ralston in a most unenviable position and leads to his being greatly misunderstood by those nearest to him. Fortunately, it is quite within his power to set things right, and this he at once proceeds to do without any of the unnecessary complications that often continue to separate lovers in novels. With this understanding and reconciliation the book ends. We are not even told whether the marriage turns out to be a wretched mistake, a bit of harmless folly or the truest wisdom, and yet there is nothing fragmentary about the book, nor does it in a certain sense seem unfinished, since the characters are so strongly defined that one looks forward to the end with confidence in his knowledge of their ultimate destiny. The intermediate stages interest him none the less for that confidence.

Mr. Crawford has a masterly touch in the delineation of natural men and women. Each member of the Lauderdale tribe with whom we come in contact is firmly intrenched in his own individuality, and we see him both as he appears to others and as he seems to himself. The strength and weakness of each are admirably indicated as they play into the events described, and both qualities are distributed much as they are in real life, no one person possessing a monopoly of either. Thus the interest is not confined to the main characters, and one looks forward with interest to the additional volumes of this same series, in which many questions are to be answered and many perplexities solved.

TOLSTOI'S KINGDOM OF GOD.*

IT is interesting to note along the horizon of our time so many striking vindications of the doctrine of the Anabaptists. These preachers of nonresistance — the first great Protestants against the reign of force who took Jesus Christ seriously — have long lain under the extinguisher of "Münster." The very mention of their names, even to the educated man, is apt to call forth a geographical exclamation, while the usual answer in the popular sectarian newspapers to any serious consideration of their doctrine is that "John of Leyden was a polygamist." The vastly more important fact that in the Mennonites and Quakers these ultra-Protestants have powerfully contributed to the kingdom of God on the earth is forgotten. This latest book from the pen of the great expounder of the newer Russian Christianity is a powerful vindication of Anabaptist doctrine. His thesis is that Christianity is not a mystic religion but a new theory of life. He shows that all through the Christian ages, while bows and arrows, catapults and ballista, guns and cannon have been the weapons of political Christianity, there always has been a minority of men professing nonresistance to evil by force. So far from Christianity being understood by its churches, schools, and hospitals, Christianity in the larger part of the world today is interpreted by its vast armaments, its steel-clad cruisers, and its standing armies. The Christianity of the kind taught by Jesus is a very different sort from that actually incarnated in society today. Christianity is misunderstood by believers and by men of science. There is a direct contradiction between our life and our Christian conscience.

The first half of the book is largely historical survey, or historical philosophy, in which the representative American advocates of peace are named and praised. The second half of the work is a plea that the doctrine of nonresistance to evil by force must inevitably be accepted by men at the present day. The acceptance of this Christian conception of life will emancipate men from the miseries of our pagan life. The moral progress of humanity, which is to be hoped for, will come about by the individual recognition of the truth and also through the establishment of a public opinion. This Christian conception has already arisen in society, and will infallibly put an end to the present organization of our life based on force. Count Tolstoï shows how among the Russian people, since the age of Peter I, the protest of Christianity against the government has never ceased. Large emigration has taken place into the Turkish and Chinese empires as well as into America. These modern protestants against force, unlike the mystics and fanatics of former times, put their refusal and nonconformity on the simplest and clearest grounds. They will not submit to voluntary payment of taxes, because taxes are spent on deeds of violence, on the pay of men of violence, on the construction of prisons and fortresses and on weapons of war. As Christians they regard it as sinful and immoral to have any hand in such deeds. The final chapter is an eloquent sermon on the text "Repent, for the kingdom of God is within you." The book is an earnest attempt to make men believe that Jesus meant what he said.

---

* Katharine Lauderdale. By F. Marion Crawford. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

* The Kingdom of God is within You. Translated from the Russian of Count Leo Tolstoi by Constance Garnett. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.50.

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE friends of Columbia College are eagerly anticipating its removal uptown from its present site at the corner of Forty-ninth Street and Madison Avenue. But the proverb about the motive powers of great bodies finds exemplification in this rapidly growing institution. The plans for the new college buildings have not yet been drawn; the architects, however, expect soon to present to the trustees the plan of the main building, which is to include the library, and on this the other buildings will be modeled. Before the actual work of construction can be done the college will have to collect more funds, either by the acquisition of fresh gifts or by the sale of the old buildings, possibly by both. The present site is very valuable, but this is an uncommonly bad time to sell. So, all things considered, it will probably be many months before Columbia is enabled to make a change of quarters. We can afford to wait, for when the college is established on the new site it will be a notable ornament to the city.

The new novel by George Meredith, which the Scribners are to publish serially, is said not to be in the novelist's usual manner. It is to be hoped this means that it is less rhetorically foggy than most of Meredith's masterpieces. In this connection it is worth noting that the Macmillans are to bring out a new edition, in three volumes, of George Meredith's poems. These will doubtless have a larger sale in England than in this country, for here the poems are even less known than the novels, which means that they are known only to a small cult. It would not be surprising if one of these days we should have a Meredith craze; thus far the enthusiasm for the novelist here has been quite limited, and despite its intensity it has had none of the infectious qualities of the Browning or even the Ibsen worship. But a generation that is able to cope with the Heavenly Twins certainly ought to be able to display at least a passing regard for the creator of Richard Feverel.

The interest taken in Mrs. Ward's new novel is shown by the extended reviews of it which have already appeared in several of the leading papers. Indeed, there is no other woman at the present day whose writings attract such immediate and widespread attention. A literary man of this city remarked to me the other day that he regarded Mrs. Ward as the George Eliot of her day, and expressed the opinion that her novels were destined to hold a permanent place in English literature. He meant, of course, those that have appeared since her first novel, Miss Bretherton, was written. Robert Elsmere shows such an advance over this work that it is hard to believe the same person wrote both. The demand for Marcella is so great that it will probably run into several editions. Mrs. Ward is one of the few novelists who find it advantageous to forego serial publication. By the sale of her books alone she is paid for her work as much as any of the current novelists and a hundred times better than most of them.

The Macmillans, by the way, are introducing here the novel in more than one volume. In England the two and the three volume novel have long been popular, but thus far they have not found favor in this country. Katharine Lauderdale, however, has had great success in two volumes, and no matter how many volumes Mrs. Ward's new work might appear in there would be a demand for it. But the test thus far is hardly a fair one; the American public will have its favorites in almost any guise, but it is safe to assume that only in the case of the most popular authors will the two-volume work of fiction find general acceptance here. In fact, the tendency of our publishing trade is directly opposed to this. Our literature has become cheaper and cheaper, to the alarm of those publishers who have detected in the tendency ultimately vanishing profits for themselves.

The extent to which our periodical literature has been cheapened of late is almost ludicrous, and for the present, at least, it would seem as if there must be a halt if the periodicals are to be continued at all. A short time ago it was reported that the Century and Harper's were to reduce their prices, but this story has been authoritatively denied. Few people realize how expensive the magazines have grown during the past few years. Not only has the quality of the literature which they publish vastly improved, but the illustrations and the general make-up have become much finer. The best artists of the world work for them, and they receive very large sums for their drawings. Indeed, it is due chiefly to the periodicals that the material condition of American artists has changed so radically. What the actual effect of all these changes is upon the literary and artistic taste of the community, whether it be good or bad, is open to dispute, for there are those who maintain that we are glutted with good literature and good pictures; nevertheless, it is a fact that we are now receiving the work of both artist and author for less money than was ever paid for it before. Just now authors as well as artists are thriving, and most publishers are wondering how the idea that author's did not receive fair compensation for their books ever originated.

It is not often that a serial attracts general attention in a magazine. Even so popular a story as Little Lord Fauntleroy created very little discussion while it was running in the St. Nicholas. Once in a great while, however, a magazine serial sets the whole country talking. This was true of The Anglomaniacs, and it is notably true of "Trilby," which is now appearing in Harper's. In literary circles here "Trilby" is on everybody's lips, and a success is predicted for it when it appears in book form greater than the success attained by Peter Ibbetson. I have been told by an author here who knows Mr. Du Maurier that several of the characters in the novel are obviously portraits of friends of the author's Bohemian days as an art student in Paris.

Literary men and women have been present in force at the fine presentation of dramas of Sophocles, Corneille, and Victor Hugo by the French tragedian, Mounet-Sully. These have all been finely given, and it was a rare treat to see "Le Cid" and "Œdipe" on the American stage. But our public, as a rule, does not care for the dramas that have made their way into literature. This does not mean, however, that plays of literary merit are not given here with success. On the contrary, at the present time we are seeing admirably written works in our theaters. "The Amazons," by the best of present-day English dramatists, Mr. A. W. Pinero, is a delightfully fresh and entertaining bit of satire on the masculine ambitions of the modern woman. Mr. Sidney Grundy's "Sowing the Wind" is, it must be confessed, injured by its pompously tuned phrases, which make its strong situations too stilted to be wholly natural. In "The Butterflies," by Mr. Henry Guy Carleton, we have a bright bit of fun, which is largely created by clever and spontaneous dialogue. Mr. Carleton, by the way, was formerly connected with New York journalism, and he has done some excellent literary work. Altogether, those who are most pessimistic about the quality of dramatic writing that is being done at the present time evidently concern themselves least with the productions of our dramatists.

Mr. Harold Godwin, editor of Current Literature, has bought an interest in The American Woman, the weekly paper for women started about a year ago by the Misses Mary and Margaret Bisland. The office of the paper has just been removed to the building in Lafayette Place, where Current Literature is located.

Mrs. Burton Harrison has announced that the name of her new novel to be published in the Century is "An Errant Wooing." The name appropriately suggests the wanderings of the principal characters in England, America, and Spain. Mrs. Harrison recently completed another novel, dealing with the fortunes of a very independent American girl of the period — a subject that ought to be popular. Just when this will appear is uncertain.

JOHN D. BARRY.

—St. Deiniol's Theological and General Library is the name given by Mr. Gladstone to his new library at Hawarden. It consists of more than 24,000 volumes, many of which are marked and annotated by him, and is placed in an iron building especially erected for it. According to a circular recently issued by him, it is now ready for the use "of students, lay and clerical, of any age, of inquirers, and of clergy or others desiring times of rest." These are expected to reside in the hostel belonging to the library, which is to be self-supporting, at a low charge for simple but comfortable board and lodging. It is the founder's wish that persons shall not visit the library out of curiosity. For the villagers' use there is an excellent general library at the Hawarden Institute. It is stated that Mr. Gladstone is about to put the library under a trust and that eventually it is to be attached to some school or college.

FICTION.

Lot 13.

Dorothea Gerard writes readable and satisfactory stories, built on consistent plots and rounded out with well-developed characters and novel situations. In her latest book she gives us no ideal hero or heroine. Bernard and Marian are bright, well-meaning people such as we are accustomed to meet in daily life, quite as likely to make mistakes as the rest of us, and interesting on that account as well as for the winding train of circumstances that leads up to their final happiness. Lot 13 is the name of an East Indian estate left by the will of Bernard's father to the father of Marian, not in kindness, however, but as a continuance of the dislike of many years. The place was reputed to be unlucky, and actually proved to be a care and perplexity for a long time. Bernard's mistaken first love and his gradual appreciation of the little cousin he has always taken as a matter of course are well shown. A curious feature of the book is the author's indifference to the stain brought on Bernard's name by the fact that legally he is an illegitimate child — his father having unwittingly married his mother one day before the death of his first wife — and also to the stain on the heroine's honor by her alteration of the important date in the death registry. The forgery proved to be of no avail, but the fact that she had dared to do it proved her "capable of big things" and revealed the "greatness of her unsuspected love" — thus says the author. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes.

First we had the Adventures of Sherlock Holmes and now we have his memoirs. A good detective story is sure to find plenty of readers, and here are a dozen of them. A. Conan Doyle has that rare gift in a story-teller — he knows when and where to stop. He never allows his reader to weary of any one story, although there is a certain sameness to this collection taken as a whole. Dr. Doyle is clever in his short stories, but many another writer is clever who could never have written Micah Clarke or The Refugees. This volume is evidently a pot-boiler, and the melodramatic ending, where Holmes dies, is rather forced and unnatural; but these detective yarns have a strange fascination for men and women whose own commonplace experience is far removed from such scenes of excitement, and who are not keenly critical of their literary quality. — Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Earlscourt.

This "novel of provincial life," by Alexander Allardyce, deals with provincial England, i. e., the small seaport town of Earlscourt in Siltshire, both fairyland localities, we opine, with a base of reality. A concealed marriage forms the matter of the plot. A murder under mistake cuts the knot of the puzzle and makes every one happy in the end. It is rather a clumsily constructed framework of a story, but has the merit of a certain originality. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

"The Holy Cross" is the title of the first story, a new version of the Wandering Jew, in a volume of quaint and amusing tales, by Mr. Eugene Field, which are of uncommon merit. The story of "Methuselah" is as comically ingenious as "The Seal Wife" is pathetic, though it is a modern rendering of the old German myth. "Mistress Merciless," the gem of the collection, is exquisite in its gentle sadness and old English style of simplicity and restraint. No one who loves children can read the tale of "Shut-Eye Town" and the land of "Ever-Plaisance" and the "Doll Beautiful," a battered and dressed up bed-key, without a heartache and a sigh of gratitude to Mr. Field for the rare and tender enjoyment he has given him. The book is artistically gotten up on thick paper with wide margins.— Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

Captain Charles King is delightfully sensational within the proper limits of good literature, for detective stories, when well written, now belong to the wide domain of popular classics. Waring's Peril is amusing in its description of barrack life and military orders, and is also duly mysterious in its account of an army officer wrongfully accused of murder. Of course the real criminal is discovered, and the reader becomes grateful for a pleasant hour spent in investigation of the lieutenant's peril. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

MINOR NOTICES.

Our English Cousins.

The evident intention of Mr. Richard Harding Davis to take neither himself nor his subject seriously almost amounts to flippancy. Yet this brilliant discursiveness may be his style. The five chapters of this book have largely or wholly already appeared in Harper's Magazine. The amusing newspaper discussion over the English guard mounts and the absence of guards in this country is not yet forgotten; Mr. Davis repeats his original assertion which has been shown to be incorrect. An Englishman must be vexed as he reads of the vulgarity of the Derby race and the aristocratic stupidity at Henley and Ascot. Still more will he be annoyed at the account, just as it is, of "A General Election in England," with its lengthy inconsequences and the invasion of bachelor apartments by Primrose dames. This essay is of special value to us in the agitation about woman suffrage here. "I can see nothing" concludes Mr. Davis, "in the active work of the Englishwoman in politics which justifies the risks she voluntarily runs of insult and indignity and bodily injury." With the same frankness he writes of "Undergraduate Life at Oxford," with its love of "ragging," the practical joking practiced on university magnates. In the chapters on "London in the Season" and on its "East and West Ends" Mr. Davis has incorporated certain orders of the day introduced into Parliament regarding a cow, a thatched cottage, and a recruit, which show the paternalism of English government.— Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Travels in America 100 Years Ago.

The writer of this charming little book in Harper's Black and White series was Thomas Twining, Englishman. As a boy he went to India and was soon intrusted with the reform of certain public administration work. In 1795 he sailed from there to the United States on a visit of curiosity, and recorded his impression of his travels in the form of a diary now published. It is a very naïve account, full of humor and appreciation of what had already been accomplished in a new country as well as of its inconveniences, especially in regard to stage-coach traveling, without even a strap at the back of the seats, or windows instead of undivided leather curtains. The "contemplated" roads, streets, and cities filled him with amused amazement. He met Washington, Adams, Priestley, the Laws, and other men whose names are now historic. He found that pigs did eat the refuse from peaches, and that William Penn's method of naming the streets of Philadelphia was both cumbersome and patriotic even unto the appellation of Sassafras Street after the American tree. The simple account of his interview with Washington is noteworthy. "It made," he says, "an impression on my mind which no subsequent years can efface." — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

John Larkin Lincoln.

The late Professor Lincoln was a thorough scholar, a skillful teacher, a graceful writer, and a most genial man. Born in 1817, he was elected to the chair of the Latin language and literature at Brown University in 1845, and filled it with eminent honor until his death in 1891. The goodly volume before us, an octavo of nearly 650 well-filled pages, is the tribute of his son, William E. Lincoln — "a memorial," as he calls it, "not a memoir." It is prefaced by a memorial address by Prof. Geo. P. Fisher of Yale, and the sketch of his life which this includes is supplemented by another, more minute, by Prof. W. C. Poland, originally contributed to the New York Evening Post. Nearly a hundred pages are filled with diaries of Lincoln's life at school, college, theological seminary, and German university, with letters written from Europe at various times. The remainder of the volume consists of a selection from his lectures and essays, most of which are well worthy of reproduction in this permanent form. Among the best of them are the papers on Rome in the time of Horace, Roman travel and travelers, Roman women, and the religion of the Romans. Those on Greek literature are hardly less admirable, particularly the essays on the Platonic myths, the relation of Plato's philosophy to Christian truth, Plato's republic, and the life and teachings of Sophocles. The range of the professor's study and taste is illustrated by other papers; for instance, those on Goethe's "Faust," Tyndall's Belfast address, Galileo and the Inquisition, the reviews of Gladstone's Juventus Mundi, and Dean Stanley on baptism, and the critical sketches of James Clerk Maxwell and Leopold von Ranke. An appendix contains notes on college incidents and anecdotes, a list of college and seminary essays, and other miscellaneous matter. Some of this was hardly worth treasuring up, but it may be of interest to the alumni of Brown who were pupils of Professor Lincoln in his half century of academic work — for he was an instructor in the university some years before he became professor. Two portraits of him are given — one from a photograph at the age of sixty, the other from a painting by Herkomer at sixty-nine. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.00.

The Spirit of God.

Picturesque spirituality (we know no other adjective to express our meaning), fluent English, constant use of choice words with simplicity of purpose in handling them — such is the first impression created by reading Protap Chunder Mozoomdar's very religious chapters on the Spirit. After admiring amazement at his diction comes gratitude for the breadth of his view, his synthesis of all holy impulses and noble deeds in the Spirit's activities. The most marked contribution of the volume is its testimony to the personality of God. Belief in this reality comes either from personal experience or historic fact. Yet we do not regard Babu Mozoomdar's reasoning as conclusive except so far as he reasons from human to divine personality. He lifts us upon the ground for such belief with a glorious assurance that encompasses us as the result of feeling. Such belief is effected by faith in the Spirit. So the divine Spirit is incarnated in the human. We go along with him as he teaches until later, when speaking of the resurrection of Christ, he says he has seen his spiritual body. Yet even as he announces this, he speaks in such words of love and modesty that one almost believes him until one has closed the book. The author traces the Spirit in Hinduism, in Christianity, in nature, life, reason, conscience, religion, and most effectively of all in history. It is a wonderful book to read as a prose poem, a record of what the divine Spirit has engraved upon one human spirit — a book whose sentences do not shine as comets, but whose radiance is diffused, pervasive, comforting; a book which renders full appreciation to other faiths than that of the Brahmo Somaj, but yet regards this as the present fulfillment of the past. Like The Imitation of Christ and Amiel's Journal, this account of the Spirit will help to make holiness a human attribute. — George H. Ellis. $1.50.

They Met in Heaven.

Under this title the author of Hiram Golf's Religion, Rev. George H. Hepworth, sends out an earnest little book indicating in the form of a story some steps by which a sorely stricken man may reach faith in the goodness of God. In a remote village Hiram Golf, "shoemaker by the grace of God," and four friends, including a minister and a sage, meet as the "Fireside Club" to talk of any topics that may present themselves. One of the number, Van Brunt, whose wife and child have suddenly died, is in a state of volcanic tumult. Gradually the manly and fervent religion of his companions makes some impression upon his despair. A remarkable dream, in which he sees the loved ones whom he has lost, at last gives him assurance that they are living in an eternal home where they await his coming. It is not necessary to agree with every statement made by Golf, the minister, and the "master" in order to feel the power of their childlike trust. Their teaching is not burdened with many dogmas. Van Brunt is told: "The man who simply follows the Sermon on the Mount will after a while find that he is on the threshold of heaven." "Christianity is communion with God and Christ. That is the essence of religion." With homely illustration and argument from individual and universal experience the reality of things unseen is insisted upon. The book is plainly destined to be, on the whole, a helpful and heartening influence. — E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

Genetic Philosophy.

This work is a calm and vigorous protest against the methods in philosophy so much in vogue in our own day — despite the professed abandonment of a priori methods. The tendency to form cults, schools, and sects in philosophical study is one of the proofs of human weakness. Even those who ridicule the conclusions of their predecessors and pretend to scout and avoid their methods do often in reality tread in their footsteps. Schools of thought are frequently dominated by the hallucinations of great men. Their fixed ideas are mistaken for solar centers. Most men are too much in a hurry to proclaim the final philosophy. Pres. D. J. Hill of the University of Rochester, N. Y., comes forward as a champion of the genetic method. This, however liable to abuse at the hands of particular cultivators, can certainly show strong credentials in favor of its reception. The genetic philosophy has already transmuted astrology into astronomy and alchemy into chemistry. It has won for itself the right to be called scientific because its adoption has everywhere been signalized by the advance of science. It starts with the assumption that truth is to be discovered, not made, and that we are to discover it at the end, not at the beginning, of our examination. It seeks the real as distinguished from an ideal order of phenomena through direct observation. It observes the law of recurrence of these phenomena. This law being established, the real order is found to be capable of an ideal extension in time and space. Every state of reality is thus regarded by science as the reappearance of a previous state of reality under changed conditions. With the genetic method every fact is referred to its place in the series to which it belongs. In following out his plan Dr. Hill discusses the genesis of matter, of life, of consciousness, feeling, thought, will, art, morality, and science, making a most interesting volume. The style is clear, and the book is unusually interesting because it is suggestive and not dogmatic. In summing up his conclusions the author shows that science is not atheistic and does not destroy the hope of a future life, even though experience may find its limit and before our eager senses the curtain falls. "Science has constantly taught, and with increasing certainty, that reality extends beyond the penetration of a finite mind." — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

Appearance and Reality.

This volume, by F. H. Bradley, LL.D., is a "metaphysical essay" of extreme subtlety, such as readers of Dr. Bradley's previous works would expect from him. It would be impossible in a short review to give an adequate idea of its contents. Its main idea, however, is that not only time, space, substance, and motion are appearances, but that the soul, will, and God, even, are also appearances — the one reality being simply the experience in which all these are included. It would require no small fondness for neo-Hegelianism to enjoy the reading of a book apparently so skeptical but coming to this extremely positive conclusion, "Outside of spirit there is not and there cannot be any reality, and the more that anything is spiritual so much the more is it veritably real." The reviewer cannot, however, fail to quote a sentence of Dr. Bradley's preface, which is one of the best definitions or brief descriptions of metaphysics known to him: "Metaphysics is the finding of bad reasons for what we believe upon instinct, but to find these reasons is no less an instinct." — Macmillan & Co. $2.75.

The Philosophy of Individuality.

Mrs. Antoinette Brown Blackwell's solid volume on "The One and the Many" is a contribution of great value to the philosophical theory known as monism. In her hands it takes on a very spiritual aspect, for she explains the phenomena of mind and matter as aspects of one individuality in which mentality is a fundamental character. In the human being she supposes there is somewhere in the organism one dominating atom, which is the soul of man, with a physical other side. In all nature the ultimate atoms are rhythmical. They are centers of energy which are incessantly in vibration and stretch out on all sides their arms or vibrators. This theory of the nature of atoms Mrs. Blackwell opposes to all hypotheses of ethers and the collision of atoms. She is a bold and vigorous thinker, and her work deserves the attention of all students of current philosophy. They will need to arm themselves with no little patience, for her style is not enticing and her matter is frequently confused by lack of skill in statement and by numerous repetitions. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

The Law of Psychic Phenomena.

Mr. Thomson Jay Hudson desires to bring psychology within the domain of the exact sciences. That this has not already been done, he believes, is largely due to the fact that no working hypothesis comprehending all psychic phenomena has been formulated. He believes that recent researches by Professors Siébault and Bernheim have resulted in this discovery: "That hypnotic subjects are amenable to the power of suggestion; that suggestion is the all-potent factor in the production of all the hypnotic phenomena." In this discovery Mr. Hudson finds the missing link for the chain of propositions needed to constuct a complete working hypothesis. His propositions are three: Man has two minds, to speak broadly, one of which is called the objective mind and the other the subjective mind, which is the seat of emotion, memory, and intuition. This subjective mind is declared, in the other two propositions, to be constantly amenable to control by suggestion and incapable of inductive reasoning. Applying these reasonings to spiritism, for example, Mr. Hudson explains the phenomena of the trance state in this way: "The subjective mind of the medium, being controlled by suggestion, believes itself to be the spirit of any deceased person whose name is suggested." The three fundamental propositions are developed in a great variety of applications to such subjects as phantasms, mental therapeutics, and the physical manifestations and spiritual philosophy of Christ. The work is one of no little interest to the students of the border-land between mind and matter. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

English Economic History and Theory.

The second part of Prof. W. J. Ashley's admirable treatise considers the end of the Middle Ages, from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century. The titles of the six chapters indicate what are practically as many almost distinct essays on the supremacy of the towns, the crafts, the woolen industry, the agrarian revolution, the relief of the poor, and the canonist doctrine. One of the most striking points in the first essay is the public provision of corn by the mediæval municipality during seasons of scarcity. Professor Ashley treats under the head of Crafts what other writers have usually designated Gilds in the various industries. "The woolen industry was the first to take form of the gild and the first to break through its limits," so "it became the most widely spread of 'domestic' industries, and therefore that in which the factory system gained its most hardly won and signal victory." Professor Ashley controverts Thorold Rogers' explanation of English economic history as turning upon the Black Death in 1349 and the Peasant Revolt in 1381; he considers that Professor Rogers by no means brought forward any adequate proof of his sweeping declarations. The chapter on the relief of the poor will be of interest to all charity workers, and that on the canonist doctrine of more especial attraction to students of economic theory. Professor Ashley's fairness of mind and his wide knowledge are shown in the justice which he does to the canonist doctrines in economics, which have been almost entirely outgrown. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

Osborne's Principles of Economics.

Mr. Grover Pease Osborne, who writes from Cincinnati, desires to ground a system of economics on the principle of the satisfaction of human wants, so far as this satisfaction depends on material resources or the labor of human beings. The division of his material is not that of the standard treatises on economics, which for the most part Mr. Osborne follows in other respects. The main features which distinguish his book from the orthodox treatises are his frequent insistence on the moral aspects of economic phenomena and the omission of such subjects as the tariff. In his four hundred open pages there would have been scarcely room for a complete discussion of all the standard topics on economics except in the most compact style. Mr. Osborne's style, on the contrary, is very easy and agreeable, and his volume is, for the most part, not only entirely sound in substance, but also singularly readable in its manner among books of political economy. — Robert Clarke & Co. $2.00.

The Railroad Question.

This volume is, according to its sub-title, a historical and practical treatise on railroads and remedies for their abuses, by William Larrabee, a former governor of Iowa. Mr. Larrabee speaks of himself as a manufacturer coming to the State before any railroad had reached the Mississippi, and as a legislator who for a long time advanced the interests of railroads by statute. He believes now, however, that they need to be more strictly controlled by the State and national authorities. He discusses such pertinent matters as monopoly in transportation, combinations, railroads in politics, railroads and railroad legislation in Iowa, and the interstate commerce act. The one remedy in which he has the most faith is the establishment of a department of transportation to supervise closely the railroads of the whole country. Mr. Larrabee's volume, which has reached a third edition, has much more solidity and sobriety than most lay contributions to this subject, and it well deserves the attention it has received. — Chicago, Ill.: The Schulte Publishing Co. $1.50.

The Repudiation of State Debts.

Prof. William A. Scott of the University of Wisconsin here makes a study of the financial history of the Southern States, including Tennessee and Arkansas, and of Minnesota and Michigan, which is one of the most discreditable chapters in all American annals. He includes under repudiation the scaling of debts and the refusal to settle bonds which are not legally valid. After an opening chapter on the constitutional and legal aspects of repudiation for which no legal remedy has thus far been found, Professor Scott sketches tersely the various repudiations in the South and the Northwest; he then gives a judicial statement of the causes which brought about repudiation, and discusses the remedies which have been proposed. He does not consider that the repeal of the eleventh amendment to the national constitution, which allowed these disgraceful repudiations, is practicable, and he favors amendments to the constitution of each State providing for adjudication in its own courts of cases to which it is a party. The volume is a contribution of weight and value to the "library of economics and politics," edited by Prof. Richard T. Ely. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.

Mr. John H. King, in his two volumes on the Supernatural: its Origin, Nature, and Evolution, does not show himself a master in philosophy or in history of sufficient strength to win the confidence of the discerning reader. His method is to trace the development of the idea of the supernatural from the primitive notion as he thinks it — that the whole external world is simply a congeries of chances. This original idea evolves into notions of charms, into the conception of the soul seen in dreams, and so on to the priesthood and the gods who are many and finally one. While Mr. King's volumes do not belong among the numerous extremely crude treatises of which there are too many, it is not sufficiently scholarly or broad-based to be commended to any but critical readers who can check its statements from wide reading of their own. His style is by no means interesting, and the principal value of his matter we have ourselves found to consist in the quotations from books on folk-lore and the lower races which are not given by such writers as Mr. Tylor and Mr. Lang. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00.

We have received from E. & J. B. Young of New York two small books, by the Rev. Dr. C. F. Hoffman of that city, yoked together under a common envelope — the one entitled Christ, the Patron of All True Education, the other The Library a Divine Child. The books are beautifully printed, and embody addresses made at Hobart and St. Stephen's Colleges. A certain community of thought and spirit binds them very properly together. Dr. Hoffman, who is a brother of the dean of the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, is a munificent patron of Christian education, believing thoroughly in "church" schools and colleges, and maintaining very correctly that the church is the founder and preserver of the library. In Christ and the Church of Christ he sees the source and center of all the highest and best influences for the elevation of mankind and the development of a high manhood. His ideas would commend themselves to most of us, and we all owe him thanks for putting them at our service in so attractive a form. — $1.50.

The volume entitled Twenty-two Years' Work of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, issued by the Normal School Press at Hampton, Va., is mainly occupied with the records of the history of the graduates and former students of the institute, both negroes and Indians. Miss Helen W. Ludlow sums up the highly encouraging results shown in these many personal sketches of the negro students and also reviews twelve years' work for the Indians. Two short papers by General Armstrong and General Marshall give more general impressions of the great work done at Hampton. Such a record as is here shown is precisely of the kind to stimulate further generosity to an institute so carefully built up by such devoted men as General Armstrong and his fellow laborers and so extremely efficacious in raising the moral and intellectual status of the negro and the Indian.

The fourth edition of Prof. A. H. Sayce's Principles of Comparative Philology is said to be "revised and enlarged," but the number of corrections of the third edition is very slight, as the author tells us. His preface informs us of his entire conversion to the theory of Professor Penka, that the Aryans originated in Southern Scandinavia. Professor Sayce has not changed his references and illustrations, which are now some twenty years old, but which he thinks are as valuable as ever, since his book is not a history of linguistic science but a criticism of the theoretical foundations on which the science rests. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.50.

Frank C. Sharp, Ph.D., the author of the slender volume entitled The Æsthetic Element in Morality, has given the reader an attractive discussion of the place of beauty in morality and the allowance which should be made for it by the utilitarian theory of morals. The main idea of these chapters is that "when intrinsic worth is attributed to character the quality affirmed of it is no other than beauty." This theory Dr. Sharp develops in five comparatively brief chapters, which show a thorough acquaintance with recent moral theory and which we confidently commend to the attention of students of ethics. — Macmillan & Co. 75c.

The third volume of the Journal of American Ethnology and Archæology, edited by J. Walter Fewkes, Ph.D., is a monograph by Mr. A. T. Bandelier, which he entitles "An Outline of the Documentary History of the Zuñi Tribe." Mr. Bandelier searched the archives of New Mexico thoroughly and drew other material from those of Mexico, but he does not claim completeness for his work. He has not cared to give the texts of the documents as a basis for his historical picture — a picture which Mr. Bandelier's well-known competence in these matters will commend to the study of all interested persons. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.

The Ethics of Success, by William M. Thayer, is a new edition of the volume by this author entitled Success and its Achievements, prepared as a reader for the higher grades of schools. The volume is on the lines which Mr. Smiles has rendered familiar in his various excellent works of a practical character. The transformation has been made by Mr. A. G. Boyden, who seems to us to have put into good form a great deal of matter which should be of interest to boys and girls in grammar and high schools. — Boston: A. M. Thayer & Co.

A volume in a similar line but more especially biographical and devoted especially to the illustration of character is Noble Lives and Noble Deeds. It is made up of forty lessons on such subjects as self-control, honesty, frankness, order, temperance, and reverence, for each of which a noted character, like Washington, Lincoln, Luther, Channing, Dean Stanley, Miss Dix, or Longfellow, is taken. The larger part of the three double-column pages devoted to each character is filled with biographical sketches and moral lessons drawn from the life in question. A series of questions and hints to teachers fill out the third page. — Unitarian Sunday-School Society. 75c.

The Lower Slopes is the apparently modest title given by Mr. Grant Allen to a small volume of poems printed in England in an edition of six hundred copies; they tell of love and science, of doubt and women, of mythology and modern homes. The meters are as varied as the subjects. "Forecast and Fulfillment," "The First Idealist" (a jellyfish), "In the Night Watches," and "Herbert Spencer" are among the best poems. Mr. Allen's prose is more beautiful than his verse. Flowers and Their Pedigrees and Vignettes from Nature are thoroughly charming books.— Stone & Kimball. $1.50.

A small, paper-covered volume entitled The Episcopalian Church, by Rev. George Hodges, D.D., now dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, contains five straightforward and candid discourses on the doctrine, ministry, discipline, worship, and sacraments of this great communion. — Thomas Whittaker. 25c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Facts vs. Fiction.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

Will you permit me to invite the attention of librarians to the importance of gathering works of fact, as distinct from artistic and literary publications? These latter are so much in favor as to preclude all danger of neglect. It is almost pathetic, this popular devotion to poetry, first-class novels, and the ideal world of noble fiction. But facts are generally more romantic than works of imagination, and more valuable. Home facts, of course, are the most important. Nor is it beneath the dignity of libraries open to the public to become storehouses or reservoirs of local information, down to such despised things as local directories, local trade reports, local maps, and all local government documents. To be sure, a circulating library is bound to supply what its readers most desire; but beyond this there is the higher duty of gathering the historical facts that show the truth of each locality as far as the truth is ever told in print.

After the great work in geography done by Justin Winsor, it is worth while to plead for all American maps ever published. Those printed since 1776 are specially important, and libraries should gather them for their respective localities with devoted care. For some reason not quite apparent, both Allibone's and Poole's Catalogues of United States Government publications fail to report maps, save accidentally. State, county, municipal, and private maps have fared worse. A future Poole will surely give us a catalogue of American maps, and a wonder it will be.

Everything, I think, has value that presents an account of reality, not excluding a record of the weather we have had; and public libraries, so generously supplied with literature and art, should not esteem it lightly to collect the realities, however prosy or dry they may be called. I know a public library of national fame that lacks the Internal Commerce reports published by the United States Treasury. Yet these reports tell better what our country is doing than literature and art can. The popular impression, shared by some libraries, that "mere facts" can be had for the asking is certainly erroneous. Facts are the hardest things to get at; and every fact is worth collecting, especially local facts, or facts directly or indirectly bearing upon the locality where they are gathered for use.

I know very well that the art of cataloguing maps, government reports, trade accounts, and committee reports is far from perfection. I am aware, also, that a catalogue of title-pages is very different from a catalogue of books, pamphlets and maps. But our librarians may be trusted. They will be greatly honored when the community comes to know that the truth, as far as recorded, is on file in the nearest public library and made accessible by an index-digest. Perhaps the future of our public libraries lies in that direction. When these libraries are the arsenal and clearing house of all knowledge affecting their respective jurisdictions, they will acquire a new hold upon the support and gratitude of the people.

C. W. ERNST.

Boston.

PERIODICALS.

The April Century is full of good reading. It opens with a portrait of Matthew Arnold, and there is an excellent article on the poet-critic by Florence Earle Coates; "From the Old World to the New" is told in a series of striking pictures by a brilliant artist. "Lincoln's Literary Experiment," by Mr. Nicolay, presents him at the beginning of his career and attempts to show how he gained his literary style. But his marvelous use of the English language was not the result of any training; it was a gift brought to him at birth by some good fairy or the result of his character. With the old Dutch masters and the illustrated article on "Millet's Life at Barbizon," the artists receive their full share of attention. Lovers of the country will enjoy William Henry Bishop's "Hunt for an Abandoned Farm." Mr. Marion Crawford is a little severe on The Light of Asia in his "Gods of India." Mr. Crawford is better as a story-teller than as a historian. Mr. Eggleston's "Wild Flowers of English Speech in America" shows his genius for apt titles, and his subject can be treated over and over again with profit. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in "The Supply at St. Agatha's," mingles the seen and the unseen elements in life in her own peculiar style. The story begins finely, but the element of the supernatural is difficult to manage always and especially in a short story. Among the open letters the one on the "Unity of the Sects," by President Hyde, will call forth considerable discussion. His treatment of sectarianism is very original.

A very notable article in the April Harper's is Lieutenant Staunton's "A Battle-Ship in Action," wherein, by a clever projection of the imagination on to a point a few years hence, he describes most vividly by anticipation a naval conflict between two of our modern marine monsters off the capes of the Delaware. The piece would be well worthy of Jules Verne. The "English Senate" is instructively described by Mr. G. W. Smalley, an extremely timely paper in the face of the present cries of "Down with the Lords!" A capital article is Mr. Poultney-Bigelow's on the "Emperor William's Stud-Farm and Hunting Forest" near Trakehnen, with fine woodcuts after Remington. Mr. Remington also furnishes two spirited equestrian illustrations for Owen Wister's frontier story of "The Promised Land." Mr. Du Maurier's unique novel, "Trilby," reaches its fourth part; it is a piece of fiction the exact like of which has not been seen in any American magazine of late years. Other contributions are by Grace King, Richard Harding Davis, Mr. Abbey, John Gilmer Speed, Mrs. Ward (who still persists in calling herself Elizabeth Stuart Phelps), and Mr. Howells.

Octave Thanet sketches "The Farmer in the South" in the April Scribner's; the diver's "Life under Water" is described and illustrated by Gustav Kobbé; Mr. Bunner does a like office for "The Bowery and Bohemia." R. B. Anderson tells of "A Winter Journey up the Coast of Norway," and "French Caricature of Today" is presented in samples on which Arsène Alexander comments. The painter Mr. Hamerton writes on this month is Frank Bramley, A.R.A., and the picture is a touching couple recalling "Old Memories" at the table. Mr. Cable's and Mr. Bishop's serials go on well, and Mr. Austin Dobson chats of "Tully's Head," Mr. Robert Dodsley's bookshop in old London.

The New England Magazine for April is not a little dramatic, with its portrait of Henry Irving as Becket and its illustrated paper on his influence on the American stage; no less historical, with its articles on New Hampshire at the World's Fair, the Bay Psalm Book, "The English Lynn," and the New England Fisheries; and likewise reformatory, in Mrs. Anna G. Spencer's "Parlor Conference," Prof. Lucy M. Salmon's "Education in the Household," and Mr. Porritt's statement on "Women in English Politics." The poetry of the number is unusually good, especially Mrs. Marean's "Choice."

The chief topics in the April Forum are President Cleveland from the Independent standpoint; Lord Rosebery viewed by a Canadian

Liberal; the "Irish Conquest of Our Cities" and the beginnings of municipal reform; true Americanism, ably treated by Theodore Roosevelt; the Inter-State Commerce Law, pronounced a failure; a comparison of New York with Kansas, to the detriment of the former, by a Western lawyer; Marcella, eulogized by Mr. Mabie; the supposed failure of missions in India, as Mr. Gandhi sees it; "A Gentle Warning to Lecturers," by Miss Repplier; the relation of our universities to the education of teachers; and "American Achievements in Surgery."

In the Popular Science Monthly for April the leading articles are Hon. A. D. White's second paper on "Theological Teachings Regarding the Animals and Man;" "New Light on the Problem of Flying," by Professor Le Conte; "The Method of Homing Pigeons," by C. F. Hodge, Ph.D.; "The Ice Age and its Work," by Professor Wallace; and "A Century of the Telegraph in France," by Walter Lodian, with the sketch and portrait of L. D. von Schweinitz.

The Portfolio for March is a fine monograph on Josiah Wedgwood, the great potter, by Prof. A. H. Church, F.R.S., an authority on pottery. The heavy paper employed in this new form of the Portfolio allows the publishers to excel even the high standard previously set in the beauty and finish of the plates and engravings.

The leading illustrations of the Magazine of Art for April are the etching "Pont-Y-Garth," by David Law, and the engraving of "La Vierge à la Légende," by Raphael. "Early Italian Art at the New Gallery," "The Foulis Academy and James Tassie," "Recent Illustrated Volumes," "The Decline of Scenic Art in America," "John Macallan Swan, A.R.A.," "The Decoration of St. Paul's," and "Mr. James Reid's Collection" are the other matters described and illustrated.

The first issue of the New-Church Review, bearing the date of January, 1894, has just been published. It is a well-printed periodical of 160 pages, and contains articles on "Chauncey Giles," by W. L. Worcester; "Christianity and Orientalism," by Julian K. Smyth; "The Genesis of the World's Religions Congress of 1893," by Charles C. Bonney; and "Planetary Limitations in Theology," by Frank Sewall. The editorial department holds editorials, biblical and doctrinal studies, and book reviews. The new enterprise indicates a desire to give the New Church an abler representative in the field of periodicals than it has yet had, and the first number is promising of success. The editors are Revs. T. F. Wright, D.D., James Reed, S. M. Warren, and J. K. Smyth.

The Journal of Political Economy for March is one of the best issues of this new Chicago quarterly. Prof. E. Levasseur contributes an able study of the finances of the French Revolution, "The Assignats," and there are other articles on "Mortgage Banking in America," by D. M. Frederiksen; "The Rate of Profits under the Law of Labor-Value," by I. A. Hourwich; and "The Debate on the National Bank Act of 1863," by J. W. Million, and much miscellaneous matter of interest.

In the three English reviews for March the more generally interesting articles are "The Impending Revolution," by Prof. Goldwin Smith; "Elementary Education and the Decay of Literature"—two phenomena which Mr. Joseph Ackland would have us believe are connected as cause and effect; more matter about the "Revolt of the Daughters;" Mr. Peters' fine description of "Notre Dame d' Amiens;" and an "Elegy," by Mr. Swinburne, in the Nineteenth Century; in the Contemporary, "Religion and Morality," by Count Tolstoï, and "Archæology and the Old Testament," by Professor Driver; and in the Fortnightly, "The First Edition Mania," by William Roberts, "Railway Development in England and America," by J. S. Jeans, and "The New Hedonism," in which Mr. Grant Allen sings the praises of the body.

A prosy installment of Mr. Blackmore's novel occupies about twenty pages of Macmillan's for March. The other matter of a fictitious character is "The 9.0 P.M. from Paddington," an episode in a child's life, and a psychological, grewsome sketch by William Watson, "The Two Dorothys." An anonymous writer has a long paper on "The True Discovery of America," reviewing Captain Gambier's article in a recent number of the Fortnightly Review, which brings forward the claims of Jean Cousin for that honor. As nothing is proved, the result is merely an agitation of a vexed question. The career of Cromwell's veterans in Flanders is treated by J. W. Fortescue; "The Fathers of Opéra Comique," by Charles Willsby. Other contributions are a brief one on the riots in Bombay, by an old Indian magistrate, a poem, and "The Growth of National Sentiment," by C. B. Roylance-Kent.

A new magazine called the Midland Monthly is issued at Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Johnson Brigham is the editor, and he hopes to make his magazine truly representative of the Middle West, which for some reason has not as yet achieved the literary recognition its native talent has merited. The first two numbers contain stories by Octave Thanet and Hamlin Garland.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Tennyson's neighbors in the Isle of Wight will erect to his memory an immense cross on the highest point of the cliffs, which will serve as a beacon for ships at sea. His son has presented the National Portrait Gallery a copy of the bust of the laureate made by Woolner in 1857.

—M. Zola's novel, Lourdes, will be published serially in the New York Herald, beginning on April 15 and running through the Sunday issues for probably three months.

—The fourth course of lectures on the foundation of the Percy Turnbull Memorial is being given by Charles Eliot Norton, LL.D., Litt.D., professor of the history of art in Harvard University. The subject of the Turnbull course is "Dante." The lectures began March 29 and close April 9.

—William Heinemann will publish shortly a second novel by Miss Laurence Alma Tadema, whose first book, Love's Martyr, enjoyed a considerable success six or seven years ago, and who has published nothing since. It is entitled The Wings of Icarus.

—Mrs. Bishop (Miss Isabella Bird), though more than sixty years of age, is off again in search of new materials for another book of travels. She has left Liverpool for Corea.

—Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will publish a new work by the Rev. Alexander Robertson of Venice, entitled Fra Paolo Sarpi: the Greatest of the Venetians. The book will contain a portrait of Fra Paolo Sarpi, a facsimile letter, and an engraving of the monument decreed to his memory by the Venetian Republic in 1623 and erected through the exertions of an international committee in 1892. Gibbon called Sarpi "the incomparable historian of the Council of Trent." The author treats his subject as scholar, as professor, as scientist and philosopher, theological counselor, and as martyr.

—The complete Concordance to the Writings of Milton, prepared by the late Dr. John Bradshaw, will be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. The work was only just finished before Dr. Bradshaw's death, which occurred recently and suddenly in India.

—Saracinesca, Sant' Ilario, and Don Orsino, the novels forming a trilogy of life in modern Rome, have always been ranked among Mr. Crawford's most brilliant work. And it is because they are filled with the ever-potent charm and mystery of the Eternal City, even more than because of their dramatic power, their vivid characterization, or the excellence of their style, that they are become works of peculiar and enduring interest. They represent a time of upheaval for both social and political institutions; in them we can trace the passing away of the old order and the birth of the new; and side by side with the story of human strife and passion runs a no less fascinating tale of the shifting forces of society. The continued popularity of these stories has made it seem advisable to their publishers, Macmillan & Co., to issue a cheap paper edition, limited to 100,000 copies, of Saracinesca the first of the series.

—A new English novelist has arisen in Mr Percy White, with a keen eye for character and the portrayal of individual weaknesses and foibles in the social world of the motherland. He has written a book on the modern English snob, under the title of Mr. Bailey-Martin, with the imprint of Lovell, Coryell & Co.

—D. Appleton & Co. have in active preparation the fourth volume of McMaster's History of the People of the United States. It opens with the War of 1812 and ends with the inauguration of Jackson, covering the history of finance after 1814, the rise of manufacturing industries, Mormonism, the movement of population Westward, and many other questions raised by the mental fermentation of the time.

—Ludwig August Frankl, the poet, died in Vienna, March 11. Frankl was born in Bohemia eighty-four years ago, but passed most of his life in Vienna. Among his best known works are Andreas Hofer in Song, Don Juan of Austria, The King of the Magyars, Rachel, Grillparzer's Biography, and Nikolaus Lena.

—Messrs. Roberts Brothers published April 2, Total Eclipses of the Sun, by Mabel Loomis Todd (No. I, Columbian Knowledge series, edited by Prof. David P. Todd of Amherst College); By Moorland and Sea, by Francis A. Knight; and Art for America, by William Ordway Partridge.

—Vital economic questions of the day are treated by recognized authorities in A Policy of Free Exchange, edited by Mr. Thomas Mackay, editor of A Plea for Liberty, to be published immediately by D. Appleton & Co.

— The two magazines Babyland and Our Little Men and Women (published for so many years over the imprint of D. Lothrop Co.) have been purchased by the Alpha Publishing Co. of Boston, a new corporation formed for the purpose of publishing children's literature.

— Dr. Charles A. Stoddard, editor of the Observer, encouraged by the success of his Across Russia and Spanish Cities, has written a new volume of travels called Beyond the Rockies. It will be issued shortly in an illustrated volume by the Scribners, and will contain a description of experiences in a winter journey by the southern route to California.

— Among Dodd, Mead & Co.'s new books are Bogland Studies, by Jane Barlow; an American edition of the same author's Irish Idylls; Courage, by Charles Wagner, translated by Cora Hamilton Bell; The Poets and the Poetry of the Century, completed; a cheap edition of Oscar Wilde's Intentions; Mildred's New Daughter, by Martha Finley; a large-paper edition of Proverbs in Porcelain, with a dramatic vignette; Au Revoir, by Austin Dobson; The Journal of Martha Pintard Bayard, London, 1794–1797, edited by S. Bayard Dod; Links in a Chain, by Margaret Sutton Briscoe; The Lone House, a new story by Amelia E. Barr; and a new edition of Edmund Lee's biography of Dorothy Wordsworth.

— Mrs. Ramona Wolfe, whose first name has become famous by reason of Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson's romance, has just died. San Diego visitors take much interest in the little adobe church there where Ramona and Alessandro were married.

— Mr. Bliss Perry, the author of The Broughton House, has in preparation a new volume, to be issued during the spring by the Scribners. It will be entitled Salem Kittredge and Other Stories, and will comprise nine of Mr. Perry's latest short stories.

— Dr. Samuel Davidson has seen through the press a new edition, thoroughly revised and enlarged, of his Introduction to the Study of the New Testament. It will be published in two octavo volumes, as before, by Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co.

— April 25 has been fixed upon as the date for the publication of Mr. Swinburne's new volume, Astrophel and Other Poems.

— The Baker & Taylor Co. announce as in press, to be published in April, With the Wild Flowers, through the spring, summer, and autumn, from pussy-willows to thistle-down, by E. M. Hardinge; The Amateur Aquarist, by Mark Samuel, aquarist to Columbia College, New York; and Christianity Practically Applied, being a report of the proceedings of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, held at Chicago, in 1893, two vols. This house has just issued The Friendship of Jesus, by Rev. Frank Samuel Child

— T. Y. Crowell & Co. will this month add to their Library of Economics and Politics a volume on Socialism, by Prof. Richard T. Ely of the Wisconsin University. This work, which has been in preparation for several years, will treat the subject historically, descriptively, and critically.

— Cassell & Co. will issue shortly G. A. Sala's Things I Have Seen and People I Have Met, a collection of papers which have appeared serially in the Daily Telegraph and elsewhere.

— A story said to be by Napoleon Bonaparte is printed in the April Cosmopolitan, which tells its fortunes thus: The manuscript survived the vicissitudes of war and exile and remained locked up for a hundred years. It appears from the researches made by the French Napoleonic scholar, Frédéric Masson, who vouches for the fact over his own signature, that Napoleon, when a young lieutenant, wrote a Corsican story. The manuscript of this he confided to his uncle, Cardinal Fesch, then Archbishop of Lyons. When Cardinal Fesch died, in 1839, his papers were intrusted to his Grand Vicar, Abbé Lyonnet. Napoleon's manuscript was sold by the abbé to Libri, a member of the academy and inspector of French libraries. Libri sold this and some other manuscripts to Lord Ashburnham for $40,000, and from 1842 to a recent date Napoleon's manuscript slumbered in Ashburnham Castle.

— George Ticknor Curtis, one of the most eminent authorities on constitutional law and the author of many legal works, died in New York, March 28. He was born in Watertown, Mass., in 1812, and was graduated from Harvard College in 1832. Much of his time was spent in writing on law subjects, and some of his works are text-books in use now. Among these are History of the Constitution of the United States and Treatise on Copyrights. He was an intimate friend of Daniel Webster and his literary executor. His principal work was the Life of Daniel Webster, and he also wrote the Life of President James Buchanan. His last book, Creation or Evolution, was published about ten years ago. One of his novels was John Charaxes. Only a few weeks ago he finished a history of his own life. His first wife was a daughter of Judge Joseph Story of Massachusetts and a sister of W. W. Story.

— Mrs. Jane Goodwin Austin, the novelist, died in Boston March 30. She was born in Worcester, Mass., in 1831. Her parents were from Plymouth in the Old Colony, and counted their lineage from the Mayflower Pilgrims in no less than eight distinct lines, besides a common descent from Francis Le Baron, the nameless nobleman who formed the subject of one of Mrs. Austin's most interesting stories. Mrs. Austin's earlier literary work was in various fields and in both poetry and prose, but later she made a specialty of the Pilgrim Colony and devoted the last years of her life to historical novels, portraying the prominent characters and picturesque incidents of its most engaging story. There were four of these, Standish of Standish, Betty Alden, The Nameless Nobleman, and Dr. Le Baron and His Daughters, and they cover the period from the landing of the Pilgrims upon Plymouth Rock, in 1620, to the Revolution, in 1775. She had planned a fifth volume, which should complete the series. Other books of her composition are Dora Darling (1865), Moon-Folk (1894), Mrs. Beauchamp Brown (1880), Nantucket Scraps (1882), and David Alden's Daughter and Other Stories of Colonial Times (1892).

— Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish shortly The Lives of Twelve Bad Men, being original studies of eminent scoundrels by various hands, edited by Thomas Seccombe, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford; Maximilian and Carlotta, a story of imperialism, by John M. Taylor; The Philosophy of Religion, by Otto Pfleiderer, professor of theology at the University of Berlin, being the Gifford Lectures for 1893; in the Questions of the Day series, Canadian Independence, Annexation, and British Imperial Federation, by James Douglas; a story of the times of the French Revolution, Red Cap and Blue Jacket, by a new writer; a new volume by Richard Le Gallienne, entitled Prose Fancies; an addition to the Papers of the American Society of Church History; and in the series of Heroes of the Nation, Prince Henry the Navigator (of Portugal) and the Age of Discovery, by C. R. Beazley.

— Messrs. Silver, Burdett & Co., Boston, publish early this month a Harmony of the Gospels on a new and improved plan, and also a revised edition of the Outline Handbook of the Life of Christ. The authors are William Arnold Stevens, professor of New Testament interpretation in Rochester Theological Seminary, and Ernest De Witt Burton, professor of New Testament interpretation in the University of Chicago.

— Mr. John D. Barry, whose work has won high praise from Mr. Howells, is publishing a serial story in the Sunday Tribune.

— Mr. Robert Buchanan has just finished a novel of Yorkshire working-class life, which he entitles Rachel Dene.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

The Life and Educational Works of John Amos Comenius. By S. S. Laurie. C. W. Bardeen. 50c.

Pestalozzi: His Aim and Work. By Baron Roger de Guimps. C. W. Bardeen. 50c.

Memoirs of Anne C. L. Botta. Written by Her Friends. J. Selwin Tait & Sons.

Memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier. Vol. II. 1812–1814. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Essays and Sketches.

The Englishman at Home. His Responsibilities and Privileges. By Edward Porritt. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.75

Oxford and Her Colleges. A View from the Radcliffe Library. By Goldwin Smith, D.C.L. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

The Experimental Novel, and Other Essays. By Emile Zola. Tr. by Belle M. Sherman. Cassell Publishing Co. $2.00

According to Season. Talks about the Flowers in the Order of Their Appearance in the Woods and Fields. By Mrs. Wm. Starr Dana. Chas. Scribner's Sons. 75c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

The Ariel Shakespeare. Fourth Group. The Two Gentlemen of Verona; The Merry Wives of Windsor; Measure for Measure; The Comedy of Errors; Love's Labour's Lost; Taming of the Shrew; All's Well that Ends Well. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each, 75c.

Angelus Domini; with Legendary Lays and Poems in Honor of the Virgin Mary. Illus. The Baker & Taylor Co. $1 50

Plays by John Davidson. Being: An Unhistorical Pastoral; a Romantic Farce; Bruce, a Chronicle Play; Smith, a Tragic Farce; and Scaramouch in Naxos, a Pantomime. Stone & Kimball. $2.00

Fiction.

Love Letters of a Worldly Woman. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. F. T. Neely. 50c.

On a Margin. A Story of These Times. By Julius Chambers. F. T. Neely. 50c.

A Lover from across the Sea. By E. Werner. Tr. by Mary J. Safford. Illus. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

A Soldier and a Gentleman. By J. Maclaren Cobban. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

The Countess Radna. A Novel. By W. E. Norris. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

The Story of Margrédel. Being a Fireside History of a Fifeshire Family. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

'Lisbeth. By Leslie Keith. Cassell Pub. Co. $1.00

Before buying your new bicycle look the field over carefully. The superiority of Victor Bicycles was never so fully demonstrated as at present. Our '94 line will bear the most rigid scrutiny, and we challenge comparison.

There's but one best---Victor.

OVERMAN WHEEL CO.

BOSTON. PHILADELPHIA. DETROIT.
NEW YORK. CHICAGO. DENVER.
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

Chicago, Rock Island

— AND —

Pacific Railway.

THE Favorite and Direct Line, furnishing the best facilities and accommodations, at lowest rates, to and from Chicago, Rock Island, Davenport, Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Watertown, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Topeka, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS,

UNRIVALED for splendor of equipment, daily between Chicago and Des Moines and Council Bluffs, and between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, with superb through Dining-Car Service, FREE Reclining Chair Cars and Pullman Palace Sleepers.

THE POPULAR TOURIST LINE to and from Manitou, Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Glenwood Springs, and all the sanitary and scenic resorts of Colorado, offering choice of routes, via Denver, to and from Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FAST EXPRESS TRAINS daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to and from all important towns, cities and sections in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Kingfisher and El Reno in the Indian Territory.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager.
JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE OF FINE AND RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

IF YOU ARE GOING

WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

Receiver's Sale.

BANGS AND COMPANY, 739 and 741 Broadway, New York, will sell at auction, at their rooms, by order of JOSEPH J. LITTLE, Receiver,

All the Stock of Books, bound and in sheets, Stereotype Plates,

Etc., Etc., of

The Worthington Company.

The Sale will Commence Tuesday, April 17.

Catalogues mailed upon application to the Auctioneer.

CATALOGUE No. 22,
Curious and Interesting
OLD BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS,
Mailed free to any address,
H. GREGORY, Providence, R. I.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

There is but one FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

Meisterschaft

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

No. 196 Summer Street,
Boston, Mass.

System

Literary Curios,
Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.
Send stamps for separate lists.
Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.
Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 21 APRIL 1894 Vol. XXV No. 8 Whole No. 504

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOURCES OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Considered in Relation to Colonial and English History. By C. ELLIS STEVENS, LL. D., D. C. L., F. S. A., Edin. 12mo, $1.50.

In the Press. Vol. II. New Edition. Bryce's Great Work.

The American Commonwealth.

By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, D. C. L., author of "The Holy Roman Empire"; M. P. for Aberdeen. In two volumes, large 12mo. Third edition, revised throughout, and for the greater part rewritten. Vol. II., in the press. Already Published, Vol. I., $1.75.

The Fourth Edition of Prof. Goldwin Smith's Brilliant Work.

The United States:

An Outline of Political History, 1492-1871. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D. C. L., author of "Essays on Questions of the Day," "Canada and the Canadian Question," etc. With Map. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TOWN LIFE IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

By Mrs. JOHN RICHARD GREEN, author of "Henry the Second" (Twelve English Statesmen Series). 2 vols., 8vo, $5.00.

European History. Period V.

A. D. 1598-1715.

By H. O. WAKEMAN, M. A., Fellow of All Souls' College and Tutor of Keble College, Oxford. 12mo, $1.40. Already Published: Period I., A. D. 476-918, $1.75. Period VII., A. D. 1789-1815, $1.40.

Vol. IV. New and Important Edition.

The Diary of Samuel Pepys.

Edited with additions by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F. S. A., with Illustrations. In eight volumes. Vol. IV., 12mo, $1.50. Already Published, Vols. I., II., III. Each, $1.50.

⁂ Also an Edition on Large Paper, limited to 100 copies, sold only in sets. $5.00 per volume.

CRITICISMS ON CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT AND THINKERS.

A Series of Essays selected from The Spectator. By RICHARD HOLT HUTTON, M. A. (London), Fellow of University College, London. 2 vols.

Select Statutes and Other Constitutional Documents.

Illustrative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Edited by G. W. PROTHERO, Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, $2.60.

Just Ready. Vol. II.

English Prose Selections.

With Critical Introductions by various writers, and General Introductions to each period. Edited by HENRY CRAIK, C. B. In five volumes. Vol. II., Just Ready. Already Published, Vol. I. Fourteenth to Sixteenth Century. 12mo, cloth, Students' Edition, $1.10; Library Edition, gilt top, $1.50.

The Third Edition of Mrs. Humphry Ward's New Novel.

MARCELLA.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, author of "The History of David Grieve," "Robert Elsmere," etc. With New Portrait. In two volumes. Small 12mo, cloth, in box, $2.00.

Fourth Edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's New Novel.

Katharine Lauderdale.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Mr. Isaacs," etc. With illustrations and a new portrait of the author. In two volumes. Small 12mo, in a box, $2.00.

Second Edition of S. R. Crockett's New Novel.

The Raiders.

Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt. By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister, and Some Common Men." 12mo, $1.50.

A New Book by the Author of "Miss Stuart's Legacy."

THE FLOWER OF FORGIVENESS, AND OTHER STORIES.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. 12mo, $1.00.

A New Novel by the author of "Robbery Under Arms."

A Modern Buccaneer.

By ROLF BOLDERWOOD. 12mo, $1.25.

A New Novel by the author of "A Mere Cypher."

A Valiant Ignorance.

By MARY ANGELA DICKENS. 12mo. Just Ready.

In the Press.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE.

A Chronicle of New England Birds and Flowers. By Mrs. J. O. WRIGHT. 18mo, cloth, 75 cents.

⁂ Also a Large-Paper Edition, Limited to 250 Copies, With Twelve Full-Page Plates. Crown, 8vo, $3.00.

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, 66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

May Atlantic

WILL CONTAIN:

Philip and His Wife. XIV.-XVI. Margaret Deland.

From Blomidon to Smoky. Frank Bolles.

The Henry. T. C. Mendenhall.

Achilles in Orcus. Elizabeth Stoddard.

Three Commandments in the Vulgar Tongue. Gilbert Parker.

Talk at a Country House. Taking Leave; Emile Souvestre; Edward Lear; Retrospect. Sir Edward Strachey.

Behind Hymettus. In two Parts. Part I. J. Irving Manatt.

Egotism in Contemporary Art. Royal Cortissoz.

Where? R. H. Stoddard.

The Queen of Clubs. Eliza Orne White.

Francis Parkman. I. Justin Winsor. II. John Fiske.

The Ethical Problem of the Public Schools. William Frederick Slocum, Jr.

Henry Vaughan the Silurist. Louise Imogen Guiney.

Also, The Encyclicals of Pope Leo XIII., Poetry in General and in Particular, Comment on New Books, The Contributors' Club.

35 cents a number; $4.00 a year.

New Books.

[Ready April 25.]

The White Crown and Other Stories.

By HERBERT D. WARD. 16mo, $1.25.

A collection of bright, fresh, readable stories, which ought to entertain a host of readers the coming season. They are not weighted with too serious a purpose, and they have the great merit of seizing and holding the attention.

The Story of Dan.

By M. E. FRANCIS. 16mo, $1.25.

A strong, well-written, thoroughly readable story of Irish peasant life.

Folk-Tales of Angola.

By HELI CHATELAIN, late United States Commercial Agent at Loanda, Angola, West Africa. With two maps and several melodies. 8vo, $3.00, net.

The collection includes fifty stories answering to European märchen or fairy tales, heroic narratives of an African stamp, and animal tales corresponding to those familiar to American negroes, together with anecdotes and relations considered by Africans to be accounts of actual events.

Poems.

By LANGDON ELWYN MITCHELL. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25.

This is a book of fine variety—including dramatic power, a sense of nature, imagination and fancy; and readers will find it distinctly superior to the average of current books of verse.

MRS. JANE G. AUSTIN.

Old Colony Stories.

STANDISH OF STANDISH.
BETTY ALDEN.
A NAMELESS NOBLEMAN.
DR. LE BARON AND HIS DAUGHTERS.
DAVID ALDEN'S DAUGHTER, and Other Stories of Colonial Times.

Each 16mo, $1.25.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

The Pleasure and Profit of a Tour in Foreign Countries will be immensely enhanced by a prior reading of the under-mentioned Books.

BY AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE.

The Cities of Northern Italy. Two vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. With numerous interspersed illustrations, from drawings by the author, and comprising Venice, Ferrara, Piacenza, Parma, Modena, Bologna, The Riviera, and, in part, Piedmont and Lombardy; $5.00.

The Cities of Central Italy. Two vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. With numerous interspersed illustrations, from drawings by the author, and comprising in the Emilia and Marche and some towns in Umbria and the Campagna; $5.00.

Days Near Rome. A new edition (the third). Two vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. With numerous interspersed illustrations, from drawings by the author; $5 00.

Walks in Rome. Two vols. in one. With a map. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.50.

Walks in London. Two vols. in one. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.50.

Walks in Paris. Two vols. in one. With fifty illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

Days Near Paris. One vol. With forty-two illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

Cities of Southern Italy and Sicily. With illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

Studies in Russia. With illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

Wanderings in Spain. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Sketches in Holland and Scandinavia. With thirty-three illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Florence. With fourteen illustrations and map, $1.00.

Venice. With map, $1.00.

" . . . Mr. Hare's books are read to most advantage . . . as an immediate preparation for a visit to the places enumerated. His taste and judgment are as trustworthy as his skill is unusual. Under his leadership the least observant traveler will have his eyes open to beauties and charms that he would otherwise pass unheeded by."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

A Thousand Miles Up the Nile. With upwards of seventy illustrations from finished drawings executed on the spot by the author. Second edition revised by the author. 4to, cloth, $2.50.

Untrodden Peaks and Unfrequented Valleys A Midsummer Ramble in the Dolomites of Southern Tyrol. Embellished with full-page illustrations and wood engravings of the scenery and map of the author's route. 4to, cloth, $2.50.

W. S. Caine. A Trip Round the World in 1887-8. Illustrated by John Pedder, H. Sheppard Dale, Geo. Bickham and the author. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

Benedict, E. L. Stories of Persons and Places in Europe. Profusely illustrated. 4to, boards, $1.50.

Smith, Helen Ainslie. The Great Cities of the Modern World. With 270 illustrations. 4to, boards, $1.50.

Howitt, William, Homes and Haunts of the British Poets. With numerous illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Collins, C. Allston. A Cruise on Wheels. The Chronicles of some Autumn Wanderings among the Deserted Post-roads of France. 12mo, board cover, 80 cents.

Sterne, Laurence. A Sentimental Journey through France and Italy. 25 cents to $5.00.

Routledge's Guide to London. With 100 illustrations and a map. 12mo, cloth, 50 cents.

Ainsworth's Tower of London. With Cruikshank's illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $3.00; 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ainsworth's Windsor Castle. With Cruikshank's illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $3.00; 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ainsworth's Old St. Paul's. With illustrations by Hablet K. Browne, etc. 8vo, cloth, $3.00; 12mo, $1.25.

Bulwer Lytton's Last of the Barons. 12mo, $1.25.

Sir Walter Scott's Kenilworth. 12mo, $1.00.

Sir Walter Scott's Heart of Midlothian. 12mo, $1.00.

Sir Walter Scott's Poems. 12mo, $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be mailed, postage prepaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

George Routledge & Sons, Limited,
9 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

COPELAND AND DAY'S NEW BOOKS.

CARMAN (BLISS) AND RICHARD HOVEY. SONGS FROM VAGABONDIA. Octavo, $1.00. In the press.

CRANE (WALTER). A SERIES OF EIGHT DESIGNS ILLUSTRATING SHAKESPEARE'S TEMPEST. Printed on Japanese silk paper, mounted on cardboard and issued in a portfolio, each set signed by Mr. Crane. Two hundred copies only are made for America. Quarto, $6.00.

DAVIDSON (JOHN). A RANDOM ITINERARY WITH A BALLAD. A volume of essays, with frontispiece and title-page designed by Lawrence Housman. Octavo, $1.50.

GARNETT (RICHARD, LL. D.). A VOLUME OF POEMS. Issued with a title and half-title by Illingsworth Kay. Octavo, $1.50.

HINKSON (KATHERINE TYNAN). CUCKOO SONGS. With title-page and cover designed by Lawrence Housman. Octavo, $1.50.

LE GALLIENNE (RICHARD). ENGLISH POEMS. Third edition. Octavo, $1.50.

ROSSETTI (DANTE GABRIEL). THE HOUSE OF LIFE: BEING NOW FOR THE FIRST TIME GIVEN IN ITS FULL TEXT. With three ornamental borders and one hundred and fourteen initial letters designed by Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue. Issued in an edition of five hundred copies on hand-made P. L. B. paper, square octavo, bound in limp Japanese silk paper boards, $2.50; and fifty copies on thick handmade Michallet paper, with rubricated initials, advanced to $10.00.

TABB (JOHN B.). POEMS. With cover and ornaments designed by George Edward Barton. Square duodecimo, cloth and gold, $1.00. In the press.

THOMPSON (FRANCIS). POEMS. With frontispiece and title-page on Japanese paper, designed by Lawrence Housman. Small quarto, $1.50.

WILDE (OSCAR). SALOME: A TRAGEDY IN ONE ACT. Newly translated from Mr. Wilde's French version recently issued in Paris. The English edition will present for the first time a cover and ten full-page illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley. But two hundred copies are issued for America. Small quarto, $3.75.

COPELAND AND DAY, 69 Cornhill,
Boston.

The Ethics of George Eliot's Works.

In response to many inquiries we have made a new edition of this remarkable book by JOHN CROMBIE BROWN, with the introduction as written by Rev. Charles Gordon Ames. It is on fine laid paper, title in two colors; bound in silk cloth at 75 cents, and in paper covers, 50 cents.

Bible Heroes.

By WILLIAM HARDCASTLE BROWNE, A. M. A capital book for children. It awakens a keen interest, and makes the most delightful method of making easy the way to Bible truths. New edition, well illustrated, bound in cloth, stamped in colors, 75 cents.

George Eliot's Two Marriages.

By CHARLES GORDON AMES. "The ablest, wisest and best article written about George Eliot." Sixth edition, wide margins, uncut, paper covers, 20 cents.

Evolution and Religion.

By Rev. M. J. SAVAGE, the eminent Boston divine. A rational view of the subject from one who believes both sides. 12mo, wide margins, paper cover, 25 cents.

Stops; or, How to Punctuate.

A wonderful little book. You will be surprised at its clearness and general good sense. Each rule is followed by practical examples. Can you do without it? Cost trifling—25 cents.

No Sect in Heaven.

By Mrs. E. H. J. CLEAVELAND. The tasteful manner in which the poem is gotten up ought to make it welcome to new and old readers. Hand-made paper covers, 25 cents.

Any book by mail; we pay postage.

ARNOLD AND COMPANY,
420 Library Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

VOL. XXV BOSTON 21 APRIL 1894 No. 8

CONTENTS

LIFE ON THE LAGOONS 115
THE MODERN RÉGIME 115
A YELLOW ASTER 116
JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND 116
FLORENTINE LIFE DURING THE RENAISSANCE . 116
TRAVELS IN A TREE-TOP 117
SOCIAL ENGLAND 117
SANDAY ON INSPIRATION 117
THE EXPERIMENTAL NOVEL 118
THE CONDITION OF WOMEN 119

POETRY:
  Continued Companionship. CHARLOTTE FISKE BATES 120
  Sonnet for Shakespeare's Birthday. REV. H. G. SPAULDING 120
NEW YORK LETTER 120
PHILADELPHIA NOTES 121
FICTION:
  Bayou Folk 121
  'Lisbeth 121
  A Costly Freak 121
  Plays by John Davidson 121
MINOR NOTICES:
  Brave Little Holland 122
  Tales of a Nomad 122
  Oxford and Her Colleges 122
  Random Roamings 122
  Beyond the Rockies 122
  The Memoirs of Anne C. L. Botta . . . 122
  The Mental Growth of Mankind 122
PERIODICALS 123
NEWS AND NOTES 124
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 126

LIFE ON THE LAGOONS.*

IT is some time since we have had a book on Venice — that most tempting theme to European travel writers — and therefore there is a vacancy for Mr. Horatio F. Brown to fill with a second edition, revised, of his Life on the Lagoons. The substantial excellence of the book makes it all the more acceptable. It is far from being a perfunctory or conventional piece of work. It is a study rather than a picture; and if not as poetical in its mood as the subject has moved some writers to be, it is practical in a really instructive way — takes one into the interior of Venetian scenes and life, carries him through and through that unique city of the sea, whose fascinations have no rival, and leaves him with a most distinct and definite impression, historical, topographical, and architectural. The formation of the lagoons is described in a most instructive, scientific chapter, and the story of Venice as a state and city is traced therein from the foundation down to the present time, showing how much the peculiar situation and conditions have had to do with the evolution of Venetian character. There is a chapter of uncommon interest on the building of a gondola, which will answer many questions that the curious visitor has asked over and over. Other chapters of similar interest relate to floods in Venice, to the water processions, a regatta, the famous Ducal Palace, sailmaking, the doves of St. Mark's, the home life of the Venetians, popular beliefs and poetry, and the traghetti, or ferry guilds, as they are called. There are twenty-one woodcuts and a pleasant dedication of the volume to Antonio Salin, a gondolier. Readers who have been to Venice will enjoy this book for its power to revivify delightful memories, and readers who have not been will learn from it far more and far more vividly than they could from a much more pretentious volume.

THE MODERN REGIME.*

THIS final volume of Taine's series on the origins of the France of today was left incomplete. He intended to treat the church, the school, and the family as they were after Napoleon had taken in hand the enormous task of subduing all France to himself and as they have been subsequently shaped by the modern spirit. The first two institutions are the subject of this unfinished volume — the historian's hand having been arrested by death before he could write the section relating to the family or that crowning volume, Le Milieu Moderne, which was to describe the actual state of things from the standpoint of the philosophic historian.

M. Taine has not been fortunate in his American translator. The latter's preface is written in a style half French, half English, and its interminable sentences, imitated from Taine himself, Mr. Durand soon loses control of. The body of the work presents numerous obvious mistakes and frequent awkward phrases, such as "a supposable docile character" (page 36). The defects of Taine's style are not few; its diffuseness, tautology, and lack of variety are only overemphasized by this too literal translator, who seems to have been so steeped in his original that he has blunted the edge of his literary sense, and to have lived so much in France that he has lost a living knowledge of good English.

This volume is a varied and powerful comment on the one great defect in French institutions — the overcentralization which robs the individual of the vigor and fullness of personal life due to freedom and spontaneity. This centralization is here exhibited in its quintessence in Napoleon. He wished to mold everything — state, church, school — in his own image. He would have become the head of the French church, like Henry VIII of England, had he thought it possible for such an arrangement to endure, and everywhere his iron hand beat down individual self-assertion against his despotic rule:

> The military sanction, the arbitrary punishment, physical constraint, the sword ready to strike, is discovered behind all his institutions; involuntarily the eyes detect beforehand the flash of the blade, and the flesh is sensible of the rigid, keen incision. . . . Whatever the vastness of his genius may be, however strong his will, however successful his attacks, his success against nations and churches never is and never can be other than temporary. Great historical and moral forces elude his grasp. In vain does he strike, for their downfall gives them new life and they rise beneath the blow.

So Napoleon endeavored with colossal ability to reduce the church to an engine of police, disbelieving all the while its doctrines and remaining entirely a stranger to any vital religion. But the result has been to strengthen the most extreme claims of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and give it a far wider grasp on France than it had in his time. The priest of today is thoroughly possessed by "the two intense and master ideas which support a soldier abroad among insurgents or barbarians — one being the conviction that he is of a species and essence apart, infinitely superior to the common herd; and the other is the thought that he belongs to his flag, to his chiefs, especially to the commanding general." Monastic orders, too, have renewed their strength in France. The church, as a whole, does an immense service, says M. Taine; "whatever the present envelope may be, the old gospel still serves as the best auxiliary of the social instinct." Nevertheless the church is unpopular with the craftsmen, shopkeepers, and lower employees in the city, and the peasant is very plainly following in their train:

> In France, as things are, inward Christianity, through the double effect of its Catholic and French envelope, has grown warmer in the cloister and cooler in society, and it is in society that its heat is essential.

M. Taine is a severe critic of the French system of education, which he arraigns for its extreme centralization and its lack of practical character, whether in the highest or in the lowest grades of instruction. "The principal and final effect is the growing disparity between education and life." "Solid good sense, strong will, and steady nerves our schools do not furnish" — they actually disqualify the graduate for life as it is; hence the disappointment and disillusion which have found a vent in such abundance during the last fifteen years. M. Taine did not point out the remedies for this bad state of things; he considered it enough for him to diagnose the case. Probably, however, he would have advised long consideration of the institutions of less centralized states, with a view to adopting from them whatever could profit France in her actual condition.

---

* Life on the Lagoons. By Horatio F. Brown. Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

* The Modern Régime. By Hippolyte Adolphe Taine, D.C.L. Translated by John Durand. Vol. II. Henry Holt & Co. $2.50.

A YELLOW ASTER.[*]

THIS novel, by an unknown author who signs herself "Iota," is evidently a derivative from The Heavenly Twins and written under its inspiration, but in many ways it is superior to its model. From a literary point of view the noted book by Madame Sarah Grand was a confessed failure. The abnormal children, with their vagaries and impish mischief, had so little to do with the serious story into which they were violently injected as to justify the report that the book was originally two books written independently of each other and incorporated into one, as an afterthought, when it was found that "Evadne" was too painful and too heavy a story for successful publication. There was something ludicrous, as well as inartistic, in the forcible consolidation of themes so widely different, and a shapeless inconsistency was the result. The impish Angelica and her brother remained to the end absolutely unexplained in point of heredity.

A Yellow Aster, so far as construction goes, leaves nothing to complain of. Gwen and Dane are accounted for by the peculiarities of their father and their mother — a pair of gentle, absorbed scientists, mooning all day and all night over "subjects," devoted to each other, and equally puzzled and terrified by the freaks of their offspring. There is something pathetic as well as comical in the situation, and the pathos rises into the tragic at the final moment, when Mrs. Waring, her long-deferred motherhood revenging itself, dies uncheered, and Gwen finds her heart and learns to love her mother just too late. It is a lesson in the fact that natural law is inexorable and claims its rights, no matter how thwarted and repressed it may have been or for how long. The book is hard to bear in some ways; but it is a story full of originality, power, and humor, and has in it a little pulse of vivid feeling which places it far above the ordinary fiction. We shall await with interest the second work of "Iota," curious to see what such a mind can do in the way of growth and development.

JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND.[†]

JUST as one might be about to write down the name of Dr. J. G. Holland in the list of forgotten American authors, lo! here comes a biography of him — a modest book of 208 pages, beginning with an excellent profile portrait of him and ending with a picture of his massive tomb in the Springfield cemetery, bearing this characteristic inscription from his will, "For the great hereafter I trust in the infinite love as it is expressed to me in the life and death of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." On the whole, after reading this book we give a ue ss that Dr. Holland is not forgotten and will not be. Whether he will be most commonly remembered as editor of the Springfield Republican, or as "Timothy Titcomb," or as the author of Bitter-Sweet and Miss Gilbert's Career, or as founder of Scribner's Monthly, the precursor of the Century, we do not venture now to say, but we must think that the personality of this many-sided man has wrought itself a good way into the shaping of the better qualities of American character.

In several respects Dr. Holland was typical of the truest and best sort of American manhood. He sprang from the soil and belonged to the people. He was self-making and self-made. He was a natural and healthy product of our best institutions, and, turning about when he had come to his full self, he set to work to foster, develop, and strengthen those same institutions and fit them to do even better. His hand was on or in the school, the newspaper, the magazine, the library, and the church — those five great factors of our national character, and he did a great deal to enhance the value and influence of them all. He was strongly musical by taste, a medical man by profession, a journalist by instinct, with something of the mood of a poet, and always the mind and purpose of a preacher of righteousness. A level head, fearlessness, indomitable energy, industrious habits, a sympathy with the people, and a lofty, ethical sense fitted him to be a leader. His love of truth and right carried with it an indignant detestation of all shams and corruptions. We miss his mailed hand in the contests of the present hour.

Mrs. H. M. Plunkett has told the simple, straightforward story of Dr. Holland's career with unaffected admiration but evident honesty and fairness. It is an interesting New England picture. Nowhere but in New England could such a character have been evolved and just such a work as his have been done. Long may New England continue to turn out such material! The volume has several portraits and other illustrations. It will doubtless receive the cordial welcome which it deserves.

FLORENTINE LIFE DURING THE RENAISSANCE.[*]

THIS exhaustive study by Walter Scaife, Ph.D., an extra volume in the Johns Hopkins University Studies in History and Political Science, is of twofold value, enabling us to understand past conditions and to compare them with our own. Dr. Scaife's earlier book on the Geographical History of America so fully testified to the minuteness of his investigations that we were prepared for the patience and exactness of historic research he has again shown, his careful citation of authors, and his excellent index.

Our American cities have much to learn from the growth and decay of an Italian city which fostered the extension of its authority by claiming outside possessions rather than by promoting the life of its organic members. In Florence individuality produced not alone the wondrous art of the city, but a subdivision of rule so petty, a machinery so complicated, that self-government, carried to an extreme through the guild, resulted in Medicean despotism. Democracy banished the rich or noble who chanced, wrongly or rightly, to be obnoxious. Yet Florence testified to the universality of man under a favoring environment. Alberti, Leonardo, Michel Angelo, Dante, Savonarola, were all universal men, who built up the renown of Florence. The very energetic individuality they created became later one cause of the city's downfall. It was preeminently a business city, the closeness of its men in private transactions contrasting oddly with their princely gifts and the city's munificence in public works and charity. Its public spirit was always evident, though its love for art had no active existence until after 1292. Dr. Scaife emphasizes the fact that its advancement in art was not due, as is often stated, to the Medici, who ruled after some of its greatest works had been begun, but to the general appreciation of the beautiful among the people.

Amply recognizing its æsthetic growth, the author is yet chiefly interested in the political status of Florence. His first and last chapters, on government and citizenship, are, to our mind, the most valuable. The divisions of the people, the Grandi, the Popolani, and Popolini, and the guilds, arti maggiore and arti minori, which were the basis of organization, are carefully traced. Each guild was practically a republic, but never was a people more subject to demagogic influences. The lesser guilds soon became the prey of politics, and officers were changed six times a year. This attempt to preserve political equilibrium resulted in innumerable offices, general parliaments, and, finally, in dictatorships and secret accusations. The rich became the rulers, certain families remaining conspicuous for centuries; official corruption prevailed. Next in importance and research to these chapters are those on charity, public works, taxation, and education and intellectual life. To many the latter will be the most interesting, with its accounts of the free university, the public schools, the Platonic Academy (a protest against Aristotelianism), the first printed editions of classical authors, notably Boccaccio's translation of Homer, the collection of manuscripts, and, lastly, the effect of Florentine education upon the rest of Europe. Engraving and the opera were here first known, the poet Poliziano introducing into a play the singing of lyric compositions. The chapter on commerce and industry was published a few years ago as a monograph. The religion, the private life, and the amusements of the Florentines are also carefully treated. They were the first to apply bookkeeping to domestic affairs, and sumptuary laws were often enforced — only two rings, for example, could be worn on one finger.

---

[*] A Yellow Aster. By Iota. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

[†] Josiah Gilbert Holland. By Mrs. H. M. Plunkett. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

[*] Florentine Life during the Renaissance. By Walter Scaife, Ph.D. The Johns Hopkins Press. $1.50.

Florentine intellectual activity accompanied political liberty, which, embodying itself in factious individualism, degenerated into political servitude. This evolution of the city from aristocracy, through rebellion to democracy, through anarchy to plutocracy, and, finally, to the tyranny of the richest, is important for Americans to remember when citizens talk of their rights more than of their duties. Florence fancied that the form of the constitution could make the government effective without regard to the character of the executive or the people. We, too, look to laws to effect what only can be done by personal rectitude. Dr. Scaife has rendered a service to students of politics and economics in writing so interestingly of Florentine conditions, which contained within themselves the cause of the failure of that proud city.

TRAVELS IN A TREE-TOP.*

DR. CHARLES C. ABBOTT is widely known as one of our observant and entertaining naturalists, and not every man who is gifted as an observer is equally gifted in imparting the knowledge he acquires. In this pretty book of wide margins and rough edges Dr. Abbott's point of view is the top of an oak, into which he climbed one cool, midsummer morning to study the movements of a flock of crows, and from which, as it were, he proceeds on a general though rather desultory survey over the animate and inanimate nature around him. The huge black ants which come and go along the limb on which he is seated; the little green herons which flutter among its green branches; the rippling, sedgy brook, which later he follows in its furtive pathway through the meadows; the boys' experience in trapping rabbits and squirrels; carpets of moss and the morn in April; the way of the spotted sandpipers on the pebbly beach; the art of binding a bird's nest, including the tying of knots; the intelligence of spiders; the charms of a midsummer noontide in the shimmering heat; the excitements of a good, old-fashioned freshet; life among the minnows; the plodding of the turtle; the rising of the storm; the falling of November withered leaves — these, and such as these, are the finger posts along the way that Dr. Abbott follows in this dainty book, and it is pleasant walking with him. He is watchful, alert, quick to see and hear, chatty, natural, and instructive. All who read this book will never fail thereafter to find many more things in the outdoor world than they ever knew of before. One or two typographical affectations mark the printing of the book and make its outward form more noticeable than is common. In fact, both inside and out it has individuality.

SOCIAL ENGLAND.*

THE first volume of the new social history of England comes down to the accession of Edward the First, having begun with "England before the English." Mr. Traill supplies forty pages of very readable introduction concerning the general scope of a social history proper, the difficulties of the task, and the relations of its several departments to one another; but he does not give us the information as to the extent of the work, the kind of editorial business done on the contributions to fit them into the general scheme, and such other matters as a self-respecting preface is apt to tell of. There is a good index, and the table of contents gives the titles of the various subdivisions, but the names of the nineteen writers (largely fellows or tutors at Oxford) are given only in a list by themselves. To find who has treated any particular topic the reader must, with the help of the table of contents, turn to page 90, for instance, where he will find the name of F. T. Richards inset before the title "Industry and Trade in Roman Britain." Only the table of contents indicates how many pages Mr. Richards writes on this subject, and only by running through the entire book can one learn whether he has written on other subjects or other periods. Mr. Traill should ease the way more in such matters for those who use his volumes. In a more important matter he has exercised more editorial care. The styles of the nearly a score of writers are, of course, not altogether the same, but there is no such diversity in manner as a careless editor would have permitted. The one aim has plainly been to give a large amount of information in a readable form, and rhetoric, as such, has been strictly excluded.

The method of the book may best be illustrated by taking Chapter III, "From the Conquest to the Charter 1066–1216," and showing how its 160 well-printed pages are allotted among the topics named on the title-page. The Norman Conquest is described in five pages, and sixteen are given to the reigns of the kings down to 1216, as some outline of the general political history is necessary. Norman warfare on land and sea is expounded in fifteen pages; Domesday Book, including the land question, gets eight; the church, fourteen; English law and trial by jury, twenty-five; architecture and art, thirteen; learning and science, twelve; literature and language, the same; trade and industry, eleven; public health, four; social life and manners, seventeen; and finally there are two valuable pages of authorities in fine print. The writers are Messrs. A. L. Smith, F. York Powell, W. H. Hutton, F. W. Maitland, C. Oman, W. Laird Clowes, R. Hughes, R. L. Poole, H. Frank Heath, and C. Creighton — nearly all of whom have published volumes on this period, while all are evidently special students.

The general impression one gets from testing the work here and there is that it has been very well done, and that it will be a useful supplement to the ordinary histories of England. However much space these now give to the social development, Mr. Traill's volumes promise to excel them in fullness and weight. Special students of any subject will of course find the treatment here given it comparatively meager; but the public in general will be content with such a clear sketch of the old English village life, for instance, as Mr. York Powell gives, or Mr. Heath's couple of pages on epic poetry in the same period. It is almost needless to say that for the great majority of people who are reading the most interesting solid reading — that which relates to the social life of man, its phenomena, its laws, and its progress — Mr. Traill's volumes will have a great deal of profit and instruction. The historical sense is the one most needing to be developed to secure a rational judgment on social questions, and a series like Social England should do good service in this direction.

SANDAY ON INSPIRATION.*

THE Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis and fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, is the leading English specialist on the subject of Biblical inspiration. His two previous works on the same general subject have been widely read, and this series of lectures has already reached a second edition. There is a clearness and sanity of judgment, a sobriety and self-control, in this work which are in agreeable contrast with the extravagances of certain Dutch and Swiss critics, to say nothing of those dogmatic Germans, who at once identify their decisions with "science." Professor Sanday calls attention to the fact, which is worth noting, that while the making of theology on the Continent is largely a matter of professionals, in England and America, on the contrary, the theologian and the critic are brought into direct contact with a class of highly trained and intelligent laity who are engaged in the teaching of secular literature and science. Certainly the method by which the English mind approaches and deals with this and similar subjects commends itself particularly to American readers. It is pleasant to find a scholar who sets forth his own position as "tentative and provisional" rather than final. Professor Sanday, while a master of patristic literature, is also at home among the writers of the modern critical school; but he is also one of that class, unfortunately too rare, who make themselves equally familiar with both conservative and radical opinions. He does not think that the great revolution, apparently expected in some quarters, from the Tel-el Amarna tablets or otherwise is probable. His impression is that the criticism of the near future is likely to be more conservative in its tendency than it has been, or at least to do fuller justice to the positive data than it has done.

---

* Travels in a Tree-Top. By Charles C. Abbott. J. B. Lippincott Co $1.25.

* Social England. A Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Industry, Commerce, Science, Literature, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By Various Writers. Edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. Vol. I. Second edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50.

* Inspiration: the Bampton Lectures for 1893. By Prof. W. Sanday. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00.

After succinctly setting forth the estimate of the New Testament by the early Church and of the Old Testament in the first Christian century, the author then shows the genesis and development of the Old Testament as a collection of sacred books. He subjects the New Testament to the same analysis. He casts into the crucible of criticism the various theories and opinions held during the history of the Christian Church. In his final lecture he compares the traditional and the inductive theories, showing how the former has, with most intelligent and educated persons, passed into the latter. The measure of inspiration is found not only in the consciousness of the person inspired; we must add to this the proofs of a higher Providence at work in the Bible. Certainly the impulse which led to the committal of prophetic utterances to writing and the way in which the occasional letters of the apostles supply bases for Christian theology are quite different from the general phenomena visible in the course of Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, or Roman civilization. The history of these civilizations shows that the interior forces moving them ran along other lines of development than those in Israel. Theories either of history or of civilization must take these facts into account. The course of Messianic prophecy is also another proof of a Providence at work in the Bible.

Some of the most interesting pages of the volume are those in which Professor Sanday shows how certain books or parts of books are capable of application by analogy in senses which did not originally belong to them. He justifies the former allegorical use of the Song of Songs, for example, though he rejoices with most scholarly minds to see in the natural interpretation of Canticles, as a poem of pure human love, a sufficient excuse for its being and for its place in the canon. We do not agree with him that this book, like the Book of Esther, got in accidentally; both books, not only containing the name of God (Jehovah's name being found in four acrostics in Esther), but also teaching respectively that pure love is of God and patriotism a duty, take their place rightfully in a library which teaches the duty of man to man and man to God.

Very wisely, we think, the learned author refrains from hard and fast definition. In treating the question how far Christ sanctioned either the traditional or the critical view, he gives abundant data in two classes of passages, but is less anxious to coerce Jesus into putting his imprimatur upon either view than the average intemperate reformer or ultra-orthodox of today is prone to be. In a word, while this book is on every page suggestive and helpful to the seeker after light on this burning question, it will give slight comfort to extremists who want to have the question still in the crucible set into a cold ingot. Professor Sanday's conclusions will probably agree with the best thought of our time. "There is a chain of natural connection between the operation of the Eternal Word, the character of the Incarnate Word, and the constitution of the Written Word." The appendixes of data for the chronological history of the canon and the index make the work one of special value to students.

THE EXPERIMENTAL NOVEL.[*]

BESIDE the title essay this volume contains four papers of considerable length — "A Letter to the Young People of France," "Naturalism on the Stage," "The Influence of Money in Literature," and "The Influence of the Republic in Literature" — and some twenty minor discussions grouped under the two headings of "The Novel" and "Criticism." The main theme of all the essays, longer or shorter, is that scientific art of novel writing which M. Zola conceives himself to have been practicing for a number of years. He means to prove that "if the experimental method leads to the knowledge of physical life, it should also lead to the knowledge of the passionate and intellectual life." He makes great use of Claude Bernard's Introduction to the Study of Experimental Medicine, which states and illustrates the method of scientific procedure in ascertaining the laws of physiology and the art of hygiene based upon them.

To the logical value and the practical fertility of this method in all matters where the investigator is able to supplement observation of nature by experiments in the laboratory no reasonable objection can be made. It is M. Zola's contention, however, that "if the experimental method can be carried from chemistry and physics into physiology and medicine, it can also be carried from physiology into the naturalistic novel." But what is this experimental, naturalistic novel, granting that the method is applicable?

> This is what constitutes the experimental novel — to possess a knowledge of the mechanism of the phenomena inherent in man; to show the machinery of his intellectual and sensory manifestations under the influences of heredity and environment such as physiology shall give them to us; and then finally to exhibit man living in social conditions produced by himself, which he modifies daily, and in the heart of which he himself experiences a continual transformation.

The larger portion of this definition would apply well enough to the novelists of any time or country who have tried to show life as it is and have held fast to observation as a basis. But the experiment which M. Zola supposes he can introduce into fiction writing as a scientific process is wholly illusory. The physiologist in his laboratory after putting two organic substances in contact, under certain conditions, watches for the result. His observation of this leads the man of scientific genius to the formation of hypotheses, which he verifies by further experiments. It is an extremely illogical confusion to suppose that the novelist, putting his characters, men or women, into certain circumstances in his story and then letting them develop, so to speak, their several natures, is following the same process. He has nothing material before him; his personages are imaginary, and they go through, on paper, experiences which his imagination decrees for them, however bent upon copying reality the writer may be. The scientific procedure is to test the development and the results of the novel by comparison with real life, keenly observed. Observation, not experiment, is the weapon of the realistic novelist. But M. Zola is so far from using terms rightly that he has to reject the plain words of his great authority, Claude Bernard, who very justly declares, with a clear perception of the differences in things:

> In art and letters personality dominates everything. There one is dealing with a spontaneous creation of the mind that has nothing in common with the verification of natural phenomena, in which our minds can create nothing.

M. Zola is very frank to quote these words, but he has no success in attempting to overthrow them. M. Bernard recognized the limits of experiment; M. Zola apparently does not know what a real experiment is. His view of science is purely literary, and verbal fallacies completely confuse him. The novelist may "lean upon physiology," like Dr. Holmes, to a great extent, but he is not in so doing experimenting and reaching results which are of value apart from observation of real life.

---

[*] The Experimental Novel and Other Essays. By Émile Zola. Translated by Belle M. Sherman. Cassell Publishing Co. $2.00.

With other less central positions taken by M. Zola, such as his criticism of Renan, his belief that the author occupies a more independent and salutary position than formerly, and that the right attitude of the republic toward literature is to let it alone, we find ourselves in cordial agreement. There is a straightforwardness and a desire for substance rather than style in M. Zola's essays which cannot fail to commend them to the Anglo-Saxon mind.

THE CONDITION OF WOMEN.*

M. OSTROGORSKI'S small volume of some two hundred pages in the Social Science series, published in London by Sonnenschein, obtained the first prize offered by the Paris Faculté de Droit in an international competition. It amply deserves the honor, for it is a dispassionate and comprehensive statement of the standing of woman before the law in all countries. The matter, presented in very readable style, is grouped under the headings of individual and collective sovereignty, local self-government, public offices and employments, individual public rights and quasi-public rights. Like the great majority of sound thinkers at present the author rejects the whole notion of "natural rights" as destitute of foundation, and his chief point is his clear discrimination between personal and political rights. The former include "individual liberty in all its manifestations." "Participation in the government of the country is wholly different. Presupposing conditions of capacity, and not being indispensable to the development of the personality, it is not an absolute but rather a relative right." Toward the fullest guarantee of the personal rights of women M. Ostrogorski finds that the legislation of the civilized world is fast tending; but, except in a few comparatively minor cases, the legislator does not look with favor on the bestowal of political rights and duties upon woman. The author confines himself to a statement of undisputed facts and obvious tendencies, and his book has throughout a very judicial quality.

Miss Gamble's sub-title indicates at once the polemic tone of her scholarly volume, the three parts of which are occupied with the theory of evolution, prehistoric society, and early historic society. Sensible people find little reason or profit in discussing the inferiority of either sex to the other, but Miss Gamble is evidently afflicted with an abnormal development of "sex-piety," and Woman appears here as a tender, wise, sympathetic, and spiritual being under all circumstances — all her faults being due to Man's evil influence. She has been the developer of all that is good in man, who otherwise would still be a mere bundle of muscles and appetites. His future is not at all promising:

> Add to defective vision his lack of physical endurance, his liability to various organic affections caused by structural defects, and too abnormal appetites which are constantly demanding for their gratification those things which are injurious to his mental and physical constitution, and we are enabled to judge, to some extent, of the obstacles against which, in the struggle for existence, the future man will find himself obliged to contend.

His lot, however, can scarcely be more painful than Darwin's today; the flagellation which the latter receives from Miss Gamble is merciless. "Mr. Darwin would have us believe," "Mr. Darwin seems to have overlooked the importance," and "Mr. Darwin's capacity for collecting and formulating facts seems not to have materially aided him," are mild phrases which lead up to the crushing judgment that "history, philosophy, and even science, judging from Mr. Darwin's methods, have scarcely arisen above the murky atmosphere of a sensuous age." Fortunate, then, the generation which possesses a Miss Gamble capable of setting things right in part, by correcting Darwin in natural science, and Messrs. McLennan, Bachofen, and Lubbock in the history of institutions! She has been an industrious student in both fields, her matter is well arranged and her positions are clearly put; but her whole volume is a striking example of a kind of reasoning not monopolized by either sex — the imposition of preconceived conclusions upon long-suffering facts.

---

[*] The Rights of Women. A Comparative Study in History and Legislation. By M. Ostrogorski. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

The Evolution of Woman. An Inquiry into the Dogma of Her Inferiority to Man. By Eliza Burt Gamble. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

— Prof. William Robertson Smith, one of the profoundest theologians and most learned Orientalists of his time and librarian of the University of Cambridge, died March 31. He was born at Keig, Aberdeenshire, November 8, 1846. He received his education at the Aberdeen University, the New College, Edinburgh, and at the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen. The removal of Professor Smith from the chair of Hebrew in the Free Church College, Aberdeen, by an extraordinary act of the General Assembly in 1881, is still fresh in the public mind, so widely and vehemently were his views on the inspiration of the Old Testament discussed at the time. The controversy in some respects resembled that which resulted in the trial of Professor Briggs for heresy in this country. The offense of Professor Smith which brought down on him the condemnation of his church was the publication of an article in the Encyclopædia Britannica, so ripe in its scholarship that it led to his association with Professor Baynes in editing the ninth edition of that work. While engaged in this task and while filling the Lord Almoner chair of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, to which he was appointed in 1883, Professor Smith wrote much and with exact learning on Biblical and Oriental subjects. Among his works are The Old Testament in the Jewish Church, The Prophets of Israel, Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia, and Lectures on the Religion of the Semites. In 1889 he was appointed to the Sir Thomas Adams professorship of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. — New York Evening Post.

— Mr. George Du Maurier has been explaining to a Toynbee Hall audience that when the mantle fell from John Leech's shoulders it was found sufficient to clothe L. Sandman, Harry Furniss, Georgiana Bowers, and himself. Mr. Du Maurier's department was the drawing-rooms and nurseries of Belgravia. He was to be "the romantic tenor of Mr. Punch's Opera Bouffe Company, while Keene was to sing the comic songs." The reason why Mr. Du Maurier took the drawing-room rather than the lower walks of London life was the weakness of his eyesight, which prevented him from bearing ordinary daylight without tinted glasses. It is sad to think that so clever an artist is deprived completely of the sight of one eye. He was originally intended for a chemist, but Dr. Williamson of University College told him he would make a shockingly bad one. He therefore returned to Paris, of which he is a native, and began seriously to study art there.

— Hon. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, K.C.S.I., D.C.L., died in Ipswich, England, March 11. He was born in London, March 3, 1829. His father was Rt. Hon. Sir James Stephen. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduated B.A., and was called to the bar in 1854. He became recorder of Newark-on-Trent (1858–68) and acted as counsel in the celebrated trial for heresy of Rev. Roland Williams, the charges having been preferred by the Bishop of Salisbury. In December, 1869, he received the appointment of legal member of the council of the governor general of India and held the position until 1872, when he returned to England. The late Sir James published a General View of the Criminal Law of England (1863), Essays by a Barrister (1862), Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity (1873), A Digest of the Law of Evidence, and A Digest of the Criminal Law (1877). In 1879 he was appointed to a judgeship of the high court of justice. Since then he has published a History of the Criminal Law of England, in three volumes, several other legal works, and two series of Horæ Sabbaticæ, reprints of articles in the Saturday Review, to which he was a frequent contributor.

— Surprising as it may seem none of Mr. Ruskin's works have ever been translated into any foreign language. In 1885 The Shrine of the Slaves (one of the supplements to St. Mark's Rest) was done into Italian and put into type but not published. We have never heard of any complete book having even been attempted, although we see from Mr. Ruskin's letters to M. Ernest Chesneau (of which Mr. Thomas J. Wise is printing a few copies for private circulation) that M. Chesneau at one time proposed to translate some of Mr. Ruskin's works into French, adding introductions of his own. — The Bookman.

— Lord Houghton has accepted the presidency of the Brontë Society, formed for the purpose of establishing a museum of Brontë relics at Haworth.

— That very able and independent journal, the Springfield Republican, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on March 27.

The Literary World

BOSTON 21 APRIL 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Continued Companionship.

Referring to the memorials of Longfellow and Lowell in Westminster Abbey.

I.

Now dear old England's laureled Abbey keeps
These poets still companioned in their fate.
The fame of both the ocean overleaps,
And Minster honors on the comrades wait.

II.

New England's Cam flowed round their life of song;
Their homes and hearts were friends upon its shore.
From grave to grave the pathway is not long,
And soul lives near to soul forevermore.

Charlotte Fiske Bates.

Sonnet for Shakespeare's Birthday.

Is it so long since Shakespeare walked the earth?
Our world today seems but the stage, new made,
On which his heroes strive, his clowns their mirth
Display, and all its changing masquerade
The mimic figures of his plays recalls.
Yet look again! Verona's hapless pair
Were scheming lovers when that city's walls
By Roman hands were built. Women as fair
And men as brave as people Shakespeare's page
Assyrian mothers nursed. The moody Dane
We see 'neath Grecian masks, and Lear's rage
In Hebrew bosoms burned as fierce, as vain.
The men and women of great Shakespeare's song
Not to one age but to all time belong.

— Rev. H. G. Spaulding in the Christian Register.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Mr. W. D. Howells has been much interviewed of late. A really notable talk with him appeared in the Outlook recently. In it he expressed, among other things, these beliefs: a young author should not attempt to make his living solely by literature; he should write regularly, for it is easy to get out of the habit of writing and hard to get into it again; as for the danger of writing himself out, there is really none to be feared; and written language should approximate speech — in other words, should be simple and direct. Perhaps the most iconoclastic statement in the interview was that the time was coming when it would be proper to write, not only in conversation but out of it, "doesn't" for "does not," and "can't" for "cannot," and similar elisions, which give a naturalness and smoothness to literary style. Mr. Howells said, furthermore, that when he wrote the Editor's Study in Harper's Magazine he thought of making these elisions there; but a friend persuaded him not to do so, representing that he was then urging so many literary reforms that if he undertook to establish this one he would be regarded as a crank. The interview is full of sound advice to writers and they ought all to read it.

The page article devoted to Mr. Howells in the Press of last Sunday contains some interesting details about his work furnished by the author himself. In the three leaves which he writes each day he can do from five hundred to one thousand words of fiction, or more of other kinds of writing. "I do not write out a synopsis," he said; "I arrange what might be called the end-moves of a story, and it generally comes out at the end about as I have at the beginning thought it would. Sometimes when I begin a story, the last word, the last look, is plain to me. I carry my work in my mind from day to day without difficulty, and each day I try to stop at an interesting point so that my attention will be caught at once the next morning." In answer to the question whether he thought there would ever be a distinctively American school of literature Mr. Howells said: "Yes, I think so, in a measure. As yet we are overborne by European traditions and criticism. The middle class — we have divided ourselves into classes despite our false claims to the contrary — likes American books; but the highest class — measuring height by fashion — wants a book with an English reputation. We have been false to the idea of equality, the only thing that could have made us a really great people, and that will have its depressing effect upon our literature. Anyway, we have come too late to be peculiar; we have come when the world is looking for the human idea in literature. But in those things which we have undertaken with a will we have always become important, and this is why I say I think we shall develop a literature that shall be in a measure national. Some day I hope we shall have the manhood to put ourselves frankly into literature as we have into politics. We certainly have a distinctly national school of politics. Mary E. Wilkins, Mark Twain, Sarah Orne Jewett, Hamlin Garland, and George W. Cable are probably the most strikingly American writers we have today. There is another whom I have great hopes of. His name is Stephen Crane and he is very young, but he promises splendid things." Stephen Crane is the new writer to whose work I referred in the last number of the Literary World. The Arena is to publish a series of short stories by him, beginning in the May number.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has been in New York for the past few days. She came to read before the meetings of "Uncut Leaves" in Brooklyn and New York. I heard her give a selection last Saturday evening from an unpublished novel, which promises to be a strong piece of work. Her sweet English voice, her clear enunciation, and her fine sense of literary values make her a most attractive reader. She announced that the story had been begun a dozen years ago and that she was afraid she might never finish it. "I'm sorry about this, too," she said, "for it is the only story I've ever undertaken with a mystery in it and I am curious to know how it turns out." Mrs. Burnett, by the way, makes it a rule to donate all the money she receives from her readings to charity. During the present winter she gave a reading at her home in Washington for one of the local charities, and on her return there, shortly, she will give another in a public hall. Last Sunday she left New York for Boston and Cambridge, where she was to make a brief visit. Her son, Vivian Burnett, by the way, is to enter Harvard next fall; this is not the one who was the original of Little Lord Fauntleroy. Next month Mrs. Burnett will sail for her annual visit in England.

Mr. Gilbert Parker has returned from his travels in Mexico, Cuba, and the South, and on Saturday of this week he is to sail for London, where he always spends half the year. He made his first appearance as a reader here at the last meeting of "Uncut Leaves" with great success. His selection consisted of an unpublished story of early Canada, full of romantic interest and dramatic power, and he gave it with a fine spirit and skill that roused the audience to enthusiasm.

Prof. Robert L. Garner, whose articles on the speech of monkeys in the magazines attracted so much attention three years ago, has kept much in seclusion since his return to this country from Africa last month. He has not said much to the interviewers about his experiences in Africa, where he went to study the monkeys on their own ground. I suspect that he is keeping the best results of his investigations for lectures and new articles. On his way home he stopped for a time in London, and created considerable discussion there by his talks on his favorite topic.

There is a magazine of this city, not of the best quality, to be sure, and not with the best writers on its list, but still read by an intelligent class of readers, which until about three years ago was run at a dead loss. Under careful and economical management, however, it has been made to pay, and it now yields its owner an income of $35,000 a year. This instance is so exceptional that it is worth noting. It illustrates the fact that when literature pays it pays well; but when it doesn't pay, how it does absorb money!

Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton has been making a brief visit here. A large reception was given in her honor, and it was attended by several well-known writers and editors. Mrs. Moulton sails the last of next month for Europe. After a few weeks in London, where she is as well known as in Boston or New York, she will travel on the continent.

I asked Mr. E. C. Stedman the other day when he expected that the edition of Poe on which he and Prof. George E. Woodberry are now engaged would be ready for publication. "I hope by the fall," he replied; "it depends upon Professor Woodberry. He has a great deal of other work on hand, and this may delay the completion of his work for our edition. But I have adopted the plan of having the text set up in advance of the critical matter, and this will facilitate things for us." The edition is to consist of ten volumes; the text will be thoroughly revised by Mr. Stedman, who will also contribute introductions to Poe's poetry, fiction, and essays. Professor Woodberry will write the biography, and he will also furnish the various texts of the poems which appeared in the first editions of Poe's works.

The Appletons have just created a surprise by announcing that they are to bring out a book this week by John Jacob Astor. In his first literary effort Mr. Astor has chosen, as Mr. Bellamy did in Looking Backward, to dive into the future. This will give him a chance to exploit his scientific theories; he has long been known to be interested in science. Until now, however, he has not been suspected of cherishing literary ambitions. Mr. Astor is about twenty-eight years of age, and for several years he has been a conspicuous figure in New York. He studied for two years at Harvard.

Mr. Winfield S. Moody has been made editor of the Book-Buyer. Mr. Moody was for several years a member of the staff of the Evening Sun, and his long experience in newspaper work has given him an admirable equipment for his present position. Mr. Moody's wife is also well known for her newspaper and literary work under her maiden name, Miss Helen Watterson. For a long period Miss Watterson conducted a department in the Evening Sun that attracted wide and favorable comment, and her magazine article on the woman question, published a few months ago, was one of the best contributions to this subject in recent years.

JOHN D. BARRY.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

THE Browning Club has quite shaken off its allegiance to the bard of Sordello's story, and has been pursuing its independent way, but under the old banner, so to speak, into an investigation of many things which would have been accounted hopelessly trivial by the enthusiasts of old. The benefit to the community has, however, been great. The attendance is five or six hundred strong, and the membership is nearly eight hundred. The class which is drawn to the entertaining meetings is far from being that characterized by Matthew Arnold as "short-haired women and long-haired men." Some of the most gifted and engaging scholars, students, and dilettants of the city are always present, and the "study meetings" result in semi-public conversations, which are at once improving and diverting.

The contagion has been widely propagated and is thus "taking," because the old worship of the unknowable has passed into intelligent discussion of reasonable and practical topics in literature. The programme of the present season is devoted to contrasts between kindred English and American authors, and the season will close on May 7 with the production of "L'Intruse," Maeterlinck's symbolist play, by members of the club, who promise an admirable rendition, well presented and thoroughly understood. The election for officers to serve during 1894–1895 has just been held, and resulted in a reëlection of Miss Helen Bell, under whose apt and tactful administration the extraordinary growth in membership has taken place.

Speaking of clubs reminds me of another useful one among the many now flourishing — as in a Milesian riot — about our unprotected heads. This is the Bibliographical, a circle of college professors and specialists who meet monthly at the house of Dr. Horace Jayne, dean of the university, for the discussion of some topic put forward by one who is a specialist in it. By this means the tendency so common among men of one idea of also becoming one-sided is checked, and at the same time all may learn of the latest discovery or theory in a branch known scientifically by a single member only. At the last meeting, for instance, Dr. Abbott, a well-known biologist, presented the latest information upon the germ theory of disease; Dr. McFarland, the professor of botany at the university, spoke of those plants and animals which have been found to grow in union as a means of mutual protection and of nutrition; and Dr. Morris Jastrow, Jr., gave a description of the experiences of those scholars who have succeeded in penetrating into Mecca. Each speaker was thus on his own ground, and the facts were rendered interesting by the authority with which they were uttered; but the aim of the club is fulfilled by the discussion in which layman and specialist alike indulges.

Mr. Thomas Hovenden, who painted the most popular picture at the World's Fair — "Breaking the Home Ties" — has migrated with his family for a temporary residence in Washington, where he is just now holding an exhibition of his recent work. Mrs. Hovenden, who has lately resumed the brush after some years of withdrawal from the exhibitions, has sold her charming portrait of a horse, called Amy Robsart, in the Society of American Artists' Exhibition. It was previously shown in a place of honor at the Academy of the Fine Arts here. Mr. Robert W. Vonnoh, once of Boston, now, we are gratified to say, a Philadelphian, has just closed a most successful exhibition of his work in Chicago. He sold fifteen pictures and received a half dozen commissions for portraits. In this day of discarded luxuries such success is delightful to record, and, what is better, Mr. Vonnoh richly deserves it. The Academy of the Fine Arts' schools are now fuller than at any time since a fee has been charged — a period which runs far back into the eighty-six years of the academy's life. The replica of Mr. Daniel French's "Angel of Death and the Sculptor" has just been cast from the original plaster and will soon be placed in the galleries.

Mr. Henry Pancoast, whose Representative English Literature, issued by Henry Holt, has been adopted by several colleges and many schools, is preparing a revised and condensed edition. Prof. Felix E. Schelling's selection, with scholarly notes, of Elizabethan songs will soon be published by Ginn & Co. The article by Mrs. Florence Earle Coates on "Matthew Arnold," in the April Century, is written from an intimate knowledge born of close friendship with Mr. Arnold and his family. Mr. Arnold was always the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Coates when in Philadelphia, and they possess many mementos of his visits. The final letter quoted in the article without the recipient's name was the last received by Mrs. Coates before Mr. Arnold's death.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

FICTION.

Bayou Folk.

Some of these stories, by Kate Chopin, are little more than croquis — just a brief incident of idea sketched in with a few rapid strokes and left to the imagination of the reader to be materialized, if we may so speak. Others are longer and more finished, but all are full of that subtle, alien quality which holds the Creole apart from the Anglo-Saxon — a quality we do not quite understand and can never reproduce, but which is full of fascination to us from the very fact that it is so unlike ourselves.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

'Lisbeth.

Here Leslie Keith has depicted with leisurely strokes a young woman of strong, quiet character whose filial love and sense of duty support her through years of self-sacrificing anxiety. If we inquire how one so resolute and reticent could be the daughter of the versatile, irresponsible Niel and the simple-hearted Margaret, we must find an answer in the mother's Scotch-Puritan ancestry. The aunts, with their various limitations, are drawn carefully and not without humor. Two love stories are unfolded, or, more truly, three, since Jim Carstairs is loved by two women. In Carstairs and Green the strength and the weakness of the literary temperament are sympathetically indicated. The story is well written and will interest readers who, liking honest work, are not in too great a hurry to dwell upon the details of every-day life. Why, out of all the inhabitants of this world, Standring 'Lisbeth's lover, and the unknown Maylin for whom she is searching should prove to be identical is one of the questions which reviewers may give up asking, since it is always in order for the novelist to reply, "That coincidence is just what suggested my story!" — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

A Costly Freak.

There is a certain improbability in the method by which Maxwell Gray, the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland, makes her hero, the Rev. William Ray, curate of a poor living in country England, appear guilty of the theft of two bank notes worth ten and twenty pounds respectively. A cat, a dog, a washerwoman, a maid of all work, and a great deal of unpractical, dreamy faith are required for the manufacture of such an amount of probability as is necessary to place Mr. Ray under the shadow of suspicion for just long enough to warrant the tale of his adventures. All ends happily, we are glad to say — no one is tried, no one hanged, and there are no public confessions required, though various private explanations and apologies are very properly in order. The freak which proved so costly to all concerned is that of Buffie the pug, who has been trained to the rather unfortunate accomplishment of picking pockets — a trick looked upon as amusing and delightful till it nearly shipwrecks the fortunes of the family to which he belongs.— D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Plays by John Davidson.

These five plays appear in a fine edition, bearing on the title-page the names of a Chicago as well as a London firm of publishers. The plays have all been printed before at various dates since 1877, but not in such a way as to render them well known, especially on this side of the Atlantic. The first of the five is written partly in blank verse and partly in rhymed couplets, and it is based on Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd." Three pairs of lovers are brought to happiness at the time of the May festivities, when all the world may trip it on the green, while Titania, Oberon, and Puck, with their attendant fairies, share in the revels and help on the fortunate outcome. Chief among the plays is "Bruce," a historical drama, ending with the battle of Bannockburn. The description of the battle is spirited and lofty. The other plays are entitled respectively "A Romantic Farce," "Smith, a Tragic Farce," "Scaramouch, a Pantomime." There is a frontispiece and cover design by Aubrey Beardsley.— London: Elkin Mathews & John Lane; Chicago: Stone & Kimball. $2.00.

The Swing of the Pendulum is a commonplace, spun-out love story of a party traveling in Norway. The descriptions of the country are of interest, but the love portion is not of consequence enough for such elaborate detail. The lovers themselves are not attractive persons, and there is altogether too much conversation and explanation. The work is inferior to what we have been accustomed to expect from the author, Miss Frances Mary Peard. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

A Princess of the Stage, rather poorly translated from the German of Nataly von Eschstruth, is a specimen of the poorest class of modern German fiction. The sensationalism is dull, the conversation banal and impossible, the sentiment tawdry, and the incidents improbable. It does not repay perusal. — Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Brave Little Holland.

This animated and picturesque account of the history of Holland and her influence on England and the New World is published in the Riverside Library for young folks and also in neat library style, with a gilt top. Rev. Dr. W. E. Griffis has become one of the leading authorities among us on Dutch matters; his knowledge of the language and his travels and researches in Holland make him, indeed, to our mind a much more trustworthy guide than the late Mr. Douglas Campbell. In a very readable and graphic manner he sets forth the characteristics of the wonderful little country below the sea-level; the chief events in its stirring and heroic annals; the great achievements of the Dutch in commerce, industry, art, literature, and, most of all, in the organization of a free church and a free state. Dr. Griffis has done no small service in emphasizing the influence of Holland and the high importance of what she taught America; but he seems to go too far in saying that "in our government and ideas the American people are more Dutch than English" (page 209). However this may be, there can be no question that Dr. Griffis has written a little book of extreme interest and attractiveness, which we trust he will be able to follow up with the more elaborate work half promised in the preface. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Tales of a Nomad.

Mr. Charles Montague, an English sportsman of renown, has put into print the stories of his adventures. All are of a kind relished and appreciated by hunters. His reminiscences are told with the simplicity, candor, and enthusiasm of a man who is relating them offhand without any effort at fine description, but is only eager to let his hearers know how it was all done. There is no preamble, comment, or explanation, or waste of words. He had extraordinary experiences, and he tells them. The scenes of his exploits were South Africa and Borneo. He hunted big game — the dangerous African buffalo and the elephant. It was lively work he had in the "fly country," stalking the five buffaloes with hardly any cover, obliged to crawl on his hands and knees, and dodge an infuriated animal behind a bush. The stories are highly exciting, of reckless daring, and of escapes as marvelous as the results of the hunt. Apart from the sporting matter there is much that is interesting relating to South Africa and to a condition of things which has long since passed away. Mr. Montague was in the midst of the contest with the boers, and, being a man of intelligence and a keen observer, his opinions and reflections on the situation are worth putting on record.— Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.

Oxford and Her Colleges.

The preparation of this charming monograph must have been a labor of love to its distinguished author, Mr. Goldwin Smith. Nothing is lacking to make complete the story of the ancient university, its buildings, founders, various institutions and ordinances, modes of government, customs, traditions, and associations. He has given it a picturesque setting and invested it with a poetic charm. The subject is fascinating and the style is luminous. It is an attractive little book in every respect, with a fine picture of Radclyffe Library for a frontispiece and equipped with an index.— Macmillan & Co. 75c.

Random Roamings.

The "roamings" of the Rev. Augustus Jessopp, rector of Scarning, are very random indeed, for, beginning with two semi-archæological papers on the castles of Sussex and Castle Acres they go on to disquisitions on magic and buried treasure, to the biography of the Rev. John de Gurnay, rector of Harplay in the county of Norfolk in 1306, to a scheme for clergy pension, and a disquisition on village alehouses. These themes are not especially germane to the American reader, but are treated in a kindly, leisurely, old-fashioned way which is not devoid of interest. The book is handicapped by the fact that it is so badly bound as to be difficult to handle or to read.— G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

Beyond the Rockies.

To leave out verbs, another book this about the California trip; the author, Mr. Charles A. Stoddard, editor of the New York Observer; the outward route, the Sunset via New Orleans, San Antonio, and El Paso; the ways and means, those of a famous Raymond excursion; the time, March and April, 1893; the return, by the Denver & Rio Grande, through Salt Lake City and Denver; side visits to an Indian school at Tucson, Coronado Beach, Pasadena, and Santa Barbara, the Yosemite, and Monterey. Four chapters for lovely Santa Barbara, the pearl of Southern California, two for the Yosemite, one for the Big Trees, one for San Francisco. Woodcuts, twenty-three, from photographs — all good, some fine. Style, simple and direct, with no effort after fine writing. Narrative and description about evenly balanced. Temper good, intelligence of a high order. Company agreeable, judgment well-balanced and discriminating, general effect to make the reader glad "he has been there" or to want to go, but contented with the East if his home is here. The more such books the better for California, whether we go thither for business or for pleasure. Altogether, an attractive and readable book. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The Memoirs of Anne C. L. Botta.

Personality has no tenure of immortality. To reproduce the charm of manner and look, the sympathy and grace and attraction of voice and gesture which have made a woman the ornament and delight of her circle, is a task often essayed but seldom successful. The subject of this memoir was one of the women who was more than she did. Her verse, careful, graceful, full of thought and feeling; her books, abounding in research and labor; her sculpture, which, though it never satisfied herself, was yet full of talent and possibility, are far below the force and power of her personality. She possessed the rarest of social gifts. In her house people showed at their best; in her company ease and gayety seemed to them of their own volition. This was due in part to her extraordinary tact and quality, but largely to her still more extraordinary kindliness. She had a genuine love of people, not their bodies only and not their souls only, but themselves, entirely and altogether, and the wintriest lives seemed to bloom and quicken under the sunshine of her sympathy. It is hard to give the explanation of a life like hers — so full of successes, of praises fairly won, of love and honor compelled by simple means out of a hard, self-incrusted world — but there it is. She did it and she was it. And the record of her busy past told in her own letters and those of her friends only adds to the puzzle of those who did not know her, while making plainer still the cause of the old, unforgotten charm to those who did. The volume is not cast in regular biographical form, but is largely composed of numerous contributions from friends. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons.

The Mental Growth of Mankind.

Mr. John S. Hittell of San Francisco has compiled what the Germans call a Cultur-Geschichte, or culture-history, in four volumes, which aggregate some fifteen hundred pages. The volumes are confined to "ancient times," and their successive subjects are savagism, heathen barbarism, Judea and Greece, and Rome and early Christianity. The matter is divided into numbered sections, treating, for instance, man's antiquity, fire, tattoo, and sorcerers, in the first volume. The style is hardly above that of the ordinary encyclopedia in its plain narration of facts. Each volume contains at the end some forty pages of notes, giving full references and quotations from the authorities named later. The pages of the body of the work are unbroken by footnotes, reference being made by figures inserted in the text. Mr. Hittell has covered a very wide field with great industry, and his presentation is generally well proportioned. He does not often express judgments of his own, being content to follow the usual authorities, with somewhat of a bias toward Mr. Herbert Spencer as the chief master. His occasional independent dicta do not seem to us very weighty, but the four volumes will make a convenient book of reference in culture-history from the scientific, naturalistic standpoint. — Henry Holt & Co. $6.00.

Mrs. Laura E. Richards, in the preface to Glimpses of the French Court, warns the earnest student that here is only "historic trifle, flummery à la Louis Quatorze." But the bits of history here preserved retain much of their original flavor. A sketch of Corneille's life comes to the conclusion that most of his "heroes and heroines are abstract monstrosities. . . . If he had had the courage to pursue the path which he opened so brilliantly in the Cid, who knows what he might have accomplished? Then France might have had an original dramatic literature in tragedy, as by grace of Molière she has in comedy, instead of a weak imitation of a great defunct one." Jean Baptiste Sully, Saint-Simon at Versailles, Marshal Turenne, Jean Bart, "a corsair of France," and an odd volume of the twenty that compose Saint-Simon's memoirs of his own time are the other subjects. The glimpses which our skillful guide has given us do not awaken any longings for the restoration of the French court. The true brilliancy of the Gallic mind, far from diminishing under the influence of modern institutions, may be counted upon as an increasing factor in the world's progress. — Estes & Lauriat.

Mr. W. W. Story long ago established his reputation as a writer of genuine poetry and interesting conversational criticism. That reputation will hardly be enhanced by this little volume, entitled A Poet's Portfolio: Later Readings. When a poet or any other artist ransacks his portfolio he is liable to bring to light some mediocre sketches and studies. In this instance he imagines himself as reading to an appreciative woman who encourages him to proceed. Their discursive talk we have found more interesting than the poetry which suggests it. Now lightly, and now more seriously, it touches upon some of the familiar mysteries of life, and although it contributes but little originality to the consideration of these themes, it is genial, graceful, and sincere. What the poet says of his poems is true: "The best that can be said of them, even by a friend, is that they are not so utterly bad as they might have been; and that is not any great praise, is it? And then, perhaps, they have a worse fault, of being simply commonplace." The new style of cloth binding of the volume deserves a word of praise; it is smooth to the touch as silk, while not silk. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson's interesting volume of Annotations upon Popular Hymns is intended especially for use in praise meetings, but it will be a profitable volume for every clergyman who has not made a particular study of hymnology. About a thousand hymns, selected mostly from Dr. Robinson's two compilations, Laudes Domini, are given, with a sketch of the author and various details concerning the hymn itself, and there are numerous small portraits of the composers. It is an old saying that "there is no heresy in hymns," and Dr. Robinson has included a number from sources unorthodox in their theology. His judgment on "Nearer, my God, to thee" that its "one weakness and fault" is the continued figure of Jacob's vision, and that the feeble imitation which he gives on the preceding page "is better in every particular," shows that Dr. Robinson does not shine as a literary critic. — Hunt & Eaton. $2.50.

Volume XXXVII of the Dictionary of National Biography, edited by Sidney Lee, extends from Milman to More and includes many of the famous names of English history in numerous directions. Dr. Richard Garnett writes on Dean Milman and Tom Moore; Mr. Leslie Stephen on Milton, Sir William Molesworth, Lady M. Wortley Montagu, and Hannah More; Prof. C. H. Herford on Laurence Minot; Mr. G. F. R. Barker on John Mitchel the Irish Nationalist, and Charles Montagu, first Earl of Halifax; Miss Elizabeth Lee on Miss Mitford; Colonel Vetch, R.E., on Robert Moffat the missionary; Mr. C. H. Firth on George Monck, Duke of Albemarle; Prof. J. K. Laughton on John Montagu, fourth Earl of Sandwich, and Charles Mordaunt, Earl of Peterborough; Mr. J. M. Rigg on Basil Montagu; Mr. Sidney Lee on Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu and on Sir Thomas More; Miss Kate Norgate on Simon de Montfort and his sons; and Canon Overton on Henry More the Platonist. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

The third volume of the History of the Jews, by the late Prof. H. Graetz, covers the time between the revolt against the Zandik (511 A.D.) to the capture of St. Jean d'Acre by the Mahometans (1291 A.D.). Professor Graetz' later volumes are more valuable than the first two and also much better translated; but, though a great scholar, he was not a historian of the first order of merit, either for thought or for style. He eulogizes Judaism and denounces Christianity, especially after the early years of the latter, in a manner far from judicial or philosophical. The ordinary reader is not, therefore, safe in accepting him as sufficient authority in any matter where the relations of the two faiths are concerned. — Jewish Publication Society. $3.00.

The two volumes in the Badminton Library on Big Game Shooting have been written by Clive Phillipps-Wolley, with numerous contributions from noted sportsmen. They include the whole world in their survey, and tell of many countries and their big game which British sportsmen have slaughtered more or less ingeniously. The sympathies of the ordinary reader will not rarely be on the side of the animals killed, and he will inquire why they were not left to fill their peaceful place in nature and not butchered to make a sportsman's holiday. The volumes are copiously and finely illustrated.— Little, Brown & Co.

King's Handbook of New York City is a stout octavo volume of a thousand pages, with as many photographic illustrations of scenes and buildings in that mammoth city. It is the fullest presentation, in a guidebook way, that has yet been made of our American metropolis. The advertising element, which probably accounts for the low price of a book so profusely illustrated, is not intruded in a way to injure the value of the work as a cyclopedia of New York. — Moses King. $2.00.

The second edition of Capt. John Bigelow, Jr.'s Principles of Strategy has been carefully revised and enlarged by descriptions of the campaigns of Shiloh and Chancellorsville and other matter. The number of maps and plans has been reduced, thus diminishing the size and cost of a volume especially valuable to American readers of military science.— J. B. Lippincott Co. $5.00.

The third volume of the fine Library edition of the Writings of Thomas Jefferson, edited by Paul Leicester Ford, contains for its chief matter the famous Notes on Virginia, to which Mr. Ford prefixes a full bibliographical introduction. The proposed constitution for Virginia drawn up in 1783 and the "Notes on the Establishment of a Money Unit and of a Coinage for the United States," April, 1784, have not lost their interest with time.— G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.

Mrs. Augusta Webster is well known to readers of modern English poetry as one of the most thoughtful and vigorous of the women poets of the day. Many will welcome the little volume of Selections from her verse which Macmillan & Co. publish. All of her volumes are drawn upon for some of her finest material, while "Yu-Pe-Ya's Lute" is given entire. — $1.50.

PERIODICALS.

The complete novel in the May number of Lippincott's is "The Autobiography of a Professional Beauty," by Elizabeth Phipps Train. Gilbert Parker's serial story, "The Trespasser," reaches its fifteenth chapter, and will be concluded in another number. "Her Concert," by Dorothy E. Nelson, records a pathetic incident in the life of a reduced gentlewoman. In "The Young Ravens That Call upon Him" Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts gives a sketch of wild life. "How I Gained an Income," by "A Bread-Winner," records an experience with a lesson that should be useful to many. Under the heading "Americans Abroad" Hon. Francis B. Loomis, U. S. Consul at St. Etienne, France, tells where our countrymen go and what they spend, and concludes that life in Europe is not now cheaper than at home. Champion Bissell writes of "Fitz-James O'Brien and His Time." In "Genius at Home" Anne Hollingsworth Wharton claims that the great have not been more happy in their domestic relations than ordinary people, and gives examples. In "Talks with the Trade" certain "Rudiments" of the literary art and literary business are considered. The poetry of the number is by Kate Jordan, Florence Earle Coates, Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, Harrison S. Morris, and Walter Rogers Furness.

The April Overland Monthly is given up to the Midwinter Fair. There are articles on the "Architecture," by Edwards Roberts; the "Educational Exhibits," by Prof. Thomas R. Bacon; the "Congresses," by Prof. Bernard Moses; the "Electrical Effects," by Lieut. Hasson, engineer in charge; "The Purposes of the Fair," by James D. Phelan; "The Agricultural Display," by Charles H. Shinn; "Fine Arts," by John A. Stanton, head of the department; "The Mining Exhibit," by Edward H. Benjamin, head of the department; "The Russian Exhibit," by Nathan M. Babad. There are also light and sketchy articles: "The Wild and Woolly at the Fair," by Ninetta Eames; "Some Breadwinners of the Fair," by Elizabeth S. Bates; and "Going with the Swim," by Phil Weaver, Jr. The number is profusely illustrated with clever snap shots, sketches, and studies, in every variety, by half a dozen artists. It will give to those who do not visit the fair the best idea possible of it, and will be the best souvenir for those who do.

The new fortnightly Revue de Paris is an addition of much value and interest to the periodical world. Each number, yellow-covered, has 224 pages, printed in the large type of French books of the upper class so easy for the eye. The editors and proprietors have made heavy drafts on the best French writers in fiction, history, politics, economics, and general literature, and each number presents an excellent variety of matter. Among the more striking articles in the last three issues are Mary Robinson's "A la Cour de Gaston Phébus," E. Dufeuille's "Prévost-Paradol," J. Bourdeau's "L'Anarchisme Révolutionnaire," G. Monod's "La Vie d'Hippolyte Taine," Balzac's "Lettres à 'l'Étrangère,'" A Le Braz' "Saint-Yves, le Patron des Pauvres," and M. Biggon's "Björnson et son Œuvre." Fiction plays an important part in the Revue: E. Augier, "Gyp," Anatole France, E. Rod, and Mr. Kipling furnish serials or independent stories in these three issues. An occasional poem reminds one again how essentially French is a prose language. Altogether it is evident that the Revue de Deux Mondes has found a formidable rival; doubtless, in these days of periodicals, there is ample room for both reviews.

In the Contemporary Review for April Mr. H. W. Massingham and Mr. R. S. Watson take proper notice of Mr. Gladstone's retirement in their articles on "The Old Premier and the New" and "The Nation's Loss." Mr. Edmund Gosse has a subject of interest on which he gives "exclusive" information in "The New Immortal — J. M. de Heredia." Mrs. Amos continues a topic of the hour in "The Evolution of the Daughters." Prof. D. H. Müller describes the results of "The Excavations at Sendschirli" in Northern Syria. Betterments, allotments, the finances of Italy, abstainers, the British Army, and the last papal encyclical are among the other subjects of a well-varied number.

Popular Astronomy is, so far as we know, the only periodical of the sort in our language. It is published monthly, except in July and August, from the Goodsell Observatory of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.; is an octavo of forty-eight pages, and is well divided between matter of interest to all acquainted with the science and other matter attractive to those who are observers of the stars with the telescope.

The Magazine of Poetry is now a monthly. The April number has portraits of Phillips Brooks, Eugene Field, Miss Bloede, "Howard Glyndon," and others less known to fame. Mrs. Elizabeth Akers Allen, Mrs. Thaxter, and Mrs. Botta are among the poets drawn upon for selections.

The helpful periodical Germania, devoted to the study of the German language and especially useful in supplying a large amount of good reading matter, enters its sixth volume on the first of May, and it will hereafter be published in Boston instead of Manchester, N. H.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Another case of fatuous plagiarism: Miss Grace Denio Litchfield's poem "Good-by," which was published in the Century for January, 1884, appears in the Washington Evening News of January 24, 1894, over the name of "Hattie Fay Townley" and under the words "for the Evening News." The title is changed to "Just Good-by."

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish, as No. 62 — a double number — of the Riverside Literature series, John Fiske's War of Independence. To the maps, bibliographical note, and other aids to the student which were in the earlier edition there has been added a biographical sketch of the author. During the coming school year Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will issue in the Riverside Literature series many numbers containing masterpieces of well-known American and English authors.

— With the April number (Midwinter Fair number) the editorial and business control of the Overland Monthly will be assumed by Rounsevelle Wildman, late United States consul at Singapore and at Bremen, Germany. Mr. Wildman is known in literature as a contributor of stories and sketches to Harper's Weekly, St. Nicholas, the Youth's Companion, and other periodicals. The general standards of the magazine will remain unchanged, and for the present, at least, the retiring editor, Miss Shinn, will be somewhat closely connected with the literary management.

— Kossuth's Memories of My Exile is brought out in a new edition by D. Appleton & Co. This interesting volume gives the patriot's own story of his life.

— Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co., New York, will immediately commence the publication of the Library of Natural History, the first installments of which will compose the Royal Natural History, to be edited by Mr. Richard Lydekker, B.A., F.G.S., F.Z.S. This will form, when completed, an entirely new general natural history thoroughly abreast of the age. It will contain some 1,600 illustrations and a series of seventy-two colored plates, and will occupy thirty-six monthly numbers.

— Francis P. Harper, New York, has ready a new edition of the Memoirs of King Richard the Third and Some of His Contemporaries, by John Heneage Jesse, called by many the "Francis Parkman of English history." The same house makes the important announcement that Dr. Elliott Coues is editing Major Z. M. Pike's Explorations and Discoveries Through the West and Southwest during the years 1805, 1806, 1807. The work will be edited in the same careful and exhaustive manner and published uniform with his Lewis and Clark's Expedition.

— The Rev. Dr. Andrew W. Archibald's The Bible Verified, which has been translated into Spanish, has just been ordered by the publishers into the Japanese language. The Rev. W. E. Griffis, D.D., author of The Mikado's Empire, is to furnish an introduction for the Japanese version.

— M. Zola has again taken the public into his confidence regarding his literary plans. Lourdes, which is the title of the first of the triad of novels upon which he is engaged, is completed, and begins to appear as a serial this month. The second of the group is to be called Rome. M. Zola proposes to make a protracted stay in the Eternal City for the purpose of studying local color. The book will concern itself with the neo-Christians, and will contain a full-length portrait of the present Pope. As to the novel Paris, the third of the series, it is to be a book which will treat principally of socialism. M. Zola says that in this book he intends to look into the twentieth century. After the completion of this short series he intends to rest; and it is possible that he will then devote himself almost exclusively to the theater.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish this day: Samuel Longfellow: Memoir and Letters, and Essays and Sermons, both edited by Joseph May; The White Crown and Other Stories, by Herbert D. Ward; Folk-Tales of Angola, by Heli Chatelain, late United States commercial agent at Loanda, Angola, West Africa; Poems, by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell; A Treatise on the Law of Mortgages of Real Property, by Leonard A. Jones, Esq., fifth edition; Money, Trade, and Banking, by Joseph H. Walker, a new edition; and The Mistress of Beech Knoll, by Clara Louise Burnham, in the Riverside Paper series.

— D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, have in press for immediate issue Freytag's Rittmeister von Alt-Rosen, with introduction and notes by Prof. J. T. Hatfield of Northwestern University. This interesting historical novel belongs to the famous Ahnen series, and is valuable at once from a literary and a historical point of view.

— Mr. Edwin L. Shuman of the Chicago Journal staff has in press a volume entitled Steps into Journalism, which treats of newspaper work as a more or less exact science, and lays down its laws in an informal way for beginners, local correspondents, and reporters.

— The first publication of the Columbia University Press, for which Macmillan & Co. are publishing agents, will be a volume of Classical Studies in Honor of Professor Drisler. The issue of this series of papers by former pupils of Prof. Henry Drisler will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with Columbia College.

— The very important lectures on art delivered this last winter by Mr. John La Farge at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, will be revised by the author and published in book form possibly next fall.

— Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop writes to the Boston correspondent of a New York paper about Miss Peabody's engagement to her father: "No, my aunt was never engaged to my father, and I had not heard of any one imagining it to be so. My aunt, always on the alert for what was fine in thought in New England during her youth as in her old age, and a great reader, was quick to discern the new writer, my father, and to try with matronly kindness to bring him into more active intercourse with people. I have a number of her little notes among my mother's papers which are mementos of those old days and show that my aunt invited my father and his sisters to her mother's house and to walk around the rustic environs of Salem in her desire to study the remarkable mind of the young man. This matronly patronage was all the enthusiasm there was in the matter, and also seldom won my father's response. By chance, however, he did call one evening and happened to see my mother. It was then easy enough to induce him to appear, and a tacit engagement was soon formed."

— The Brontë Society and Museum at present has its headquarters at Idel, Bradford, where Mr. J. Horsfall Turner, the corresponding secretary, resides. Lord Houghton is president, and among the vice-presidents are the Duke of Devonshire, Sir Isaac Holden, M.P., Mr. Wemyss Reid, Mr. A. Birrell, M.P., Drs. William Wright and Peter Bayne, Mrs. Darmesteter, and Mr. George Smith.

—The Channing Club of Boston, through their secretary, W. M. McInnes, 53 State Street, Boston, has issued a second catalogue of Books for Boys. It is divided into three classes—one of interesting stories; one of works of history, biography, travel, science, etc.; and one of books which, through the moral principles taught, are especially suited for Sunday schools. No book has been rejected because of doctrinal teaching, as the list is intended for all denominations, but wherever such teaching is prominent the fact is noted. Besides the necessary items of publisher and price, each title is followed by a summary of the story, or a description of the scope of the work if in the second class, thereby enabling the reader to choose intelligently. The list can be had on application by inclosing postage.

—An eleventh volume will soon be added to the tenth of Thoreau which the Boston firm of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have lately republished and indexed—the Concord hermit's Familiar Letters, which will exhibit him in more sportive and even trivial moods than those grave essays in the epistolary form selected by Emerson twenty-nine years ago and published with a view of exhibiting his departed friend as "the perfect Stoic," as he told Sophia Thoreau, who objected to the omission of the letters showing him in his familiar and tender moods. Channing's comment on these printed letters was "too abominably didactic," and the mingling in of gossip and business affairs (as in Thoreau's correspondence with Horace Greeley, a portion of which has been recovered) will temper this high strain of moral counsel which his Worcester friends drew from him. The few poems which Emerson added to his volume will not be included in this one, they having been printed with the Miscellanies or else included in the prose works of the recent edition. It will be expedient at some future time to collect and publish all Thoreau's verses, throwing so much light as they do on the genius and aims of the man even when they fall below the average poetic standard. It was Emerson's view that the journals should some time be printed just as they were written, with all sorts of observations occurring together on the same page and rough sketches illustrating objects that he saw on his rambles. Even so I have wished that all his verses—fragments as they often are of some chapter of thought or sentiment—should be given to the world, which would be sure to find there what ought to be preserved—a selection no contemporary has skill enough to make. The verses called by Emerson "The Fisher's Boy" (included without a title by Thoreau in the Week) are in fact part of a longer poem, written at Staten Island in 1843, entitled "The Fisher's Son," but intended as a parable of Thoreau's own life. There are many of Thoreau's letters still uncollected, those to Greeley, for instance, having been given away as autographs, and others remaining in the papers of living or dead friends to whom they were written. The editor (F. B. Sanborn of Concord) would be glad to receive copies of any that have never been printed.—Springfield Republican.

—The American Folk-Lore Society is about to undertake an extensive scheme of publication under the name of Memoirs of the American Folk-Lore Society. The first volume of this series, which was published in March, is Folk-Tales of Angola, by Heli Chatelain, late United States Commercial Agent in Loanda, West Africa. Among other works intended to continue the series are collections of the French Creole tales of Louisiana and of the current superstitions still found in great mass among the English-speaking population. The publications proposed will constitute an important addition to Americana; but the complete execution of the plan will depend on adequate support from the American public. For this purpose the number of members of the society should be increased by at least 500. Persons interested in the work of the society will gladly be received as members, the annual fee being three dollars, giving the right to a copy of the organ of the society, the Journal of American Folk-Lore (quarterly). A subscription of ten dollars to the Publication Fund will include the membership fee and entitle the subscriber to all the publications of the society, including the Memoirs, of which it is proposed to issue several numbers annually. Persons wishing to become members, or subscribe to the Publication Fund, will please address the permanent secretary, W. W. Newell, Cambridge, Mass.

—Mr. William Archer is translating for Mr. Heinemann Gerhart Hauptmann's "Hannele," which will first appear in the New Review, with illustrations, and then be published in book form. Mr. Heinemann intends to try the taste of the British public with translations of other plays of Hauptmann's, such as "Die Weber."

—The Daily News of London says that, by a curious coincidence, Mr. Gladstone finished his translation of the Odes of Horace into English verse on the day that his resignation took effect.

—It is reported that Miss Margot Tennant, the original of whatever is clever or admirable in Dodo, is to wed Mr. Asquith, the British Home Secretary, who, like herself, belongs to the coterie of "Souls," of which Mr. Balfour is a shining and still unmarried member.

—The name of the author of The Story of Margrédel was withheld during the running of the serial through the pages of Blackwood's and from the title-page of the book. It is now announced to be David Storrar Meldrum.

—It has been decided that in 1896, 1898, and 1900 there shall be no Bampton Lectures. The reason is that the property which provides the endowment will in those years itself need the income for improvements.

—Mr. Lewis Morris' new volume of poems, just published, Songs without Notes, includes the Imperial Institute and the Royal Wedding Odes.

—We heard a discussion among journalists a few days ago as to the cause of the popularity of books like Tess of the D'Urbervilles—now in its twenty-third thousand—The Heavenly Twins, Dodo, and one or two others. Various reasons were given that did not meet with general approbation, until one man declared, "It is because of the natural desire of average people to read about forbidden subjects." This carried us back to Eden and the beautiful legend of the forbidden fruit, and every one acquiesced.—Literary World, London.

—Prof. J. R. Seeley, author of Ecce Homo and The Expansion of England, has been appointed a knight commander of the order of St. Michael and St. George.

—Commander Verney Lovett Cameron, C.B., D.C.L., the African explorer, died March 27. He was born at Wadipole on July 1, 1844, and was sent to Africa by the Royal Geographical Society in 1872 to find Livingstone. Shortly after starting he met Livingstone's followers carrying the missionary's remains to the coast. He then resolved to cross Africa from ocean to ocean. He succeeded, reaching the west coast at Benguela in November, 1875. In 1877 he published Across Africa.

—Harper & Brothers send forth from their presses this coming month a new edition of The Mikado's Empire, by Rev. Wm. Elliot Griffis, D.D. The history is brought down to the dissolution of the Diet in the first month of 1894. This standard work is still the vade mecum of the traveler in Japan and the student at home.

—Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons announce the publication of a translation of a recent French work, entitled The Life of Saint Francis of Assisi, by Prof. Paul Sabatier. The book is written from a critical and not from either an enthusiastic or a skeptical standpoint, and discusses the various questions associated with Saint Francis in the spirit of modern research and absolute candor, while at the same time its tone is thoroughly sympathetic.

—The master and fellows of Balliol College as the legal representatives of the late Professor Jowett, have requested Mr. Evelyn Abbott, M.A., LL.D., fellow of the college, to be responsible for the preparation of the biography of the late master, with whom he had been in especially close intercourse for the last twenty years. Old friends and pupils of the master who are able to communicate any letters or other matters of biographical interest are invited to send particulars of them forthwith to Mr. Abbott at Balliol College.

—The late Steele Mackay, the playwright, actor, and projector of the ill-starred Spectatorium at Chicago, was the favorite pupil of Delsarte and heir to his system of training in expression, and left among his papers a manuscript setting forth the philosophy, science, and art of expression based upon the principles of Delsarte. This manuscript the author's widow has requested Rev. William R. Alger of Boston to prepare for publication, and probably by next autumn the work will be in the hands of the public.

—Mr. F. F. Roget, lecturer on French literature and romance philology at St. Andrews, has undertaken to edit for Messrs. Williams & Norgate an Hommes de Lettres series of French classics, with prefaces. This series is to contain works in high repute which hitherto have been either imperfectly translated or not edited at all in Britain. The first volume now in preparation, with the collaboration of Dr. Seele of Leipzig, will consist of Voltaire's Contes en Prose; the Lettres sur les Anglais, the works of Rabelais and Montaigne in their essential parts, and the Thoughts of Pascal are to follow.

—Charles L. Webster & Co. issue this month Tom Sawyer Abroad, by Huck Finn, edited by Mark Twain. It is a continuation of the adventures of Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and Nigger Jim. Joanna Traill, Spinster, has just been published by this house. The author is Miss Annie E. Holdsworth, associate editor of the Woman's Signal, the English temperance organ.

— Little, Brown & Co. have commenced the publication of a complete, uniform, and handsomely illustrated edition of the works of Charles Lever. The famous drawings by Cruikshank, "Phiz," and others, made for the original editions of some of the stories, have been reproduced, and additional illustrations by gifted French and English artists have been made. Mr. Andrew Lang has written an introduction for the set, which will be the only complete and uniform edition of the novels of the great Irish novelist ever published. Lever was described some years since, by a writer in the Westminster Review, as "perhaps the only living novelist of whom it may be said that he is never dull."

— The Harvard Crimson has begun the publication of the existing fragments of the lectures which Lowell delivered at Harvard. These fragments were recently presented to the college by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton.

— Friedrich Bodenstedt's monument was to be unveiled at Wiesbaden on April 22, the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birth.

— J. M. Dent & Co. will shortly begin the publication of the complete works of Sterne. The edition will be similar to that of Miss Austen previously issued.

— M. Anatole France is putting the last touches to a novel which begins in the April numbers of the Revue de Paris. It is called "Le Lys Rouge," and is a study of cosmopolitan society in Florence, somewhat after the style of M. Bourget. One of the heroines is English and æsthetic.

— Mr. Harrison S. Morris is preparing his first volume of verse, Madonna and Other Poems, for publication by the Lippincotts early in the fall.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons, publishers of the authorized American edition of Miss Harraden's clever story Ships that Pass in the Night, announce for immediate publication the American copyright edition of a new book by the same author, entitled In Varying Moods; a story by George Dunn, entitled Red Cap and Blue Jacket; the first volume of the new Autonym series of signed stories by well-known writers of fiction, The Upper Berth, by F. Marion Crawford; and Peak and Prairie, by Anna Fuller, author of Pratt Portraits. Mr. Post's clever volume entitled Harvard Stories is to be issued in a paper-covered edition.

— Although the Macmillans made unusual preparations during the month preceding the publication of Marcella, eleven presses being kept at work on it, running late into the night, the first edition of the book was exhausted on the day after its issue; a second edition was put on the market a week later. The Rev. S. R. Crockett's The Raiders, his second book, has run through one edition in a single week. The first English edition was exhausted on the day of publication.

— Messrs. Roberts Brothers announce for publication April 28, in the Columbian Knowledge series, edited by Professor Todd of Amherst College, No. II, Public Libraries in America, by William I. Fletcher, M.A., librarian of Amherst College; Library Classification, by the same author; and Wayside Sketches, by Eben J. Loomis.

— The second volume of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's series of novels dealing with New York life will be published in the fall under the title The Ralstons.

— The American Press Co. of Baltimore has made a literary find. It is a copy of the original first edition of the poems of Edgar Allan Poe, one of the rarest books in the world. For many years this book has been sought by curio-collectors, the only copy known to be in existence being an imperfect one in the British Museum. Two years ago a copy was offered at a book auction sale in Boston and brought $1,850; it was then sold to a private buyer for $2,500, who sent it to Paris and had the little volume exquisitely bound at a cost of $300. The copy just discovered by the American Press Co. was picked up at a secondhand bookstore in Boston sixty years ago, and has remained in the possession of the purchaser ever since. It is in an excellent state of preservation, and is worth its weight in gold ten times over. The title-page reads as follows:

TAMERLANE,
and
OTHER POEMS,
By a Bostonian.

Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,
And make mistakes for manhood to reform.— Cowper.

Boston:
Calvin F. S. Thomas, printer.
1827.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Edward Livingston Youmans. A Sketch of His Life. By John Fiske. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

The Life of Sir Harry Parkes, Minister to China and Japan. In two volumes. By Stanley Lane-Poole. Macmillan & Co. $8.00

The Writings of Thomas Jefferson. Collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Vol. III. 1781–1784. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

Life and Later Speeches of Chauncey M. Depew. Cassell Publishing Co. $2.50

Rulers of India. Sir Thomas Munro. By John Bradshaw, M.A., LL.D. Macmillan & Co. 60c.

Josiah Gilbert Holland. By Mrs. H. M. Plunkett. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

Fourth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor. Compulsory Insurance in Germany. Government Printing Office.

Educational.

Practical Methods in Microscopy. By Chas. H. Clark, A.M. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.70

The Vision of Sir Launfal, and Other Poems. By James Russell Lowell. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 12c.

Portrait and Figure Painting. By Frank Fowler. Cassell Publishing Co. $2.00

Symbolic Education. A Commentary on Froebel's "Mother Play." By Susan E. Blow. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Laboratory Studies in Elementary Chemistry. By LeRoy C. Cooley. American Book Co. 50c.

Inductive Studies in English Grammar. By William R. Harper and Isaac B. Burgess. American Book Co. 40c.

Essays and Sketches.

A Bird-Lover in the West. By Olive Thorne Miller. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Pictures in Prose, of Nature, Wild Sport, and Humble Life. By Aubyn Trevor-Battye, B.A. Longmans, Green & Co.

Random Roaming, and Other Papers. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

Selected Letters of Mendelssohn. Edited by W. F. Alexander, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

Romantic Professions, and Other Papers. By W. P. James. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

"Old Settlers." By Robert B. Duncan. — Slavery Petitions and Papers. By Jacob Piatt Dunn. — Documents Relating to the French Settlements on the Wabash. By Jacob Piatt Dunn. The Bowen-Merrill Co.

The Letters of Thomas Lovell Beddoes. Edited with notes, by Edmund Gosse. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Fiction.

Cheap Jack Zita. By S. Baring-Gould. Illus. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.25

A Dead Man's Step. By "Lawrence L. Lynch." (E. Murdoch Van Deventer.) Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

Donald Ross of Heimra. By William Black. New and revised edition. Harper & Brothers. 80c.

For Honor and Life. A Novel. By William Westall. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

Life's Little Ironies. A Set of Tales. By Thomas Hardy. Harper & Brothers. $1 25

The Price of a Pearl. A Novel. By Eleanor Holmes. Harper & Brothers. 60c.

A Family Tree, and Other Stories. By Brander Matthews. Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XVIII. Redgauntlet. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Our Manifold Nature. Stories from Life. By Sarah Grand. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

History.

Bill Nye's History of the United States. Illustrated by F. Opper. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

The Story of Louis XVII of France. By Elizabeth E. Evans. London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

The Story of the Nations. Australasia. By Greville Tregarthen. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Philosophy.

Basal Concepts in Philosophy. An Inquiry into Being, Non-Being, and Becoming. By Alexander T. Ormond, Ph.D. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Ethics and the "New Education," and A Syllabus of Ethics. By William M. Bryant, M.A. S. C. Griggs & Co. Each, 25c.

Travel and Observation.

Tales of a Nomad; or, Sport and Strife. By Chas. Montague. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50

Hawaiian Life; or, Lazy Letters from Low Latitudes. By Chas. W. Stoddard. F. T. Neely. 50c.

Miscellaneous.

Sandow on Physical Training. Compiled and edited, under Mr. Sandow's direction, by G. Mercer Adam. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $3.50

Alden's Nutshell Cyclopedia. Volume I. Abbas — Coimbra. John B. Alden. 60c.

Spencerian System of Penmanship. Books 8, 9, and 10. Miscellaneous Business Forms, Single Entry Bookkeeping, and Connected Business Forms. American Book Co. Each, 8c.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

THE
POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY
FOR MAY.

Theological and Scientific Theories of an Evolution in Animated Nature. By Andrew D. White, LL. D., L. H. D.

Shows how theologians labored to suppress the great truth of evolution, although it had been foreshadowed by some of their own profession.

Frost-forms on Roan Mountain. (Illustrated.) By Mrs. H. R. Edson.

A description, with photographic views, of the strange deposits of ice and snow that form on a mountain top.

Economic Uses of Non-edible Fish. (Illustrated.) By Robert F. Walsh.

Tells how menhaden are seined and converted into oil and fertilizers, each step being shown in a picture.

Cause and Effect in Education. By Prof. C. Hanford Henderson.

A stimulating article on a much neglected phase of the subject.

OTHER ARTICLES:

The Guests of the Mayflower; Up the Chimney; The Ice Age and its Work, III; Peculiar Sound Effects; Religious Beliefs as a Basis of Morality; The Sleep of Mollusks; Waste Products; Cotton-seed Oil; Ancient and Mediæval Chemistry; Sketch of Sir Joseph Henry Gilbert (with Portrait).

Editor's Table; Literary Notices; Popular Miscellany; Notes.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

PAN MICHAEL. Completing the very successful series of Historical Romances by Henryk Sienkiewicz.

PAN MICHAEL. An Historical Novel of Poland, the Ukraine, and Turkey. A Sequel to "With Fire and Sword" and "The Deluge." Translated from the Polish of HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ by Jeremiah Curtin. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

BOSTON ADVERTISER: A great novel. It abounds in creations. It is a fitting ending to a great trilogy—a trilogy which teaches great lessons.

WITH FIRE AND SWORD. One vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

THE DELUGE. Two vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

The complete Series, Library Edition—With Fire and Sword, 2 vols., The Deluge, 2 vols., and Pan Michael, 1 vol. In all 5 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $8.00; half calf, gilt top, $18.00.

By the Same Author.

WITHOUT DOGMA. A Novel of Modern Poland. Translated from the Polish of HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ by Iza Young. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

YANKO THE MUSICIAN, AND OTHER STORIES. Translated from the Polish of HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ by Jeremiah Curtin. Illustrated by Edmund H. Garrett. 16mo, white and gold, $1.25.

IN A NORTH COUNTRY VILLAGE. By M. E. FRANCIS, author of "Whithes." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

ATHENÆUM: The whole book is so good that it ought to be read from cover to cover.

PALL MALL GAZETTE: A book for laughter and for tears, a book worthy to stand side by side with Cranford.

ELEMENTS OF SCIENCE. By ST. GEORGE MIVART. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

BIG GAME SHOOTING (New Volume in Badminton Library). By CLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY, with contributions by Sir Samuel W. Baker, Warburton Pike and others. Illustrated with numerous full page plates by Charles Whymper, etc. 2 vols, crown 8vo, cloth, $7.00; half morocco, $10.00.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO., Publishers,
254 Washington St., Boston.

CATALOGUE No. 22,
Curious and Interesting
OLD BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS,
Mailed free to any address,
H. GREGORY, Providence, R. I.

Literary Curios,
Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.
Send stamps for separate lists.
Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.
Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books

A Journey in Other Worlds.

A Romance of the Future. By JOHN JACOB ASTOR. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

In this romance the author develops the possibilities of science in the year 2000. He describes a new force which enables the hero and his friends to visit Jupiter and Saturn, where they make some remarkable discoveries and have various surprising adventures. As a romance the book is most interesting, and it is also most stimulating in its suggestiveness regarding the possible results of the science of the future. The author has devoted himself to the study of scientific subjects, and the ingenious use which he makes of his knowledge will be certain to enlist the interest of readers. Mr. Dan Beard, working in perfect sympathy with the text, has produced a series of unusually effective illustrations.

A Policy of Free Exchange.

Essays by Various Writers, on the Economical and Social Aspects of Free Exchange and Kindred Subjects. Edited by THOMAS MACKAY, editor of "A Plea for Liberty." 8vo, cloth, $4.00.

Vital economic questions of the day are treated in this volume by recognized authorities. Among the chapters of this important work are: "The Coming Industrial Struggle," by William Maitland; "National Workshops," by St. Loe Strachey; "The State in Relation to Railways," by W. M. Acworth; "The Principle of Progression in Taxation," by Bernard Mallet; and "The Law of Trade Combinations," by the Hon. Alfred Lyttelton.

Aphorisms from the Writings of Herbert Spencer.

Selected and arranged by JULIA RAYMOND GINGELL. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

". . . All the aphorisms have been selected from the latest editions of the works, and I have tried to make them illustrate, as fully as possible, the wide range taken by this unique philosophy, which not only soars to the sublimest hights but takes note of the apparently most trivial matters, showing that nothing is too insignificant to form a more or less important factor in the great work of evolution."—From the Preface.

Memories of My Exile.

By LOUIS KOSSUTH. Translated from the original Hungarian by FERENCZ JAUSZ. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

The present widespread interest in the life of the great Hungarian patriot has created a renewed demand for this volume, published some years ago, and a new edition is now ready.

A Beginner.

By RHODA BROUGHTON, author of "Goodbye, Sweetheart!" "Nancy," etc. No. 138, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The long-standing popularity of Rhoda Broughton's former books is sufficient introduction for the present volume, which is pronounced one of her best.

A Yellow Aster.

By IOTA. No. 139, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"The warmest of welcomes is due from the reading public."—London Athenæum.

"We shall be surprised if it does not rank among the novels of the year."—Westminster Gazette.

"A Saul has risen among the fictional prophets. 'A Yellow Aster' is distinctly a work of genius, remarkable for novelty of plot, force of diction, grace of literary style and subtlety of psychical analysis."—London Telegraph.

The Rubicon.

By E. F. BENSON, author of "Dodo." No. 140, Town and Country Library. 12mo. paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

An eminent English critic has said of this new novel: "I think 'The Rubicon' a more interesting society story than any that has been published in England for many years. . . . It is a tale of London fashionable life of today, . . . introducing a novel situation which is extremely cleverly managed so as to form a singular satire on our artificial modes of life and springs of action. Toward the close of the book Dodo is introduced in a very effective manner, for a few pages; and her choice in life is cleverly contrasted with that of the new heroine."

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. Appleton & Co., 1, 3, and 5 Bond Street, New York

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.
ADVERTISING RATES:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Harper's Magazine

FOR MAY. Now Ready:

166 Pages; 52 Illustrations.

My First Visit to New England.

By William Dean Howells. First Part. With 5 Illustrations.

The Exiles.

A Story. By Richard Harding Davis. With 3 Illustrations by T. de Thulstrup.

The Chastisement of the Qualla Battooans

By Edgar Stanton Maclay. With 7 Illustrations by T. de Thulstrup.

The Miracle of Tisha Hofnagle.

A Story. By R. C. V. Meyers. With 4 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

The Advent of Spring.

By Mark W. Harrington. With 6 Maps.

A Kentucky Cardinal.

A Story. By James Lane Allen. Part I. With 4 Illustrations by Albert E. Sterner.

Pecuniary Independence.

By Junius Henri Browne.

At Chenière Caminada.

A Story. By Grace King.

A Note of a Philogynist.

A Story. By Marrion Wilcox.

A Little Journey in Java.

By Frederic M. Burr. With 6 Illustrations.

A Kinsman of Red Cloud.

A Story. By Owen Wister. With 4 Illustrations by Frederic Remington.

Charleston, South Carolina (1861).

By Anna C. Brackett.

The End of an Animosity.

A Story. By L. Clarkson.

The Relations of Life to Style in Architecture

By Thomas Hastings.

Trilby.

A Novel. By George du Maurier. Part V. With 15 Illustrations by the Author.

Poems

By Thomas Bailey Aldrich (with illustration) and Charlotte Fiske Bates.

Editor's Study.

By Charles Dudley Warner.

Editor's Drawer

Contains an illustrated story by Ruth McEnery Stuart and other humorous Sketches and Illustrations.

Literary Notes.

By Laurence Hutton.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers'

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Pembroke.

A Novel. By Mary E. Wilkins, Author of "Jane Field," "A Humble Romance," "A New England Nun," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Ready April 27.)

The Exiles, and Other Stories.

By Richard Harding Davis, Author of "Van Bibber, and Others," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Ready April 27.)

Cadet Days.

A Story of West Point. By Captain Charles King, Author of "A War-Time Wooing," "Between the Lines," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Ready April 27.)

With Edged Tools.

A Novel. By Henry Seton Merriman, Author of "From One Generation to Another," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Ready April 27.)

Orations of George William Curtis.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Vol. I. On the Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duty of American Citizens. Vol. II. Addresses and Reports on the Reform of the Civil Service of the United States. Vol. III. Historical and Memorial Addresses. With Photogravure Portrait. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $3.50 per volume.

The Jewish Question.

The Jewish Question, and the Mission of the Jews. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.75.

Our English Cousins.

By Richard Harding Davis, Author of "The Rulers of the Mediterranean," "Van Bibber and Others," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Horace Chase.

A Novel. By Constance Fenimore Woolson, Author of "Anne," "Jupiter Lights," etc. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Life's Little Ironies.

A Set of Tales; With some Colloquial Sketches entitled A Few Crusted Characters. By Thomas Hardy, Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Wee Ones of Japan.

By Mae St. John Bramhall. Illustrations by C. D. Weldon. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

The Expert Waitress.

A Manual for Pantry, Kitchen, and Dining-Room. By Anne Frances Springsteed. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

Studies of the Stage.

By Brander Matthews. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the Series "Harper's American Essayists.")

Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes.

Stories. By A. Conan Doyle, Author of "The Refugees," "Micah Clarke," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Uniform in style and price with "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.")

The above works are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by Harper & Brothers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. Harper's Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York

Library
MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 5 MAY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 9 Whole No. 505

Charles Scribner's Sons' New Books.

A NOTABLE CONTRIBUTION TO NAPOLEONIC LITERATURE.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

The Revolution—The Consulate—The Empire. Edited by DUC D'AUDIFFRET-PASQUIER. With portraits. In 3 vols., 8vo. Vol. II., 1812–1814, now ready, $2.50; Vol. I., 1789–1812, $2.50.

"A rich mine of information. It is of as great interest as importance. His position enabled him to see much; his intelligence and his training made his comprehension thorough and his conclusions of value."—N. Y. Times.

JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND.

A Memoir. By Mrs. H. M. PLUNKETT. With portraits and illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

Mrs. Plunkett was a life-long and intimate friend of Dr. Holland's, and had exceptional opportunities for studying his character. She has drawn largely upon Dr. Holland's record of his own aspirations and achievements, thus giving her work an agreeable autobiographic flavor, and presenting an attractive portrait of a remarkable man.

"A model biography, and a valuable and at the same time delightful addition to literature."—Boston Advertiser.

OVERHEARD IN ARCADY.

By ROBERT BRIDGES (Droch). With 65 illustrations by O. HERFORD, F. G. ATTWOOD and A. E. STERNER. 12mo, $1.25.

A novel and attractive book made up of a series of bright dialogues, in which the famous characters of the stories of Howells, James, Aldrich, Stockton, Davis, Crawford, Kipling, Meredith, Stevenson and Barrie discuss their creators with candor, sympathy, wit and humor.

"The clever way in which a number of characters, created by popular authors, are used in this book will afford delightful entertainment to the lovers of refined fiction."—Boston Sat. Eve. Gazette.

NEW OUT-OF-DOOR BOOKS.

ACCORDING TO SEASON.

Talks about the Flowers in the Order of their Appearance in the Woods and Fields. By Mrs. WILLIAM STARR DANA. 16mo, 75 cents.

"The charm of this book is pervading and enduring as is the charm of nature."—N. Y. Times.

HOW TO KNOW THE WILD FLOWERS.

A Guide to the Names, Haunts and Habits of our common Wild Flowers. By Mrs. WILLIAM STARR DANA. With 104 illustrations. Fourteenth Thousand. 12mo, $1.50 net.

"It is exactly what has long been wanted by one who loves nature."—Olive Thorne Miller.

A SELECTION OF FIFTY PLATES FROM "HOW TO KNOW THE WILD FLOWERS."

Printed on special paper, suitable for coloring by hand. The set, in a portfolio, $1.00 net.

AN ADVENTURE IN PHOTOGRAPHY.

By OCTAVE THANET. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50 net.

"A novel and delightful book."—Brooklyn Times.

OUR COMMON BIRDS, AND HOW TO KNOW THEM.

By JOHN B. GRANT. With 64 Plates. Eighth Thousand. Oblong 12mo, $1.50 net.

"It is compact but admirably clear. There is for each bird a description of appearance, habits and haunts. It is a model in its way."—Boston Courier.

ART OUT OF DOORS.

Hints on Good Taste in Gardening. By Mrs. SCHUYLER VAN RENSSELAER. 12mo, $1.50.

"It is sound, helpful and well written."—Garden and Forest.

HOMES IN CITY AND COUNTRY.

By Various Authorities. 100 illustrations. 8vo, $2.00.

"Not only entertaining, but most useful."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES.

A Spring Journey in California. By Dr. CHARLES A. STODDARD, author of "Across Russia" and "Spanish Cities." Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

In this new book Dr. Stoddard gives his experiences, and describes in an interesting manner the places he visited in a journey by the southern route to California.

"A very seductive book. It is pleasantly written and draws the reader on with the unfailing and romantic charm of the country."—The Independent.

THE BARBARY COAST.

By Dr. HENRY M. FIELD. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

"Alert and interesting travel observations. The volume abounds in picturesqueness of description."—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE LAND OF POCO TIEMPO.

By C. F. LUMMIS. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.50.

"A series of interesting sketches of New Mexico. They are picturesque, poetic, glowing in local color."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

NEW FICTION.

ON THE OFFENSIVE.

An Army Story. By GEORGE I. PUTNAM. 12mo, $1.25.

Mr. Putnam's new army story is varied and adventurous in character, and, like the author's "In Blue Uniform," it has a thread of sentiment and presents with rare fidelity an interesting picture of army life on the plains.

"Bright, breezy and wholesome. The characters are lifelike and interesting."—Boston Sat. Eve. Gazette.

SALEM KITTREDGE,

And Other Stories. By BLISS PERRY. 12mo, $1.00.

Some of the stories depict phases of European life and others deal with American subjects. All, however, have a characteristic charm, both of substance and of style.

ARDIS CLAVERDEN.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON. 12mo, $1.50.

Charles Scribner's Sons have recently acquired the rights of this charming story of Mr. Stockton's, and now issue it uniform with the author's other famous books.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

A Few Recent Books.

By the author of "Far From Today."

ALLEGRETTO.

A Volume of Poems. By Gertrude Hall, author of "Far From Today." Illustrated by Oliver Herford. Small quarto, cloth, $1.50.

"An easy, dainty touch, a laughing wit, a frolicsome mirth."—Christian Register.

2d Edition.

FAR FROM TODAY.

A Volume of Stories. By Gertrude Hall. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

THE AIM OF LIFE.

Plain talks to young men and women. By Rev. Philip Moxom. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Terse, graphic and impressive. Sensible, cheerful and dignified."—Congregationalist.

KEYNOTES.

A Volume of Stories. By George Egerton. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"It brings a new quality, and a striking new force into the literature of the hour."—London Speaker.

DREAM LIFE AND REAL LIFE.

By Olive Schreiner, author of "The Story of an African Farm." 16mo, half cloth, 60 cents.

"Perfect workmanship and unutterable pathos."—Literary World.

TOTAL ECLIPSES OF THE SUN.

By Mabel Loomis Todd. (No. 1, Columbian Knowledge Series. Edited by Prof. David P. Todd of Amherst College.) With numerous illustrations. 16mo, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

"Clear style and comprehensive and accurate information."—Sun.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN AMERICA.

By William I. Fletcher, M. A., Librarian of Amherst College. (No. 2, Columbian Knowledge Series.) Illustrated. 16mo, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

"One of the leading authorities of the country in this field."—Hartford Courant.

LIBRARY CLASSIFICATION.

By W. I. Fletcher, A. M., Librarian of Amherst College. Reprinted, with additions, from "Public Libraries in America." Thin 8vo, limp cloth, $1.00.

BY MOORLAND AND SEA.

By Francis A. Knight, author of "By Leafy Ways," "Idylls of the Field," etc. Illustrated by the author. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"Exquisite poetry in prose form."—Advertiser.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES.

By Eben J. Loomis. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"One of the most delightful of volumes of nature studies. . . . The author not only loves nature, but is in most sympathetic touch with her various moods."—Advertiser.

ART FOR AMERICA.

By William Ordway Partridge. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Deserves rank among the classics of American patriotism."—Standard Union.

AT ALL BOOKSTORES.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Publishers,
BOSTON.

Artistic Specialties IN Fixtures FOR Lighting BY Electricity OR Gas.

Fine Goods at Fair Prices.

Entirely new Designs for this Season.

Fixtures Made to Order from Special Drawings.

BEAUTIFUL LAMPS WITH SHADES TO MATCH.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers,
523-525 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc

Literary Curios,

Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.

Send stamps for separate lists.

Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.

Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE ONLY FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. GENUINE Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

Summer St.
No. 196
Boston, Mass.

MEISTERSCHAFT

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 5 MAY 1894 No. 9

CONTENTS

Life's Little Ironies 131
Sir Harry Parkes 131
Overheard in Arcady 132
Three Books on Australia 132
The Countess Radna 133
Samuel Longfellow 133
The Raiders 133
The Pasquier Memoirs 134
The Sacred City of the Ethiopians . . 135

Original Poetry:

Wood-Longing. Alice Brown 136
London Letter 136
New York Letter 137

Fiction ·

Under the Red Robe 138
Our Manifold Nature , ... 138
Vistas 138
The King of Schnorrers 138
The Story of Margrédel 138
Burgo's Romance 139
Tempe 139
The Adventures in Algiers of Matthew Dudgeon, 139
In Exile and Other Stories 139
The Price of a Pearl 139
On the Offensive 139
A Beginner 139
The Bedouin Girl 139

Minor Notices:

The Jewish Question 139
Art for America 140
A Bird-Lover in the West 140
Religion in History and in Modern Life . . 140
The Humour of America 140
Art in Theory 140
By Moorland and Sea 140
Romantic Professions 140
Pictures in Prose 141
Periodicals 141
News and Notes 142
Publications Received 143

LIFE'S LITTLE IRONIES.*

REMEMBERING Tess of the D'Urbervilles, that great, living, suffering personality set amid the freshness and naturalness of English farm life, one is inclined to wish that Thomas Hardy would devote himself to writing novels of only such proportions as afford proper room for his genius. The writer of Tess needs a larger canvas than suffices for such short tales as those included in A Group of Noble Dames and the present volume. He is less just to life when he crowds together numerous instances of twisted or wrecked lives than when he develops for us a single drama, showing, perhaps, one chief character influenced from within and from without, shaping itself to its destiny and adapting itself to final, unknown ends. It is poor criticism that considers first whether or not a book is "agreeable" reading, and yet one could hardly be blamed for allowing this consideration in the case of A Group of Noble Dames, where the tales seem at once less real and less artistic than one or two in Life's Little Ironies, though the two books have naturally much in common. In the former the poor dames were helpless creatures, governed chiefly, as it seemed, by the will of their author, and one could imagine Mr. Hardy saying to them relentlessly, "Once for all, whatever you want, you cannot have it until you no longer want it, and then you will get it to your ruin!"

Life's Little Ironies is well named. The opening story tells us of a woman longing to marry the man who has always loved her, and free to do so except for the respect due to her son, who was a "gentleman," a term not to be applied to the "faithful fruiterer and greengrocer" in that station of life to which she herself had been called. Another tale sets forth the blunder committed by a man who insists on making late reparation for a wrong done years before, outlived, and nearly forgotten. Still another depicts the inward ruin of two ambitious lives, dating from a few minutes of indecision when the lesson was forgotten that greatness may depend sometimes on "enduring the cross, despising the shame." The tales are all ingeniously conceived, and they are narrated with that subtle comprehension of character that is one of Mr. Hardy's most obvious qualities as a novelist. He delves into the human mind and drags forth desires and impulses that when once brought to the light justify themselves as neither far-fetched nor improbable, however unusual they may seem to one at first. Instances of this sort are the strength of the secret spur to Joanna's ambition in "To Please His Wife," and again the willingness of Edith to identify herself with the unfortunate girl for whom she acted as scribe in "On the Western Circuit." Yet Mr. Hardy gives us little explanation or analysis. He tells his story; we may do our own moralizing.

SIR HARRY PARKES.*

HARRY SMITH PARKES was one of the men whose consuming ambition was to make England great. He belonged to the school of statesmen who are incarnations of what has been called "the jingo policy." Sir Chaloner Alabaster thus summed up the character of the man who had spent his life in the most incessant and arduous toil for England:

> He believed that the first duty of an Englishman was to make England great; that to do so he should act as an Englishman, be perfectly fair and just, never to do anything mean or ungentlemanly, but have your own way in everything, and fight to the death, and if possible beyond it, to get it. Consciously or unconsciously modeled, upon one of his first chiefs, Lord Palmerston, his only thought was England and English interests; but like Lord Palmerston he had no far-reaching politics and was content to deal with present questions, troubling himself little with thought of the future — a thoroughly practical, honest, fearless public servant.

Sir Harry Parkes had many of the qualities which recall the soldier rather than the civilian. He was like the "old public functionary" of Roman days, unsleeping in energy and absolute master of administrative details. He had also immovable coolness and courage in danger, constant presence of mind, unflagging energy, and masterful habit of command. In our day of competitive examinations there is no scheme or recipe by which men of action like him can be turned out to order. He was certainly one of those men who have built up the English Empire and made the English name powerful all over the world. He came to China when but fourteen years of age, a slim, fair-haired boy, with eager young face and vivid blue eyes. He was on board the flagship Cornwallis, the deck ablaze with officers in full-dress uniform, when three mandarins set foot for the first time on a British man-of-war, and was formally presented to the Imperial commissioners. This was the 20th of August, 1842, before the fall of the old capital of the Ming Empire opened China to Western commerce and to Christian missionary enterprise. From that day forward until Sunday morning, the 22d of March, 1885, when the overtaxed brain gave way in Peking under the strain of a remittent typhoid fever, Harry Smith Parkes was the incarnation, in China and Japan and Korea, of England's might and ambition. For eighteen years of his life, when he was in his full strength and prime, indeed in the very rampancy of his vigor, he was Great Britain's Minister-plenipotentiary in Japan. Though other treaty-makers, professional and unprofessional, tried their hand with Korea, it was Sir Harry Parkes who made the first really satisfactory treaty with that long "outstanding and irreconcilable scoffer at Western civilization."

The two authors have, very properly, divided their work, each man working according to his ability. Stanley Lane-Poole is master of a fine English style and understands the art of luminous and dramatic writing. It is difficult to say how his presentation of Parkes or the Chinese could well be improved — making allowance, of course, for the fact that stress was not expected to be laid upon the discussion of ethics. One gets the idea that "British interests" is a kind of religion with the Englishman abroad as well as at home, and certainly British interests formed a large part of the religion of Sir Harry Parkes. Although a gentleman and a Christian, Sir Harry was at times the consummate master of an "unsanctified vocabulary," and enjoyed driving the heathen before him as the chaff is driven before the whirlwind. We believe, for ourselves, that this blue-eyed Englishman was a most efficient instrument in the hands of Providence in beating common sense and humanity into the heads of the men who until our own day never acknowledged any sovereigns or governments outside the Middle Kingdom.

---

* Life's Little Ironies. By Thomas Hardy. Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

*The Life of Sir Harry Parkes. Vol. I, by Stanley Lane-Poole; Vol. II, by F. V. Dickins and S. Lane-Poole. Macmillan & Co. $8.00.

For the greater part of the second volume Mr. F. V. Dickins of the University of London, a master of law and philosophy and for many years resident in Japan, is responsible. Mr. Dickins is a scholar in Japanese and has done some clever and creditable translation. He shares Sir Harry's views, as he so often shared and returned Sir Harry's hospitality. He seems to cherish many-sided suspicions of the United States, and thinks that a great deal that Americans do is necessarily very wicked. He does not hesitate occasionally to use downright slang, and the American reader is likely to be either amused or angry in reading Mr. Dickins' fascinating pages, for fascinating they are. He knows Japanese philosophy and history well, and this knowledge serves as an excellent substitute for his very evident lack of acquaintance with Japanese public men. So thorough is his treatment of Japan in the sixties and seventies, and so penetrating, philosophic, and informing his insight into the reality of life in old Japan and the causes of the recent revolutions which have made new Japan, that his 360 pages should stand in the library of books on Japan as a work of the first order.

Space will not suffice for criticism in detail of a book treating of a great man whom we have personally known and of countries with which we are familiar through residence and study. For the old resident of China and Japan this book stirs both the memory and the pulse, and has power on more than one page to moisten the eye. Those at home who wish to study the problem of the reconciliation of Oriental and Occidental civilization will find few if any books more valuable than this, while as an analysis of modern Western diplomacy in the three lands most dominated by Confucian thought it simply has no equal.

OVERHEARD IN ARCADY.*

THESE bright and ingenious dialogues were originally contributed to Life by the American Robert Bridges, under the pseudonym of "Droch." Their keen wit and sound judgment fully deserve reproduction in this tasteful volume, which has been cleverly illustrated by Messrs. Oliver Herford, F. G. Attwood, and A. E. Sterner. The appropriate motto is, "And a man's foes shall be they of his own household;" and the first household — Mr. Howells' — is composed of Bromfield Corey, Bartley Hubbard, Fulkerson, Miss Annie Kilburn, and Miss Penelope Lapham. They meet on a parlor car running between Boston and New York, and discourse in a lively and penetrating way on topics suggested by their experience as, in fact, characters in real life whom Mr. Howells has taken the liberty to put into his books. Hubbard proposes that they return the compliment by giving their opinions of the novelist. Mr. Corey suspects, for instance, that Mr. Howells "has always written with the utmost fidelity the impressions that the world has made on him at different periods of his life. The social problem seems to be the supreme thing to him now." Fulkerson cuts in to observe, from the business standpoint, that "what the great public wants to read about is its own misery, with directions for hypnotizing it into happiness," this being the secret of the success of Looking Backward and A Hazard of New Fortunes. Miss Kilburn's judgment, expressed to Penelope Lapham, is:

> Those men don't like Mr. Howells because he sees through the pretenses with which they bolster up their vanity. I suspect that even Mr. Corey is irritated at Howells' moral earnestness. In Mr. Corey's world manners, not morals, are the real thing.

In similar style Mr. Bridges introduces various members of the literary households of Messrs. James, Aldrich, Stockton, R. H. Davis, Crawford, Kipling, George Meredith, Stevenson, and Barrie. There are two supplementary dialogues. One, "The Home of Romance," is a conversation between "the wise Adrian" and "the gentle Diana" of New York, a newly wedded pair traveling in Scotland. The last and most amusing dialogue is "A Little Dinner in Arcady," where Life with Miss Fanny de Siècle (costume after Gibson) takes the head of the table, and each of the eight authors is mated with a character from another author's books. Mr. James, for example, has taken in "the Egyptian" of Thrums, and Mr. Crawford Miss Daisy Miller. The dinner naturally concludes with a toast from Mr. Howells to "the Flower of the Century — the American Girl," and one from Miss Fan to "the American Novelist."

There is an abundance of keen and telling criticism of modern fiction expressed humorously or seriously in this original volume, which combines jest and earnest in a very taking manner.

THREE BOOKS ON AUSTRALIA.*

IT is hard for most Americans to realize that Australia is a continent, yet such it is, both in size and in fauna and flora. Historically it is the newest of continents, and a large part of it is still unexplored and given over to dryness. In its greater bulk it is a thirsty land where no water is, but where there is plenty of sand and an abundance of thorns, which deserve their name, "wait-a-bit." Although to the Dutch are due the honors of first discovery and exploration, yet to Captain Cook is generally given the credit of discovery, and two of these three books have his portrait as a frontispiece, while his statue stands in one of the Australian cities. With American history Captain Cook has close touch. He not only discovered part of our own continent, but his monument marks the place where he lost his life. He went to Australia to observe the transit of Venus, and it was upon a platform erected for this same purpose in Independence Square, Philadelphia, that the Declaration of Independence was read July 4, 1776. Furthermore, not a few of the American loyalists who could not fight against King George made Australia their home. Australasia includes Tasmania and New Zealand, and each of these three works has much to say of the islands under British influence, outside of Australia proper.

The first book, a volume in the Story of the Nations series, is written by a gentleman who has already won honorable fame as a writer on New South Wales — one of the most important states of Australia. He writes agreeably, with much local color and apparent freedom from local prejudices. He pictures the early discoverers and treats of that convict era which has, even to this day, compelled the banishment of the theme of genealogy from ordinary conversation at Australian tea tables. Most interesting is his narrative of the struggle for free institutions. His method is, we think, the correct historic one of writing out separately the stories of the Australian states — New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, Western Australia, South Australia, Queensland, and New Zealand. His conclusion is that federal government is the one thing necessary to make the colonies of Australasia take their proper place among the nations of the world. It is more than probable that to Americans Australasia will be a subject of increasing rather than of decreasing interest.

The Messrs. Sutherland's book is a handy manual of history, properly divided into chapters and paragraphs for the student and the general reader. It is copiously illustrated, and the comparison of views of streets and buildings in the earlier and the later years is sufficiently suggestive. The story of the wars and the discovery of gold and the development of government by an Anglo-Saxon people have remarkable analogies in the evolution of the great American republic.

The anonymous parson's book is the most enjoyable of the three, for it deals more particularly with the actual life of the emigrants. He knows well the human nature of the Scotsman, Englishman, Welshman, Irishman, Yankee, Chinaman, and Maori. He pictures "the bush" and the lights and shadows of life of men among the cattle, insects, plants, and animals of the interior, and shows what a fine country Australia would be if it were provided with navigable rivers. Those who think of going to Australia must certainly read this book, for it tells all about pioneering, squatting, gold-digging, shepherding, and how to get lost in the bush. One of the lively chapters is about matrimony, another about adventures, while in regard to "convictism" the author frankly confesses that there is no word in the English language of which one requires to make a more studied use in Australia than the word "convict." It is entirely erased from the vocabulary of those who desire to live peaceably with all men and who have learned enough of the conventionalism of society to prevent them from offending against its rules and maxims. Evidently, we infer from the last chapter, there is as much crooked politics, boodleism, bossism, and waste of public money in Australia as there is in our American cities. The author declares that the British lion in Great Britain is a noble animal, which stands by and sees that there is not a hair of your head touched; in Australia he is a ferocious brute, takes you into his mouth and swallows you.

---

* Overheard in Arcady. By Robert Bridges. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

* The Story of Australasia. By Greville Tregarthen. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

History of Australia and New Zealand. By Alexander and George Sutherland. Longmans, Green & Co. 90c.

Australia as It Is. By a Clergyman. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75.

THE COUNTESS RADNA.*

MR. NORRIS brings together in Paris two persons of diverse temperaments, training, and nationality — the Hungarian Countess Radna, a brilliant cosmopolitan, and Douglas Colborne, a typical English gentleman of more than average ability. The young countess, having an immense fortune and no near relatives, is mistress of her own movements to an unusual degree. Her restless nature and keen intelligence prompt her to secure what pleasure she can from the encounter with new characters and new phases of living. Naturally she finds the modest, high-minded Englishman an interesting study. He quickly falls in love with the piquant lady and resolutely wins her. After their marriage he takes her to England, where she grows heartily tired of country life by the time Colborne is elected to Parliament. Although she still loves her husband, she begins to think of him as commonplace. They have some misunderstandings and she suddenly leaves him for the Continent, where she spends the rest of her life. Colborne follows her, makes such overtures as he deems permitted by self-respect, is repulsed, and returns to England. He throws himself more fully into public life and increasingly relies upon the comradeship of his old friend, Miss Rowley, who is a fine woman and a good politician.

From considering Colborne's somber domestic affairs we are somewhat relieved by following his cousin Innes' spirited and successful pursuit of an apparently hopeless prize. An embassy so remarkable as that of the Sicilian Marchese would go far to justify an author in pronouncing it "a hard matter to tell what influence any given incident or announcement may exercise upon so curiously complex a being as an educated Italian of the present day." Nor is Mr. Norris' main theme an easy one to treat. Our judgment is that upon the whole he has drawn the lines of cleavage correctly. The matter-of-fact way in which the story is told has something to do with producing this impression, yet there seems no reason to doubt that to such dramatis personæ the processes of disillusion and of quiet, final reconciliation would have occurred very much as they are chronicled.

SAMUEL LONGFELLOW.*

OF these two volumes which set before us the life and work of a true Son of the Spirit, the second is the larger and more substantial. Mr. Longfellow, a brother of the famous poet, was himself a poet of a high order of excellence and a preacher whose call to preach was made evident to all who attended upon his services. He was not bodily robust, and his work as a pastor and preacher was therefore intermittent. Settled over Unitarian churches in Fall River, Brooklyn, and Germantown, he had a placid career, though taking a mild part in the controversies over radicalism that vexed the church with which he was loosely connected as they are now vexing other religious bodies. He was essentially a quiet, brooding mind, profoundly religious, and most kindly and loving in all relations with his fellow creatures, old or young. Mr. May's sketch of this life is at once affectionate and temperate, and it will have no small value for those who knew its subject and for all interested in the development of religious thought in America.

Born in Portland in 1819, Samuel Longfellow was the youngest of eight children, equally divided between the two sexes. He went up to Harvard at sixteen, and was graduated from the Divinity School in 1846. Edward Everett Hale was from this time a dear friend, but his bosom companion was Samuel Johnson. The two were associated even as theological students in the compilation of the Book of Hymns, one of the most important volumes in American hymnology. A higher literary tone and a warmer religious feeling have been induced in our hymns by this "Sam Book" (as Theodore Parker called it) and its successor, Hymns of the Spirit. Whittier the two Sams "may almost be said to have introduced to the world as a hymnist;" most of Whittier's hymns, now in our church books of song, were not written as hymns, and to Samuel Johnson, Samuel Longfellow, and William C. Gannett is due the editing, sometimes audacious but always justified by the result, which made the originals available for the inspiring office they have since performed. Newman's "Kindly Light," "Nearer, my God, to thee" and fresh hymns by Sears, Furness, Clarke, Mrs. Stowe, Emerson, H. W. Longfellow, Trench, Very, Lowell, Parker, and others marked this notable book. The two compilers' own contributions were among the finest, and they added others as life went by. Mr. May tells us that H. W. Longfellow "was once greatly pleased when a friend referred to him as 'the brother of a poet.' He fully appreciated the implication." Samuel Longfellow was, indeed, as a religious poet the superior of his more famous brother, who has left no such beautiful hymns as

> Again as evening's shadow falls,

and

> I look to Thee in every need
> And never look in vain!

with more than a score of others fit to endure as songs of the Church Universal.

It is not a little surprising, indeed, that Mr. May should not have included in his second independent volume all the hymns that can be ascribed to Mr. Longfellow. They have not, to our knowledge, been brought together, as they richly deserve. His chief title to remembrance would have been vindicated to any reader had the scope of this second volume been thus widened. As it is, it includes four papers of a devoutly theistic complexion and nineteen sermons. The essays will seem much less radical to many now than when they first appeared, and the sermons are full of moral and spiritual edification. Mr. Longfellow was "a transcendentalist by nature" and a beautiful Christian judged by any test but that of the theological bigot. He "always preached religion" whatever his subject, and the indwelling God was the favorite theme of his sermons as of his hymns. These last are sure to keep his name in lasting remembrance, for there are few titles to immortality so clear as authorship of a favorite hymn.

THE RAIDERS.*

THE Rev. S. R. Crockett's second book has met with warm appreciation from the English literary world. Mr. Crockett himself has been in London lately and been lionized. He is, physically, nearly six feet in height and broad shouldered, with a reddish brown beard. He is full of genial humor, and in his Highland village he reads the daily and weekly papers and the magazines and reviews and keeps thoroughly in touch with the varied interests of London life. In his new novel he shows himself master of a literary style all his own. In The Stickit Minister there were suggestions of Mr. Barrie's style, and some critics were base enough to call him not a rival but an imitator. The Raiders is, however, utterly unlike Mr. Barrie's Little Minister and is less modern than Mr. Crockett's first volume; it shows its writer to be one of Mr. Stevenson's literary confrères and very skillful in the art of the historical novelist.

---

* The Countess Radna. By W. E. Norris. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

* Samuel Longfellow: Memoir and Letters, and Essays and Sermons. Two vols. Edited by Joseph May. Houghton Mifflin & Co. Each, $1.50.

* The Raiders. Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt. By S. R. Crockett. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

It is the lovers of Scott's romantic novels who will best enjoy this thrilling, stirring tale of border warfare and wild, gypsy life. The hero of the tale — it is truly an old-fashioned romance — is Laird Heron, one of the poor Scotch lairds of the olden time who inherited little but his name and the family pride which went with it. The heroine is "May-Mischief," a sister of the wild Maxwells of Craigdarroch. "The Raiders" were daring tribes of outlaws made up of the Marshalls, the Macatericks, and the Faas. These tribes herded together in the upper hill country on the borders of the three counties of Kirkcudbright, Wigtown, and Ayr. Some of them belonged to ancient Scotch families and had a certain rough code of honor. But with them were the Macatericks, a parcel of rascals from the wilder parts of North Caireely. These raiders thought nothing of plundering the men who lived near the shore. They stole their cattle and sometimes their women, and, strange to say, in the early days no one interfered with their marauding.

Hector Faa sees May Maxwell at the great fair of Keltonville, and sends word to her brothers that she must be his bride. After this open declaration of his plans the gypsy chief proceeded to attack the Maxwells and stole the girl from them. But the Laird of Heron loved "May-Mischief," so the interest of the story centers around the chase after May Maxwell and her final capture. Many are the bloody battles fought in wild, picturesque spots; many are the hairbreadth escapes and the brave deeds of the young Laird Heron as he seeks for his lost bride. The description of the fight by the side of Dee Bridge is a fine bit of writing worth quoting:

> Then suddenly a great fierce light arose in the rear. The outlaws had kindled a fire, and the red light burned up, filtering through the ranks of the cattle and projecting great horned shadows against the clouds. For a few minutes this picture stood like a painted show, with the Dee water running dark and cool beneath a kind of Circe's Inferno, where the beasts are tortured forever. Two half naked fiends ran alongside the column of cattle, carrying what was apparently a pot of blazing fire, which they threw in great ladlefuls on the backs of the packed beasts that stood frantically heaving their heads up to the sky. Then in a moment from all sides arose deafening yells. Fire lighted and ran along the hides of the rough, red Highland and black Galloway cattle. Wild men sprang on their backs, yelling. Dogs drove them forward. With one wild, irresistible, universal rush the maddened column of beasts drove at the bridge and swept us aside like chaff.

This strange, uncanny scene, possible only in the rudest kind of border warfare, is only one out of many given by the writer of The Raiders. The escape from the foul "murder hole" and Silver-Sand's simulation of the "witch dog" are exciting enough for even the readers of Mr. Rider Haggard to rejoice in. Mr. Crockett has a vivid imagination and a keen love of the romantic past of the Highlanders as well as an acute eye for describing the life of today. The Stickit Minister and The Raiders have very little in common except a mastery of the Scotch dialect. But from the dramatic power shown in The Raiders and the keen sense of humor and pathos displayed in the first volume of sketches, we may, perhaps, get a novel which shall be quite the equal of The Little Minister.

◆

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.*

THE profuse literature of the French Revolution and Napoleon Bonaparte has had an accession of great interest and value in these two volumes of reminiscences by the worthy Chancellor Pasquier, of whom two attractive portraits are given. He attained his chancellorship under Louis Philippe, but his long life, extending from 1767 to 1862, went back to the Old Régime and came down into the second empire. He was a councilor in the parlement of Paris under Louis XVI, master of requests, councilor, procureur général du sceau et des titres, and prefect of police under the empire, director general of roads and bridges under Louis XVIII, minister of the interior in the cabinet of Talleyrand in 1815, minister of justice in that of Richelieu in 1817, and of foreign affairs in that of Decazes in 1819, and in 1842 he was elected a member of the Academy.

Pasquier gives a rosy view of the condition of the country in 1789, and we cannot believe him well-informed in comparison with Arthur Young. Belonging to the old noblesse, he was in favor of moderate measures of reform, but was naturally alienated to the king's side by the excesses of the Revolution. His father was guillotined, and he himself had narrow escapes from the same fate, being saved once by a faithful drummer boy, who succeeded in rescuing him from an angry mob. He accepted office under Bonaparte because he deemed it his duty to submit to the inevitable and wait in patience the return of happier days. The value of his recollections is largely due to the independent and interior light Pasquier throws upon the events of those great days. He gives a plain, unvarnished account of what he actually saw and heard. However different his narrative from that of the most trustworthy historians, it has at all times the interest of a veracious story told by an honest and competent man. The account of the taking of the Bastille, for instance, varies greatly from that commonly received, and it is probable that he saw only one side of the event. This is what he saw:

> I was present at the taking of the Bastille. What has been styled the fight was not serious, for there was absolutely no resistance shown. Within the hold's walls were neither provisions nor ammunition. It was not even necessary to invest it. The regiment of gardes françaises which led the attack presented itself under the walls on the rue Saint-Antoine side, opposite the main entrance, which was barred by a drawbridge. There was a discharge of a few musket shots, to which no reply was made, and then four or five discharges from a cannon. It has been claimed that the latter broke the chains of the drawbridge. I did not notice this, and yet I was standing close to the point of attack. What I did see plainly was the action of the soldiers, invalides, or others, grouped on the platform of the high tower, holding their muskets stock in air, and expressing by all means employed under similar circumstances their desire of surrendering. . . . The truth is, that this great fight did not for a moment frighten the numerous spectators who had flocked to witness its result. Among them were many women of fashion, who, in order to be closer to the scene, had left their carriages some distance away. . . . By my side stood Mlle. Contat, of the Comédie-Française. We stayed together till the very end, and then I gave her my arm back to her carriage, which had waited in the Place Royale.

Pasquier gives much new information concerning such matters as the Cadoudal conspiracy, the death of Pichegru (who, he believes, committed suicide), the murder of the Duc d'Enghien, and the audacious attempt of General Malet during Napoleon's absence in Russia to overthrow the government. The Portalis episode is told with much spirit. The second volume is occupied entirely with the events of the three tremendous years, 1812–1814. Those who delight to trace back events of the greatest pith and moment to trifling causes will notice here Pasquier's account, derived from M. Daru, who was near the Emperor, of his failure to follow up the enemy after the battle of Dresden:

> He had been overtaken, while on the march, with such violent cramps in the stomach that it had been impossible for him to go any further, and he had been compelled to have himself brought back to the rear. "Yet it was nothing," he went on to say, "but an attack of indigestion caused by a wretched stew seasoned with garlic, which I cannot endure, but I had cause to fear that my ailment was something far more serious." As a matter of fact he believed he had been poisoned; it was a fear to which he readily gave credence. "And on such trifles as these," he went on to say, "the greatest events hang! The present one is perhaps irreparable."

The failure of the Emperor's attempt to poison himself in the dark days of April, 1814, on the other hand, he took as a sign that "his great destiny had not yet run its course." A very interesting passage gives the particulars of the last days of Josephine, for whom the Czar Alexander showed the warmest friendship. Pasquier concludes this second volume with a statement of his pleasant situation when the Restoration seemed to be an accomplished fact. He had tried honestly to serve his country and he had betrayed no man. No longer prefect of police, he had been appointed to an honorable and congenial position. But this happiness was of short duration, as the next volume will show.

---

* Memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier. Edited by the Duc D'Audiffret-Pasquier. Translated by Charles E. Roche. Vol. I (1789–1810); Vol. II (1812–1814). Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.

THE SACRED CITY OF THE ETHIOPIANS.*

It rarely happens that a book of travels contains more that is really valuable to the student and at the same time interesting to the general reader than this record of experiences in Abyssinia during the past year. While the primary object of Mr. Bent's visit, as he tells us in the opening chapter, was to study the antiquities of Aksum, the sacred city of Ethiopia, a not less interesting portion of his book is that which treats of the quaint form of Christianity which survives among the Abyssinians in Adona, Yeha, and other places which he visited.

As discovery follows discovery it becomes more and more apparent that in ancient times there flourished a vast Arabian empire on the confines of the known world. Among the colonists of this powerful commercial people were those who settled in Abyssinia and transplanted Sabæan or sun worship to their new home. Estranged from their mother country, and isolated from the great civilization of which they had been a part, they dropped out of history and were forgotten. After the many centuries that have passed the ruins of the ancient cities of Abyssinia have been rediscovered by travelers, and the story which they tell is being interpreted by scholars.

One of the most interesting chapters in Mr. Bent's book is that on the inscriptions interpreted by Dr. Heinrich Müller, which shows what a wealth of research awaits investigators in this field. Much of the information is new to science, the result of observations made under the most difficult circumstances. The country is not an easy one in which to travel; many of the inhabitants are hostile to Europeans, and brigandage is a normal condition. It has always been hoped that research in the ancient Ethiopian monasteries might bring to light valuable manuscripts — perhaps copies of the Gospels or other Biblical writings. This would seem probable from the primitive character of the Christianity still surviving in Abyssinia. Such hopes have not yet been realized, however, and Mr. Bent believes that while there is a wealth of Apocryphal literature, such as an exciting history of Adam and Eve and a second Acts of the Apostles, to which the same weight is given by the Abyssinian priests as to the Authorized Version, there is no ground for the hope that there is a vast abundance of old manuscripts at Aksum. The primitive form of Christianity still practiced in Abyssinia, especially the imprint which it bears of a pagan cult, is described in a very interesting way. Mr. Bent found the priests using the sistrum, or sacred rattle, of the Egyptians and the Christian ceremonial dance which still survives in European church services in two places — Echternach in Germany, and Seville in Spain. This book offers to the student of ceremonials in religion a collection of instructive facts which have never been recorded.

The account of the visit to the sacred city merits thoughtful reading, for it is a valuable contribution to knowledge. It is written in an interesting way, and will give to any one who wishes a general knowledge of the antiquities of Abyssinia the desired information. The appendix, by Dr. Garson, is an important addition to the somatology of the Abyssinians.

— Mr. J. M. Barrie, the author of The Little Minister, has suffered not a little from the unauthorized collection into books in this country of newspaper contributions and the like for which he never contemplated any such use. In a letter written during the winter to an American acquaintance he spoke of two or three of these "'author's editions' of works by me, which are scraps from papers, etc., collected by themselves [the publishers] much against my wish," and says decisively, "In short, I have published nothing since The Little Minister." According to the Bookbuyer Mr. Barrie is not the only sufferer from this kind of thing, but he has been perhaps the chief, owing to the comparatively long silence which followed his most successful book.

— Some of the friends of the late Theodore Child have raised a sum of over seven hundred dollars to be used for a memorial. It has been sent to the American Presbyterian Mission in Tabriz, Persia, where Mr. Child was cared for during his illness with the cholera. Probably it will be used to establish a hospital room or bed, to be known by his name.

— A correspondent writes to point out a wild misprint on page 301 of the second volume of Mr. Lowell's Letters, a book which shows from end to end evidences of the minutest care in its making. "Resuscitate Sambo" the writer is made to say, where, as the context concerns Don Quixote, "resuscitate Sancho" must be meant. But merely human skill and watchfulness appear to be quite inadequate to guard against errors of the press. In the present instance, in spite of whatever natural annoyance he might feel at the fatality, one fancies that Mr. Lowell himself would hardly be able to keep from laughing at the notion of such a queer waking-up of the wrong passenger. — The Nation.

— Mr. Edgar Stanton Maclay, author of the History of the Navy, is a son of a well-known missionary in China and Japan, now president of the Maclay Theological Seminary at Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Maclay graduated from Syracuse University in 1885, obtained a post-graduate degree, devoted himself to the study of American history, and spent considerable time in France and England pursuing his studies and gathering information for his History of the Navy. He edited the journal of his great-grandfather, William Maclay, which was published by D. Appleton & Co. about four years ago, and has contributed articles to Harper's, the Century, and other magazines, upon topics connected with naval history. Mr. Maclay is an occasional contributor to the New York Tribune.

— Shakespeare's birthday was observed in the usual way at Stratford-on-Avon. A number of wreaths were placed upon his tomb, and the boys attending the school in which he was educated paid tribute to his memory. The customary celebration at the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre began with "Much Ado About Nothing," to be followed on the remaining evenings of the week by "The School for Scandal," "Richard III," "As You Like It," and "King Henry IV," Part II, on Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

— Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is reported to have said in a recent conversation, apropos of his autobiography: "I work at the memoirs an hour or two each day, and am making satisfactory progress. That is, I have about one half completed of all I shall write. Then I shall place the manuscript in the hands of my publishers, and they will keep it in their safe until I shall have passed away. My belief has always been that a man's memoirs should be distinctly posthumous, and I shall carry out that belief in my own case."

— Miss Beatrice Harraden will spend several months on a California fruit farm in search of health. She is a member of a musical and artistic family, the daughter of a man of scientific attainments, and a champion of the higher education of women and of woman's suffrage. She is too nervous for dictation, dislikes a typewriter, and is obliged to write with the left hand. Ships that Pass in the Night was written in this way, as was her new book issued by the Putnams.

— Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, the popular English writer, is tall and inclines to stoutness. Her hair is white — she is now in her seventies — and she has large, dark-brown eyes that are full of expression. She has a few intimate friends to whom she is lovingly devoted, and her conversation is said to be fascinating. She is passionately fond of books, and her house almost overflows with them.

— The hymn to Apollo, the music and words of which were found engraved on a marble slab unearthed at Delphi last autumn, was sung for the first time in two thousand years at the French Archæological School in Athens, on March 29, before the royal family of Greece, the diplomatic corps, and a representative company of people prominent in science, art, and letters.

---

*The Sacred City of the Ethiopians, being a record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia in 1893. By J. Theodore Bent, F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With a chapter by Prof. H. D. Müller on the Inscriptions from Yeha and Aksum, and an Appendix on the Morphological Character of the Abyssinians by J. G. Garson, M.D. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00.

The Literary World

BOSTON 5 MAY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Wood-Longing.

O books, my books, ye give me naught for all my asking!
Vain is the spirit's tasking
To raise up honor from the printed line,
Or scent ripe clusters in the long-dried wine
Of antique banquets spilled upon the page.
O books are but the cage
Where echoes of the spirit sing,
Nor ever truly ring
The clarion cry, the tabor and the pipe,
Whereto, ere yet the year is ripe,
The happy rivers run, with rhythmic glancing,
And all the fauns and satyrs fall a-dancing!
One medicine hath life for sick and sane;
One crown of joy, one solacing for pain.
Who beauty seeks and truth,
Or springs of vanished youth,
With fitful joyance, or that full content
For gods and lilies meant,
Swift be his passing to the field and wood,
To face the immemorial passion of the flood,
The amplitude of all the fertile plains,
Where mild abundance reigns;
The seated majesty of crowned hills,
Whose mantling shadow fills
The well-loved valley softly laid below,
Fed from the rock, in royal overflow.

Spirit, what wilt thou dare
Just to be one with earth and air?
To read the writing on the river bed,
And trace God's mystical mosaic overhead?
O sweet familiar of the rustling leaf,
Dear, idle mourner of the gathered sheaf,
Lover and guardian of the beech tree's bole,
Wooer unwearied of her dryad soul,
Tippler on sacramental wine,
The great round world is thine!
Thy rich inheritance to tread the earth
When all the ecstasy of myriad birth
Afflicts her with a rapturous shuddering;
To feel the beating of the mighty wing
Wherewith the great wind winnows out her halls,
Where never footing falls
But it makes music, as the sweep of stars,
And not one jarring note the lyric heaven mars.
Thy happy destiny to lie
Within the thriftless grasses, opulently
Sifting thy jewels with an idle touch,
Still heedless of how little or how much
The careless giving of the royal hour,
For all the morn is thine, and the great sun thy dower.

O happy beggary!
O greedy eye
And all unsated heart!
Thou only hast a part
In treasures manifold
Of wealth that grows not old.
O incommunicable speech!
For he who reads a book may preach
A hundred sermons from its foolish rote
And rhyme reiterant on one dull note.
But he who spends an hour within the wood
Hath fed on fairy food;
And he who hath eaten of the forest fruit
Is ever mute.
Nothing may he reveal.
Nature hath set her seal
Of honor on anointed lips;
And one who daring dips
His cup within her potent brew
Hath drunk of silence too.
What doth the robin say,
And what the martial jay?
Who'll swear the bluebird's lilt is all of love?
Or who translate the desolation of the dove?
For even in the common speech
Of feathered fellows, each to each,
Abideth still the primal mystery,
The brooding past, the germ of life to be;
And one poor weed, upspringing to the sun,
Breeds all creation's wonder, new begun.
Come, then, who would be free,
Break bonds and run with me!
Stay not your hasting till the mystic round
Of green, untrodden ground
Hath hid us from the eyes of men.
There to be young again,
There to forget old passion's folly
And all dull learning's melancholy.
Come, for the forest calls!
Come, ere the echo falls!

ALICE BROWN.

LONDON LETTER.

A DULL season, cry the booksellers; but the lovely weather has kept all who could afford to prolong their Easter vacation out of town, and they will not return till May brings the Season, when all London is at its gayest and most brilliant. May is the most thronged month of the year in London, for not alone are the fashionables in residence, but the country cousins are up for the picture shows and the religious people for the May meetings in Exeter Hall and elsewhere. In May London is as pretty as Paris, for the spring toilets are as gay as the myriad flowers that adorn the newly spring-cleaned house fronts, and all day there is an incessant flood tide of gayety and brightness. Withal, it is the publishing season, a thing of most moment to authors young and old.

One of the very few notable books is Mr. Thomas Hardy's Life's Little Ironies, published by the American firm Osgood, McIlvaine & Co., whom he seems to have adopted permanently as publishers. The book, though more fragmentary than Tess or The Woodlanders, shows no falling off in power and vitality. Mr. Hardy's wonderful genius is in making his stories march side by side with some of the great changes of the seasons and interpreting the joy or tragedy of the one by the events of the other. Who can forget the luxuriant summer weather when Tess of the D'Urbervilles' love story blossomed at the dairy farm, or that cruel winter when she worked on the bare uplands and the desolate nature showed her a face as hopeless as the face of the years that stretched before her? No one else can render for us the sap stirring in the veins of the world, the year's growing and the year's dying. The book will have reached you on the other side. There is one passage that greatly impresses me — the one in which the widow of an unequal marriage rides with her country lover of long ago to Covent Garden while the green dawn widens over London. No one but Mr. Hardy could have written this description.

Another remarkable book is Mr. George Moore's Esther Waters. It is a study of the life of a servant girl, and it will strike the most unobservant as marvelous in the exactitude with which the life is painted. It is Zolaesque in its truth and its detail; but though the story is sordid enough, there is something in it that lifts it above the level of Mr. Moore's former work. The sordidness seems to be there rightly rather than because the writer sought after ugliness. It is likely to give Mr. Moore at last a serious reputation, though it will not be at all a book for the drawing-room table. Some chapters of Esther Waters ran in the Pall Mall Gazette — a fact which rather surprised people at the time, as the story was likely to alarm all good citizens who bought the paper when going home by train of an evening and who liked to share with their families by far the smartest evening paper in London. However, Esther Waters in that form could not harm any one, while it might do a good deal to excite sympathy and interest for a class in a certain way singularly unprotected.

The Pall Mall, by the way, under the ownership of Mr. Astor, has become the most literary paper in London. It shares with the Daily Chronicle the privilege of being manned by "young men." People here talk of the "young men" of the Chronicle and the "young men" of the Pall Mall impartially. They are alike in their devotion to literature, for the Chronicle, the organ of Democracy, is curiously enough the only daily in London which devotes a page to literature each day. But otherwise the young men are very dissimilar. The Chronicle is Liberal and earnest; the Pall Mall, Tory and flippant. The latter paper has the quality of distinction. The short, literary articles are full of style; the Autolycus column, contributed nightly by some distinguished woman of letters, is ever fresh and literary. A new feature is that of a short poem each evening, and not one quite poor poem has appeared in the month or two since the poetry was instituted, while there have been many delicate and beautiful lyrics. In mere news matters the Pall Mall is always ahead of its contemporaries with some well-founded sensation. "But then," say the other papers, "give us a millionaire for our proprietor and we'll show you what we can do."

The man who gave its ultimate distinction to journalism ceased to be an editor last week when Mr. Henley left the National Observer in favor of Mr. Edmund Vincent. The paper becomes the property of an English peer. Mr. Vincent is known as the author of a Life of the Duke of Clarence. He begins wisely, for he desires to retain the services of the contributors who under Mr. Henley helped to give the paper its cachet. The personnel of these contributors is, by the by, except for some very famous names, much the same as that of the Pall Mall Gazette. To give an idea of the notable persons who have written for the National Observer under Mr. Henley and their very notable contributions, I may mention that Mr. Stevenson has contributed more largely to his friend's paper than to any other periodical. His famous "Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. Hyde of Honolulu" appeared therein, as did his "Isle of Voices," his "Footnote to History," and some of his ballads. Mr. Hardy contributed a portion of Tess of the D'Urbervilles, Mr. Barrie part of his Window in Thrums, Mr. Kipling many of his Barrack-Room Ballads. Among the younger or less famous writers who have made their mark are Mr. W. B. Yeats, Mr. Gilbert Parker, Mr. Marriott Watson, Mr. Kenneth Grahame, and many others. Mr. Henley agrees with Mr. Coventry Patmore in denying to women the creative art, yet he opened the columns of the National Observer to three or four favored ones. Mrs. Meynell was one; others were Mrs. Tomson and Miss Mary Kendall and the lady who writes under the pseudonym of "George Fleming." Some of Mr. Henley's friends and admirers gave him a send-off supper last week at a famous little restaurant in Rupert Street, Leicester Square. He goes with a great deal of devoted affection and admiration attaching to his personality, and, alas! under the shadow of a bereavement especially desolating. Mr. Henley's one child, a little daughter of great beauty and vivacity, died a couple of months ago. The sense of this paralyzing blow has given an added tenderness to the farewell which Mr. Henley's friends have said to him on his leaving the National Observer.

The play and literature, so long unnaturally divorced, seem to be coming together again. There is a successful new play by "George Fleming" running at present at the Garrick. Dr. Todhunter's "Comedy of Sighs" at the Avenue seems not to have done as well as was hoped, through no deficiency of the play, but because the audience was not accustomed to the new conditions, one of which was the absence of an orchestra. This on a first night, with the inevitable delays, the slight prolixity of the play, since considerably cut down, and the nervousness of the actors, which made some of the speeches indistinct, injured the play at its first going off. It has since righted itself to a considerable extent. Mr. Yeats' "Land of Heart's Desire," which preceded it, one could not help feeling must be strange, indeed, to a London audience; but it met with a considerable measure of sympathy, and the child actress who had the principal part in it, Miss Dorothy Paget, acquitted herself admirably. Miss Paget is the niece of Miss Florence Farr and the daughter of the well-known artist, Mr. Walter Paget. But in the most capable hands Mr. Yeats' delicate poetry must suffer in stage representation. He is not strongly dramatic, and his strength lies in the subtle and the exquisite things which are rather for the perception of the student than the playgoer. When these two plays are taken off they will be replaced at the Avenue by a new play of Mr. Bernard Shaw's.

There is rather a fashion for books of good stories nowadays. The latest addition to this special kind of literature for the hour is Mr. Frankfort Moore's A Journalist's Note-Book. Mr. Moore is the witty author of I Forbid the Banns, A Gray Eye or So, and one or two other strikingly brilliant novels. His Note-Book is full of stories racy and new, and though it may be laid down and taken up again at any moment, it has little of the almost inevitable desultoriness which belongs to books of its class. Mr. Moore rather seems to lead one on from story to story till insensibly one is brought to the end of the handsome big book. It is pretty sure to be one of the successes of the season.

Another evidence of the revival in Irish literature which has attracted so much interest is the first issue of the Irish Home Library, which has just appeared in Dublin. This is The Jacobite War in Ireland, edited from the manuscript of Charles O'Kelly, a colonel in King James' army, by George Noble, Count Plunkett, and the Rev. Edmund Hogan, S.J. This most interesting document is handsomely produced in a long, narrow volume, printed on good paper, and prefaced by a fine portrait of the Earl of Tyrconnell. If the Irish Home Library can do as well as this for a shilling, it ought to run well level with the New Irish Library which Mr. Fisher Unwin is publishing for the Irish Literary Society and which is an assured financial success. The promoters of the Irish Home Library believe in having their books produced and published in Ireland. All luck to them! Count Plunkett, by the way, is one who has made many sacrifices for Irish literature. In the barren years when we had no indication of a Miss Barlow, a Miss Lawless, a W. B. Yeats, or a Douglas Hyde on our literary horizon, Count Plunkett was feeding the sacred lamp that so nearly flickered to extinction. In the early eighties he edited and financed a very high class review, Hibernia, which contained on the whole finer literary matter than anything published in Ireland since the Dublin University Magazine removed to London. Miss Barlow began in Hibernia, to which she contributed many classical poems of excellence but without any touch of Irish idyllism.

KATHARINE (TYNAN) HINKSON.

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE failure of Charles L. Webster & Co. has created considerable surprise and general regret among literary people here. To the few who carefully watch the course of the publishing trade in New York it was not altogether unexpected, for during the past few months the firm has been disposing of some of its best books to other houses. The great public, however, supposed that the publishers who controlled the works of Mark Twain, one of the most popular of present-day authors, and who had brought out the memoirs of General Grant, a notably great success even in these days of big sales, must be doing a most profitable business. The scarcity of money in the market, however, made it impossible for the firm to tide over its difficulties, and so its assignment was inevitable.

The sympathy everywhere felt with Mark Twain is plainly due as much to his personal as to his literary popularity. He it was who founded the house, and he has continued to be its chief partner. It was hoped that his private fortune might not be involved in the failure, but there is no doubt that he will lose a great deal of money by it. A few years ago he was considered one of the wealthiest of living American writers; his fortune was probably never as great as it was reported to be, and whatever it may have really been it has been greatly impaired during the past few years. He has been interested in several schemes and they have not all been profitable.

Mr. Clemens returned to New York somewhat unexpectedly a few weeks ago after a very brief stay abroad, and he is living for the present at The Players. He will probably rejoin his family in Europe before long. His wife's health, which has been unsatisfactory for some time past, will, it is hoped, be sufficiently restored to enable the family to return to America for good within another year. Whether, after resuming his residence in Hartford, the author will be persuaded to return to the platform or not is altogether problematical. He is not very fond of giving public readings, and he talked a short time ago as if his career as a reader were over. As for his future plans with regard to his publishing business, these have not as yet been announced.

I met Mr. Hamlin Garland on the street the other day, and I learned from him that he was about to leave New York, where he has been spending the winter, and to take up his residence in Chicago. He has been ostensibly living here during the past winter, but his frequent engagements for lectures in various parts of the country have kept him out of the city a large part of the time. I asked him if he didn't enjoy living in New York, and he frankly confessed that he did not. "There are certain kinds of work," he said, "that I can't do here without a good deal of effort. And then life in this rushing, tearing place makes me very restless. I feel especially restless at the present time, just when spring is coming on. I can't bear to be cooped up within brick walls, and I long for the sight of the prairies and for the freedom of the West." So, in spite of the rushing, tearing qualities of Chicago, which seem to me far greater than those of New York, Mr. Garland finds the Western city more to his liking, probably on account of its proximity to the prairies. There he expects to reside for an indefinite period. This, by the way, marks Mr. Garland's return to the West after an absence from it of more than a dozen years. He was born in Iowa, and at the age of twenty-two he went to Boston, where he studied and lectured at the School of Oratory until three years ago. Since then he has delivered a course of lectures at this school each year, and he will probably continue to do so. Mr. Garland's literary shibboleths, by the way, have just assumed permanent form in his volume of essays which Stone & Kimball have just brought out.

Mrs. Burton Harrison has been having a great deal of trouble in finding a title for her new novel, which satirizes the intense young woman of the period. At first she called it A Bachelor Girl, but it was discovered that this attractive title had already been used for a novel. Then Mrs. Harrison decided that A Bachelor Maid would serve her purpose; later, this was changed to Two Bachelor Maids. Finally, after much cogitation the second title was resumed, and A Bachelor Maid it will be called after all. The story, which was secured by the Century after lively competition with other publications, was delivered to the printers while the last sheets of the manuscript were scarcely dry; the first installment will probably appear in the July number, and the whole work will be profusely illustrated. From what I have heard of the plot and treatment I should think that it promised to become as popular as anything Mrs. Harrison has written. It goes into the woman suffrage movement in its present-day aspect, which is, of course, quite different from the aspect it bore a few years, even a few months, ago, and altogether it is about as modern as a novel can be. Mrs. Harrison, who has had a winter of unremitting hard work, will soon leave town for her home at Bar Harbor, a beautiful place, where she devotes herself to gardening in particular, to out-of-door life in general, and where she never touches pen to paper unless obliged to write by the exigencies of personal correspondence.

Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart, the popular writer of short stories, is going to try a novel undertaking next summer. For the past two years Mrs. Stuart has won great popularity in various parts of the country as a reader from her own works; indeed there is no other woman author of America who reads with more delightful humor and with finer skill. Her success on the platform has encouraged her to plan a series of readings at watering places, and these she will probably begin some time in July. If her success during the summer is half as great as her success during the past winter she will have no reason to regret her experiment.

M. Paul Bourget still lingers in this country. His friends say that he is immensely interested in his studies of American life and that he really enjoys living here. I saw him on the street the other day; he was walking rapidly, absorbed, apparently, in gazing at the sidewalk. He is a man of medium height, with a youthful face, light hair and eyes, and an olive complexion. He wears a monocle, which, with his dress and his nonchalant manner, gives him the air more of an Englishman than a Parisian. He has written some articles about this country, and he is reported to be hard at work on an American novel.

Mr. J. B. Walker, owner of the Cosmopolitan, has purchased the Barney estate in Irvington-on-the-Hudson — an extensive property, containing many acres of land, a large mansion, and several houses — and he proposes to move his magazine there sometime during the next few months. At Irvington he will, of course, be able to bring out his magazine far more cheaply than he can do in New York, where rent is enormously high; moreover, his employees will be able to live at far less expense and more comfortably than they can live here. The printers, the business force, and the editors will be established and will form quite a large colony near the spot where Washington Irving lived. Altogether, the move is interesting as being in direct opposition to the tendency at the present time of nearly all the larger industries to gather in cities.

I have been informed that the statement of a literary man of this city, to which I recently referred in the LITERARY WORLD, regarding the tendency of the business of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. was without warrant. The chief business of the firm still goes naturally to Boston, and there is no indication of a change in its course to the New York office, which, in spite of the fact that it occupies a prominent place among the publishing houses here, is simply a branch office. So, whether New York is robbing Boston of its literary prestige or not, the fact remains that Boston retains one of the best of American publishing firms.

The first performance of Gerhart Hauptmann's "dream play," "Hannele," was given here last Tuesday evening. Whatever feeling it may have caused among the critics there is no doubt that it made a deep impression on the large audience that had come to see it. In plot and treatment it is very simple and very effective; indeed, the work is executed with a really fine sentiment. The whole action takes place in the squalid interior of an almshouse. The first scene, which depicts the vulgar squabbling of the paupers, is uninteresting, possibly because in translation the talk of the characters is not convincing. As soon, however, as the child Hannele is carried into the place in the arms of Gottwald, the schoolmaster, the interest becomes absorbing and it is sustained to the end. Hannele, driven to desperation by the brutality of her drunken father, has tried to rejoin her dead mother by drowning herself. After her rescue by Gottwald she lapses into half unconsciousness and then into delirium. She fancies that her father returns to abuse her and that her mother comes to soothe her; then the angel of death appears, but as he is about to smite her with his sword her mother interposes and, touching her eyes, puts her to sleep. From her sleep she is awakened by the Saviour, who wears the features of Gottwald; he gives her glittering raiment to wear in place of her rags, and conducts her to paradise. At the close of the tableau, where Hannele is seen clinging to the Saviour's hand, the stage is darkened, and a moment later the child is found lying dead.

The play was evidently written in a spirit of religious exaltation, and the actors who gave it played with an admirable naturalness and sincerity. The part of Hannele, on which the burden of the piece rested, was notably well done by Miss Anna Blaneke. It is probable, however, that the introduction of the Saviour on the stage will not be tolerated long in this country. The production was directed by Herr Hauptmann himself, who came from Germany a few weeks ago to superintend the rehearsals. He is quite young, and has a finely chiseled, smooth-shaven, intellectual face, and the blond complexion of the typical German.

JOHN D. BARRY.

FICTION.

Under the Red Robe.

In this novel Mr. Stanley Weyman goes back to those past times in the recording of which he so eminently excels. Gil de Berault, otherwise known as "the Black Death," is a noted duelist of the time of Louis XIV. A certain regard, based on past services, in which he is held by Cardinal Richelieu saves him once and again from the consequences of these encounters; but he tempts fate once too often, and the moment comes when the hangman's knot stares him imminently in the face. In this emergency he is offered his life if he will disguise himself and effect the arrest of M. de Cocheforêt, a Bearnese nobleman whom his eminence desires to get into his power. He accordingly starts on this errand, and his adventures form the material of a most interesting tale, which we will not do our readers the wrong to anticipate. It has almost the charm and movement of A Gentleman of France, and, like that, the result turns on skill with the sword and also on a certain rugged nobility which in the end wins where craft would have failed. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

Our Manifold Nature.

This collection of stories is attractive to the reader of The Heavenly Twins, not because Sarah Grand has any special talent for setting a short story well, but because it is interesting to see her earlier work and trace the development of her literary skill. The writer calls these stories "studies" — and that is what they are, character studies — which she afterwards finished and introduced into her later novel. In "The Yellow Leaf" there are two lively young girls who developed later into the Heavenly Twins, and all through the collection scenes and incidents occur which we recognize in their first crude shape as sketches. These studies, the writer tells us in her preface, were "experiments" — whether it is best to inflict "experiments" on the innocent public we know not. The writer's success in her popular novel — a success dependent upon her theme rather than on her artistic skill — will doubtless sell these stories, but had they preceded The Heavenly Twins they would have found few readers. — New York: D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Vistas.

William Sharp has not made a happy choice in his title for this dainty little volume. A vista suggests something quiet and soothing, a bit of ocean or lake seen through the trees, a wooded road, or a glimpse of sunshine or shadow. This volume, despite its festive binding, is a collection of intense, tragic soul dramas too painful and too passionate for such a dilettante title. "The Passion of Père Hilanan," "The Birth of a Soul," "A Northern Light," and "The Fallen God" are written in the fervid, agonizing style of Miss Olive Schreiner. The words seem to hiss out from the writer's lips, and the characters, the scenes, and the events selected make a strong and vivid impression on one's mind. These little dramatic poems are like charcoal drawings, the effect of the light and shade is contrasted with such terrific force. The priest's struggle with his passion for the woman and the sin of Hilda and Malcolm are described with thrilling power. A whole lifetime of suffering the writer puts into a few lines of prose. These Vistas are wonderful bits of word-painting. They are the work of a man in whose blood there is a strain of genius. He is absolutely sure to force his personality on the public for bitter criticism or warm appreciation. The form in which he has this time chosen to express himself is neither story, poem, nor play. But there is a note of passionate earnestness in the volume which makes one pardon their morbidness and forgive their defects and look upon them as brilliant pastels to be followed shortly by finished paintings. — Derby, England: Frank Murray. $1.00.

The King of Schnorrers.

The "schnorrer" is a Jewish beggar of a peculiar and indescribable type, as unique among beggars as Israel among nations; and of all schnorrers certainly no one could outdo in unusualness, audacity, and fertility of resources the king whom Mr. Zangwill makes the chief character in this collection of stories. The inventiveness, assurance, impudence of assumption, and lordliness of this tyrant in rags are as grotesque as they are amusing. In the hands of this author grotesqueness reaches its height. The tragi-comic, the semi-sentimental, the pathetic, and the humorous, in turn give character to his subjects. He appropriates phases and episodes, characters and scenes, where his inimitable gift has full scope, and he makes full use of his power. One might tire of too much of this sort of writing; but for a relish with more substantial food, where could one find anything more appetizing? — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

The Story of Margrédel.

There is a quaint flavor about this little fireside history of a Fifeshire family. It is like being admitted into the inner life of a home in a seaport town a century ago to read the pages. The place is Kircaldy, from which some of those whose story we follow remove to Eden Braes, an idyllic rural retreat. The men and women whose lives are spent thereabout are strongly individualized, from the bluff, dashing Douglas Oliphant to the two of a lower class, Thrift and Rob Hetherwick. An unlooked for yet wholly natural drama is enacted in these two localities with these few personages: "Dug" and "Wull;" the sweet, patient wife, Jean; the daughter, Margery; Margrédel; and the unaccountable French uncle, Robert Malbert. The changes that come in the ordinary course of family life alternate with accident, wrong-doing, and a mysterious terror of something hanging over a household that is believed to be under a curse. In spite of the suspense and the tragic fate that overwhelms the home of Dug Oliphant we meet phases of tenderness, a sweet and helpful domestic influence, and the charm of true wifeliness and pure maidenhood. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

Burgo's Romance.

There is a good deal of the incredible as well as the entertaining in this novel, by T. W. Speight. Its heroine is of an old-fashioned type more or less dismissed from the fiction of our own day — the type, namely, of the beautiful adventuress, with every art of charm at her fingers' ends, including that of exercising a fascinated terror in her victims and an exhaustive knowledge of poisons. She subjugates and marries a rich and elderly British nobleman, and is calmly conducting him into his grave and herself into his inheritance when her plans are frustrated by her husband's nephew and heir, who, after a hard fight, rescues his relative from her clutches and leaves her "prone on the threshold" in a dead faint. — J. B Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Tempe.

The story of Tempe, by Constance Cotterell, is a presentation, often masterly and sometimes crude, of a young woman's attempt to find her true life. Tempe is a girl of genius, full of longings, rebellious against conventions, and evidently in need of a wise, highly endowed woman friend. But the novelist does not see fit to provide her with any such. So Tempe and her masculine comrades blunder on through experiences which render the book exciting and at times distasteful. It is emphatically a romance, a product of the "storm and stress" element that is never absent from life or from literature. It is the work of an eager mind that has been touched by many others, especially George Meredith. Still more truly it is the expression of an impetuous heart loyal to noble ideals. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Adventures in Algiers of Matthew Dudgeon.

This is an excellent imitation, if it be an imitation, of a class of fictions long since become obsolete. Matthew Dudgeon is an English merchant of Portsmouth who, fired with the sinful love of gain, embarks on a ship bound for Smyrna, together with other merchants and a cargo of goods, leaving behind him his wife and an infant son. The ship is captured by Algerian pirates and her passengers made slaves. Matthew undergoes many adventures, which smack not a little of the Arabian Nights, and his fidelity to the adored Mrs. Dudgeon at home does not prevent him from becoming the confidant, not to say the lover, of several beautiful fellow captives in the course of his detention. There is something curiously antique in the relation of these experiences. Surrounded by dangers and in imminent risk of death and torture, these fair beings find time to relate their histories at length, including the recitation of whole cantos of poems addressed to them in happier days by former lovers. One cannot sufficiently admire the memory and the composure of mind which can recollect and repeat a serenade of forty-eight lines at a time when any moment may bring a scimiter stroke to end the recitation. Matthew Dudgeon, however, survives both the poetry and the scimiter, and in the end escapes and gets home. There he doubtless forgot his trifling deviations of heart and, after the fashion of long-lost husbands, made Mrs. Dudgeon happy by the assurance that the one hope and solace of his long exile had been the prospect of return to her society. — Longmans, Green & Co.

In Exile and Other Stories.

Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote's latest volume is a very welcome addition to the library of short stories. The book deals almost entirely with Western life, of which the author has a keenly sympathetic knowledge. She knows all about the loneliness of an exiled Easterner, the hopeless monotony of a girl's life on a desolate stock farm, and the way a man feels when his neighbors have boycotted him for horse-stealing. East or West the men in this book are men of force and spirit, whether they are watching irrigation ditches or wooing Quaker girls, and the women are winning and strong in their individuality. The author's pen is very happy in its simple realism of description, and there are many incidents that will linger a long while in the reader's mind. This is a good sentence on the difference between New England and California: "Whatever may be the type of California young womanhood it was not her type; you felt, looking at her clear, cool tints and slight, straight outlines, that she had winter in her blood." — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Price of a Pearl.

We shall be fortunate indeed if the summer crop of novels shows many as well worth reading as this one by Eleanor Holmes, which appears in the Franklin Square Library. It is very long, but the vivacity of style and the variety of incident prevent it from becoming tiresome, judging it according to the usual standards for light reading. It is the story of a girl with three lovers, all of whom are noble, disinterested, and worthy. The only villain is a woman, but she is quite villain enough and succeeds in making plenty of trouble before the final happy consummation. One regrets that this consummation is reached only by hopelessly crippling one of the unfortunate lovers on the very day appointed for his wedding, especially as the second dies in the last chapter; both are thus prevented from attaining earthly happiness in the way on which they first set their hearts. — Harper & Brothers. 60c.

On the Offensive.

No one would doubt that the author of this story is a man, George I. Putnam, for only a man could so well set forth the monotony, gossip, drinking habits, and friendships of army life. The Indians in ambush; the agency, with its miserable trader and the attack he provokes; the officer resolving to stay in the army because there is nothing else an army officer can do after he has long been bound by military habits — such matters as these are vividly told by hints, conversation, and action, rather than by portentous moralizing. The episode of the priest's silent love for the heroine is admirable. The book is interesting throughout, for the old story of army life and doubting affection is told in a new and excellent manner. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

A Beginner.

Rhoda Broughton, novelist of the affections as she is, has here written a story with a purpose, but this is well enveloped in sarcasm that it may not act as a deterrent upon youthful writers. It is the tale of a young girl who writes her first novel, which proves such a disgraceful failure that the edition is burned and she becomes a wife instead of an authoress. We commend it to all broken-hearted writers, for the book is well written, its plot is well developed, and its contents are made interesting. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Bedouin Girl.

Mrs. S. J. Higginson's previous novels, A Princess of Java and The Pearl of the East, have dealt with Eastern scenes, and they led us to expect in this new tale stirring episodes and healthy sensationalism, and we were not disappointed. It is the story of the love of a supposed Bedouin child who escapes from her persecutors and finds shelter with a Turk and an Arab. The latter, who adopts her, turns out to be her father. The former adores, betrays, and finally marries her. The mutual distrust of Arab and Turk, the wretchedness of the harem, the freedom of the desert, and the power of maternal love are all finely indicated. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.25.

The fourth section of the Ariel Shakespeare contains the seven comedies — The Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Merry Wives of Winsor, Measure for Measure, The Comedy of Errors, Love's Labour's Lost, Taming of the Shrew, and All's Well that Ends Well — each in a charming little volume in a neat box. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each, 75c.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Jewish Question.

Without preface the anonymous author of this suggestive monograph enters at once upon the discussion of the subject. We do not know who he is, but, without being certain, we feel sure that the author is himself an Israelite; for, although apparently writing from the outside of the Hebrew arcana, he seems to have all the traits of the cosmopolitan or modern Jew. To him there is no Jewish question in the sense in which we speak of the labor question or the Eastern question or the home rule question, yet there are anti-Semitic movements; throughout the book sounds that constant profession of a mission of peace which the Jew all over the world insists is the mission of Israel. It is the Jew that is to make the lion and the lamb lie down together. The abolition of slavery and the Renaissance are to this author and to the Jews as much a fatherland as are England, Germany, France, or the United States. "There is the strong bond of humanity, but there is also the golden chain of gentlemanity." The author pictures the Jew as a source and power of culture through all the European ages. The Jew has powerfully influenced and molded the Anglo-Saxon, the Teuton, and the Romance nations; his faults and peculiarities can be easily caricatured, though probably not more so than those of the Frenchman, Italian, Spaniard, or American who shows his special traits in foreign lands. Two of the most powerful chapters in the book set forth luminously the social position of the Jews during the Middle Ages and their influence upon the civilization of that epoch. The author insists that, while the Hebrews sheared well the Gentile flock, a very fair and reasonable proportion of the Jews devoted themselves to the professions of medicine and education, and that the pecuniary operations of the Hebrews benefited the country in which they lived not only through their commerce, but through the introduction of manufactories. The final chapter deals with recent publications concerning the Jews, and sums up this very suggestive monograph by insisting that the virtues of the Jews are their own, while their vices are our making. It is the duty of Christendom today to clear away the mass of vicious circumstances which the mediæval world massed about their life, and to give play to the inherent righteous vigor of this "the most ancient of cultured peoples." — Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

Art for America.

There is nothing very deep or original in these papers, by Mr. William Ordway Partridge, and their thinness of texture as to thought is not balanced by any special charm of style. Four of the essays relate to American art, especially in the line of sculpture and its rightful inculcation and outlook; the fifth deals with the relation of the drama to education, and the sixth with Goethe as a dramatist. There is a good deal of clear, sensible talk on all these topics in the different papers, and, though all of it has been said before more than once, it is of a sort which bears repetition and can perhaps not be said too often or by too many people. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

A Bird-Lover in the West.

Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller's papers on birds and their habits have the charm of a keen and delicate sympathy with the creatures about whom she writes. Untiring in her interest and observations, she is ready to devote a whole day, a week, a month, if need be, to the observation of a shy species, making herself a part of the immovable, harmless world in which they suspiciously flit and pair and feed their young, and so arriving gradually at intimate knowledge of them. Nothing is more difficult to conquer than the timidity of a wild bird, and that Mrs. Miller should so often have achieved the conquest speaks volumes for her patience, her energy, and her discretion.

Most of these notes on Western bird life were made in Colorado and Utah. Mrs. Miller tells a pretty story of a pasture on Salt Lake which was fringed on one side with an oak brush. A number of horses grazed in the pasture and kept it cropped of every grass blade and flower. Mrs. Thorne and her companion sat for days in the brush taking notes of a family of magpies. One of the horses drew near one day in pursuit of forage, and the ladies scared him away by waving a hat in his face. He galloped off and evidently acquainted the other horses with the fact that this particular spot of brush was afflicted with a ghost which flapped things in the faces of intruders, for after that day not a horse would approach the spot. The result was that after a few weeks the oak brush became a miniature paradise of ferns and wild flowers, which made a strange contrast to the trampled and scorched field beyond, on which not a blossom or a spot of green could be found. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Religion in History and in Modern Life.

Principal Fairbairn of Mansfield College, Oxford, has his spiritual dwelling place among the peaks. He loves great vistas and vast landscapes, and is always impatient with narrow views and elevations no higher than rubbish heaps. His experience, however, has been largely with workingmen and breadearners, as well as with scholars and thinkers. In the present volume he sets forth some lectures which he delivered ten years ago. He discusses the vital question of the church and the working classes, showing the causes of the alienation, which undoubtedly exists, and measuring them with great clearness and certainly with approximate accuracy. He considers religion, the place of the Old and of the New Testament in religion, the course of Christianity during the first fifteen centuries of its history and its power of adjustment to modern life. Dr. Fairbairn seems to have no patience with much of the "agglomerated dogmatics" which passes for theological science in many of our schools of divinity. Indeed, he frankly acknowledges that not a little of the so-called theological instruction of our day is, with thinking men, only a preparation for infidelity. To our mind he seems to be thoroughly appreciative, both of the ancient philosophers and of the modern skeptical writers, while consummately able to mark their limitations. In the lands dominated by Calvin's ideas — Holland, Scotland, and the new Protestant Europe of America — he finds the noblest realization of liberty, and underneath the life of these most democratic countries the grand dominant factors are the religious ideas. Grand as were the proverbs, ethical principles, and exalted precepts of the ancient seers and thinkers, these never elevated the common life of man, affected the course of life, or made the bad good or the impure holy. "Where they failed Christ succeeded, with splendid, glorious success; he made out of the very outcasts men that became saints to God." — A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50.

The Humour of America.

Mr. James Barr, the editor of this new volume in the International Humour series, refrains from the usual introduction characterizing the humor of the nation to which the volume is devoted. Instead he gives, what may be just as valuable for Americans at least, a "biographical index of American humorists" twenty-five pages in length; one is somewhat surprised to find in the first two pages John Quincy Adams and Major André included! Mr. Barr has given, on the whole, a fairly representative selection of our more boisterous humorous verse and prose, inclining rather heavily to the journalistic style. Dr. Holmes should surely have been represented by "The One Hoss Shay," however familiar it may be, rather than by the prose extract on "The Professor under Chloroform." A volume of more enduring literary quality could easily have been selected, but the plan was to show all aspects of the national humor. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Art in Theory.

Prof. George Lansing Raymond of Princeton continues his valuable series of books with this introduction to the study of comparative æsthetics. In order that he may study in close detail the first principles of his subject, he begins by discussing form and significance in art, the influence of classicism and romanticism on each other, and art forms as representing, rather than imitating, natural forms, or communicating thought. He then considers the art impulse per se, analyzes, compares, and harmonizes the various theories concerning beauty, and shows how representation in art is developed by mental conditions, considering this part of his subject historically, physiologically, and psychologically. The book is scholarly and comprehensive, laying a broad foundation for the work that is to follow. It would be an advantage to have the book so bound that it could be more easily held and opened wider with less detriment to the binding. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

By Moorland and Sea.

This charming little volume of picturesque essays, by Francis A. Knight, is a worthy successor to his Idylls of the Field. It is full of refinement of feeling and delicacy of perception, for the author is an unaffected lover of nature. Never have the moors seemed richer in color and deeper in suggestiveness than under his pen. The shores of Loch Duich and Dunvegan and the Isle of Skye are as vividly presented to us as the old battlefield of Sedgemoor. The illustrations, though on thin paper, are happily chosen and well executed. — Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

Romantic Professions.

These eight essays, by W. P. James, most of which have been reprinted from Macmillan's Magazine, supply just the sort of discursive, conversational discussion on literary topics that delights the soul of a reader and lover of books. Mr. James is able to take a wide outlook over English and French fiction, and seems never at a loss for a multitude of instances to prove any point he wishes to make. His sympathies are practically unprejudiced, his power of generalization is good, his sense of humor is effective, and his trained, easy style is admirably suited to the character of his essays. "Romantic Professions," the first of these, gives its name to the book. The writer considers in it the proportion of useful and honorable callings that have fallen under the ban of the romancer, concluding that only warriors and fairy princes ("dukes" in modern parlance) are legitimate heroes, though practically the list has been somewhat extended. Nine men out of ten sell their birthright of romance for a mess of pottage when they choose a respectable calling or profession, respectability being essentially unheroic. "The Nemesis of Sentimentalism" contains an admirable exposition of Flaubert's Madame Bovary. The proper age for a heroine, the complications surrounding the selection of good titles or appropriate names of characters, and the desirability of struggle after a magnum opus, all prove to be subjects worthy of consideration, while the two essays entitled respectively "The Historical Novel" and "The Poet as Historian," are rather more serious in purpose and are as timely as they are enjoyable. — Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Pictures in Prose.

Mr. Aubyn Trevor-Battye, member of the British Ornithologists' Union, adds a long row of initials to his name, which probably go to prove that his genuine love of nature has been enriched by accurate scientific knowledge; but his book itself is not so scientific as to be anything but simple, direct, and interesting, though the nature papers are much less wide in their appreciation than are those of Mr. Burroughs or Mr. Bolles. It is good at this time of year to read such papers as "The Procession of Spring" and "Oxford: the Upper River," partly, perhaps, because they reënforce one's natural desire to close his books and, leaving the city behind him, to search out and enjoy for himself the stirring life of bush and bird and insect. The most important essay of the volume is that entitled "With Carl on the Hills," which takes one into the heart of the Scandinavian forests. It relates an experience in elk-hunting, with the addition of a simple, sorrowful tale about a strong man's love for his little girl. "The Witch of Kent" records various superstitions that ought to be especially interesting to students of folk-lore. — Longmans, Green & Co.

Samuel Cox, the late editor of the Expositor, has had his biography written by his widow and included in a volume entitled The Hebrew Twins, with a good likeness showing the benevolent and intellectual face of the author. The book contains fourteen sermons upon Esau and Jacob. With a knowledge of the English Bible and after thorough acquaintance with the Hebrew text, Dr. Cox wrote the expository sermons, which are very fresh in presentation and practical in their lessons. Expository preaching is not as common nor as popular in our country as it is in England, but the man who can do first-class expository work in the pulpit will never lack for an audience. Among nineteenth century students of the Bible who have been successful expositors the author of this engaging volume must be named among the first.— T. Whittaker. $1.50.

It would be difficult to be hopeful of the future of America were Bill Nye's History of the United States, illustrated by F. Opper, a fair sample of much of the humor of the present. The book has not the merit of giving even a very moderate amount of information unvulgarized by the perpetual effort to say something funny. "Bill Nye," of course, succeeds occasionally in getting off a good thing, but the general effect of such a performance is distinctly degrading, as it leaves nothing unsmirched, and nothing, apparently, is reverend and sacred to its composers. It is a choice specimen of what is most irreverent and least commendable among all the varieties of American humor. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

In the preface to the thirty-first annual publication of The Statesman's Year-Book, for the current year, Mr. J. Scott Keltie, the indefatigable editor, calls attention to the almost complete revision of the statistics and of the matter dealing with the navies of the world. In the list of books relating to America and Switzerland Mr. Keltie would have done well to insert a few more titles of volumes of American authorship, but this is a small matter in a volume otherwise so praiseworthy — as usual.— Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

Greece in the Age of Pericles, by Arthur J. Grant, is an excellent addition to the University Extension series. It is a successful attempt to give an account of the main forces which helped to mold Greek civilization. To the social and religious conditions of the country the writer gives much prominence. In a book of this size no exhaustive study of Greece is possible, but the book will prove an admirable text-book for students, and it is the work of a man accustomed to teach, who thoroughly understands the art of arranging his material agreeably. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

It is a pity that Mr. William T. Stead is so hopelessly sensational in his methods in his volume entitled If Christ Came to Chicago. He gives so much information that is of value to every student of modern city life, and a large part of what he recommends is so judicious, that the association with it of other matter which can only serve as a directory for vice and an irritant for the responsible people of wealth is regrettable. It is not at all strange that Chicago resents such a volume. — Laird & Lee.

Mr. Herbert P. Horne's volume in the series called Books about Books is devoted to "gold-tooled bindings." His first and last chapters treat the craft of the binder, and the three chapters between discuss early Italian, French, and English bindings from the standpoint of the artist, since "the art of bookbinding is yet a living art, sensible to new emotions and capable of new expressions." Twelve colored plates illustrate Mr. Horne's excellent book. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

In the Ex-Libris series Printers' Marks is the subject of a very interesting "chapter in the history of typography," by W. Roberts, the editor of The Bookworm. The matter has been overlooked by most writers on things typographical. The numerous examples of older and later marks make the volume quite a picture book, and Mr. Roberts' text gives a clear and comprehensive account of the origin and history of his subject. — Macmillan & Co. $2.75.

PERIODICALS.

The Atlantic for May is strong in its fiction, which includes an installment of Mrs. Deland's powerful serial "Philip and His Wife;" a striking story by Gilbert Parker, "Three Commandments in the Vulgar Tongue;" and an entertaining tale by Eliza Orne White, "The Queen of Clubs." The essays are: "The Henry," scientific, by Prof. T. C. Mendenhall; "Talk at a Country House," critical, by Sir E. Strachey; "Egotism in Contemporary Art," artistic, by R. Cortissoz; "Francis Parkman," biographical, by Justin Winsor and John Fiske; "The Ethical Problem of the Public School," by W. F. Slocum, Jr., educational; and "Henry Vaughan, the Silverist," literary, by Miss Guiney. Beside these there is a Nova Scotia travel paper by the late Frank Bolles, "From Blomidon to Smoky." The first part of "Behind Hymettus," by Prof. J. I. Manatt, poems by Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard, and the usual miscellaneous matter make out a very interesting number.

The May Harper's opens with a finished and touching poem by Mr. Aldrich, "The Lament of El Moulok." Mr. Howells then gives the first part of his literary autobiography, "My First Visit to New England." In fiction there are the fifth installment of Mr. Du Maurier's novel, "Trilby," which grows more delightful at each step; the first chapters of a charming two-part tale of Kentucky life before the War, by James Lane Allen, and six short stories. These are "The Miracle of Tisha Hofnagle," by R. C. V. Meyers; "At Chenière Caminada," by Grace King; "A Note of a Philogynist," by Marrion Wilcox; "The Exiles," by Richard Harding Davis; "A Kinsman of Red Cloud," by Owen Wister; and "The End of an Animosity," by L. Clarkson. "A Little Journey in Java" is described by F. M. Burr; Miss Anna C. Brackett takes us back to "Charleston, South Carolina (1861);" Mr. J. H. Browne discourses of "Pecuniary Independence;" Mr. Thomas Hastings discusses "The Relations of Life to Style in Architecture;" and Mr. E. S. Maclay gives an exciting naval episode in "The Chastisement of the Qualla Battooans." Mr. Mark W. Harrington shows that spring arrives with a temperature of 43.8° Fahrenheit or 6° Centigrade, the point at which plant cells begin to multiply. He traces the progress of this temperature over the United States in a succession of warm waves from the west and south, which occur with remarkable regularity every year, so that their course can be mapped out as readily as the passing of a storm. It is a number to suit a wide variety of tastes.

In the May Century Professor Royce's article on "The Imitative Functions and Their Place in Human Nature" is purely psychological and a new departure for this popular magazine. Professor Royce has a lucid style and can make the dryest subjects interesting. But his present subject is not dry, and the close relations between originality and imitation are presented in a novel and instructive light. Readable illustrated articles are Milburn Hall's "Capture of the Slave-Ship Cora," "Across Asia on a Bicycle," and "Bookbindings of the Past," which are as well worthy study as are old lace and blue china. A capital short story, thoroughly modern in tone and written with real skill, is "Their Exits and Their Entrances," by G. N. Hibbard. It is mostly in the form of dialogue, but the talk is all light talk. "A Loan of Half-Orphans" is only half finished, but is full of humorous situations, and it is one of Thomas A. Janvier's best stories. Of the poetry the less said the better, although Edgar Fawcett and Thomas Bailey Aldrich have tinkling songs. A fragment of Lowell's prose has an excellent definition of style as contrasted with manner. "The stylist is occupied with the impression which certain things have made upon him; the mannerist is wholly concerned with the impression he makes on others." The article on "Dagnan-Bouveret" is an art gallery in itself.

Scribner's for May has much to tell about mountain climbing. "Some Episodes of Mountaineering," by Edwin L. Weeks, finely illustrated, relates to the Alps, while "Climbing for White Goats" is a Rocky Mountain paper by George B. Grinnell. Captain J. G. Bourke's article, with pictures, "The American Congo," refers to the Mexican border along the Rio Grande. Mrs. Davidge (Bishop Potter's daughter) makes an excellent statement of the work and aims of "Working Girls' Clubs." Other illustrated articles are Mr. P. L. Ford's "A New Portrait of Franklin," Octave Thanet's "The Provincials" (in her sketches of American types), and Mr. Hamerton's on Jules Muenier, the painter of the frontispiece, "A Corner in a Market." Mr. F. J. Stimson's paper on the "Ethics of Democracy: Liberty," is a valuable review of socialistic legislation in the United States. The fiction is made up of serials by Messrs. Cable and Bishop, a story by Edith Wharton, "That Good May Come," and there is a vigorous paper by Aline Gorren on "Womanliness as a Profession."

The Portfolio for April is an admiring monograph on Jules Bastien-Lepage, by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady), fully and finely illustrated. "Joan of Arc Listening to the Voices" is the frontispiece.

"Émile Wauters: Portrait-Painter," is the subject of the principal paper in the Magazine of Art for May; his portraits of women and children are of high merit. "The Malcolm Drawings at the British Museum;" "Early Italian Art at the New Gallery;" Part I of "Little Roubillac," by Mr. Austin Dobson; and "In the Down Country," by Graham R. Tomson, are the other most conspicuous articles in an attractive number.

In Macmillan's for April Mr. Blackmore has two chapters of his serial without making much real headway in the story. Francis Parkman and his work are treated by A. G. Bradley in a few pages, in which the great historian's career and methods are briefly outlined. Mrs. Ritchie contributes the tenth chapter of her unwritten memories, describing her home surroundings, associates, and mode of life at Mennecy while her father was in America. "A Master of Woodcraft" is captivating from a sportsman's point of view, showing what the chase of the deer really should be and is to one who understands it and is a naturalist as well as a hunter. The criticisms of Auguste De Staël on England are revived in a paper by an anonymous author. Other articles are on "The Old College at Glasgow" and "The Waters of Cartaly." Mrs. Steel has one of her short stories of East Indian life, and Rolf Boldrewood an exceedingly spirited account of the Australian rough-riders, written with dash and daring in keeping with his subject.

The Popular Science Monthly for May has as the subject of the usual portrait and biographical sketch Sir J. H. Gilbert, who, with Sir John Lawes, has done so much to improve agriculture in England. Andrew D. White considers "Theological and Scientific Theories of Evolution" in his long series. Prof. C. M. Weed tells about the insect "Guests of the Mayflower." "Up the Chimney," by Frank Bolles; "Cause and Effect in Education," by C. H. Henderson; "Economic Uses of Non-Edible Fish," by R. F. Walsh; "Religious Belief as a Basis of Morality," by Prof. E. P. Evans; and "Ancient and Mediæval Chemistry," by M. P. E. Berthelot, are other important articles.

The Forum runs to short articles nowadays; there are fourteen in the May number. "A Year of Democratic Administration" is discussed from opposite standpoints by Wm. E. Russell, the Massachusetts Ex-Governor, and Senator S. M. Cullom of Illinois. "State Aid to the Unemployed" is similarly handled by Dr. Stanton Coit and Mr. D. McG. Means. "President Eliot's Twenty-Five Years of Service" are fitly appreciated by Pres. C. F. Thwing. Mr. Edward Atkinson shows, in his usual able manner, "The Meaning of Farm Mortgage Statistics," and Pres. G. S. Hall writes sagaciously of "Universities and the Training of Professors." Mrs. Phelps-Ward's inquiry "Is Faith in a Future Life Declining?" is answered in the negative.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— An international exhibition of books, which it is presumed will possess much interest for authors, publishers, and booksellers, is to be held at Paris in July, remaining open till late in the autumn.

— Mr. Quiller-Couch says that Esther Waters, by Mr. George Moore, is the most important novel which has been published in England for two years, and to find a book to compare with it we must go back to Tess of the D' Urbervilles.

— Miss Elizabeth Robins, who has played in several of Dr. Ibsen's dramas with much success, is to visit this country, and will probably appear in "Hedda Gabler," "The Master Builder," and other dramas.

— Mr. Barrie's The Little Minister has reached its thirty-ninth thousand.

— The Clarendon Press announces a posthumous volume of Freeman's History of Sicily, covering the period from the tyranny of Dionysios to the death of Agathokles. It has been edited from his MSS. by his son-in-law, Mr. Arthur J. Evans, who has also added supplements and notes. It will be illustrated with maps and a plate of coins.

— Messrs. David Bryce & Son of Glasgow, exexpect to issue soon Mr. Clouston's History of Hieroglyphic Bibles. Mr. Clouston has traced the first English version of these curious children's picture books through a Dutch version to an Augsburg source — Geistliche Herzens Einbildungen, or "Spiritual Heart-Fancies" (1687).

— Prof. Campbell Fraser has just completed his annotated edition of Locke's Essay Concerning Human Understanding, to be published by the Clarendon Press. Professor Fraser has been appointed Gifford lecturer at Edinburgh for the academic years 1894–1896.

— A monument to Madame de Sévigné is to be erected at Vitré in Brittany, a town near which many of the famous letters were written.

— Mr. Stopford A. Brooke's new work, Tennyson; His Art and Relation to Modern Life, is completed, and published in England. Besides a critical survey of the principal poems, the volume deals with Tennyson's faculty as an artist, his relation to Christianity and to social politics, his attitude towards nature (in which he differed from the great poets of the century), and his speculative theology.

— Macmillan & Co. have in preparation the Temple Shakespeare, a new edition of Shakespeare's works, two volumes of which are to be published each month; each volume is to contain a complete play carefully printed in black and red on hand-made paper, and the greatest care has been devoted to every detail of production. The text is that of the Globe edition, carefully amended from the latest Cambridge edition; the numbering of the lines is identical with the Globe, so that the frequent references to that edition will apply also to the Temple. Mr Israel Gollancz will edit it, contributing a full glossary with a brief preface and notes, but there will be no needless discussion of textual emendation and no æsthetic criticism. Mr. Walter Crane has designed the title-pages, and each volume will have a frontispiece in photogravure. For the use of teachers there will be an edition printed on writing paper, with broad margins for manuscript notes. The publishers' aim has been to produce a thoroughly attractive edition of Shakespeare, printed in bold and legible type and yet of so compact a form that it may be light to hold and convenient to carry in the pocket. The binding will be in two styles, limp cloth and paste grain roan, and the low price adds another advantage to this admirable edition.

— Some delay in bringing out Mr. Stevenson's Travels with a Donkey caused him to write to his publishers this characteristic note:

> Dear Sirs: What has become of me and my donkey? She was never a fast traveler, but she has taken longer to come through Hanover Street than to cross the Gerandau. There must be carrots in your office. Please see to it and let me hear.
>
> Yours truly,
> Robert Louis Stevenson.

— A work dealing with Christianity and Socialism, called Vox Clamantium, is to be published by A. D. Innes & Co., London; Hall Caine, S. R. Crockett, Richard Le Gallienne, Lewis Morris, Alfred Russell Wallace, Tom Mann, and Dean Stubbs are among the contributors.

— Those who are interested in the courses in economics at the Plymouth (Mass.) School of Applied Ethics, which will open on July 12, can obtain already a list of lecturers and topics from the secretary, S. Burns Weston, No 118 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia. The programme of dates is yet to appear.

— From a brief obituary notice of the late Mr. George William Childs, which appears in the Revue Encyclopédique of March 15, we transcribe the following bit of literary news, "Childs a publié sous son nom un recueil d'anciennes ballades."

— Dr. Murray's labors on the Philological Society's new dictionary are partly rewarded by letters which he has received from George Eliot, Tennyson, Lowell, and others, replying to his questions as to the use of certain words in their works. But when he wrote to Browning the poet answered, "Don't know what I meant, ask the Browning Society."

— Prof. W. T. Hewett of Cornell University is preparing a biography of Ezra Cornell, the founder of that institution.

— It is said that ex-President McCosh has prepared an autobiography, though it may not be published till after his death.

— A London suburban street, which once bore the name of the great Admiral Nelson, has been renamed after Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

— Mr. Edmund Vincent has purchased the National Observer. Mr. W. E. Henley ceases to be editor.

— Duprat & Co. publish this month Crazy Book-Collecting, or Bibliomania, "showing the great folly of collecting rare and curious books, first editions, unique and large-paper copies, in costly bindings, etc.," by Bollioud Mermet, secretary to the Academy of Lyons, first published anonymously in 1761, and "now done into English and republished for the perusal and delectation of the members of the Grolier Club of New York et amicorum." A member of the club has furnished an introduction to this literary curiosity.

— Messrs. Methuen will bring out soon Professor Petrie's History of Egypt, from the Earliest Times to the Hyksos. It is the first installment of a history of Egypt, in six volumes, intended both for students and for general reading and reference.

— The Anabasis of Profs. Goodwin and White is to be reissued in May by Ginn & Co., newly printed and thoroughly revised, Dindorf's text being exchanged for Hug's, but with critical acceptance. White and Morgan's "Dictionary" to the Anabasis will be incorporated with the work.

— The Student Publishing Co., Hartford, Conn., has just issued The Triple Tradition of the Exodus, by Rev. B. W. Bacon, in which the author carries further the work of popularizing he results of the higher criticism of the Pentateuch begun in his Genesis of Genesis.

— Mr. Leslie Stephen has undertaken to write the life of his brother, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen.

— The publication of Mr. Du Maurier's "Trilby" will be completed in Harper's Magazine for August. It is announced that the novel will be brought out in book form soon afterwards.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons announce that under arrangement with its London publisher, Mr. Unwin, they will hereafter issue, under the title of the Incognito Library, the American edition of the Pseudonym Library, the volumes of which will be duly copyrighted. In the Autonym Library, published in the same way, Volume I will be The Upper Berth, by F. Marion Crawford. It is expected that volumes will follow by Rev. S. R. Crockett and by Louis Becke.

— Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. announce as in press a translation of the hitherto unpublished Balzac letters addressed to Madame de Hanska; also Kerrigan's Quality, the first attempt at a long story by Miss Jane Barlow, author of Irish Idyls.

— "The Golden House" is the attractive title of the novel which Mr. Charles Dudley Warner has written for serial publication in Harper's Magazine during the last half of the year.

— "Pleasant news comes from the society of Provençal poets known as the 'Félibrige,'" says Mr. Arthur Stedman in the Dial of April. "The members are making preparations to take their share in the 'floral games' this summer at Toulouse, which were instituted by the troubadours in the fourteenth century and have never ceased since then. The games are open competitions in poetry and prose, and the prizes are gold and silver flowers, or, for the first prize, a natural flower presented with a kiss to the successful competitor by some damsel of the ancient aristocracy. The members of the 'Félibrige' also celebrate their own annual feast in August, on the day of their patron saint, Ste. Estelle. This year it will take place at Avignon, and will be distinguished by the dedication of monuments to Roumanilles, the founder of the Provençal literary movement, and to Aubanel, who have recently died. 'Les Cigalières,' the Paris chapter of the 'Félibrige,' will come down the Rhone on a boat from Lyons to take part in the ceremonies, and there will be performances of the Antigone and Œdipus in the old Roman theater at Orange by the Comédie Française company."

— Mr. James Bryce has consented to deliver the inaugural lecture at the summer meeting of university extension students at Oxford this year, and has chosen for his subject "The Worth of the Study of Ancient Literature to Our Time."

— On the 23d of April the statue of Shakespeare by Mr. William Ordway Partridge was unveiled in Lincoln Park, Chicago. On the same day the German Shakespeare Society of Weimar celebrated its thirtieth anniversary, it having been founded in the tercentenary year.

— The Goethe-Jahrbuch for 1894 will contain an account, by Dr. Suphan, of "Napoleon's Unterhaltungen mit Goethe und Wieland und F. von Müller's Memoire darüber für Talleyrand."

— "The autobiography and reminiscences of George Augustus Sala, which has been so frequently announced," says the London correspondent of the Book Buyer, "will probably appear shortly." This work has occupied the author for many years past whenever he could find a spare moment. Mr. Sala was intimately associated with Charles Dickens and William Makepeace Thackeray during the best period of their careers; he has known some of the most celebrated people in connection with literature, art, music, society, and the drama of his time; he has ever kept accurate commonplace books and voluminous journals; he has a marvelous memory, and is an incomparable raconteur.

— A very attractive volume by the late Phillips Brooks will be published in the coming autumn by E. P. Dutton & Co. It is called Essays and Addresses, and will take its place as pure literature in distinction from his theological writings previously published.

— Referring to the financial success of General Grant's Memoirs, Mr. T. C. Crawford says, in McClure's Magazine for May: "Never was there a more brilliant success following such labor. No book written in this country has ever returned such a large reward. At the time of this writing the Grant family has received from the royalties paid by the publishers of the work over $440,000, and the sale still goes on. The cheaper edition, which the publishers are now about to bring out, may result in another phenomenal sale, so that it is within the range of possibility that the Memoirs may yield in the neighborhood of $750,000 to General Grant's heirs.

— Funk & Wagnalls Co. promise for May Isabella of Castile, by Major-General O. O. Howard, and John Brown and His Men, by Col. Richard J. Hinton — the final volume in the American Reformers series.

— The MS. of the Journal of Lord Macaulay is said to have been placed in the hands of a well-known publisher for production some time this year.

— Another volume of Mr. Ruskin's letters is announced. The letters were addressed to the late M. Ernest Chesneau, whose work on The English School of Painting Mr. Ruskin "introduced" some few years ago. They are being edited by Mr. T. J. Wise, who will issue them for private circulation only.

— Messrs. Asher & Co. will have ready for publication in a few weeks a new work by M. Terrien de Lacouperie, entitled Western Origin of the Early Chinese Civilization, from 2300 B.C. to 220 A.D.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

The Diary of Samuel Pepys, M.A., F.R.S. Vol. IV. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

Prosperity and Politics. By Allen Ripley Foote. Washington, D.C.: Kensington Pub. Co.

The Natural Law of Money. By William Brough. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Industries of Russia. Manufactures and Trade, 2 vols. — Agriculture and Forestry, 1 vol. — Mining and Metallurgy, 1 vol. — Siberia and the Great Siberian Railway, 1 vol. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00

The Statesman's Year-Book. 1894. Edited by J. Scott Keltie. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Sources of the Constitution of the United States. By C. Ellis Stevens. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Town Life in the Fifteenth Century. By Mrs. J. R. Green. In two vols. Macmillan & Co. $5.00 net

Educational.

An Elementary Arithmetic (40c.), Intermediate Arithmetic (40c.), and Higher Arithmetic (75c.). By John H. Walsh. D. C. Heath & Co.

First Lessons in Our Country's History. By William Swinton. Revised edition. American Book Co. 48c.

Magill's Modern French Series. No. 2. — Sur le Pente. By Mme. DeWitt. No. 3. — La Fille de Clementine. By Anatole France. Christopher Sower Co. Each, 60c.

Schiller's Maria Stuart. Edited by Lewis A. Rhoades, Ph.D. D. C. Heath & Co. 65c.

Essays and Sketches.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Vol. III. Harper & Brothers. $3.50

The Wee Ones of Japan. By Mae St. John Bramhall. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Art for America. By William Ordway Partridge. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

By Moorland and Sea. By Francis A. Knight. Illus. Roberts Brothers. $1.50

The Humour of America. Selected by James Barr. Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.25

Modern Mystics and Modern Magic. By Arthur Lillie. Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Public Libraries in America. By Wm. I. Fletcher. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Addresses Spoken to Working Men. By S. Reynolds Hole. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

The Conquest of Death. By Abbot Kinney. New York: printed for the author.

Hours in a Library. By Leslie Stephen. New edition, with addition. Three vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.50

Papers of the Jewish Women's Congress. Held at Chicago, September 4, 5, 6, and 7, 1893. Jewish Pub. Society.

The Binding of Books. An Essay in the History of Gold-Tooled Bindings. By Herbert P. Horne. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

In Maiden Meditation. By E. V. A. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Wayside Sketches. By Eben J. Loomis. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Fiction.

For Love of Gold. By Marie Walsh. The Mascot Publishing Co. 50c.

The Mystery of the Patrician Club. By Albert D. Vandam. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Queen of Love. A Novel. By S. Baring-Gould. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Rubicon. By E. F. Benson. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Gun-Bearer. By E. A. Robinson and G. A. Wall. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

The White Crown and Other Stories. By Herbert D. Ward. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Hypnotic Tales. By James L. Ford. George H. Richmond & Co. 50c.

The Damascus Road. By Léon de Tinseau. Translated by Florence Belknap Gilmour. George H. Richmond & Co. 50c.

Out of Bohemia. By Gertrude Christian Fosdick. Geo. H. Richmond & Co.

Danish Fairy Tales. By Hans Christian Andersen. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 12c.

A Devoted Couple. A Novel. By J. Masterman. Harper & Brothers. 60c.

The Doomswoman. By Gertrude Atherton. Tait's Idler Series. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 25c.

The Soul of the Bishop. By John Strange Winter. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 50c.

A Modern Love Story. By Harriet E. Orcutt. Chas. H. Kerr & Co.

The Flower of Forgiveness. By Flora Annie Steel. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Links in a Chain. By Margaret Sutton Briscoe. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00

The Prisoner of Zenda. By Anthony Hope. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

In Varying Moods. By Beatrice Harraden. American copyright edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Two-Legged Wolf. A Romance. By N. N. Karazin. Rand, McNally & Co. $1.00

In the King's Country. By Amanda M. Douglas Lee & Shepard. $1.50

Burgo's Romance. By T. W. Speight. Authorized edition. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

West Irish Folk-Tales and Romances. Collected and translated by Wm. Larminie. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Anarchist. A Story of Today. By Richard Henry Savage. F. T. Neely. 50c.

Bayou Folk. By Kate Chopin. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The Flight of the "Swallow." By Emily Malbone Morgan. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 75c.

For the Sake o' the Siller. By Maggie Swan. Hunt & Eaton. 85c.

A Princess of the Stage. By Nataly von Eschstruth. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

A Costly Freak. By Maxwell Gray. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Fair Jewess. By B. L. Farjeon. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00

Aschenbrödel. A Child Sketch. By Mrs. George A. Paull. Thomas Whittaker. 50c.

Cranford. By Mrs. Gaskell. — The Abbé Constantine. By Ludovic Halévy. T. Y. Crowell & Co. Each, 50c.

On the Offensive. An Army Story. By George I. Putnam. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

The Stickit Minister, and Some Common Men. By S. R. Crockett. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

From Earth's Center. A Polar Gateway Message. By S. Byron Welcome. Chas. H. Kerr & Co. 25c.

The Strike at Shane's. Sequel to "Black Beauty." American Humane Education Society.

Our Gold Mine at Hollyhurst. American Humane Education Society.

The Bedouin Girl By Mrs. S. J. Higginson. Illus. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.25

The Lone House. By Amelia E. Barr. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

A Modern Buccaneer. By Rolf Boldrewood. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

How Like a Woman. By Florence Marryatt. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

Mr. Bailey-Martin. By Percy White. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

Found Guilty. By Frank Barrett. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

A Modern Wizard. By Rodrigues Ottolengui. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

A Journey in Other Worlds. A Romance of the Future. By John Jacob Astor. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Stand Fast, Craig Royston! By William Black. New and revised edition. Harper & Brothers. 80c.

A Beginner. A Novel. By Rhoda Broughton. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Countess Obernau. After the German by Julien Gordon. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

A Man of To-Day. A Novel. By Helen Mathers. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Twins and Their Texts. By L. Amelia Wilder. Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. 75c.

Joanna Traill, Spinster. By Annie E. Holdsworth. Chas. L. Webster & Co. $1.25

A True Relation of the Travels and Perilous Adventures of Mathew Dudgeon, Gentleman. Longmans, Green & Co.

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XIX. The Betrothed and The Highland Widow. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Love Affairs of a Worldly Man. By Maibelle Justice. F. T. Neely.

The Face of Christ. An Old Legend. By Katharine Pearson Woods. E. P. Dutton & Co.

Ardis Claverden. By Frank R. Stockton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

History.

Brave Little Holland, and What She Has Taught Us. By William Elliot Griffis. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The Jewish Question and the Mission of the Jews. Harper & Brothers. $1.75

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

A Sheaf of Poems. By George Perry. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Juliet and Romeo. From the Italian of Luigi da Porto. With Introduction by W. J. Rolfe, Litt.D. Joseph Knight Co. $1.00

Columbus the Discoverer. A Drama. By Walter Warren. Arena Publishing Co.

Cuckoo Songs. By Katharine Tynan Hinkson. London: Elkin Mathews & John Lane; Boston: Copeland & Day.

Physical Training the Secret of Youth in Age. By Sebastiano Fenzi. Brentano's.

Pompeii. The City of Doom. By Benj. F. Leggett. Published by the author at Ward, Penn. 25c.

Sonnets and Other Verses. By William Gay. Melbourne: E. A. Petherick & Co.

Lucile and Selected Poems. By the Earl of Lytton. New edition. Two vols. Longmans, Green & Co.

The Quest of Heracles, and Other Poems. By Hugh McCulloch, Jr. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

Dramatic Poems. By William Entreken Baily. Printed for the author at Philadelphia.

A Lover's Diary. Songs in Sequence. By Gilbert Parker. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

When Hearts are Trumps. By Tom Hall. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

The Dream of Columbus. By R. Walter Wright. Toronto: Wm. Briggs. 25c.

Poems. By Langdon Elwyn Mitchell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Readings on the Inferno of Dante. By the Hon. Wm. Warren Vernon, M.A. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $12.00

Religion and Theology.

The Life Here and the Life Hereafter. An Easter Sermon. By Phillips Brooks. E. P. Dutton & Co. 25c.

'God's City and the Coming of the Kingdom. By the Rev. Henry Scott Holland, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co.

The Apostolic Age of the Christian Church. By Carl von Weizsäcker. Tr. by James Millar, B.D. Vol. I. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

At the Lord's Table. By Howard Crosby. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 60c.

The Evidence of Salvation. By Rev. E. S. Stackpole, D.D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 50c.

The Children's Pew: a Year's Sermons and Parables for the Young. By Rev. J. Reid Howatt. Thos. Whittaker. $1.50

Christianity and Evolution. By James Iverach, M.A., D.D. Thos. Whittaker. 75c.

A Harmony of the Gospels. For Historical Study By Wm. Arnold Stevens and Ernest DeWitt Burton.. Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.50

Social Reform and the Church. By John R. Commons. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

The Pilgrim Pastor's Manual. By George M. Boynton. Congregational S. S. & Pub. Society. $1.00

Waymarks in Church History. By William Bright, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co.

Scientific and Technical.

Columbian Knowledge Series. No. 1. Total Eclipses of the Sun. By Mabel Loomis Todd. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

The Amateur Telescopist's Handbook. By Frank M. Gibson. Longmans, Green & Co.

Travel and Observation.

Travels in a Tree-Top. By Charles Conrad Abbott. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Life on the Lagoons. By Horatio F. Brown. Second edition, revised. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

Beyond the Rockies. A Spring Journey in California. By Charles A. Stoddard. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Miscellaneous.

If Christ Came to Chicago! By William T. Stead. Chicago: Laird & Lee.

Cassell's Complete Pocket-Guide to Europe. Revised and enlarged. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.50

Whittaker's Anatomical Model. A Pictorial Representation of the Human Frame and its Organs. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

The Badminton Library. Big Game Shooting. By Clive Phillipps-Wolley. In two volumes. Illustrated. Longmans, Green & Co.

The Leaping Ouananiche. By Eugene McCarthy. Illustrated. Forest and Stream Publishing Co. 50c.

The Chess Pocket Manual. By G. H. D. Gossip. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Rand, McNally & Co.'s Pocket Maps. Kansas. — Nebraska. — North Dakota. — Arkansas. — Ontario. Each, 25c.

Schiller's Wilhelm Tell. Edited by Robert Waller Deering, Ph.D. D. C. Heath & Co. 65c.

A Catalogue of Rare and Choice Books Relating to America. Dodd, Mead & Co.

A Selection of Fifty Plates from How to Know the Wild Flowers. By Mrs. William Starr Dana. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00 net.

The Book of the Fair. Parts 4, 5, 6. Chicago: The Bancroft Co. Each, $1.00

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS
Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

Chicago, Rock Island
— AND —
Pacific Railway.

THE Favorite and Direct Line, furnishing the best facilities and accommodations, at lowest rates, to and from Chicago, Rock Island, Davenport, Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Watertown, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Topeka, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS,

UNRIVALED for splendor of equipment, daily between Chicago and Des Moines and Council Bluffs, and between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, with superb through Dining-Car Service, FREE Reclining Chair Cars and Pullman Palace Sleepers.

THE POPULAR TOURIST LINE to and from Manitou, Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Glenwood Springs, and all the sanitary and scenic resorts of Colorado, offering choice of routes, via Denver, to and from Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FAST EXPRESS TRAINS daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to and from all important towns, cities and sections in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Kingfisher and El Reno in the Indian Territory.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager.
JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.
Advertising Rates:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 19 MAY 1894 Vol. XXV No. 10 Whole No. 506

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, VOL. II.

THE OXFORD CHAUCER.

The Complete Works of GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited from Numerous Manuscripts by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt. D., LL. D., M. A., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. To be completed in 6 volumes. Vol. II. Boethius. Troilus and Criseyde. Already Published, Vol. I. Romaunt of the Rose; Minor Poems. 8vo, polished buckram. Price $4.00 each, net.

The remaining four volumes will be published at short intervals during the present year. The complete set of six volumes is offered to subscribers at $17.50, net, payable strictly in advance. The full payment, $17.50, must accompany each subscription. Subscriptions may be sent in through booksellers if the conditions of subscription are strictly complied with.

Just Published. Uniform with "The Logic of Hegel."

HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY OF MIND.

Translated from "The Encyclopædia of the Philosophical Sciences." With five Introductory Essays. By WILLIAM WALLACE, M. A., LL. D. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price $2.50, net.

COMPLETION OF THE NEW EDITION OF PROF. WALLACE'S "LOGIC OF HEGEL."

Now Ready, in Two Volumes.

THE LOGIC OF HEGEL.

Translated from "The Encyclopædia of the Philosophical Sciences." With PROLEGOMENA to the Study of Hegel's Logic and Philosophy. By WILLIAM WALLACE, M. A., LL. D. Translation, 1 vol. Prolegomena, 1 vol. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. Price $2.50 each, net.

CRITICISMS ON CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT AND THINKERS.

Selected from the Spectator. By RICHARD HOLT HUTTON, M. A. (London), Fellow of University College, London. In two volumes. 12mo. Price $3.00.

Just Published.

THE CELTIC TWILIGHT: MEN AND WOMEN, GHOULS AND FAERIES.

By W. B. YEATS. With a frontispiece by J. B. Yeats. 16mo. Silk binding. Price $1.25.

By the author of "Readings on the Purgatorio."

READINGS ON THE INFERNO OF DANTE,

Chiefly based on the Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola. By the Honorable WILLIAM WARREN VERNON, M. A. With an Introduction by the Rev. EDWARD MOORE, D. D., Hon. Litt. Dublin, Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. With Portraits and Diagrams. In two volumes. 12mo, cloth. Price $12.00, net.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION:

Being a Study of the Doctrine of Jesus as developed from Judaism and converted into Dogma. By WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, M. A., D. D. 8vo, cloth. Price $3.75.

Just Published.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE.

A Chronicle of New England Birds and Flowers. By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT. 18mo, cloth, gilt top. Price 75 cents.

⁂ Also a Large-Paper Edition, limited to 250 copies, with twelve full-page plates. Crown 8vo. Price $3.00, net.

Mrs. Green's New Work.

TOWN LIFE IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

By Mrs. JOHN RICHARD GREEN, author of "Henry the Second" in the Twelve English Statesmen Series. In two volumes, 8vo. In box. Price $5.00, net.

". . . Must be regarded as among the most valuable contributions of the year to the literature of English history."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

SOURCES OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Considered in Relation to Colonial and English History. By C. ELLIS STEVENS. LL. D., D. C. L., F. S. A. Edin. 12mo. Price $1.50, net.

"Dr. Stevens is the first to present the subject in a complete and satisfactory form. His treatment is scholarly and free from all narrow national bias. . . . A really important addition to our historical literature."—Annals of the American Academy.

IN THE PRESS.

By the author of "Contemporary Socialism."

EIGHT HOURS FOR WORK.

By JOHN RAE, M. A., author of "Contemporary Socialism." 12mo, cloth. Price $1.25.

The Third Edition of Mrs. Humphry Ward's New Novel.

MARCELLA.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, author of "The History of David Grieve," "Robert Elsmere," etc. With new portrait. In two volumes, small 12mo, buckram. In box. Price $2.00.

"Mrs. Humphry Ward has certaiuly achieved a remarkable success in this third serious novel of modern, social and ethical life."—The Review of Reviews.

Just Ready: The Fifth Edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford' New Novel.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Mr. Isaacs," etc With illustrations and a new portrait of the Author. In two volumes. Small 12mo, buckram. In box. Price $2.00.

"It is the first time, we think, in American fiction, that any such breadth of view has shown itself in the study of our social framework."—Life.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE RAIDERS.

Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt. By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister, and Some Common Men." 12mo, cloth. Price $1.50.

"A delightful tale of love and adventure."—N. Y. Times.

IN THE PRESS. A NEW NOVEL.

THE WINGS OF ICARUS.

Being the life of one Emilia Fletcher, as revealed by herself. By LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA. 18mo, cloth. Price $1.25.

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, 66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

Longmans, Green, & Co.'s New Books.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

UNDER THE RED ROBE.

A Romance. With 12 full-page Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville. 12mo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

"A wonderfully brilliant and thrilling romance . . . Mr. Weyman has a positive talent for concise dramatic narration. Every phrase tells, and the characters stand out with lifelike distinctness. This story of 'Under the Red Robe' is in its way one of the very best things he has done. It is illustrated with vigor and appropriateness from twelve full-page designs by R. Caton Woodville."—Boston Beacon.

"Mr. Weyman is a brave writer, who imagines fine things and describes them splendidly. There is something to interest a healthy mind on every page of his new story. Its interest never flags, for his resource is rich, and it is, moreover, the kind of a story that one cannot plainly see the end of from Chapter I. The scene is in France; the hero of the story is carried through many perilous adventures . . . the man is likeable, brave and honorable by nature, though far from a saint."—N. Y. Times.

"The story of the days when de Berault played the spy in the chateau bristles with adventure and ingenious complications. The ennobling influence of a love for a good woman upon the gamester's character is shown in a subtle crescendo and there is not a dull page in the book from beginning to end. It is Mr. Weyman's best novel."—Book Buyer, N. Y.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A GENTLEMAN OF FRANCE:

Being the Memoirs of Gaston de Bonne, Sieur de Marsac. With Frontispiece and Vignette by H. J. Ford. 12mo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

THE HOUSE OF THE WOLF.

A Romance. With Frontispiece and Vignette by Charles Kerr. 12mo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH,

To the Accession of Queen Anne. By General Viscount Wolseley. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 10 Plates (8 Portraits), 11 Plans, and Illustrations and Index, $10.00.

"It would be to give a very faint idea of the charm of these volumes to omit to point out how individual they are—how full of the personality of the chronicler. In this case we are not dealing with the ordinary author or the professional authority on history. Affectation could go no further than to pretend that in reading Lord Wolseley's descriptions of military operations two-thirds of our interest does not arise from the fact that it is one of the most famous of recent English soldiers who speaks."—St. James's Gazette.

A GAUNTLET:

A Drama. By Björnstjerne Björnson. Translated into English by Osman Edwards. With portrait of the author. 12mo, $1.50.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE:

PASTOR SANG:

A Play. By Björnstjerne Björnson. Translated by W. Wilson. 12mo, $1.50.

VARIETIES IN PROSE.

By William Allingham. 3 vols., crown 8vo, $6.00. Vols. I. and II.—Rambles by Patricious Walker. Vol. III.—Irish Sketches, etc.

"There is a peculiar charm, which we have proved once more to be an abiding charm, for us in these delightful records of impressions of places at home and abroad, their antiquities, history and literary or artistic associations."—Saturday Review.

PICTURES IN PROSE OF NATURE, WILD SPORT, AND HUMBLE LIFE.

By Aubyn Trevor Battye, B. A., Member of the British Ornithologists' Union. With frontispiece and vignette. 12mo, $1.75.

A TRUE RELATION OF THE TRAVELS AND PERILOUS ADVENTURES OF MATHEW DUDGEON, GENTLEMAN:

Wherein is truly set Down the Manner of His Taking, the Long Time of His Slavery in Algiers, and Means of His Delivery. Written by himself, and now for the first time printed. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

PAPERS AND NOTES ON THE GLACIAL GEOLOGY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

By the late Henry Carvill Lewis, M. A., F. G. S., Professor of Mineralogy in the Academy of National Sciences, Philadelphia, and Professor of Geology in Haverford College, U. S. A. Edited from his unpublished MSS., with an introduction by Henry W. Crosskey, LL. D., F. G. S. 8vo, with 83 Illustrations in the text and 10 Maps, 542 pages, $7.00.

LETTERS OF HARRIET COUNTESS GRANVILLE, 1810-1845.

Edited by her son, the Hon. F. Levison Gower. In 2 volumes. With Portrait, 8vo, $9.00.

"The collection of letters of Lady Granville is certainly the most entertaining and important work of the kind which has appeared since the Greville Memoirs. The book is full of capital and quite new stories about celebrated people, and both volumes are most delightful reading."—Truth.

BAN AND ARRIÈRE BAN:

A Tale of Fugitive Rhymes. By Andrew Lang. With Frontispiece. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

"JUNIUS" REVEALED.

By his surviving grandson, H. R. Francis, M. A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Some last words on the authorship of the Junius Letters. With four facsimiles. 8vo, $1.75.

"His argument is full of interest, and its cumulative force is very great indeed, so great that those who are already convinced will regard it as quite conclusive, while those who still adhere to any other theory will find it a hard nut to crack."—Times.

"LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS":

The Autobiography of Martha von Tilling. By Bertha von Suttner. Translated by T. Holmes. New and cheaper edition. Crown 8vo, 75 cents.

⁂ This is a translation, with the sanction and co-operation of the authoress, of a romance which has obtained a great success on the Continent under the name of "Die Waffen Nieder." Baroness Suttner's object in this story is to awake the attention of all thinking persons to the evils of war and to the possibility of finding a remedy for it in a voluntary establishment of arbitration tribunals and mutual disarmament.

THE ALCHEMICAL ESSENCE AND THE CHEMICAL ELEMENT:

An Episode in the Quest of the Unchanging. By M. M. Pattison Muir, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 8vo, $1.50.

THE AMATEUR TELESCOPIST'S HANDBOOK.

By Frank M. Gibson, Ph.D., LL. B. With Frontispiece and 13 figures in the text. Crown 8vo, linen cloth, $1.25.

Contents.—I. The Telescope: Its Principles and Powers. II. Testing the Object-Glass, Eye-pieces, Tubes. III. The Stand. IV. Accessories of the Telescope. V. The Care of the Telescope. VI. The Use of the Telescope. VII. Observations, Stars, Nebulæ, the Sun and Moon. VIII. Observation (continued), The Planets. IX. Prices of Telescopes and Accessories. Celestial Objects: Alignment Stars—A Descriptive Catalogue of 468 Celestial Objects.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., take pleasure in announcing that they have acquired by purchase from Messrs. Lee & Shepard the plates and stock of the following works by Colonel THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, which will in future be included in their list of publications:

SHORT STUDIES OF AMERICAN AUTHORS. 16mo, boards, 30 cents, net.

YOUNG FOLKS' HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. Illustrated. $1.00, net.

YOUNG FOLKS' BOOK OF AMERICAN EXPLORERS. Illustrated. $1.20, net.

"Explorers" may also be had in 8 parts, the price of each part, paper covers, 15 cents, net.

HINTS ON WRITING AND SPEECHMAKING, 16mo, cloth,	50 cents
ATLANTIC ESSAYS. Crown 8vo,	$1.50
COMMON SENSE ABOUT WOMEN. Crown 8vo,	1.50
ARMY LIFE IN A BLACK REGIMENT. Crown 8vo,	1.50
THE NEW WORLD AND THE NEW BOOK. Crown 8vo,	1.50
TRAVELLERS AND OUTLAWS. Crown 8vo,	1.50
MALBONE. Crown 8vo,	1.50
OLDPORT DAYS. Crown 8vo,	1.50
OUT-DOOR PAPERS. Crown 8vo,	1.50
THE AFTERNOON LANDSCAPE. Poems and Translations. Crown 8vo,	1.00
THE MONARCH OF DREAMS. 16mo,	50 cents

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., Publishers, 15 E. 16th St., New York.

Artistic Specialties
IN Fixtures
FOR Lighting
BY Electricity
OR Gas.

Fine Goods at Fair Prices.

Entirely new Designs for this Season.

Fixtures Made to Order from Special Drawings.

BEAUTIFUL LAMPS WITH SHADES TO MATCH.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers,

523-525 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

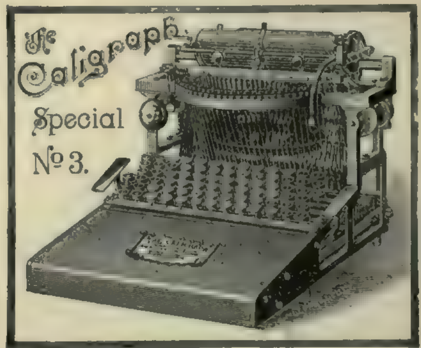
CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.



THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 19 MAY 1894 No. 10

CONTENTS

Professor Skeat's Chaucer 147
Pembroke 147
Town Life in the Fifteenth Century . . 148
A Journey in Other Worlds 149
The Dawn of Astronomy 149
Edward Livingston Youmans 150
Mr. Bailey Martin 150
In Re Walt Whitman 151

Poetry:

The Tournay of the Heroes. Andrew Lang . 152
New York Letter 152
Philadelphia Notes 153

Minor Notices:

The Wee Ones of Japan 153
Cuckoo Songs 153
Poems by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell . . . 154
The Letters of Thomas Lovell Beddoes . . 154
Authors and Their Public in Ancient Times . 154
Sir Thomas Munro 154
The Englishman at Home 154
Papers of the Jewish Women's Congress . . 154
Public Libraries in America 155
Paragraph Writing 155
Periodicals 155
News and Notes 156
Publications Received 157

PROFESSOR SKEAT'S CHAUCER.*

NO other living person, probably, is the equal of Professor Skeat of Cambridge, England, as an authority on the text of Chaucer. He has, therefore, only performed a task incumbent upon such a master by preparing what promises to be the definitive edition of the works of

> The first finder of our fair language.

This noble volume of more than six hundred large octavo pages is the prelude of the great undertaking, and it is issued in the best manner of the Clarendon Press. The two great universities of England thus coöperate in rearing this monument to Dan Chaucer. The frontispiece is the admirable portrait in the hood and robe from the Harleian MS. 4866. Professor Skeat's two-page introduction informs us that this edition "contains an entirely new text, founded solely on the manuscripts and on the earliest accessible printed editions. . . . The best copy has been selected as the basis of the text, and has only been departed from where other copies afforded a better reading." The various readings occupy a considerable part of each page at the foot, while the abundant explanatory notes are at the end of the book — one hundred and fifty pages of small print being thus devoted to the "Romaunt of the Rose" and the Minor Poems. Besides these poems and the elaborate introductions to them, this first volume contains a life of the poet in minute detail. Professor Skeat believes that "'shortly before 1340' fits in best with all the facts" relating to Chaucer's birth; but in regard to the noted Thomas Chaucer, who flourished under three Henrys, he "can only admit at present that there is a high probability" that he was the poet's son. At the close of his biography the author says:

> Such dry details, however useful, tell us little about the man himself, though they clearly show the versatility of his talents and exhibit him as a page, a soldier, a valet and esquire of the royal household, an envoy, a comptroller of customs, a clerk of works, and a member of Parliament. In the truest sense his own works best exhibit his thoughts and character, though we must not always accept all his expressions as if they were all his own. We have to deal with a writer in whom the dramatic faculty was highly developed, and I prefer to leave the reader to draw his own inferences. . . . I prefer the humbler task of giving the more important references. . . . I will only say that when a poet complains of hopeless love, or expresses his despair, or tells us (on the other hand) that he has no idea as to what love means, we are surely free to believe, in each case, just as little or as much as we please. It is a very sandy foundation on which to build up a serious autobiographical structure. The only remark which I feel justified in making is that I believe his wife's death to have been a serious loss to him in one respect at least [the coarseness of some of the later Tales].

Professor Skeat then gives three pages of references to Chaucer in his own works, of which the reader can make much or little at his pleasure.

Of the "Romaunt of the Rose" as usually printed in the poet's works the editor believes Chaucer to have been the translator of only the first 1,705 lines; he divides the remainder into two fragments proceeding from two different authors. Chaucer's part is proved to be his, and the other two not his, by the careful application of various tests of style, language, and construction. The second fragment, for instance, has a much greater diffuseness in rendering from the French, and a Northern dialect is employed in it. Chaucer's translation is given first, with the original at the foot of the page; the hundred pages following present the rest of the translation in double columns. This application of the higher criticism in a new field is of much interest.

Professor Skeat is not so hospitable with regard to the Minor Poems. Besides the twenty he accepts as genuine out of the confused mass formerly ascribed to Chaucer, he inserts only three as "probably genuine" but lacking external evidence — "Against Women Unconstant," "An Amorous Compleint," and "A Balade of Compleynt." Professor Skeat adds six poems to Dr. Furnivall's list, and omits "The Mother of God," known to have been written by Hoccleve. His critical introductions to the Minor Poems as a whole, and to each poem, are in the highest degree minute and painstaking. The volume takes rank distinctly among textual-critical editions of our great English classics like the Cambridge Shakespeare, while a large amount of introductory and explanatory matter is added, which shows Professor Skeat's singular competence for his exacting task. He does not allow himself to discuss Chaucer's general qualities as a poet, nor does he quote what others have said: "Of his poetical excellence it is superfluous to speak. Lowell's essay . . . gives a just estimate of his powers." If the stately volumes of this monumental edition were intended for common use one might complain a little at this omission; but Professor Lounsbury's volumes supply every need for the library, and Lowell's and other essays are easily accessible. The thanks of all the English-speaking world are due in large measure to Professor Skeat for this altogether worthy edition of the most wholesome, blithe, and refreshing of makers of English verse. A close association with Chaucer during the long future that shall know this "happie spirit" is triply assured to a scholar who has spent so many laborious days in setting forth his master's words rightly.

PEMBROKE.*

MISS WILKINS does not yet seem to us fairly to have passed the line that separates the most skillful teller of short stories from even the most ordinary novelist who has practiced his craft until certain rules of the developed art of fiction have become a second nature to him. Pembroke is a number of short stories lengthened out, elaborated, and dovetailed together, but it is not a novel with a beginning, a middle, and an end, and an artistic progress from first to last. The narrative of Sylvia Crane and Richard Alger is one of these short tales easily detached from the others. That of William Berry and Rebecca Thayer is another, while the longest is that of Charlotte Barnard and Barney Thayer. These two narrations are but superficially united by the character of Deborah Thayer, the mother of Rebecca and Barney. She is one of the most repulsive persons in all Miss Wilkins' gallery of disagreeable Yankee types. She forbids Barney the house after he refuses to marry Charlotte, with whom he has had no falling out. He has had an angry talk on politics with Cephas Barnard, her father, who tells him never to darken his door again. This he declares he never will do; but why he should be such an insensate blockhead as to harden himself against Charlotte and even the repentant simpleton of a Cephas, who makes sorrel pies and the like, passes the reader's comprehension. He is up to the last chapter an unmitigated donkey, and we sincerely pity Charlotte, who waits for him ten years, refusing a much better man, Thomas Payne, the squire's son, on account of what probably lies before her in a life union with such a long-eared animal.

---

* The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited, from numerous manuscripts, by the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, Litt.D., LL.D., M.A. Vol. I. Romaunt of the Rose. Minor Poems. Oxford: at the Clarendon Press; New York: Macmillan & Co. $4.00.

* Pembroke. A Novel. By Mary E. Wilkins. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Mrs. Deborah Thayer, from whom Barney inherits his precious disposition, forbids her daughter Rebecca to consort with William Berry, a young storekeeper. The daughter is courageous enough to disobey, but, strangely enough, prefers seduction to the marriage William urges on her. She is turned out into a winter storm by the implacable Deborah, who soon comes to the end of her maternal achievements by whipping her invalid son Ephraim so that he dies, though not altogether in consequence of the one blow she gives him. Richard Alger, the long-delaying lover of Sylvia Crane, is the antipodes of Mrs. Thayer, as he cannot make up his mind until he sees Sylvia going to the poorhouse; then he manages to summon up a little manhood and marry her.

It is needless to say that Miss Wilkins tells this sordid story of unmanly men, and women disnatured, or weak and clinging beyond the notion of ordinary self-respect, of avarice, seduction, and pitiless blindness and hardness, with the power of a true artist. Every word tells, and one stern, lifelike touch follows on another with relentless accuracy. That which revolts the present writer, who has lived much of his life in small New England villages like Pembroke, is the lack of relief, the total impression of coarseness and inhumanity, and the consequent falseness to the actual complexity of country life, in which there is much of brightness and cheer, and which is far from leaving, on the whole, so gloomy a picture on the observer's mind. A short story may well follow one line and be true to the entire episode, but a novel should convey something of a consensus of all the feelings in the lives it introduces. A novelist who dwells on the sordid and repulsive and positively inhuman aspects of this village existence, and leaves an impression of these alone, is partial and inartistic. There is not light enough here to make the shadows seem natural, and we sincerely hope that Miss Wilkins in her next novel will bring in something like a fair and ordinary proportion of reasonableness and pleasantness; otherwise she will be romancing about New England, which is here only in a strange perspective of good and evil.

TOWN LIFE IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.*

THIS book is in the full sense of the word a labor of love. Besides being a work showing great research and having a popular as well as a special interest, it is, in a certain sense, a bequest handed to the public by the executor of a will. So much better than the first named and recorded wife of the first named husband have been other wives that the English language has willingly received into its list of popular terms the incorrect but thoroughly significant word "helpmeet." Mrs. Green was in a striking sense the "help meet for" her husband. Her preface states that this work is a fulfillment of a promise made to her dying husband that she would study some of those problems in mediæval history in which so much was to be done and so much to be discovered. In the days of his feeble health it was his habit on entering a strange town to make his way first to the town hall. From the fragments of Greek and mediæval carving built into its walls, from harbor and pier, from the names of streets and the cathedral crypt, he extracted some record of the old municipal life, century by century, of Ancona, for example. Such fruitful lessons given her by her husband led the author to turn to the story of the English boroughs.

The word "borough" is nothing more than a variant spelling of the old Germanic burg, which suggests the central refuge and defense of the primitive settlements. The "town," on the contrary, recalls rather the outward circumvallation of ditch and fence or stockade. In parts of the old Germanic home land one can still trace the lines of the circular tuin as well as look upon the prehistoric burg or tower. It seems almost incredible from the point of view of today, but there was a period in the life of our ancestors when there were no towns, as we understand the term today — that is, with pavements or sidewalks, lighted streets, rows of brick or stone houses, and police systems. There was a general absence of all that multifariousness of interest which is the note of modern life. In the early ages the clan or tribe had its inclosure, its burg, its chiefs and freemen and serfs inside, and its common land and hunting ranges outside. Later on, the Church began to have its monasteries, cathedrals, parish churches, abbey lands, and great spaces of country for the support of the "religious." The king, also, had his possessions, which heavily mortgaged the earth, while in the great net of feudalism which was cast later over air and water and all the dry land, new claims were made, new rights asserted. Instead of the old independence of the forest, the average man found himself the slave or the servant of a king, noble, or bishop. The industrial era had not yet dawned; there was no "labor question," in the modern sense of the phrase, but the general division of society was into the landed and the landless, the landlord and the tenant, while in the intellectual world only the son of the Church — parson, clerk, monk, or bishop — knew anything of the mysteries of books or writing. How simple society was as compared with the present!

When the towns rose into being they soon became minor republics full of power. The story of their rise is the story of the beginnings of modern civilization. Mrs. Green, who plunges at once into her subject, says truly and effectively:

> There is nothing in England today with which we can compare the life of a fully enfranchised borough of the fifteenth century . . . when the borough was, in fact, a free, self-governing community, a state within the state, boasting of rights derived from immemorial custom, and of later privileges assured by law. The town of those earlier days, in fact, governed itself after the fashion of a little principality.

In succeeding pages she pictures brilliantly the nature and powers of these early English towns, out of which our American freedom has so largely grown:

> There is no better starting point for the study of town life in England than the fifteenth century itself, when, with ages of restless growth lying behind them, and with their societies as yet untouched by the influences of the Renascence or the Reformation or the new commercial system, the boroughs had reached their prosperous maturity.

Succeeding this brilliant opening chapter of description, Mrs. Green pictures, with a fine mastery of style and abundant familiarity with the sources, first the industrial and then the commercial revolution of the fifteenth century. The common life of the town is next set forth, showing how the care and protection of "the state" were dim and shadowy compared with the duties and responsibilities thrown on the townspeople themselves. The problem of government was one which taxed their energies, both intellectual and physical, and it is evident that a great many experiments were tried in different places with varying success but with one general result. The first means for developing commerce, gathering wealth, forming organized societies, and keeping order was to turn the serfs into freemen and to obtain deliverance by purchase or negotiation from the tyrannous usages of feudal masters. Gradually, as their strength increased, the towns fought with increasing success the battle for freedom, with weapons, strategy, and tactics suited to the particular forces opposed to them. Some towns had to grow up on the royal demesne, others on feudal estates, others on church lands. In the battle for supremacy the towns steadily won. Then followed the age of confederation, when various couples, trios, or groups of towns, especially those on the seacoast, formed new alliances in the interest of commerce and industry. Nothing is more plain than that English freedom is the result of two factors — the stimulus derived from foreign example, contact, and immigration, and the development from interior tendencies and resources. Mrs. Green, like most modern students of English history, brings out into clear light the great influence of the Hanseatic merchants and the Netherlands in developing English democracy. The chapter on confederation closes the first volume, which has an index of its own.

---

*Town Life in the Fifteenth Century. By Mrs. J. R. Green. 2 vols. 8vo. New York: Macmillan & Co. $5.00.

Volume II is delightful reading, and will probably be more popular with those who prefer to study men rather than institutions. In seventeen fascinating chapters the author pictures the manners, markets, and trades of the town, the labor question, the crafts, and their relations with the town. The guilds receive a large share of attention. The struggles between the town democracy and the town oligarchy show how much human nature is the same in all ages. The later chapters deal very largely with those towns out of which came so numerously the settlers of New England, and which were so powerfully influenced by the example of democracy in the Low Countries. Southampton, Nottingham, Norwich, Lynn, and Sandwich are especially selected for examination and for study of the workings of the town council. For the student of improved municipal rule in our own country this part of the book will be of especial value.

The author concludes her most interesting work by merely glancing at the rise of centralized government under the Tudors, when that system began which made the old common lands disappear almost entirely from the map as well as from the possession of the people. Any one who reads this fascinating and suggestive book, or makes himself familiar with the conditions of life in rural England today, will understand more clearly the intensity of the struggle now going on in England and its real meaning. Under the phrase "Home Rule" lies far more than the question of self-government for Ireland — the regaining by the English people of their old town life of the fifteenth century, which Mrs. Green has here so brilliantly portrayed. The fight is against a political, ecclesiastical establishment and against the House of Landlords and intrenched privilege. Mrs. Green closes her task with "feelings of compunction and dismay" at the magnitude of the work still before her; but we hope that her life may be prolonged and her strength and talents applied to the further exposition of that English history in which freedom, like the tide, has had a succession of ebb and flood.

A JOURNEY IN OTHER WORLDS.*

A FRIEND of ours in visiting an insane asylum was once privileged to look over a newspaper edited by the patients. She said the strangest point about the paper was the fact that on a cursory reading it seemed entirely rational and like other papers; only on further study did one notice the complete absence of meaning which the smooth sentences covered. This was the only paragraph which her memory brought away, but it was a fair sample, she stated, of the whole:

> The ewe lamb or ewer lamb, commonly called the pitcher lamb, from the pitch with which the bird anoints its nest before the grub becomes the perfect worm!

We do not quite know why we are reminded of this incident on reading Mr. John Jacob Astor's Journey in Other Worlds, an extravaganza after the order of the romances of Jules Verne. It begins with the landing on the surface of the planet Jupiter of the Calisto a "space ship," containing Dr. Cortlandt, a distinguished scientist of the year 2000, and two friends named respectively Bearwarden and Ayrault. We are treated to a full description of the build and management of the Calisto and the little arrangements for the convenience of its occupants, such as an after-dinner chute for chicken bones and empty cans through its bottom valve (conceive the surprise of the dwellers in Mars or Uranus at the descent of these vestiges of civilization!), and champagne cocktails made by scientific process without human aid, which pop up from below on the pressure of a button. The "space ship" is driven by electricity and "apergy" — a principle which Mr. Astor may be said to have invented or developed, and which he works for all it is worth — and is built of glucinum. It moves at the rate of some millions of miles a day, and "apergy" is freely called upon to aid the steering apparatus. It is called upon for everything, in short, from an explanation of the miracles of the New Testament to the composition of the cocktails. We are not sure, by the way, that these beverages were made apergetically, but we presume they were. The journey to Jupiter and back, 280,000,000 miles, occupies six months. The travelers encounter spirits, comets, mammoths, milky ways, dragons, serpents, pterodactyls, and every other possible strange creature, but confront them all in safety. "Apergy" brings them through, as really it ought in common gratitude to its sponsor and inventor. Reading such sentences as these, what can one think but that it takes a very strong head indeed to bear safely an overdose of half-comprehended science:

> The rabbits of Australia and the far more objectionable poisonous snakes in South America and India have been exterminated by the capture of a few dozen of the creatures in the infested districts, their inoculation with the virus similar to the murustiphi, tuberculosis, or any other contagious germ complaint to which the species treated was particularly susceptible, and the release of these individuals when the disease was seen to be taking hold. The rabbits and serpents released at once returned to their old haunts, carrying the plague far and wide. The unfortunate rabbits were greatly commiserated even by the medicos that wielded the death-dealing syringe; but, fortunately for themselves, they died easily. The reptiles, perhaps on account of the wider distribution of the nerve centers, had more lingering but not painful deaths (!) often, while in articulo mortis, leaving the holes with which they seemed to connect their discomfort and making a final struggle along the ground only to die more quickly as a result of their exertions. We have applied this also to the potato bug, locust, and other insect pests, no victim being too small for the ubiquitous subtle germ, which, properly utilized, has become one of man's best friends.
>
> We are all tired of being stuck in this cosmical speck, with its monotonous ocean, leaden sky, and single moon that is useless more than half the time.
>
> Whether, when "apergy" is developed, gravitation is annulled or reversed, like the late attraction of a magnet when the current is changed, or whether it is merely overpowered, in which case your motion will be the resultant of the two, is an unsettled but not very important point.
>
> Free to delve in the allurement and fascination of science, emancipated man goes on subduing nature as his Maker said he should, and turning her giant forces to his service in his constant struggle to use and become more like Him who gave the commandments and showed him how he should go.

On the whole we think we rather prefer the paragraph about the "pitcher lamb!"

THE DAWN OF ASTRONOMY.*

THIS substantial and imposing volume, finely printed and profusely illustrated, is an attempt to ascertain "the early astronomical views of the Egyptians from a study of their temples and the mythology connected with the various cults." Professor Lockyer's preface gives an interesting account of the manner in which, though not a professional Egyptologist, he came to take up the matter. The orientation of churches in England — i. e., their construction so that their eastern windows should squarely face the place of sunrising on the festival of the patron saint — was his instigation. He found before long that Professor Nissen of Germany had preceded him in holding that ancient temples were orientated in the same general way, and to him Professor Lockyer gives the credit of the discovery. He soon found from study in Egypt that "the mythology was intensely astronomical, and crystallized early ideas suggested by actual observations of the sun, moon, and stars."

The matter of Professor Lockyer's treatise is laid out in thirty-eight chapters, which begin with the simplest statements of the worship of everything connected with the sunrise and the dawn, and gradually and lucidly work their way through to complicated reasonings concerning the ideas embodied in the stupendous piles of the Egyptian temples. "The worship was in the main at sunrise or sunset . . . the horizon was in question." The directions of the temples, i. e., their "amplitudes," had reference, then, to the rising or setting of the sun and the stars; they had nothing to do with the Nile, as some have supposed. There were solstitial and equinoctial orientations, the temples being so constructed that the sunlight would fall directly into them at the solstice or the equinox, just as Stonehenge is orientated to the rising of the sun at the summer solstice. So the temple of Amen-Rā at Thebes, "beyond all question the most majestic ruin in the world," had its stone avenue open to the northwest, showing the familiarity of the Egyptians with the solstices.

---

* A Journey in Other Worlds. By John Jacob Astor. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* The Dawn of Astronomy. A Study of the Temple Worship and Mythology of the Ancient Egyptians. By J. Norman Lockyer. Macmillan & Co. $5.00.

> We find that a narrow beam of sunlight coming through a narrow entrance some five hundred yards away from the door of the Holy of Holies would, provided the temple were properly orientated to the solstice and provided the solstice occurred at the absolute moment of sunrise or sunset according to which the temple was being utilized, practically flash into the sanctuary and remain there for about a couple of minutes and then pass away.

Only the astronomer and the Egyptologist can pass with competence upon the truth in detail of Professor Lockyer's hypothesis, but its general correspondence with fact may be inferred from its striking coincidence with the researches of Dr. J. W. Fewkes in a very remote country from Egypt — our own Arizona, among the Moquis. The volume handles many subjects which have a deep interest for the student of the religion of Egypt and that of Greece, in many respects its derivative. Mr. F. C. Penrose's studies of Greek temples led him to agree with Professor Lockyer that the Parthenon, for example, was orientated by the rising of the Pleiades. The book is, indeed, a study of a world-wide subject.

EDWARD LIVINGSTON YOUMANS.*

THE sub-title of Mr. Fiske's readable biography of the first editor of the Popular Science Monthly gives the reason for the existence of the volume. Mr. Youmans was not a professor of natural science, and he did not add to our knowledge of nature any new laws or fresh discoveries, but he did a service in the popularization of science and the introduction of the works of Spencer, Tyndall, Huxley, and other foreign scientists to the American people which was unique and exceedingly important in its results. The present standing in the United States of the writers just mentioned is in no small degree due to the devotion and persistency with which Mr. Youmans gave himself to the cause of scientific education and the republication of their works here, with a just compensation to the writers. Replying once to some of Mr. Herbert Spencer's remonstrances against his great exertions toward the latter object, he says:

> As respects what I have done I pray you give yourself no uneasiness. It is but little at any rate, and it seems to be my kind of work. I greatly like it, and never enjoy myself so well as when occupied in promoting by some measure the diffusion of valuable thought. I am an ultra and thoroughgoing American. I believe there is great work to be done here for civilization. What we want are ideas — large, organizing ideas — and I believe there is no other man whose thoughts are so valuable for our needs as yours are.

These words indicate the generosity of Mr. Youmans' mind and heart. His education, interrupted much by more or less difficulty with his eyes, often amounting later to blindness, had tended mainly toward natural science, and he seems to have cared little for philosophy, history, or literature. He was naturally attracted more to Mr. Spencer than to Darwin, and the need of encouragement of the former in his heroic days was nobly met by the American disciple, whom Mr. Fiske well styles "the apostle of evolution." There is, of course, no small measure of partisanship of Mr. Spencer in both the subject and the author of this biography. Whoever fails to "swallow Spencer whole," as the Japanese say, receives few compliments — not even the philosophic ability of Chauncey Wright and Dr. F. E. Abbot saving them from adjectives supposed to belong exclusively to the vocabulary of theological abuse. These are things at which the judicious reader will smile; but he is not likely to be converted, if he knows anything about the history of philosophy, to the extravagant claims made for Mr. Spencer by Mr. Youmans and Mr. Fiske. He will not, however, expect a thoroughly rationalistic judgment of the merits of a pope from his cardinals; and he will read with interest and profit these details of a career having an exceptional moral and intellectual unity from first to last, and rise from the volume with a sincere regard for a character so strenuous, indefatigable, and winning as Mr. Youmans'.

He was born in Coeymans, N. Y., in 1821, and died in New York in 1887. His sixty-five years of resolute and earnest living were passed in these two places mainly, varied by numerous lecturing tours and, later, trips to Europe. His great services to the popularization of natural science were his lectures, which displayed an unusual power of exposition; his text-books on chemistry and household science, which had a very large sale; the Popular Science Monthly, which he founded and edited for twenty years; the International Scientific series, which was his conception and achievement; and, most of all, his introduction of Herbert Spencer, Professors Tyndall and Huxley, and other scientific writers to America through the Appleton firm, which heartily and honorably seconded him. The correspondence with Mr. Spencer and the account of their intercourse in London occupy a considerable part of the volume, and are extremely interesting. Mr. Fiske has written with warm affection of his intimate friend, and the one criticism we are disposed to make is that he has quite often disregarded the line that ought to separate vivacious conversation from the printed page. It is a fault that seems to be growing upon him. With his closing words on Mr. Youmans few can fail to agree:

> Himself one of the plain people, as Abraham Lincoln used to call them, he knew what they were and what they wanted. In concluding our survey of his life, what impresses us most, I think, is the broad, democratic spirit and the absolute unselfishness which it reveals at every moment and in every act.

Besides the biography the volume contains seven selected papers by Mr. Youmans, which first appeared mostly in his important collection The Culture Demanded by Modern Life and the Popular Science Monthly. They are powerful and convincing expositions of the need of scientific education and the truth of the principle of evolution.

MR. BAILEY MARTIN.*

IN Macaulay's brilliant essay on Horace Walpole he speaks of Walpole's writings as ranking "as high among the delicacies of intellectual epicures as the Strasburg pies among the dishes described in the Almanach des Gourmands. But," he adds, "as the pâté de foie gras owes its excellence to the diseases of the wretched animal which furnishes it, and would be good for nothing if it were not made of livers preternaturally swollen, so none but an unhealthy and disorganized mind could have produced such literary luxuries as the works of Walpole."

This illustration exactly fits a novel like Mr. Bailey Martin. It is a literary delicacy, but it is also a skillful serving up of a poor, diseased specimen of the human race. The clever author is the editor of the English Public Opinion, and the story is a sort of pseudo-confession — an autobiography which suggests Robert Grant's Confessions of a Frivolous Girl and books of that class. The hero, Mr. Bailey Martin, is as vile a cad and snob as ever walked God's earth; in fact, we devoutly trust that he never had an actual existence outside of the brain of the novelist. To rise out of middle-class life and mingle with the aristocracy is the hero's one absorbing ambition. From his earliest boyhood, even during his school life, he is a sneak. During his holidays he sank so low as to pretend he liked cod-liver oil in order to ingratiate himself with a young lord. After his school days he falls in love and proposes to a young girl, whom he soon jilts without a pang of remorse because she will not be an assistance to him as he climbs the social ladder. He marries later the sister of his comrade, the lord, wholly for her position and money, and is so brutally selfish during their wedding journey that he kills her affection for him within six months.

---

*Edward Livingston Youmans, Interpreter of Science for the People. A Sketch of His Life. By John Fiske. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

*Mr. Bailey Martin. By Percy White. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

As an example of a cad and snob at his highest point of evolution, as an example of worldly ambition unredeemed by a single virtue and utterly unconscious of its own viciousness, this novel is a remarkable success. Never has middle-class toadyism been more frankly displayed than here. The way in which the Bailey-Martin family ate dirt and crawled on the ground before the empty-headed young scion of a titled family is absolutely disgusting. We understand that the English people — who surely ought to know their own weaknesses — welcome this novel as true to life, and so we cannot call it exaggerated. In its photographic description of the follies and foibles of tufthunters the novel suggests Miss Austen's style. The writer has studied social ambition in every phase with a zeal worthy of a nobler subject. It is this which absorbs the hero's mind, heart, and soul. The specimens of the aristocracy that the writer shows us are anything but admirable, and the noble earl whose last hours are made hideous by the presence of the lowest kind of women is atrocious. Mr. Bailey Martin's sister is the only fine character in the book; she is made an excellent foil for her brother's baseness.

After we have done full justice to the consistent character of the hero and to the author's skillful portrayal of a snob, we must express our disgust at these morbid self-revelations and at the earthy tone of the entire novel. The reader's whole moral nature revolts at a description of social life, on one level, which is wholly governed by unworthy motives and utterly devoid of all high ideals. Mr. Bailey Martin, as here depicted, belongs below the level of the brute beasts, for he is incapable of a single noble impulse or of a solitary pang of remorse. His apparent frankness in describing his conduct and his utter incapacity for judging it by any high standards are the remarkable features of his confessions.

IN RE WALT WHITMAN.*

THIS large volume of some 450 pages is a kind of supplement to Dr. Bucke's work on Walt Whitman, and it is made up of a great variety of papers in prose and verse. In respect to tone and judgment there is much less diversity than in respect to names of writers. One firm note of undiscriminating eulogy runs through the book from beginning to end, and he must have a very sincere regard for Whitman who is not repelled, for a time at least, from further reading of his works by such a prodigality of praise, that regards neither taste nor judgment in its unbridled excess. The editors, who are among the chief sinners, prepare us for the revel of flattery to come by their preface, where, for instance, we read:

> Whitman had cosmic breadth and port. His "Leaves" foliage the heavens. He was so complicated with all men and all phenomena that his very voice partook of the sway of elemental integrity and candor. Nature has not shame nor vulgarity nor vainglory, nor had he, and there was never a breath of distrust in his utterances from first to last.

"Speaking about Walt Whitman has always seemed to me much the same as talking about the universe," writes Mr. Symonds to the celebration of the poet's birthday in 1891. The proceedings at this dinner, where Whitman, according to the report here given, was plied with champagne to keep up his strength, are the most astonishing record of mountainous conceit in a human being and worshiping adulation in his admirers that we have anywhere seen. He, indeed, said at the beginning, "Don't lay it on too thick;" but soon the praise became so fulsome that all sense of self-respect seems to have departed from the majority of those present, and when the stream of flattery showed any sign of weakening its force the unabashed old man cried for more. They were, indeed, but echoing what the shameless poet of Leaves of Grass had written of himself in his three anonymous reviews of his own book, here first printed over his own name: "His scope of life is the amplest of any yet in philosophy. He is the true spiritualist. . . . He is the largest lover and sympathizer that has appeared in literature. . . . He is to prove either the most lamentable of failures or the most glorious of triumphs in the known history of literature." The best comment on such a modest certificate of Whitman's merits from his own hand is the remark of the Southern orator concerning his candidate: "My friend the Colonel is by all odds the greatest man in America. Why, he allows it himself!" Mr. Gilchrist, another contributor, is reported to place "Whitman in the last and highest rank . . . beside Confucius, Buddha, Zoroaster, Jesus." Whoever, like Mr. Theodore Watts, fails to use the password of adulation is, according to Mr. John Burroughs, a "dirty, thick-witted, cockney blackguard."

It is difficult, after reading a few pages of this curiosity of literature, in which panegyric swoons from exhaustion and every barrier that good taste and reverence raise against excess in language is broken down, to credit Professor Dowden with much discrimination in writing to Whitman in 1871, "You make no slaves, however many lovers." Indeed, he immediately proceeds to say, "We grant as true all that you claim for yourself." Yes, he allows it himself! There is no doubt that Whitman had a "cosmic" nature in one respect, and that his self-conceit knew no bounds of space or time. His executors have done him a sorry service in making so prominent the sickening excesses of the Whitman band, plying their deluded god with equal potions of panegyric and champagne. The idol and the worshiper seemed alike unconscious of modesty or limit. That which is admirable and true in Walt Whitman must indeed be of genuine force to survive such an assault upon his reputation as this volume.

— Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield of Freshwater, Isle of Wight, writes as follows to the New York Tribune: "As a member and at the request of the local committee appointed for the erection of a memorial to the late poet laureate in this place — his home for forty years — I write to ask your aid in making general the character of the monument selected. It has been decided to erect on the highest crest of the down overlooking the western end of the island, and between the roads of Farringford and the English Channel, a granite monolith in the form of an Iona cross. The design will be furnished by Mr. Pearson, R.A. With the permission of the authorities of the Trinity House, who propose to change the name of the landmark from the Nodes Beacon to the Tennyson Beacon, the present structure, a pile of tarred wood erected last year, will be removed and its place taken by the cross. The spot chosen, 'the ridge of the noble down' Tennyson loved, will, I believe, recommend itself to his friends and the companions of his daily walks. As a land and sea mark, in view of every ship that passes in or out of the Needles or under the island, the beacon cross should form a conspicuous and fitting memorial to one of England's great poets. A considerable sum has already been subscribed locally and among the late Lord Tennyson's friends. But more money is needed to make the monument what it should be in scale and finish. There must be many both in England and in America who would wish to be contributors to this memorial. I am desired to ask all such to be good enough to forward their contributions before July 1 next to the Rev. J. Merriman, D.D., Freshwater, Isle of Wight, by whom they will be at once acknowledged. A complete subscription list will be sent in due course to every subscriber."

— There is a strange coincidence which seems to have escaped notice in the fact that the name of Raeburn should be chosen for the surnames of three important characters in three separate and distinct novels by different writers. It occurs in Mrs. Humphry Ward's Marcella and in a new story by Miss Adeline Sergeant now running in a provincial newspaper, while it will be remembered that a character of that name takes a leading part in Edna Lyall's We Two. Happily, nobody's reputation can be injured by the coincidence, which, we think, is curious enough to be worth noting. — Literary World, London.

— In the 5,000 volumes exhibited at Chicago as a "model library" by the American Library Association were more than 500 books published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The Riverside Press has printed a descriptive catalogue of the books thus highly recommended. As it is conveniently arranged and each book is fully described, this catalogue by itself, or as a supplement to the "A. L. A." Catalogue, will be useful to any one making up a select list of books for either a private or a public library.

---

* In Re Walt Whitman. Edited by His Literary Executors, Horace L. Traubel, Richard Maurice Bucke, Thomas B. Harned. Philadelphia: David McKay. $2.00.

The Literary World

BOSTON 19 MAY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

The Tournay of the Heroes.

Ho, warders, cry a tournay! ho, heralds, call the Knights!
What gallant lance for old Romance 'gainst modern fiction fights?
The lists are set, the Knights are met, I ween, a dread array,
St. Chad to shield, a stricken field shall we behold today!
Fast to the Northern barriers pricks Roland of Roncesvaux,
And by his side, in knightly pride, Wilfrid of Ivanhoe,
The Templar rideth by his rein, two gallant foes were they;
And proud to see, le brave Bussy his colours doth display.
Ready at need, he comes with speed, William of Deloraine,
And Hereward the Wake himself is pricking o'er the plain.
The good Knight of La Mancha's here, here is Sir Amyas Leigh,
And Eric of the gold hair, pride of Northern chivalry.
There shines the steel of Alan Breck, the sword of Athos shines,
Dalgetty on Gustavus rides along the marshalled lines,
With many a Knight of Sunny France the Cid has marched from Spain,
And Götz the Iron-handed leads the lances of Almain.

But who upon the Modern side are champions? With the sleeve
Adorned of his false lady-love rides glorious David Grieve,
A bookseller sometime was he in a provincial town,
But now before his iron mace go horse and rider down.
Ho, Robert Elsmere! count thy beads; lo, champion of the fray,
With brandished Colt, comes Felix Holt, all of the Modern day.
And Silas Lapham's six-shooter is cocked; the Colonel's spry!
There spurs the wary Egoist, defiance in his eye;
There Zola's ragged regiment comes, with dynamite in hand,
And Flaubert's crew of county doctors devastate the land.
On Robert Elsmere Friar Tuck falls with his quarter-staff,
Nom Dé! to see the clerics fight might make the sourest laugh!
They meet, they shock, full many a Knight is smitten on the crown,
So keep us good St. Geneviève, Umslopogaas is down!
About the mace of David Grieve his blood is flowing red,
Alas for ancient chivalry, le brave Bussy is sped!
Yet where the somber Templar rides the Modern caitiffs fly,
The Mummer (of The Mummer's Wife) has got it in the eye.
From Felix Holt his patent Colt hath not averted fate,
And Silas Lapham's smitten fair, right through his gallant pate.
There Dan Deronda reels and falls, a hero sore surprised;
Ha, Beauseant! still may such fate befall the Circumcised!
The Egoist is flying fast from him of Ivanhoe;
Beneath the axe of Skalagrim fall prigs at every blow:
The ragged Zolaists have fled, screaming "We are betrayed,"
But loyal Alan Breck is shent, stabbed through the Stuart plaid;
In sooth it is a grimly sight, so fast the heroes fall,
Three volumes full could scarcely tell the fortunes of them all.
At length but two are left on ground, and David Grieve is one;
Ma foy, what deeds of derring-do that bookseller hath done!
The other — mark the giant frame, the great, portentous fist! —
'Tis Porthos! David Grieve may call on Kuenen an he list.
The swords are crossed; Doublez, dégagez, vite! great Porthos calls,
And David drops, that secret botte hath pierced his overalls!
And goodly Porthos, as of old the famed Orthryades,
Raises the trophy of the fight, then, falling on his knees,
He writes in gore upon his shield, "Romance, Romance has won!"
And blood-red on that stricken field goes down the angry sun.
Night falls upon the field of death, night on the darkling lea;
O send us such a tournay soon, and send me there to see!

— Andrew Lang, in Ban and Arrière Ban.

◆

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE arrival in New York of Miss Beatrice Harraden, author of Ships that Pass in the Night, created some such interest here as the advent of a Thackeray or a Dickens would have done. Probably no one was more surprised by it than Miss Harraden herself. No sooner had she left the steamer that brought her over than she was pounced upon by the enterprising reporters clamoring for copy. She avoided being interviewed with great cleverness, and showed a very strong desire to be let alone. The newspapers, however, described in detail her appearance and her dress, and one of them also went so far as to glean from her fellow passengers the fact that during the voyage Miss Harraden had conducted herself with such modesty that "no one suspected the small, frail English girl, with the bright eyes and interesting face, of being an author whose fame was ringing in two continents." I fancy that the author is much amused by all this absurd exploitation, though it evidently mystifies her somewhat. As a matter of fact she has come here simply for a change of air and she has no wish to be lionized. At the present time she is visiting near New York and seeing only a few people. Soon she will leave for Southern California.

Miss Harraden has been so reticent that very little is known about her life. This has not been especially eventful, though she has seen a good deal of the world. One of her friends has given me this account of her: Her father is a musician and a man of unusual attainments. Miss Beatrice is the youngest of three daughters. When she was a child the family moved to India, where the father taught music, having among his pupils two of the young princes of the country. According to the necessary custom of the English in India, the children were sent home to be educated. Miss Beatrice went in so desperately for the higher education, with special reference to mathematics, that she lost her health by it, and for a time had to give up all work. To this catastrophe Ships that Pass in the Night probably owes its origin, for the story of the heroine is curiously like the story of the author's own life, and Petershof is so accurately described that Miss Harraden must have been there herself, presumably in search of health. At any rate, she has traveled on the Continent and for some time she studied at Dresden. Just now she is suffering from weak lungs, but it is thought that the soft air of California will be of much benefit to her and will enable her to begin a third book, which she is anxious to write.

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith is hard at work on a new book on Venetian life, both illustrations and text to be by himself. It will be a beautiful edition, and will appear in the fall. Though Mr. Smith is a quick painter he writes very slowly, and the papers that make up the new volume will represent months of composition and revision. "Any piece of writing to last," I heard him say the other day, "must be as perfect in form as the writer can make it. We see enough of ephemeral work in our newspapers. Just think of the enormous mass of writing in every one of our Sunday papers! And what does it all amount to? It perishes in a day. In one way it is positively pathetic to think of it, though, of course, most of it is written for the hour only." When asked about his own methods of writing he said: "I didn't begin writing till I was forty-eight, then I tried my hand at it at the suggestion of Mr. Horace E. Scudder, who urged me to prepare some text for a collection of reproductions of some of my pictures that Houghton, Mifflin & Co. were going to bring out. So I wrote one sketch, and Mr. Scudder liked it so much that I did several others, and I've been writing more or less ever since. But I don't publish very much, for I work very carefully, write one page sometimes three or four times, and polish incessantly. I often spend a great deal of time on one phrase." This explains the fine finish of Mr. Smith's work; indeed, there are few authors whose whole lives have been devoted to literature that write such an admirable literary style. I asked Mr. Smith when he found time to do his literary work and his painting, for he is one of the most successful contractors in New York. "My painting I do when I am off on my vacation of two or three months each summer," he replied, "and I devote a couple of hours in the day to writing. Both of these are recreations for me and, I enjoy them immensely. For that matter, I enjoy everything I do."

Mr. Smith will spend August and September of this year in Holland, where he expects to do a great deal of painting and to gather material for future literary work. During his visits abroad he gives himself wholly to his art work. He sometimes paints three or four pictures in a day, relying wholly upon his direct impression of the scene that he is reproducing. "At the end of my vacation," he said, "I gather my canvases together, ship them to my dealer in New York, and then I think no more about them. The dealer takes care of the rest."

Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, the editor of the Century, is preparing for publication a complete edition of his poems, and it will probably be brought out before many months. For the past few years Mr. Gilder, when not engaged in editorial and other duties, has devoted himself almost wholly to the writing of verse, though he still writes editorials for his magazine. He has, however, done a great deal of prose work during his career. For many years he was connected with the Newark Advertiser as reporter, legislative correspondent, and managing editor, and as one of the editors of Hours at Home, Dr. Holland's magazine, which prepared the way for the old Scribner's, he wrote a great many prose articles. Of late he has also done considerable public speaking and lecturing. His lecture on "Abraham Lincoln" has been delivered several times.

Mr. E. C. Stedman, who has been energetically working on his Victorian Anthology for some time past, has already completed so much of it that it will probably be ready in the fall, It promises to be a notable work of its kind, for it will furnish a complete history of the poetic literature of Great Britain since 1830. It will also enhance Mr. Stedman's reputation as a critic, though this is already so well established that many of his admirers would be glad if he would devote at least a portion of his time to the writing of poetry, in which he won his first fame. Good critics are rare in this country, in any country for that matter, but good poets are far more rare.

The annual dinner of the Authors' Club took place last week, and was very jolly. About sixty of the club members were present, including Frank R. Stockton, who presided, Richard Watson Gilder, Joseph Jefferson, George W. Cable, E. C. Stedman, Richard Henry Stoddard, John Burroughs, and F. Hopkinson Smith. Several capital speeches were made — one of the best by Joseph Jefferson, who, I suppose, is one of the most popular men in this country, and who takes a great deal of pleasure in being an author. Mr. Jefferson, by the way, is preparing an edition of "Rip Van Winkle," the play which he has practically made his own, and in the actual construction of which Dion Boucicault had a large share, with illustrations by himself. Mr. Jefferson's pictures long ago won recognition for their genuine artistic quality, but he has not as yet made his appearance as an illustrator. During the past few years he has displayed as great versatility as Mr. Hopkinson Smith — as actor, artist, author, lecturer, and after-dinner speaker.

Prof. Brander Matthews will leave New York for Europe next week and remain abroad until the opening of Columbia College in the fall. A portion of the summer he will spend in Venice and Florence, where he will renew impressions received twenty-three years ago and doubtless gather some fresh ones. He knows parts of Europe very thoroughly, for in boyhood he made a carriage journey in Switzerland and spent some time in Paris, where he first developed the strong fondness for the drama which he has retained, and he has since made several visits abroad. Mr. Matthews' "Vignettes of Manhattan," which attracted attention in Harper's Magazine, will be brought out in book form by the Harpers in the fall. These were so successful that Mr. Matthews will probably write others. The new book will be dedicated to Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, who, according to Mr. Matthews, would be a typical New Yorker but for the fact that he was born in New York.

One of the most popular books of the past year was sold by the author to the publishers for one hundred dollars! The publishers' profit has doubtless been several thousands. This, of course, seems very rough on the author, who had been obliged to sell the work outright for want of money, but it simply illustrates one of the many uncertainties of the publishing business. If the book had fallen flat the publishers would probably have lost several hundreds of dollars. But — this is a point that is often overlooked — the author's time and labor would have been lost too! Altogether, it is a very nice question just how far the publisher is indebted to the author and the author to the publisher. In the case I have referred to the author will, of course, ultimately profit by the success of the book, for it has greatly enhanced the value of all other works from the same hand.

JOHN D. BARRY.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

MR. EDGAR WILLIAM NYE will be with us in a few days, and we are preparing to offer him the courtesies of the town. The Art Club will give a "musical smoke," whatever that may be, on Saturday evening, the 19th inst., when Bill Nye, as he chooses bluntly to be called, will be introduced to the members. He will also be entertained by his publisher, Mr. J. Bertram Lippincott, at Oak Hill, the beautiful country seat near Logan in the suburbs. The History of the United States, which he has lately written, is a prosperous work. It has sold enormously in all sections of the country, and another new edition is now preparing. Much of the critical comment resolves itself into surprise that so much really good fun could be invented by sustained effort.

Another guest within our gates, erstwhile a citizen of the town, is Mr. John McClure Hamilton, who now lives in London. He is celebrated as having painted Mr Gladstone three or four times, and one of these portraits was last year purchased by the French Government for the Luxembourg. A quite different portrait, entitled "Mr. Gladstone in Downing Street," and showing the G. O. M. book in hand in his study, was bought by the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts from its recent exhibition. Mr. Hamilton is full of anecdotes of his famous friends in London, notably of Messrs. Alma-Tadema and Whistler. The latter is quoted as saying that he had never seen an example of Valesquez before he painted some of his most Valesquez-like portraits. This, I suppose, is to be taken as Whistlerian pleasantry.

Apropos of Mr. Gladstone, I was told the other day by Mr. Bok that upon calling at the London residence he noticed on the study table the American rather than the English editions of the American magazines. Mr. Gladstone explained that Mrs. Gladstone took the English editions, but that he found it suggestive to look over the American advertisements as an index of this country's economic status. This is a keen bit of perception, which does credit to a statesmanlike outlook. The present economic conditions are certainly reflected in the stint of advertising.

Tardy justice is to be done to the memory of one of the old Philadelphia groups of authors who clustered about Graham and Sartain when the principal magazines of the country hailed from the Quaker city. Dr. Matthew Woods, himself the author of a very successful book, Rambles of a Physician, is preparing an edition of the long-lost poems of Henry B. Hirst, accompanied by a sketch of his life. Hirst was a companion of Poe, and possessed many of his characteristics, though his writings were without the inspiration which kindled Poe's. His habits, however, were unfortunately similar, and Mr. Sartain, still lusty at eighty-five, tells me that he has frequently kept Hirst at his house, fearing he might die from his excesses, and seen him composing in his spasmodic way, muttering out the sentences before penning them. It is curious, apropos of this, that Poe and Hirst should seem like names almost of antiquity and that Graham and Sartain, their publishers, should still be with us at the end of the century. Mr. Sartain was drawn into a train of reminiscences when I mentioned Hirst to him, and he spoke familiarly of "Young Dick Stoddard, who used to write for me." Those who are privileged to know both of these young old men would possibly give the palm of youthfulness to the elder. Dr. Woods would be pleased to have any information which may assist him in his work on Hirst. He may be addressed at Philadelphia. He already has much valuable matter in his possession.

Of publishing there is not now a great deal, though some new books are in the wind. Miss Anne Wharton is at work on a colonial volume, which the Lippincotts will publish, and Dr. C. C. Abbott is preparing two semi-scientific works for the same firm. Miss Agnes Repplier, who sailed for Europe on May 4, will put forth a new cluster of essays through Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in the fall; and Mr. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell's Poems, just issued by that house, are receiving many hearty tributes here in his native city. He is said to have produced no work so fresh and simple in motive as this, and his promise of doing lasting things seems to be on the verge of fulfillment. Dr. Weir Mitchell has written an inspiring drama in the Elizabethan manner, the name and novel plot of which I am not permitted to reveal. The rendition of Maeterlinck's "Intruder" by the members of the Browning Society was a pronounced success. The audience was a very large one, and the newspaper press has had much to say about the novel drama since its production.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Wee Ones of Japan.

This dainty booklet, by Mae St. John Bramhall, is dressed in clean linen, with a garniture of silver and gold, the inevitable red autumn moon of Japan being visible beyond a spray of chrysanthemums. It is delightfully illustrated, with great spirit and accuracy, by Mr. C. S. Weldon. It is the fruit of two years of observation of the youngsters of Dai Nippon. We half believe with the author that the aforesaid youngsters are the very "best-disciplined darlings to be found upon the ample bosom of Mother Earth." For correct perspective and knowledge of background the author depends largely — as what recent bookmaker who writes on Japan does not? — on Prof. Basil Hall Chamberlain's studies. She is not, however, the pioneer of writers upon the Japanese children, for both the author of The Mikado's Empire and Mrs. Ayrton have learned the ins and outs of the Japanese kodama. Nevertheless, this little book is a clear, informing, and enjoyable reprint of papers which in Harper's Bazar attracted so many readers, including mothers, spinsters, young folks, and fathers and mothers of the grand and great-grand type. The reader will find delight and pleasure in Mr. Weldon's illustrations, which are full of reality and suggestion and very true to the environment and atmosphere of his pets. — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

Cuckoo Songs.

Mrs. Katharine Tynan Hinkson, the author of these songs, has evidently an infusion of Irish blood in her veins, and, like many of her race, she possesses the secret of musical cadences. There is much sweetness, a good deal of originality, and not a little true poetic feeling in her verse. It sings itself — the test of rhyme — and the feeling of the verses, which is true and deep, awakens a corresponding throb in the heart of the reader. We will quote one fragment addressed to her friend, Frances Wynn, who died in August last, which seems to us full of a tender pathos. It is called "The Widowed House:"

Within your house that's widowed love's nest is bitter cold,
Love goes with drooping pinions, his pulses slow and old;
Your baby cries all night long for you he never knew;
The dust is over all things — the grave dust over you.

Drear day and night go over and yet you never come,
To all that lonely weeping so obdurate and dumb;
'Twere liker you to hasten, putting the glory by,
To kiss your love's cold forehead and still your baby's cry.

'Twere liker you'd come stealing, a little ghost in white,
To rock a tiny cradle all in the hushed moonlight;
To whisper to a sleeper till he should dream and wake
And find the strange new comfort and lose the old heartbreak.

With you the years go over fleeter than words can say;
And one shall lose her lover but the half length of a day,
And one shall lose her baby but 'twixt a sleep and sleep.
The dead are glad in heaven; the living 'tis that weep.

— Boston: Copeland & Day. $1.50.

Poems by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell.

There are freshness, simplicity, and a good deal of charm in these poems by Mr. Langdon Mitchell, who, if we mistake not, is the younger son of Dr. Weir Mitchell, the distinguished physician, himself a well-known writer of verse and story. He says no more than he feels; to say this in these days of overdrawing and undue stimulation is high praise. There are some vivid little pictures here and there, more suggested than sung. We quote from one of the first poems in the book, "Sunrise in New York Harbor:"

> But as we gazed the sun from heaven wrought
> Upon her beauty. Tower by tower she caught
> The morning, till at last the harbor wide,
> Green hills, still water, and on every side,
> Distant and near, white sails and whiter steam,
> Dissolving as it breathed, flushed in the beam
> And splendor of the day; she seemed to be
> A faëry city on a faëry sea.
> For cozy, rosy wharf and rosier tower
> Were imagined in the stream, and for that hour,
> Throned on a shadow, she did seem to have
> For her foundation neither earth nor wave,
> But in the air to hang, on air to float,
> Lying in calm, immortal, and remote;
> And, straining o'er the waters to the strand,
> I felt my heart leap toward my native land!

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Letters of Thomas Lovell Beddoes.

These letters have been edited with notes by Mr. Edmund Gosse; he was incited to the undertaking by Robert Browning, who estimated them more highly, perhaps, than the majority of readers will do. They are lively and often piquant in style, and contain much scattered comment on literary topics, but we can hardly agree with Mr. Swinburne that they are "brilliant" and show the author's "noble instinct for poetry" even better than his poems — though these seem to us overpraised by his personal friends. Some of the criticisms on German authors, written while Beddoes was studying at Göttingen, in 1825 and subsequent years, are amusing. He is disposed to rank Blumenbach as "the first living writer" of Germany; "for," he adds, "a nearer acquaintance with Goethe has inclined me to rate him much lower than I anticipated; out of his works, which fill pretty fatly some thirty volumes . . . three at most contain what is really good. As a poet he is inferior to his late lordship [Byron], and in the novel line somewhere about Mackenzie." He believes that Goethe is much indebted to Klopstock and Wieland, and predicts that his countrymen, who have been so hasty in deifying him, will ere long "pull down his statue from its high pinnacle on the poetic temple, and make it a step to the high altar of some new pen deity." Schiller he rates no better, as "he's never original." Coleridge, as he has learned, "has a very superficial knowledge" of German, and "has given the English a totally absurd opinion" of Kant, whom he seems never to have read. Browning's Strafford he regards as "not exactly dramatic" and in parts "very artificial." Many of the letters the author would never have allowed to be printed, we believe, and the editor might well have expurgated some of them.— Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Authors and Their Public in Ancient Times.

Mr. Geo. Haven Putnam further states in his title that this book is "a sketch of literary conditions and of the relations with the public of literary producers from the earliest times to the invention of printing." As originally written, it was intended to form a preliminary chapter, or general introduction, to a history of the origin and development of property in literature — a work which we hope he may yet be able to give us, though engrossing business cares and impaired eyesight may delay its completion. Meanwhile we are grateful for the present volume, which contains much curious and interesting matter, gathered and condensed for the most part from French and German sources, English literature being comparatively meager in this line of research. After a preliminary chapter on "the beginnings of literature" in Chaldea, Egypt, China, Japan, India, Persia, and Judea, the relations of authors with their publishers and the methods of bookmaking and bookselling in Greece, Alexandria, Rome, and Constantinople are explained and illustrated. The evolution of the idea that the author has a property in his work and is entitled to an income from it was very slow, and it is difficult to trace its origin and development. It is not until the Augustan age of Roman literature that we find facts and references on which to base a theory as to the real nature of the relations between authors and publishers. The interest and value of the book, however, are not for those alone who desire to investigate this particular subject. It is a scholarly and yet popular history of ancient bookmaking in all its aspects and relations, and every intelligent reader will enjoy it. A second edition should be carefully revised by a classical scholar. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Sir Thomas Munro.

The thirteenth volume in the handy and valuable series of Rulers of India has a special interest for Americans, since it relates to the British settlement of the Madras presidency. This southern part of India contains the oldest of the Christian missionary enterprises inaugurated by Americans, and certain names very familiar to those who from childhood have contributed their cents, dollars, and dimes occur frequently on the pages of this book. Sir Thomas Munro was born on May 27, 1761; he suffered from poverty in his boyhood because of the interruption of business between Glasgow and Virginia, owing to the breaking out of the Revolutionary War. He worked his way to India as a common sailor, and arriving at Calcutta found that the mild-eyed and sweet-voiced Oriental could swindle a man as handsomely as could a London sharper. By sheer force of character Munro rose rapidly into favor and influence, first as a soldier, then as a civil servant, and finally as a great administrator, judicial, financial, and military. He died in the governorship of Madras July 6, 1827, but his name is still held in reverent memory by many of the old natives. The story is told with spirit and in good style, and one rises from the reading of this book with an increase of respect for that great country which gained a new empire in India while it lost one in America. Furthermore he is impressed with the commanding genius and fitness of the British race for the art of government. The author, the late John Bradshaw, who spent twenty-five years of his life in the educational work of India, was a martyr to his love of truth and accuracy. While spending his brief holiday in verifying certain historical data for this book in South Arcot, even though he knew the cholera had broken out there, he pursued his quest, but died on the fifth day of the present year. — Macmillan & Co. 60c.

The Englishman at Home.

Mr. Edward Porritt, the author of this handy and comprehensive review of municipal government, the poor law, public education, the administration of justice, taxation, parliament, the state departments, the church and nonconformity, the services, labor legislation, the land, and the press, is an experienced journalist, at home in America as well as England. He gives, accordingly, in a readable form a great amount of information about the relations of the English citizen to his fellow citizens in which Americans will be interested and by which they may profit. Comparison of our ways with English ways is always of special value, whatever the judgment of a disinterested spectator on the two, and whatever the outcome, in conservatism or reform. Mr. Porritt's book cannot fail of a large public here. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.75.

Papers of the Jewish Women's Congress.

Whoever inclines to underrate the intellectual ability of Jewish women will be surprised at this remarkable series of papers, read at the World's Fair Congress Auxiliary. Their logical power, clear, succinct statement of facts, glowing fervor, and frank acknowledgment of Jewish defects are surprising. The papers treat, among other topics, of the Jewish women of Biblical, mediæval, and modern days; of woman in the synagogue, and her intelligence and piety. "She has built synagogues, controlled colleges, and stipended students." The essays on the influence of the discovery of America on the Jews discuss the liberation of thought that life in this country has brought them, and enforce the universal rather than the limited presence of God Most notable are the papers on immigrants and wage-workers. They discriminate between the Jew employers of the better class, than whom none are kinder, and those of the sweating class, than whom none are worse. The improvement of the immigrants, especially of the Polish Jews, is the problem these congress writers are solving by actual hard work in philanthropy, in acknowledgment of their peculiar duty to them. The New York Jews are the most charitable group of persons in the whole world. They are lifting the individual out of the mass, which is constantly increased by the children of the early marriages of young Jewish girls to repulsive Poles and Russians. The tendency of the Jews to herd together in Ghettos is deprecated. These writers do not wish to abandon Judaism in Americanizing the Jew, for they consider his religion an essential of his best manhood. The chief difficulty of the present and the future is the Russian persecutions. "The right to interfere must be plainly demonstrated," it is argued, "ere nations can be spurred to activity;" aid would be given to the growing revolutionary spirit of Russia as soon as the party representing that spirit pledges itself to give equal rights to the Jews. — Jewish Publication Society of Amercia.

Public Libraries in America.

The second volume in the neat little Columbian Knowledge series is an excellent book, by W. I. Fletcher, the librarian of Amherst College. Mr Fletcher's chapters treat of the public library movement, laws, and buildings; cataloguing, library management, the selection and purchase of books; the work of the library in the community, and the librarian. The American Library Association is described, and then a few great representative libraries are taken up; special libraries, Canada, and the future of this most important institution are the other topics. The appendix contains a scheme of classification, tables of gifts and statistics, and other pertinent matter. Numerous photographs of great libraries and librarians ornament a book of extreme worth, which must have much effect in increasing the number of these praiseworthy institutions. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Paragraph Writing.

Professors F. N. Scott and J. V. Denney have struck out such a distinctively fresh and effective method of teaching English composition that their joint book deserves especial attention. They take the paragraph as the basis of their method, in distinction from sentence-making and essay-writing. It offers a happy medium between these two latter methods, surpassing each in attractiveness for the pupil and interest for the teacher himself. Part I considers the isolated and the related paragraph in their various aspects; Part II discusses the theory of the paragraph for the benefit of advanced students; and Part III supplies a great amount of material for use in the classroom. A more valuable method and a better text-book of it we have not met in a considerable knowledge of books on rhetoric and composition. — Boston: Allyn & Bacon.

We are glad to see that the Mermaid series of the best plays of our old dramatists, in cheap but excellent form, of which a dozen or more volumes were issued several years ago, is now to be continued under new publishers. Three volumes are to be given to Ben Jonson, the first of which is before us. It is edited by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson, whose name is an assurance of scholarly work to all students of Elizabethan literature, and contains "Every Man In His Humour," "Every Man Out of His Humour," and "The Poetaster." A biographical and critical introduction of some sixty pages, with special introductions to each play, and brief but sufficient footnotes supplement the carefully prepared text, which, as in the earlier volumes of the series, is given without expurgation, being intended not virginibus puerisque, but for mature readers and students. The typographical execution is admirable, and the book is remarkably cheap at a dollar in this country (half a crown in England). A portrait of Ben Jonson, from the picture by Gerard Honthorst, forms the frontispiece. The American agents of the publishers are Charles Scribner's Sons. — $1.00.

The author of Modern Mystics and Modern Magic, Mr. Arthur Lillie, who has written on "Buddhism in Christendom," and similar subjects, declares his purpose to be to give a short account of experimental occultism and Swedenborg; of intuitional occultism and Boehme; of church occultism and Madame Guyon and the Illuminati; and then a biography of Rev. William Stainton Moses, medium. The book will have interest and value for those who are already believers, but others will find it lacking in impartial statement and convincing proof. Diagrams are given of misplaced articles of furniture and other movables which, through unseen influences, were found in the form of a cross. Neither Madame Blavatsky nor the Society for Physical Research is wholly approved by the author, who is a firm believer in Dr. Moses and the spirit "Imperator." — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The third and last volume of Orations and Addresses, by George William Curtis, edited by Prof. C. E. Norton, includes fourteen historical and memorial addresses. In the former division come the Concord fight oration and that given at the unveiling of the statue of Washington in New York; the latter includes addresses on Sumner, Garfield, Wendell Phillips, Burns, Bryant, and Lowell. On such occasions as called forth these orations Mr. Curtis was at his best and highest. The three volumes together are a legacy of the greatest value to American citizenship.— Harper & Brothers. $3.50.

Julia Raymond Gingell, an English lady, has compiled a volume of Aphorisms from the Writings of Herbert Spencer, which the Appletons issue in neat form, with a portrait. Mr. Spencer's style is not one that lends itself easily to quotations of short passages, but as a volume of selections from his various works classified under such heads as evolution, education, and sociology, it will be welcomed by his admirers.— D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.

The Catalogue of the "A. L. A." Library, exhibited at Chicago and now at Washington, is now issued in a complete form. It contains a "decimal" and a dictionary catalogue of the five thousand volumes carefully selected by the committee of the association. The publication is one of the greatest usefulness both for libraries now in existence and for trustees and benefactors who are establishing new libraries. Many a donor of a building would do well to retrench on this and give this complete library to put on the stacks at the outset. — Government Printing Office.

In the new edition of Prof. Huxley's Collected Essays three volumes are given to Hume (with two essays on Berkeley), and two collections of papers, more or less recent, entitled Science and Christian Tradition and Science and Hebrew Tradition. These have new prefaces, in which the author reviews the present situation of the controversies to which the essays belong.— D. Appleton & Co. Each, $1.25.

The first volume of the Athenæum Press series of standard works from the time of Chaucer to the present, adapted to college students and cultivated readers, is Selections from the Essays of Francis Jeffrey, edited with introduction and notes by Mr. Lewis E. Gates, instructor at Harvard. It gives a clear and quite sufficient idea of this famous autocrat of the Edinburgh Review, whose critical judgments were accepted as final and indisputable by our fathers, though so often narrow and unjust - Ginn & Co. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

The first number of Bibliographica, the new English magazine of bibliography (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.), has just been imported by Charles Scribner's Sons, the American agents of the publication. The magazine will be published quarterly, the last number appearing at the end of 1896. It treats of bibliography in its historical and artistic aspects, and its object is to present a series of papers on various points of book-lore by writers of authority in a form which, while allowing of serial publication, will also be complete and final. To do this, the novel plan of publishing the magazine for three years only has been adopted, as it is believed that in the course of twelve quarterly numbers the contributors will be able to write on most of their special topics, and it is not desired that the magazine should be continued after the freshness of its first impulse has been exhausted. A notable list of contributions has been secured for the various topics. The subject of "Manuscripts" will be handled by E. Maunde Thompson, principal librarian of the British Museum, Mr. Warner of the Department of Manuscripts of the British Museum, and Falconer Madan of the Bodleian. "Early Printed Books" will be described by Gordon Duff, Russell Martineau, J. P. Edmond, W. Copinger, and others; contributions to the history of "Book-Collecting and Libraries" will be by Mr. and Mrs. Elton, W. Y. Fletcher, Austin Dobson, and Messrs. Tedder and Macray; while "Book Illustrations" will be dealt with by William Morris, Dr. Paul Kristeller, C. Fairfax Murray, A. W. Pollard, and Laurence Housman. "Book Prices and Book Sales," "Book-Plates," and "Bookbindings" will be treated by authorities in each of these fields; there will be a paper on "Early Printed Music;" articles by R. C. Christie, Dr. Garnett, Andrew Lang, H. B. Wheatley, and other well-known writers; and there will be several noteworthy French contributions by Octave Uzanne, Henri Béraldi, and others. The first number of Bibliographica is a sufficient indication of the importance and beauty of the completed work. It is a large imperial octavo of 128 pages, finely printed on hand-made paper, with wide margins and rough edges; the typography is unusually bold and clear. The cover is of gray-blue cartridge paper, with a conventional frame design in black, inclosing the list of contents. There are numerous cuts in the text, besides several full-page illustrations, the frontispiece being a beautiful colored reproduction of a copy of Celsus from the library of Grolier, which is described at length by W. Y. Fletcher. The articles in this first number comprise "Christina of Sweden and Her Books," by Charles I. Elton; "Raoul Lefevre and Le Recueil des Histoires de Troyé," by H. Oskar Sommer; "Names and Notes in Books," by Andrew Lang; "The Accipies Woodcut," by R.

Proctor; "Le Bibliophile Moderne," by Octave Uzanne; "Thoinan's Les Relieurs Français," by S. T. Prideaux; "The Stationers at the Sign of the Trinity," by E. Gordon Duff; and "The Books of Hours of Geoffroy Tory," by Alfred W. Pollard. There are also two notices of Dr. Kristeller on Italian Printers' Marks, and Mr. Gosse's Catalogue and its Stevensoniana. The magazine is issued in a limited edition, and the editions for England and America are identical in imprint and all other particulars. Subscriptions are taken only for the entire work.

Mrs. C. Van D. Chenoweth furnishes a pleasant illustrated paper on "The Landlord of the Wayside Inn" to the New England Magazine for May. Arthur Sumner's article, "A Boy's Recollections of Brook Farm," is interesting, as everything written about that famous social experiment has always been. "When Burbadge Played," "The City of Duluth," "The Jesuit Relations," "Reminiscences of New England Clipper Ships," and "Hannah Adams" are other attractive contributions.

A fine photograph of Ellen Terry is the frontispiece of the Cosmopolitan this month. Valdés' novel, "The Origin of Thought," Mr. Howells' Altrurian paper on "Plutocratic Housekeeping," "Siam and the Siamese," "England's Latest Conquest in Africa," and "The Struggle for Freedom in Kansas" are all illustrated.

The Quarterly Journal of Economics for April contains an important paper by Professor James Mavor, now of Toronto, on "The English Railway Rate Question," in which the English experience in fixing rates and regulating traffic on railways is minutely reviewed. Professor J. B. Clark also contributes a paper of great interest in theoretical discussion, on a "Universal Law of Economic Variation." Professor Bourne of Adelbert College points out by parallel passages the indebtedness of Alexander Hamilton to Adam Smith. Professor Ashley of Harvard gives a learned discussion of the lack of real authority for the definition usually given to the Anglo-Saxon "township." President Andrews of Brown University presents a statement of the reasons which led to the formation a few weeks ago of the Bimetallist Committee of Boston and New England. President Andrews speaks in this paper for himself alone, but his leading place in the new bimetallist movement gives a peculiar interest to his statement. Several pages of notes and a copious bibliography complete the number.

M. Jules Simon in the Contemporary Review for May treats the possibilities of "Disarmament" in Europe; it would seem, indeed, a good way to celebrate the close of the nineteenth century with a six years' "Truce of God." Mr. R. H. Hutton's paper on "Mr. Gladstone" is as thoughtful as Mr. Hutton's papers always are, though he regards as the chief blot on the statesman's reputation that which Americans consider his greatest achievement — his services for Home Rule. A report on "The Disestablished Church in Ireland" accompanies a statement of the situation of "The Church and Nonconformity in Wales," where disestablishment is only a question of time. Mr. Walter Besant's account of "The Ragged School Union," and Mr. Selby Bigge's reply to Prof. Goldwin Smith, entitled "Practical Oxford," are the two most interesting articles in the rest of the number.

In the Nineteenth Century for April the House of Lords is discussed by six gentlemen of various political faiths. Mr. F. Wicks comes to the conclusion that the Trades Union vote is an insignificant part of the whole poll. Mr. H. Schütz Wilson writes affectionately of "Frau Aja," Goethe's mother. Professor Cheyne skillfully but kindly lifts the scalp of Professor Sayce with the knife of the higher criticism, and the Hon. A. S. Northcote writes of "The Utter Corruption in American Politics." We may object to the adjective as being exaggerated, but most of the facts stated are undeniable.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will shortly publish Mr. Charles Booth's book on The Aged Poor in England and Wales, based on inquiries, some of the results of which have already been communicated to the Statistical Society.

— The Hartford Seminary Press announces for publication this day Wealth and Moral Law, by Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews, being the Carew Lectures for 1894.

— Mr. Quiller-Couch is preparing a new Elizabethan anthology. There is room for such a book if done in a comprehensive spirit, and Mr. Couch's judgment and skill may be trusted.

— We learn that the novels of George Eliot have as large a circulation as ever. It is a curious fact that the only author who has even temporarily affected the circulation of these works is Edna Lyall. For a year or two Edna Lyall's books were extremely popular in the Midland Counties, where George Eliot sells most largely, and they had for a year or two a perceptible influence on the sale of George Eliot's stories. — The Bookman.

— Mr. Hall Caine's novel, "The Manxman," now nearing completion in its serial publication in the Queen, has impressed readers not only with its vivid realization of Manx life and scenes, but with the lofty and strenuous morality which, as so often happens in true art, uses evil for purposes of good. The book will appear in the autumn, Mr. Heinemann being the publisher. Messrs. Appleton will issue the American edition.

— Messrs. Longmans & Co. will publish the lectures on the Vedânta philosophy which Prof. Max Müller lately delivered at the Royal Institution.

— Prof. Henry Drummond's new work on evolution was to be ready on May 15, under the title The Lowell Lectures on the Ascent of Man. It is to be published in America by Messrs. Pott, and a large sale is looked for on both sides of the Atlantic.

— Mr. Howells has lately been opening his mind to an interviewer, and in the printed interview he is credited with many extraordinary statements. It was known long ago that the author of Silas Lapham despised Scott, considered Thackeray crude and Dickens outrageous. These judgments have, therefore, no longer the attraction of novelty. But it is decidedly novel to be told that all living English novelists, with a single exception, "are careless and slipshod in their style." What do the admirers of Mr. Blackmore, of Mr. Meredith, of Mr. Stevenson, of Mrs. Ward, of Mr. Clark Russell, of Mr. Hall Caine, of Mr. Stanley J. Weyman think of that? English critics have been disposed to complain of an over-attention to style in some of these writers, but then English critics have been denied the Attic taste of Mr. Howells. Lorna Doone, Kidnapped, David Grieve, The Ordeal of Richard Feverel, are, it seems, slovenly performances, which may pass muster in benighted England, but would certainly not be tolerated in enlightened America. There is nothing like candor, and it is interesting to know what Mr. Howells thinks of our authors. He cannot be accused of hiding the truth for fear of hurting their feelings, and if they do not profit by his strictures the fault is theirs not his. — Publishers' Circular.

— Macmillan & Co. will publish a selection from the poems of Aubrey de Vere, edited with an introduction by Prof. George E. Woodberry of Columbia.

— Professor Bain of Aberdeen has contributed some interesting notes on the career of the late Professor Minto to the biography which is to be written by Professor Knight of St. Andrews.

— With his own caravan of camels, Pierre Loti has been traveling through Arabia Petræa, timing himself to reach Jerusalem by April 29, for the Greek Easter. He not only travels in regular Arab fashion, but dresses as a Bedouin. From Jerusalem he will proceed to Damascus and Baalbek, thence by way of Beirut to Constantinople, the Crimea, and Moscow.

— The very latest literary novelty in France is a story written by collaboration, and printed in two kinds of type so that the reader may see at a glance which author he is perusing.

— Mr. Graham Wallas, a prominent member of the Fabian Society, who lives near Mrs. Humphry Ward's new country seat at Tring, is said to have been that novelist's principal helper in making the necessary studies of socialism for Marcella. It may not be generally known that Mrs. Ward's father, the author of the popular works on English literature, and son and namesake of the famous master of Rugby, went out to Tasmania as school inspector, and there he married Julia Sorell, the daughter of a former governor. She died in 1888. Their eldest child, Mary Augusta Arnold, was born in 1851. In 1856 her father became a Roman Catholic, and returned to take a professorship in the Dublin (R. C.) University, removing thence to Oxford, where among his friends were Professors Green, Jowett, Freeman, and Mark Pattison. A fellow and tutor of Brasenose, Mr. Thomas Humphry Ward, later the well-known editor of the English Poets and historian of the Victorian era, appeared on the scene when Miss Arnold was but twenty, and they became engaged. After marriage the first nine years were spent in Oxford. The devotion to each other of Mr. and Mrs. Ward is well known, and they are seldom met apart in London society.

— Mr. Edmund Gosse will publish a new volume of poems in the autumn. It is now nine years since his last volume, Firdausi in Exile, appeared.

— Mr. Thomas J. Wise has completed his monumental bibliography of the writings of John Ruskin. It has been compiled with great care and thoroughness.

— John Murray has ready for immediate publication a new and revised edition of Sir William Smith's Classical Dictionary of Mythology, Biography, and Geography, edited by S. E. Marindin.

—The title of the new book of Napoleoniana, announced for publication by the Messrs. Appleton, is Memoirs to Serve for the History of Napoleon I, from 1802 to 1815. The author, his private secretary, Baron Claude-François de Méneval, was born in Paris in 1778 and died in the same city in 1850. The work, completed by the addition of unpublished documents, has been arranged and edited by his grandson, Baron Napoleon Joseph de Méneval. Mr. Robert H. Sherard is translating and annotating the edition for English-speaking countries. The work will be in three volumes, with photogravure portraits and reproductions of autograph letters.

—Mrs. Langtry is writing a novel, and intends, it is said, "entirely to control the publishing, advertising, and circulating of the book herself."

—The manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's Life of Napoleon, consisting of about one thousand sheets, mostly written on both sides, was recently sold in London for £208.

—Mrs. W. Pitt Byrne, the author of Gossip of the Century, died recently in London. The list of her works includes Flemish Interiors, Gheel, the City of the Simple, Ste. Perez, the City of the Single, Cosas de España, and Pictures of Hungarian Life. Two volumes of Gossip of the Century have thus far appeared.

—At last Mr. Theodore Watts is going to bring out his poems in volume form. One may safely say that no poet has published so many beautiful things without giving them to the world in a collected form. The fact that the volume will be issued from the Kelmscott Press is another proof of the growing intercourse between our two greatest poets. For Mr. William Morris is the owner of the Kelmscott Press, and Mr. Watts has for years past kept house at Putney with Mr. Morris' only living superior, Mr. Swinburne.—Literary World, London.

—The Gounod family has decided to publish a memorial volume, which will consist of the fragmentary manuscripts left by the composer, some of them being of an autobiographical nature, and of numerous letters to and from him. Gounod's son Jean, the artist, and his son-in-law, Baron de Lassus Saint-Geniès, are aiding Mme. Gounod in collecting the materials and preparing the volume for the press. But it is not expected that it will appear for some time to come.

—The philosophical remains of George Croom Robertson, which Messrs. Williams & Norgate announce for early publication, have been edited by his old friend and collaborator, Professor Bain of Aberdeen, who also contributes a memoir of the author. A feature of interest will be the narrative of Professor Robertson's connection with J. S. Mill and the women's suffrage movement, based principally on letters written by Mill to Professor Robertson. This book will be imported by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

—The Story of Dan, a story of Irish peasant life, by M. E. Francis, will soon be issued by the Riverside Press.

—The New Testament authority, Prof. A. Hausrath, has in former years, under the pseudonym of George Taylor, published several works of fiction. Lately he has again ventured in this field with remarkable success. The title of the new book is Martin Luther's Romfahrt. It is a historical novel, treating of the well-known episode in the life of the great reformer.

—George Egerton, the author of Keynotes—which showed strong Scandinavian influence—is now engaged upon the translation of a book by Ola Haussen, one of the most striking writers of the new school in the North. It is a series of critical essays, entitled Tolke og Seere ("Interpreters and Seers").

—In his latest book, The Exiles and Other Stories, Mr. Richard Harding Davis carries the reader from Tangier to Egypt, from Egypt to England, and thence to America, giving studies of life in the latter country among the classes and the masses. The book is published by Harper & Brothers, as is also Mr. Merriman's With Edged Tools, a story in which an African shrub called "Simiacine" plays an important part. This shrub (according to the author, at least) owes its name to an old African legend to the effect that monkeys were the first to discover the properties of the leaf, and that it is because they live on it that they are so strong.

—Messrs. Cassell & Co. have lately issued an English edition of the unpublished correspondence of Cavour, translated by Mr. A. J. Butler.

—The biography of David Garrick, upon which Mr. Joseph Knight has been engaged for some time, will be published very shortly by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.

—Messrs. J. A. Hill & Co. are publishing a new book on Congregationalism, by A. E. Dunning, D.D., being a popular history of its origin, belief, polity, growth, and work.

—Prof. Henry A. Beers of Yale will issue through Messrs. Henry Holt & Co., in a few days, A Suburban Pastoral and Other Tales, dealing chiefly with modern American life in small towns.

—The Authors' Breakfast, given by the Thought and Work Club of Salem, Mass., to the members of the American Authors' Guild, on May 5, was a complete success. Fine weather, excellent arrangements for seeing the interesting city, a large attendance on the collation, good speeches many and short, and a closing reception in the evening were the harmonious features of a very pleasant occasion. Among the more notable persons present were Edward Everett Hale, Mrs. Howe, Mrs. Cheney, Gen. J. G. Wilson, J. T. Trowbridge, and Judge Robert Grant.

—The Boston Browning Society gave a dramatic reading of "Colombe's Birthday" on May 7, the poet's birthday, closing a very satisfactory series of meetings for the season 1893–94.

—Longmans, Green & Co. announce that they have become the publishers of Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson's books, formerly published by Lee & Shepard of Boston.

—Dr. Noah Brooks, until recently editor of the Newark (N. J.) Advertiser, has returned to his birthplace at Castine, Me., where he intends to spend the rest of his days.

—Charles Scribner's Sons have just imported the Letters of Franz Liszt, collected and edited by La Mara and translated by Constance Bache—the work containing more than 650 interesting letters and two portraits, and issued in two volumes; Among the Moors, notes and sketches of an artist, by G. Montbard, profusely illustrated; and Dante G. Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement, by Mrs. J. W. Wood, with eight photogravure reproductions of Rossetti's paintings. They will issue shortly Salem Kittredge, and Other Stories, by Bliss Perry, and The Navigator's Pocket-Book, by Capt. Howard Patterson.

—A number of the charming sketches and stories by Mrs. Hinkson (Katharine Tynan) which have appeared from time to time in English papers are now published in book form by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen. The volume bears a happy title, A Cluster of Nuts, and there is certainly about these sketches among Mrs. Hinkson's "own people" the pleasant fragrance of the soil and of the Irish woodland and wayside of which this title is suggestive.

—During the past two months one of the best selling books in the shops has, naturally, been Lord Rosebery's Pitt, in the English Statesmen series.

—Londoners have been amusing themselves by tracing resemblances to Messrs. Morris, Champion, Arnold Toynbee, Walter Crane, and Keir Hardie among the characters in Marcella.

—Mr. R. H. Hutton, in his monograph on the ex-premier which appears in the Contemporary for May, says, "There is a story that one of his most extreme followers said of him that he did not at all object to Mr. Gladstone's always having an ace up his sleeve, but he did object to his always saying that Providence put it there."

—There has lately been started in Victoria, British Columbia, a paper called the Province. Under the heading of "The Library" we find this story of Miss Margot Tennant: "It appears that Mr. Benson wrote to her and said, 'Dear Miss Tennant—All the world is talking of you and my novel; when may I come to see you?' She replied: 'Dear Mr. Benson—Did you really write a novel? How clever of you! Come and see me at any time.' When he came she was out." Surely we may soon expect a racy anecdote from Borneo or the North Pole.—Literary World, London.

—The Century Co. will publish the latter part of May a new life of Roger Williams, "the pioneer of religious liberty," by Oscar S. Straus, who will be remembered as the author of The Origin of Republican Form of Government in the United States. At the same time they will issue Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book, a collection of the stories of animal life which have been appearing in St. Nicholas and elsewhere during the past year.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the LITERARY WORLD are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of the Venetians. By Rev. Alexander Robertson. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

THE DIARY OF A CAVALRY OFFICER IN THE PENINSULAR AND WATERLOO CAMPAIGNS, 1809–1815. By the late Lieut.-Col. Wm. Tomkinson. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

LETTERS OF FRANZ LISZT. Collected and edited by La Mara. Translated by Constance Bache. Two vols. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $6.00

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH, TO THE ACCESSION OF QUEEN ANNE. By General Viscount Wolseley, K.P. Two volumes. Longmans, Green & Co. $10.00

Essays and Sketches.

VARIETIES IN PROSE. By William Allingham. In three volumes. Longmans, Green & Co.

PIERS PLOWMAN. A Contribution to the History of English Mysticism. By J. J. Jusserand. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

THE SHOW AT WASHINGTON. By L. A. Coolidge and J. B. Reynolds. Washington Pub. Co. 50c.

TENNYSON: His Art and Relation to Modern Life. By Stopford A. Brooke. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

CRUMBLING IDOLS. Twelve Essays on Art. By Hamlin Garland. Stone & Kimball.

Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers. Selected from the Spectator. By Richard Holt Hutton. Two vols. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Hume, with Helps to the Study of Berkeley. Essays by Thomas H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

The Kingdom of the "White Woman." A Sketch. By M. M. Shoemaker. Robert Clarke & Co. $1.50

Studies in the Evolution of English Criticism. By Laura Johnson Wylie. Ginn & Co. $1.10

Economics and Politics.

A Policy of Free Exchange. Essays by various writers. Edited by Thomas Mackay. D. Appleton & Co. $4.00

Fiction.

The Rich Miss Riddell. By Dorothea Gerard. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

My Two Wives. By One of Their Husbands. Cassell Pub. Co. 50c.

Ebba Borjeson. A True Love Story of the Olden Time. By Hampden Vaughn.

Folk-Tales of Angola. Collected and edited by Heli Chatelain. Published for the American Folk-Lore Society by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.00

The Yellow Book. An Illustrated Quarterly. Vol. I, April, 1894. Copeland & Day. $1.50

Richard Rogers, Christian. By Alice Barber McConnell. Presbyterian Board. $1.00

Our Lady's Tumbler. A Twelfth Century Legend, transcribed for Lady-Day. Little, Brown & Co. 50c.

Wooing a Widow. By Ewald August Koenig. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

The Trespasser. By Gilbert Parker. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Cadet Days. A Story of West Point. By Capt. Chas. King. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Exiles and Other Stories. By Richard Harding Davis. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

With Edged Tools. By Henry Seton Merriman. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

A Valiant Ignorance. By Mary Angela Dickens. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Man in Black. By Stanley J. Weyman. Illustrated. Cassell Pub. Co. $1.00

Broken Links. By Mrs. Alexander. Cassell Pub. Co. $1.00

The Lords of Misrule. A Tale of Gods and Men. By William C. Pomeroy. Laird & Lee. 50c.

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XX. The Talisman. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

History.

A Short History of the Crusades. By J. I. Mombert, D.D. Paterson, N.J.: News Printing Co. $1.00

Memoirs of King Richard the Third, and Some of His Contemporaries. By John Heneage Jesse. Two vols. New edition. Francis P. Harper. $2.50 net.

Europe, 1598–1715. By Henry Offley Wakeman. Period V. Macmillan & Co. $1.40

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

This Picture and That. A Comedy. By Brander Matthews. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Bayadere and Other Sonnets. By Francis Saltus Saltus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00

The Temple Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona. — Merry Wives of Windsor. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Poems, Sonnets, Songs, and Verses. By the author of "The Professor and Other Poems." Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Bard of the Dimbovitza. Romanian Folk-Songs. Second series. Collected by Helene Vacaresco. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00

Ban and Arrière Ban. A Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50

Religion and Theology.

The Natural History of the Christian Religion. By William Mackintosh. Macmillan & Co. $3.75

The Christian Society. By George D. Herron, D.D. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00

Old Tabernacle Theology for New Testament Times. By R. Braden Moore, D.D. Presbyterian Board of Publication. $3.00

An Anchor of the Soul. By James Vila Blake. Chas. H. Kerr & Co.

The Noble Army of Martyrs. By Arthur Croil. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 75c.

The Bible in Private and Public. By Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. Fleming H. Revell Co. 25c.

Science.

Aerial Navigation. By J. G. W. Fijnje van Salverda. Trans. by George E. Waring, Jr. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Man and Woman. A Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By Havelock Ellis. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

The Amateur Aquarist. By Mark Samuel. With fifty illustrations. Baker & Taylor Co. $1.00

The Story of Our Planet. By T. G. Bonney. Illustrated. Cassell Publishing Co. $5.00.

Miscellaneous.

The Story of the Commonweal. By Henry Vincent. Chicago: W. B. Conkey Co. 50c.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s Pocket Maps. Wisconsin. 25c.

Bon-Mots of Samuel Foote and Theodore Hook. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s Pocket Maps. Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Georgia. Each, 25c.

List of Novels and Tales in the Los Angeles Public Library. March, 1894. 10c.

The Expert Waitress. A Manual. By Anne Frances Springsteed. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Pain. By J. Leonard Corning, A.M., M.D. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.75

Athletics for Physical Culture. By Theo. C. Knauff. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $2.00

Aphorisms from the Writings of Herbert Spencer. Selected by Julia R. Gingell. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray. Everybody–Ezod. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Seven Thousand Words Often Mispronounced. By Wm. Henry P. Phyfe. Third edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Century Cook Book. By Jennie A. Hansey. Chicago: Laird & Lee. 25c.

Catalog of "A.L.A." Library. 5,000 Volumes for a Popular Library, selected by the American Library Association, and shown at the World's Columbian Exposition. Government Printing Office.

"Junius" Revealed. By His Surviving Grandson, H. R. Francis. Longmans, Green & Co.

Bibliographica. Part I. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Proceedings of the National Conference for Good City Government, held at Philadelphia, Jan. 25 and 26, 1894. Philadelphia: The Municipal League.

Library Classification. By W. I. Fletcher, A.M. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

English Prose. Selections. Edited by Henry Craik. Vol. II. Macmillan & Co. $1.10

Index to Temple Bar. Vols. 1 to 99. London: Richard Bentley & Son.

MESSRS. STONE & KIMBALL'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEARLY READY.

THE EBB-TIDE.

A Story of Adventure in the South Seas.

— BY —

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

AND

LLOYD OSBOURNE.

With a Title-Page by T. B. Meteyard. Printed at the University Press on English laid paper. 16mo, $1.25.

HAMLIN GARLAND'S NEW BOOK.

Crumbling Idols: Twelve Essays on Art, dealing chiefly with Literature, Painting, and the Drama. 16*mo*, $1.25. (Just issued.)

 A collection of Mr. Garland's essays which attracted so much attention on their appearance in magazine form. They are on various topics: "New Fields of Art," "The Future of Fiction," "The Drift of the Drama," "The Influence of Ibsen," "Impressionism," "Local Colour in Fiction," and so forth. Taken as a whole, the book is a vigorous plea for the recognition of youth and a protest against the despotism of tradition. It is also the creed of a realist.

LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

Arthur O'Shaughnessy: His Life and His Work, with Selections from His Poems. With a portrait. 18*mo*, $1.25. (In the press.)

Dr. Richard Garnett of the British Museum writes on the announcement of the book: "I am delighted to hear of it. It is a thing which I have often said ought to be done—must be done, in fact—if O'Shaughnessy is to keep the place he deserves among the poets of his age."

GILBERT PARKER.

A Lover's Diary: Sonnets. With a frontispiece by Will. H. Low. 18*mo*, $1.25.

 This is Mr. Parker's first book of verse. In fact, not more than two or three of the sonnets have ever been printed before. It will therefore be of considerable interest, especially to those who have enjoyed the novels and short stories by the same author.

BLISS CARMAN.

Low Tide on Grand Pré. Revised and enlarged edition, transferred to the present Publishers. With a title-page designed by Martin Mower. 18*mo*, $1.00.

"Few poets on the far side of the Atlantic are born with such a poetical way of looking at things as Carman."—The London Literary World.

"These verses have a haunting quality from which there is no escape."—The Dial.

"There is music, melody and the subtle quality of real poetry in this new writer's verse."—The Literary World.

GEORGE SANTAYANA.

Sonnets and Other Poems. 16*mo*, $1.25

"I have surely quoted sufficiently from the pages of Mr Santayana to prove him a poet. He has something akint the spiritual exaltation of Wordsworth, the self-possessed aloofness of Matthew Arnold, but he is always and every where himself."—Louise Chandler Moulton.

Sold by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

STONE & KIMBALL, Chicago, The Caxton Building, and Cambridge, Brattle Sq.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

IF YOU ARE GOING

WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Advertising Rates:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books

Edward L. Youmans,

Interpreter of Science for the People. A Sketch of His Life, with Selections from His Published Writings, and Extracts from His Correspondence with Spencer, Huxley, Tyndall and others. By JOHN FISKE. With Two Portraits. 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

"Whether as a memorial of a noteworthy man, or as a record of a most important phase of intellectual life in our own time, the volume is entirely admirable, and must be given a high place in the honorable list of recent biography."—Philadelphia Times.

"His life was at once inspiring and interesting. His career gave to manhood in America an ornament as well as a potent example. While he lived he helped to enrich thousands of lives. Now that he is gone, Professor Fiske's beautiful biography not only shows us how noble the man himself was, but how great was the public loss, and how precious must remain the possession of such a memory."—New York Times.

Ladies in the Field.

Edited by the LADY GREVILLE. Articles on Sport by the Duchess of Newcastle, Diane Chasseresse, Mrs. Chaworth Musters, Miss Anstruther, Lady Greville, Mrs. Martelli, Lady Boynton, Mrs. Pennell, Miss Leale, Mrs. Jenkins and Miss Salaman. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $2.00.

"Here are all the sports in which women engage, or nearly all. Be interested in which you please, a glance will tell you just how far women have got—i e., just how far timider women may with all propriety follow. . . . It comes with the authority of good names, and there is something engagingly modest, businesslike and simple in the way each author has addressed herself to the description of her favorite pastime."—London Chronicle.

The Trespasser.

By GILBERT PARKER, author of "The Translation of a Savage," "Pierre and His People," etc. No. 141, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"Mr. Parker is in a very high degree vigorous and fresh both in subject and manner of writing, and it is to these qualities solely that his success is due and is deserved."—The Outlook.

"Mr. Gilbert Parker is one of those fortunate writers who leap into estimation at a single bound."—London Literary World.

A Daughter of To-day.

By Mrs. EVERARD COTES (Sara Jeannette Duncan), author of "A Social Departure," "An American Girl in London," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Few literary débutantes have met with the success obtained by Sara Jeannette Duncan's first book, "A Social Departure." Her succeeding books showed the same powers of quick observation and graphic description, the same ability to identify and portray types. Meantime, the author has greatly enlarged her range of experience and knowledge of the world. A true cosmopolite, London, Paris and Calcutta have become familiar to her, as well as New York and Montreal. The title of her new book indicates an immediately attractive theme, and the author's vigorous treatment of it has given us a book distinguished not only by acute study of character, command of local color and dramatic force, but also by contemporaneous interest. This novel is Mrs. Cotes's most advanced and most important literary work.

Aerial Navigation.

By J. G. W. FIJNJE VAN SALVERDA, late Administrator of Public Works of the Netherlands. Translated from the Dutch by George E. Waring, Jr. With Notes concerning some Recent Developments in the Art. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

The author states that the important question of aërial navigation has taken on a more and more scientific character, and has enlisted the increasing interest of serious minds; and that among competent experts the opinion is held that a brilliant future is before it. To recent meteorological observations, and numerous investigations as to the movements of birds, are mainly attributed the remarkable advances toward the solution of the problem, detailed accounts of which are comprised in this interesting volume.

A System of Lucid Shorthand.

Devised by WILLIAM GEORGE SPENCER. With a Prefatory Note by Herbert Spencer. 12mo. Cloth, 50 cents.

This system, devised by Mr. Herbert Spencer's father, has been in manuscript since 1843. It is now published, as explained by the writer of the Prefatory Note, not because it possesses advantages over existing phonographies for reporting and kindred purposes, but "from the conviction, long since formed and still unshaken, that it ought to replace ordinary writing." It is claimed that, as it possesses the brevity of shorthands in general, and greater legibility, the use of it by men of business, journalists, authors, and people at large, would achieve a great economy of life.

Hume.

With Helps to the Study of Berkeley. By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The sixth volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS.—Early Life of Hume: Literary and Political Writings. Later Years: The History of England. The Object and Scope of Philosophy. The Contents of the Mind. The Origin of the Impressions. The Classification and the Nomenclature of Mental Operations. The Mental Phenomena of Animals. Language—Propositions Concerning Necessary Truths. The Order of Nature: Miracles. Theism: Evolution of Theology. The Soul: The Doctrine of Immortality. Volition: Liberty and Necessity. The Principles of Morals.

Bishop Berkeley on the Metaphysics of Sensation. On Sensation, and the Unity of Structure of Sensiferous Organs.

The Rich Miss Riddell.

By DOROTHEA GERARD, author of "A Queen of Curds and Cream," "Etelka's Vow," etc. No. 142, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"A new novel by this author is always something to be thankful for."—Providence Journal.

"Miss Gerard is a novelist who has made a place for herself in which she stands alone. An excellent delineator of character, she has a charmingly fresh style and a knowledge of cosmopolitan life in all its phases which is hardly equaled by any other English writer."—London Morning Post.

☞ Appletons' Monthly Bulletin of New Publications will be sent regularly to any address, free on request.

D. Appleton & Co., 1, 3, and 5 Bond Street, New York

Literary Curios,

Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.

Send stamps for separate lists.

Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.

Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

SIGN OF THE ARK.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON.
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

NO EXPERIMENT.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,

Actually spoken and mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

MEISTERSCHAFT PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON.

MEISTERSCHAFT SOLD

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

READY MAY 22d.

Harper's Magazine

JUNE.

166 Pages; 84 Illustrations.

The City of Homes. (Philadelphia.)

By Charles Belmont Davis. With 17 Illustrations.

A Waitress.

A Story. By Constance Fenimore Woolson. With 2 Illustrations by W. H. Hyde.

The Japanese Spring.

By Alfred Parsons. With 23 Illustrations by the Author.

Little Big Horn Medicine.

A Story. By Owen Wister. With 4 Illustrations by Frederic Remington.

Memories of Wendell Phillips.

By George W. Smalley.

God's Ravens.

A Story. By Hamlin Garland.

French Diplomacy Under the Third Republic.

By M. De Blowitz.

A Kentucky Cardinal.

A Story. By James Lane Allen. Part II.

My First Visit to New England.

By William Dean Howells. Second Part. With 11 Illustrations.

Vignettes of Manhattan. VI.

In Search of Local Color. By Brander Matthews. With 5 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

Trilby.

A Novel. By George du Maurier. Part VI. With 15 Illustrations by the Author.

Poems

By Marrion Wilcox and Richard Burton.

Editorial Departments as usual.

The Jewish Question.

The Jewish Question, and the Mission of the Jews. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.75.

Literary and Social Silhouettes.

By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. "Harper's American Essayists." (Nearly Ready.)

From the Easy Chair.

By George William Curtis. Third Series. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. "Harper's American Essayists."

The Expert Waitress.

A Manual for Pantry, Kitchen, and Dining-Room. By Anne Frances Springsteed. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

Pastime Stories.

By Thomas Nelson Page. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Nearly Ready.)

Harper & Brothers'

NEW BOOKS.

Perlycross.

A Novel. By R. D. Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Nearly Ready.)

Pembroke.

A Novel. By Mary E. Wilkins, Author of "Jane Field," "A Humble Romance," "A New England Nun," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

The Exiles, and Other Stories.

By Richard Harding Davis, Author of "Van Bibber, and Others," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Orations of George William Curtis.

Orations and Addresses of George William Curtis. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Vol. I. On the Principles and Character of American Institutions and the Duty of American Citizens. Vol. II. Addresses and Reports on the Reform of the Civil Service of the United States. Vol. III. Historical and Memorial Addresses. With Photogravure Portrait. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $3.50 per volume.

A Traveller from Altruria.

Romance. By W. D. Howells. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50. (Nearly Ready.)

Our English Cousins.

By Richard Harding Davis, Author of "The Rulers of the Mediterranean," "Van Bibber, and Others." etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Potter's Thumb.

A Novel. By Flora Annie Steel. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50. (Nearly Ready.)

Life's Little Ironies.

A Set of Tales; With some Colloquial Sketches, entitled A Few Crusted Characters. By Thomas Hardy, Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," "A Group of Noble Dames," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Cadet Days.

A Story of West Point. By Captain Charles King, Author of "A War-Time Wooing," "Between the Lines," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Harper's Black and White Series.

New Issues: A Likely Story. A Farce. By W. D. Howells. Nearly Ready.—This Picture and That. A Comedy. By Brander Matthews. Illustrated. 32mo, Cloth, 50 cents each.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of the price.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 2 JUNE 1894

Vol. XXV No. 11 Whole No. 507

MESSRS. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

Take pleasure in announcing that they have removed to their new building,

153-155 Fifth Avenue, between 21st and 22d Streets, New York, where their business in all its various branches will continue to be conducted as heretofore.

SOME OF THE LATEST BOOKS.

New Publications.

Recollections of a Virginian in the Mexican, Indian and Civil Wars. By Gen. DABNEY H. MAURY. 12mo. $1.50.

Josiah Gilbert Holland. A Memoir. By Mrs. H. M. PLUNKETT. 12mo. With portrait and illustrations. $1.50.

The Pasquier Memoirs. Edited by the DUC D'AUDIFFRET-PASQUIER. 3 vols., each 8vo. $2.50. Vols. I. and II. now ready.

Life and Letters of Dean Stanley. By R. E. PROTHERO and DEAN BRADLEY. 2 vols. 8vo. Illustrated. $8.00.

According to Season. By Mrs. WILLIAM STARR DANA. 16mo. 75 cents.

How to Know the Wild Flowers. By Mrs. WILLIAM STARR DANA. Sixteenth Thousand. 12mo. Illustrated. $1.50 net.

Fifty Plates from "How to Know the Wild Flowers," printed on special paper suitable for coloring by hand. In a portfolio. $1.00 net.

Beyond the Rockies. By Dr. C. A. STODDARD. 12mo. Illustrated. $1.50.

Overheard in Arcady. By ROBERT BRIDGES (Droch). Illustrated. 12mo. $1.25.

Salem Kittredge, and Other Stories. By BLISS PERRY. 12mo. $1.00.

On the Offensive. An Army Story. By GEORGE I. PUTNAM. 12mo. $1.25.

The Barbary Coast. By Dr. HENRY M. FIELD. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. $2.00.

The Land of Poco Tiempo. By C. F. LUMMIS. Illustrated. 8vo. $2.50.

The Navigator's Pocket Book. By Capt. HOWARD PATTERSON. 8vo. $2.00.

The Chess Pocket Manual. By G. H. D. GOSSIP. 16mo. $1.00.

My Farm of Edgewood. By DONALD G. MITCHELL. New Edition. 12mo. 75 cents.

Wet Days at Edgewood. By DONALD G. MITCHELL. New Edition. 12mo. 75 cents.

New Importations.

Bibliographica. A Magazine of Bibliography to be issued in Twelve Quarterly Parts. Sold only by subscription. $8.00 per annum. Circular sent on application.

Letters of Franz Liszt. Edited and collected by LA MARA. Translated by CONSTANCE BACHE. With portrait. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. $6.00.

Among the Moors. By G. MONTBARD. Illustrated. Royal 8vo. $3.50.

Dante G. Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement. By Mrs. J. W. WOOD. Illustrated. 8vo. $3.00.

The Bard of the Dimbovitza. Second Series. Roumanian Folk Songs collected by HELENE VACARESCO.

The Waterloo Campaign. By Capt. WILLIAM SIBORNE. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. Illustrated. $2.50.

Renaissance Architecture and Ornament in Spain. A series of sixty examples selected from the purest works executed between the years 1500–1560. With descriptive text by ANDREW N. PRENTICE. 4to. $25.00 net.

The Autobiography of Theobald Wolfe Tone. A chapter from Irish History, 1790–1798. Edited by R. BARRY O'BRIEN. 2 vols. Illustrated. Royal 8vo. $7.50.

The Binding of Books. By HERBERT P. HORNE. (Books about Books Series.) Illustrated. 8vo. $2.50.

Man and Woman. A Study of Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS. (Contemporary Science Series.) Crown 8vo. $1.25.

Masters of French Music. By ARTHUR HERVEY. Crown 8vo. With Portraits. $1.75.

Memoirs of Madame Junot. Napoleon, his Court and his Family. With portraits. New Library Edition. 4 vols. Crown 8vo. $10.00.

The Humour of America. Selected by JAMES BARR. With Introduction and Biographical Index of American Humorists. Illustrated. Crown 8vo $1.25.

G. P. Putnam's Sons

NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY:

In Varying Moods.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN, author of "Ships that Pass in the Night." American Copyright Edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"I have had the pleasure of reading the advance sheets of this book, and it was a pleasure, I can assure you. . . . There is a sort of humor in Miss Harraden's stories, as if she would make her audience smile just as it was about to weep. Of all the women writers who have recently come to the fore she is the least feminine; that is, her style is the least feminine. . . . The most enthusiastic admirers of 'Ships that Pass in the Night' will not be disappointed in these stories, and I am inclined to think that they sound a much surer note than does even that remarkable story. . . ." —Jeannette L. Gilder, in the N. Y. World.

Ships that Pass in the Night.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN. Authorized American Edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"There is a wealth of philosophy, humor, and pathos in this little tale, and it is told so simply that one feels as if he were a part of it, somehow. So truly are the human heartstrings struck that he must be beyond redemption whose inner self does not vibrate in sympathy many times as the pages are turned. . . . There is not a dull page . . . it is one book in ten thousand; you should read it."—Boston Times.

The Story of Margredel.

Being a Fireside History of a Fifeshire Family. By D. STORRAR MELDRUM. Third Edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"The story is in style a little masterpiece. Before I had read five pages I knew I was face to face with a book which would live. A place in the front rank among the coming men must be ceded to the author of this delightful book."—Jerome K. Jerome.

Harvard Stories.

Sketches of the Undergraduate. By W. K. POST. Third Edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; Popular Edition, paper, 50 cents.

"Mr. Post's manner of telling these tales is in its way inimitable. The atmosphere of the book in its relation to the localities where the scenes are laid is well-nigh perfect. The different types of undergraduates are clearly drawn, and there is a dramatic element in most of the stories that is very welcome. It goes without saying that Harvard men will find keen pleasure in this volume, while for those who desire a faithful picture of certain phases of American student life it offers a noteworthy fund of instruction and entertainment."—Literary News.

The Upper Berth.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD. 32mo, limp cloth, 50 cents. (Being Vol. I. of the Autonym Library, the new series of short representative works of fiction by well-known authors.)

"The 'Autonym' Library opens well with Mr. Crawford's weird story of the 'Upper Berth,' which is no doubt one of the best ghost-stories we have had since the appearance of the 'Haunted and the Haunters.' It is a novelty in the literature of the supernatural. Mr. Crawford treats his subject with a vigor and a realism that will make the flesh of the ordinary 'reader' creep, and will stir the nerves of even the most hardened and skeptical. If the 'Autonym' Library keeps up to the pitch of excellence attained by this first volume, its success is assured."—London Speaker.

THE INCOGNITO LIBRARY.

The Shen's Pigtail.

By Mr. M. Oblong, 24mo, bound in limp cloth, 50 cents. (Being Vol. I. of the Incognito Library.)

"This is the opening volume of a new series by the Messrs. Putnam, to be called 'The Incognito Library.' A very bright and amusing little volume it is. The local flavor of the English settlements in China is given with relish, and the stories are not only good but are told with art and in a very neat and happy style."—Philadelphia Times.

Tennyson:

His Art and Relation to Modern Life. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M. A. 12mo, $2.00.

"The best single volume that has yet been written about the late Laureate of England. . . . Mr. Brooke perceives clearly the qualities of Tennyson, . . . while his sagacity and his insight make his scanty blame as authoritative as his heartiest praise."—R. H. Stoddard, in the Mail and Express.

 Notes on New Books, a quarterly bulletin, prospectuses of the Knickerbocker Nuggets, Heroes and Stories of the Nations Series, sent on application.

ISSUED BY THE CENTURY CO.

A New Book By Rudyard Kipling

"THE JUNGLE BOOK"

A perfect treasury of delight for young folks—and old folks too. No one but the author of "Plain Tales from the Hills," "Soldiers Three," etc., could have written the fascinating stories that are contained in this volume—stories of the Indian jungle, of Kala Nag, the elephant; Shere Khan, the tiger; and old Baloo, the sleepy brown bear who teaches the wolf cubs the Law of the Jungle; of Bagheera, the black panther, and of Kaa, the python, whose blow is like the blow of a steam hammer. The book will become a classic. Of the stories (nearly all of which are illustrated) the New York Christian Advocate says: "They are unique in literature and perfectly delightful in spirit." In cloth binding, 300 pages, price $1.50.

Roger Williams,

The Pioneer of Religious Liberty. By OSCAR S. STRAUS, author of "The Origin of the Republican Form of Government in the United States." Several biographies of Roger Williams have been written, most of which are now out of print. Since the publication of these earlier works much valuable additional information concerning the pioneer of religious liberty in America has come to light. Mr. Straus, the author of the present volume, has given careful study to the subject of Roger Williams and his work, and has endeavored in this biography to bring out the truth without fear or favor, and to present an impartial record of the character and work of this remarkable man, who was in the fullest sense the pioneer of religious liberty. 240 pages, cloth binding, price $1.25.

 These books may be had at all bookstores, or will be sent, postpaid, to any address on receipt of price by the publishers.

THE CENTURY CO., 33 East 17th St., New York.

NO EXPERIMENT.

HUNDREDS FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,
Actually spoken and mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership $5.00 for each language.
OF THOUSANDS
All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

MEISTERSCHAFT PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON.

MEISTERSCHAFT SOLD

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY

For June Contains:

Philip and His Wife. XVII.-XIX. MARGARET DELAND.
Summer in the Scillies. J. WILLIAM WHITE.
The Grave-Digger. BLISS CARMAN.
The End of Yortoni's. STODDARD DEWEY.
Behind Hymettus. Part II. J. IRVING MANATT.
The Nooning Tree. KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.
Ingonish. FRANK BOLLES.
Hamburg's Sanitary Impulse. ALBERT SHAW.
Limitation. JOHN B. TABB.
Opra di li Pupi. ELIZABETH CAVAZZA.
American Railways and American Cities. HENRY J. FLETCHER.
Scope of the Norman School. M. V. O'SHEA.
Some Letters and Conversations of Thomas Carlyle. Sir EDWARD STRACHEY.
Two Types of Piety.
A Poet's Dante.
Mr. Van Brunt's Greek Lines.
Comment on New Books.
The Contributors' Club.

35 cents a number; $4.00 a year.

NEW BOOKS.

His Vanished Star.

A powerful and characteristic novel by CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK, author of "In the Tennessee Mountains," "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Two Strings to His Bow.

An admirable story for summer reading, by Rev. WALTER MITCHELL. 16mo, $1.25.

Claudia Hyde.

A very interesting view of an attractive, old-fashioned Virginia household, with an engaging love story, by FRANCES COURTENAY BAYLOR, author of "Juan and Juanita." 16mo, $1.25.

My Summer in a Mormon Village.

A pleasant book giving the observations of a summer in the Salt Lake Basin, by FLORENCE A. MERRIAM, author of "Birds Through an Opera Glass." 16mo, $1.00.

Sweetser's Guide-Books.

Carefully revised for 1894.
NEW ENGLAND. 6 maps, 11 plans.
THE WHITE MOUNTAINS. 6 maps, 6 panoramas.
THE MARITIME PROVINCES. 4 maps, 4 plans.
Red cloth, $1.50 each.

"Incomparable handbooks for the tourist."—New York Evening Post.

The Silva of North America.

A description of the Trees which grow naturally in North America, exclusive of Mexico. By CHARLES SPRAGUE SARGENT, Director of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University. Illustrated with Figures and Analyses drawn from nature by Charles Edward Faxon, and engraved by Philibert and Eugène Picart. In twelve volumes, quarto, each containing fifty plates. Price $25.00 each, net. Vol. VI. Ebenaceæ—Polygonaceæ.

"One of the most important works of descriptive science which this generation has produced."—New York Tribune.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 2 JUNE 1894 No. 11

CONTENTS

Kerrigan's Quality 163
Stopford Brooke on Tennyson 163
Doreen 164
Crumbling Idols 164
Marlborough 165
West Irish Folk-Tales 166

Fiction :

Links in a Chain 166
The Queen of Love 166
The White Crown and Other Stories . . . 167
Joanna Traill, Spinster 167
A Soldier and a Gentleman 167
The Prisoner of Zenda 167
In Varying Moods 167
For Honor and Life 167
Drolls from Shadowland 167
Cheap Jack Zita 167

Poetry :

The Breath of Avon. Theodore Watts . . 168
London Letter 168
New York Letter 169

Economic Literature :

A Policy of Free Exchange 169
The Distribution of Wealth 170
Social Reform and the Church 170
The Christian Society 170
The Political Economy of Natural Law . . 170
The Dependent, Defective, and Delinquent Classes, 170

Fiction :

A Man of Today 171
Broken Links 171
A Modern Buccaneer 171
The Lone House 171
A Valiant Ignorance 171

Minor Notices :

A Sheaf of Poems 171
When Hearts are Trumps 171
Shakespeare Studies and Other Essays . . 172
Total Eclipses of the Sun 172
A Short History of the Crusades . . . 172
Periodicals 172
News and Notes 173
Publications Received 175

KERRIGAN'S QUALITY.*

THE author of Irish Idyls and Bogland Studies confirms her position as one of the truest interpreters of humble life by her new volume. It can hardly be called a novel, if one demands in a novel a love-action and a full representation of characters. It is rather a composition occupying that middle position between the sketch or short story and the novel which the successful writer on the first line attains in his gradual development into a full-blown novelist. So many other qualities are required in the artistic novel than those which suffice to make the short story a success that it is no wonder if many stop short in this development. That Miss Barlow has some of the rarest faculties which a writer of realistic fiction, touched with the light of heavenly truth, can possess is very plain. Never was the "democratic art" of lowly folk, which Mr. Symonds desired to see, more plainly exemplified than in her sympathetic and finished sketches of Irish peasant life. Like our own Miss Wilkins, however, in a very similar genre, she may have found her field already and do well to remain unrivaled there.

Martin Kerrigan, a middle-aged Irishman, has returned from Australia on the death of an uncle, who left him the fortune he never would have earned himself. He hopes to be happy among his relatives, but his mother has married a second time, his sister is entering a convent, and his brother, knowing nothing of the fortune, has no welcome for him; so he settles down at Glenore, a decayed little village of the bogland. His resources are few and his sympathies contracted; he has no touch with Corny and Molly Nolan, Mrs. Biddy Gallaher, Hugh Brady, Mrs. Juggy Caffrey, and the other inhabitants of Glenore, whom Miss Barlow sets forth as faithfully as she did the people of Lisconnel. When Kerrigan buys the Big House, where the villagers used to make free of the grounds, he is regarded with still less favor, as a "pernicious ould naygur." But he lets the house to a large family of Quality, the relations of Sir Benjamin O'Connor, who, taking a bicycle tour, has had an accident and been laid up in Kerrigan's farmhouse: "He was said to be all broke to geomethry and entirely desthroyed, not a spark of life left in him, the crathur, whatever;" but he soon recovered.

The unhappy fortunes of the O'Connors are found to be strangely connected with a tragic experience of Kerrigan's in the Australian desert, which especially takes the savor of life from Merle Clariston, a beautiful Irish girl, Sir Ben's cousin. Miss Barlow's plot makes too much claim on the reader's sense of probability, and the final catastrophe remains almost incredible; but the life and conversation of the Glenore people are full of human interest, both pathetic and humorous, and the landscape lives before us as her sure hand paints its somber colors. Merle's indignant comparison of the landed gentry with the landless peasants bears fruit in Martin Kerrigan's resolution to make things more even for the people of Glenore, and we leave him and Sir Ben planning this juster future, which Martin's fortune will enable their new sympathies to realize.

STOPFORD BROOKE ON TENNYSON.*

IT is difficult to speak in terms which shall not seem exaggerated to those who have not read it of this study of the art and teaching of Tennyson by Mr. Stopford Brooke. The author is a writer of such fine poetic strain; his acquaintance with English literature is so comprehensive; his discipleship of beauty so sincere; his religious nature is so tender and so strong; and his humanity is so warm, that his equipment as a critic is almost unique. This volume is the ripest fruit upon a goodly tree from which past years have given us the biography of Robertson of Brighton, the manual of English literature, the Theology of the English Poets, and the History of Early English Poetry. It is all compact of true and far-reaching thoughts, expressed with beauty and with power. A long review could not do justice to its many-sided merits. Here we can only indicate the plan of the work and make a few quotations, which will speak for themselves better than another's words could do.

The introduction, some fifty pages in length, treats of Tennyson as an artist and his relations to Christianity and to social politics. The following chapters observe a general chronological order by beginning with the poems of 1830 and leading up to In Memoriam and Maud. More than 130 pages are then devoted to the Idylls of the King, arranged in their own proper order as parts of a whole. The later poems are the chief subject of the last six chapters, two of which are entitled "Speculative Theology" and "The Nature-Poetry." Our first two quotations shall be from the pages in which Mr. Brooke marks Tennyson's limitations. In his poetry of nature

> Tennyson must have his man. He is half afraid to be with nature alone; at least he has no satisfaction till he can people his solitude. I scarcely remember a single description of nature for her own sake and alone in Tennyson; and this also divides him from all the other poets of this century. We lose, then, that in him which we still love — solitary communion with nature away from humanity. . . . We are kept close to the weariness of being always with mankind. I do not say it is not good for us; no doubt it is. But, for all that, we who desire a holiday at times from the vast disorder and sorrow of human life fall back with a sigh of pleasure on Wordsworth or Scott, on Shelley, or even on Byron; and live alone with nature.

Mr. Brooke is an earnest but not at all fanatical collectivist, and in his criticism of Tennyson's relation to this form of social politics he strikes what undoubtedly appears to him the laureate's greatest deficiency as a poet. Here, however, it is only justice to observe that collectivism is not by any means yet old enough to have assumed its final place, and the philosophic judgment of the next generation may regard with most favor a position midway between the poet's and the critic's:

> He is behind the whole of this movement — the master movement of our time. In matters of this kind he is not the poet of the people. He is our poet in the things which he treated poetically, and in those which have to do with nature and God and the sweet, honest, and tender life of men and women he will remain our poet as long as the language lasts, but in these social matters not. One only subject of this kind he treated well and as a poet, and that was the question of woman and her relation to modern life. . . . In all other matters belonging to the progress of society he does not belong to the last thirty years, to our time, our hopes, or our faith; nor does he think and feel in them as a poet.

The first characteristic of Tennyson as

---

* Kerrigan's Quality. By Jane Barlow. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

* Tennyson: His Art and Relation to Modern Life. By Stopford A. Brooke, M.A. Pp. iv, 516. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00.

an artist was simplicity, "and this came directly out of his character." A vital sincerity was contained in this simplicity and his perfect clearness:

> The debt we owe Tennyson for this is not owed by English literature alone; it is personal also. Clearness in thought and words ought to be a part of a writer's religion; it is certainly a necessary part of his morality. Nay, to follow clearness like a star, clearness of thought, clearness of phrase in every kind of life, is the duty of all. But the poets are most bound to feel and fulfill that duty, and it is not one of the least which belong to their art and their influence. Tennyson felt it and fulfilled it.

The poet had "a certain stateliness entirely conscious of itself and arising out of a reverence for his own individuality" — he felt himself a "prophet-bard." The main matter with a poet is, however, his love of beauty and his power of expressing it. Here is Tennyson's supreme greatness:

> With a few exceptions . . . Tennyson was faithful through his whole life to beauty, writing always of what was worthy of love, of joy, of solemn or happy reverence; and by this and in this sphere was the steady artist. The manifestation of these things, his creation of them for the love and pleasure and veneration of himself and men, was his unbroken delight. . . . He saw all the universe of man and nature and of God in their relation to ineffable beauty, and the getting of this pervading essence out of all things, the shaping of it, and the crying of "Look there: love and worship, rejoice and reverence," was the one supreme thing in his art for which he cared.

Quotation must close with these noble words in defense of Tennyson's undogmatic Christianity:

> Art has to do with the illimitable, with that which is forever incapable of definition, with the things that belong to love and beauty, joy and hope and veneration — the shapes, degrees, powers, and glory of which are forever building, unbuilding, and rebuilding themselves in each man's soul and in the soul of the whole world. Art not only rejects, it abhors all attempts to bind down into unchanging forms the thoughts and emotions which play like lightning round the infinite horizons towards which the imagination sails, piloted by love and hope and faith. It has no creeds, no articles of faith, no scheme of salvation, no confessions; it cannot have them by its very nature. The unknowable, but the believable, is its country, its native land, its home.

DOREEN.*

EDNA LYALL plans her novels on a large scale. She is rarely content with the smaller concerns of the individual only, but chooses subjects that demand breadth of view and a certain grasp of principles. In her latest book the background is the struggle for home rule, and the scenes are laid alternately in Ireland and England. Doreen is an Irish patriot both by inheritance and conviction. Her English mother may have helped her keep that balance which enabled her to see the good in those who thought differently, but the blood of her imprisoned father and her martyred grandfather flowed warm in her veins. She was devoted, heart and soul, to the same cause as they and as ready to suffer for it if the need came. She was a public singer, a warm-hearted, faithful, thoroughly Irish creature. From the time she first appears as a little girl "playing prisoners" and heavily ironed, Doreen is lovable, impulsive, earnest. Max Hereford loves her, but fails to trust her at a time when she cannot explain all her doings, and thus comes the separation that interrupts an otherwise ideal love affair and engagement. Max, always interested in Ireland but not wholly certain about the best solution of the difficulties, comes at last to espouse the Irish cause heartily, and his maiden speech in the House of Commons is in support of an amendment offered by an Irish member to the Coercion Bill. Doreen joins the Ladies' Land League, and throws herself into the work until she is arrested for helping build a hut for evicted tenants. Three months of confinement, added to the nervous strain produced by other causes, bring on a dangerous illness. She loses her singing voice beyond recovery, but at this time comes the understanding with her lover, and the book ends with a picture of their married life ten years afterwards and the prospect of speedy home rule for Ireland.

The story progresses in comfortable, leisurely fashion, allowing space for detail of incident and description. It is long, considering the slight complications of plot. Edna Lyall has evidently made a close study of the Irish question, and she sees its varying aspects and problems with a desire to do justice to all, while she stands firmly on her own principles. The minor undercurrents of plot are of comparatively slight interest, but the most important of these is, perhaps, the love of Max's cousin Miriam for John Desmond, an agitator of the dynamite-and-destruction order, with faint trust in constitutional legislation.

There is much to recommend in Edna Lyall's books, and her admirers are many. The book will be read with interest, since though not by any means a great novel it is yet well written and comprehensive, treating of universal principles in a broad way and presenting characters in whom one becomes interested for their own sake.

CRUMBLING IDOLS.*

MR. HAMLIN GARLAND, as industrious readers of the current magazines well know, has been making some astonishing discoveries. He has found out somehow that the best literature comes out of the experience of life; that a poet should sing of the actual people among whom he lives; that the novelist should describe and set forth men and women so that we may recognize them as our fellow mortals; that art is progressive; that originality is desirable; and that genius is independent of conventionality. He does not desire the world to remain in ignorance of these truths; so in magazine and now in book he bids all men stand while he delivers with enthusiasm this message, so novel to himself as to be apparently quite intoxicating. But have not a very few of us, at least, had a hint of these truths before? Have they not, indeed, been the staple of the best criticism for the last century? All that Mr. Garland says of the virtues of originality and truth to nature is but the thousandth rêpetition of propositions that are dangerously near to platitudes for any well-read person. The only surprising thing is that he should for a moment think he is saying anything new when he proclaims with extreme naïveté these venerable laws of all literature.

Mr. Garland is something of a story-teller and considerably less of a poet. If he believes in himself (and he certainly has shown a few signs of that good opinion of ourselves with which nature kindly fortifies us against a skeptical world) as a story-teller and a poet, the only way to convince the world is to continue to write and to improve. But it is one of recent diseases in literature that the novelist and the poet turn essayists and critics and laboriously enlighten mankind as to the merits of their own methods and productions. They are not only "makers" but "drummers" also, and they take the road to advertise their goods apparently with more zeal and pains than they spend upon the process of production itself. That the era of the "hustler" in letters has arrived no one can doubt who reads Mr. Garland's flamboyant descriptions of everything Western and his fervid apostrophes to the Western man to assert himself (timid being that he is) and rise in rebellion against the tyrannical East. But the reader of current American literature rubs his eyes and inquires where Mr. Bret Harte and Miss Craddock and all the other Western writers, including the essayist himself, got their first cordial reception, if not in the benighted East, and he will soon learn that nowhere is this absurdity of considering geographical lines as actual barriers in the world of letters more vigorously exposed than in Chicago itself, as by our contemporary the Dial.

Mr. Garland studiously avoids specific facts. They would easily make an end of his sophomoric rhetoric, of which these sentences may be taken as specimens: "Upon the tender springing plant of American literature the frost of conservative culture has ever fallen." (This identification of frost and culture is delicious, and Mr. Garland should spread the knowledge of it far and wide among our farming population.) "The prairies lead to general conceptions.

---

* Doreen. By Edna Lyall. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.

* Crumbling Idols. Twelve Essays. By Hamlin Garland. Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

The winds give strength and penetration and alertness. The mighty stretches of woods lead to breadth and generosity of intellectual conception." But have we no winds in the poor East, occidental critic? no Maine woods? no Adirondack forests? And what does the ocean give us? Let us answer this last question for ourselves. They who live on the coast of the ocean have from the beginning of human history been more open, naturally, to new ideas and world-wide truths than they who have lived in the interior and have never tried those waters which wash every shore. They have been the first to outgrow provincialism and the raw conceit of heady youth, since they have been the first to know the best that other lands have produced, to compare themselves with other men in art and science and letters, and to acknowledge and obey universal laws of excellence in all achievement.

There is a very amusing side to Mr. Garland's summons to Shakespeare, Dante, Milton, Wordsworth, and the rest to abdicate in favor of — well, he does not very plainly tell us the names. The cowboy is a picturesque and attractive figure even when he parades as a critic; but the obdurate gods do not turn pale and glance for help to gods as pale when his cyclonic halloo falls upon their ears. They know that the actual cowboy of the plains is a vanishing figure before the locomotive, and that his brother in letters has no more stability. With the ineffable sympathy of long experience they smile at the young giant, learning the rudiments of criticism, who mounts the throne and dictates to the centuries what they shall admire. "Another case of measles," they say with a smile; "we think he will live through it." It is surely not worth while to take such cases as if they were instances of heart disease or chronic consumption. One might indeed enlarge on the ingratitude of Mr. Garland to his best public; but when was ever a lusty sophomore awed from following the full career of his rhetoric by considerations of humanity or even discrimination?

MARLBOROUGH.*

THESE two volumes on the first and more peaceful part of the life of the great "Malbrook" are written from a standpoint very different from that of Macaulay. Speaking of Churchill's avarice, indeed, General Wolseley mentions "the Macaulays, Thackerays, and other romance-writers of the present century." His attitude is not, indeed, the thoroughgoing apologist's, who is determined to excuse in his hero all that he cannot admire; but he follows, for the most part, the sound principle that a man's actions must be compared with the moral standard of his age and his station. When Churchill deserted James the Second to aid William the Third he was doing what the king's own daughter had done, and many of the foremost men of England were his associates. His farewell letter to James seems to Lord Wolseley to contain "the plain outspoken sentiments of a man driven to treason against his King by that King's treason against his country, and driven to leave the master he had long and faithfully served by that master's flagrant betrayal of his sacred trust." Churchill had, in fact, plainly declared that he would not stand by James if the latter endeavored to make England Catholic. It was the fashion of those times for changes of master to be put off until the one abandoned might suffer the most and the one newly embraced gain the most by the act. The keener conscience of our time denounces those who hold to a position they are intending to betray.

For what the opponents of Marlborough have called his "second treason" — his correspondence with the exiled James at St. Germains — his biographer offers less apology. He says:

> There is much to find fault with in Marlborough's conduct during the reign of William and Mary, for he not only erred in judgment, but sinned against the common code of public morality. A close study of the court life of the time makes it clear, however, that most of his faults had their origin in the slights and ungenerous treatment which both he and his wife received at the hands of the king and queen.

The cold and unattractive William III is elaborately sketched by Lord Wolseley as the antipodes of his great general. By preferring his Dutch compatriots almost always, he alienated from him the nobility, who felt by no means certain that the exiled Stuart would not sometime return in triumph. Consequently Marlborough, Godolphin, Halifax, Russell, and others "all began to intrigue with James. They expressed heartfelt contrition and begged for pardon, and Marlborough specially seemed sincere in his repentance." He secured, in fact, a written pardon, but like his fellows he had no desire to see James seated on his former throne, but was hedging against the restoration which "seemed by no means improbable." In respect to the English attack on Brest, which was disclosed in season to give the victory to the French, Lord Wolseley believes that Marlborough knew that the information had already been sent to St. Germains by others and pretended to give news in order to gain the favor of the exiled king. But when James desired any substantial service Marlborough was ready with his excuses for doing nothing, and "we are bound to admit the deceit and insincerity of his conduct" in the Brest affair.

Lord Wolseley has planned his biography on an ample scale for those who have abundant time to read. These 850 pages are occupied with the life of Churchill down to the death of William, before the great victories in Flanders had been won. It would have been easy for a less discursive writer to include the whole career in the same space; but the author writes with ease and grace, though not a master of rhetoric. He does not make Marlborough live and breathe before us as Carlyle would have presented him, but the volumes are readable in a high degree. Much of the material belongs to the gossip of the court, in which the handsome young man profited by the favor of Charles Second's mistress, the Duchess of Cleveland, the personal enmities of the more virtuous William and Mary, and the close relations of the duchess with the Princess Anne. It is not along the course of intricate diplomacy or through the details of arduous campaigns that the biographer leads us here; he is largely concerned with women like Arabella Churchill, one of Charles' mistresses, and the tempers of Queen Mary, "Mrs. Morley," and Mrs. Freeman in their vital bearing upon great affairs of state.

John Churchill was born, in 1650, in Devon, by the famous field of Brunanburgh. Not positively illiterate, he yet derived most of his education from experience. He became page to the Duke of York, and an ensign in 1667. He went to Tangier on a military expedition in 1669, but his first fame was won in the second Dutch war by his reckless bravery at Maestricht, where he saved the life of the Duke of Monmouth. At this time he was on the French side, and he took lessons in the art of war from the famous Turenne. "The French have well said that Marlborough learnt from a French general how to destroy French armies." But he was not a close student of books of tactics:

> He could balance future probabilities with strange accuracy, and could fill in with living figures the sketchy outline furnished by the spy. Without this peculiar gift — one of the instincts that make the born general — no campaign can be conducted with success. To realize what is going on beyond a range of hills, or any other natural barrier to human vision, and out of the reach of reconnoitring parties is one of the problems which perpetually confronts [sic] the military commander. On the correct solution of that problem depends greatly the success of all military operations. Throughout all his campaigns Marlborough understood by instinct, as it were, what his enemy was about, what his aims were, and how he hoped to accomplish them. From a close and minute study of the possible he was able to calculate the probable, and from a knowledge of his opponent's character, ability, and his way of looking at things — the result of his own Argus-like observation — to determine with almost prophetic accuracy the general course of events. No book-learned rules of analogy or reasoned-out deductions helped him to his conclusions. They were, like his wife's arithmetical calculations, arrived at by some unconscious mental process all his own.

His brief campaign against the hapless Monmouth and the capture of Cork and Kinsale illustrate these characteristics of his genius, the grand achievements of which

---

* The Life of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, to the Accession of Queen Anne. By General Viscount Wolseley, K. P. Longmans, Green & Co. $10.00.

Lord Wolseley is to describe in a second pair of volumes. His varying fortunes under William III, from honors paid him for his desertion of James to his imprisonment in the Tower, and his appointment as general in Flanders and plenipotentiary in 1701, are described here with spirit. He had married for love, but the three women who had the most influence on his fortunes had violent tempers; as he had owed his early advancement to the favor of women royal or noble in rank, so he was to fall by the same means after a career of glory. He is fortunate in having a general of distinction, not unskilled with the pen, to chronicle his whole history and describe in particular his "famous victories."

WEST IRISH FOLK-TALES.*

MR. WILLIAM LARMINIE has selected and translated for the Camden Library eighteen specimens of West Irish folk-tales and romances. His introduction calls attention to the differences which characterize parts of the material:

> Ireland, though an island of moderate extent, is yet sufficiently large to contain districts far enough apart to isolate in some degree their respective peasant populations, while it is also admitted that the homogeneity of the Gaelic tongue does not indicate a corresponding homogeneity of race. It may turn out, in fact, ultimately that we have in Ireland not one but several bodies of folk-lore placed in relations most favorable for aiding in the solution of certain problems, while finally we shall, by a comparison with the Gaelic folk-lore of Scotland, obtain a still wider field for observation and inference.

Conclusions reached through this line of investigations, however, must be regarded as provisional, since Irish material is by no means what it might have been, either in quantity or quality. Little is known of the folk-lore of Munster. For Leinster we have the Wexford tales of Kennedy; for the inland parts of Connaught, Dr. Hyde's volume; for the coast of Connaught and Donegal, the tales now issued by Mr. Larminie, who also has many others not yet published.

The fairy belief seems common to all Ireland. Of the more elaborate traditional narratives a small proportion is widely diffused, while the greater part separates into divisions peculiar to certain districts. The Gaelic race is really compound, containing in addition to the true Celtic (Aryan) element probably two that are not Aryan — a Mongolian, or Finnish, and an Iberian. Comparing Ireland as a whole with the Scotch Highlands, Mr. Larminie perceives that the language of the two regions is still, as for fifteen hundred years, practically the same. The folk-lores are partly alike, but in each country there appears to be a large amount which the other never possessed. Most of the Highland tales are romantic and extravagant, while in Ireland this class meets another — the stories bearing an impress of quiet domesticity, closely paralleled in Grimm's collection of German folk-tales. It was at first believed that all of these originally belonged to the Aryans only, but a modification of that theory is imperative. It seems probable that, in general, where the Aryans became blended with other races less advanced they acquired fresh material for the working of their more constructive imagination. Ireland offers an illustration.

The larger Irish legendary literature divides itself into three cycles — the divine, the heroic, and the Fenian. The first is unknown to Scotland, the second comparatively unknown, the third belongs to both. Mr. Larminie believes that the Fionn Saga is the product of an early race occupying both Ireland and Scotland. Then came the Aryan Gael. When he conquered Scotland he took with him his own gods and heroes, but in that country the bardic system never became established, and hence few traces of the heroic cycle are left. In Ireland it was the bardic literature that preserved this court poetry. Its aristocratic character is shown by the fact that the people have nearly forgotten it, but the Fenian cycle has held its ground in Scotland and Ireland alike. It is a non-Aryan folk-lore, partially subjected to Aryan treatment. In interest it is not equal to the heroic cycle, missing as it does the epic sweep of the Aryan mind. It has a middle position between those lofty legends and the folk-stories.

The tales here presented have been taken down word for word from the dictation of peasant narrators, "difficult and doubtful parts being gone over again and again. Sometimes the narrators can explain difficulties. Sometimes other natives of the place can help you. But after every resource of this kind has been exhausted a certain number of doubtful words and phrases remain, with regard to which — well, one can only do one's best." Evidently Mr. Larminie's best is very good, and he is satisfied with nothing less. An appendix contains careful notes, together with specimens of the stories in Gaelic phonetically spelt. The closing chapter of the book indicates the difficulties under which the recorder has labored. "The greatest defect in the English language is admitted to be its extraordinary spelling. But in this respect it is completely outdone by Irish Gaelic, which is troubled in an aggravated form with every evil that afflicts English." Not only are the sounds many and subtle in each dialect, but the dialects are well-nigh innumerable. An alphabet prepared by the late Mr. James Lecky is submitted, with explanation of its special value.

Of the tales two were taken down by Mr. Lecky, the others by Mr. Larminie. They form a racy collection, as full of marvels as the Arabian Nights, recounted with great simplicity and crispness. The translator calls attention to their variety of style. This depends more upon the subject than upon the narrator, as if there were an original color which passed unaltered through the minds of generations of reciters. There is a primitive charm in a statement like this, "Bioultach took hold of him and tied him tightly, so that the toes of his feet gave conversation to the holes of his ears, and no conversation did they give him but the height of mischief and misfortune." Occasionally there is a passage of poetic beauty, as earlier in the same story:

> Where there were seals, whales, crawling, creeping things, little beasts of the sea with red mouth, rising on the sole and the palm of the oar, making fairy music and melody for themselves, till the sea arose in strong waves, hushed with magic, hushed with wondrous voices; with greatness and beauty was the ship sailing, till to haven she came and harbor on the coast of the Land of Brightness.

These archaic and spirited pictures offer an excellent opportunity for the study of Celtic characteristics.

---

* West Irish Folk-Tales and Romances. Collected and translated by William Larminie. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

FICTION.

Links in a Chain.

These odd and rather graceful little stories, by Margaret Sutton Briscoe, are strung together, as it were, by the interposition in each one of them of Mr. Atwood, a New York lawyer. We should be glad to be assured that the metropolitan bar possessed many members of his quality; were it so, New York would be a different place from what it is and need much less reforming. Mr. Atwood appears in the first story in the act of averting a separation between a young husband and wife. In the second he plays the part of mentor to a lovely and troublesome young ward; in the third he helps her out of a bad scrape by marrying her. Later we see him assuaging the perplexities of an artist and his wife, thus winning at last the love and confidence of his own and awakening the soul which seems dormant within her. In each he is what such a deus ex machina should be — strong, acute, kind, penetrating, powerful. The successive "Links" make rather an interesting series of studies. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.

The Queen of Love.

Rev. S. Baring-Gould has again written a vigorous novel with an unusual setting. The salt pits of Saltwich, England, are the locality, and the "seriously minded" of Saltwich and a group of circus folks form the personnel of the tale. Among the latter is the Queen of Love, a girl rider. Through trickery and the peculiar physical conditions of the field the circus tent is sucked downwards; she loses her father and finds herself the niece of one of the "seriously-minded." This event forms the basis of the story, which develops the fortunes of a salt concern and the love of Queenie for her cousin Arthur. There are two scenes of terrible grimness — the sudden death of the man who had fallen into the pan of boiling brine, and the purposed death of Rab and Ada in the brine geyser. The contrasts of character throughout the tale are vivid; otherwise the book would be as grewsome as it is realistic, for it is realism on a large scale which is depicted. Though the details are of photographic fidelity, minuteness is subordinated to masses of effect. The plot is consistent in its working out, and its end, slowly approached, has the dignity of the sure fate of a Greek tragedy. The moral is, "Judge nothing," for when hidden things are brought to light "every man shall have not blame but praise of God." — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

The White Crown and Other Stories.

Mr. Herbert D. Ward's new volume contains eight short stories, averaging some forty pages in length. They show a decided advance in style and power of conception over his earlier work. "A Cast of the Net," perhaps the best tale here, on the whole, is a remarkably well-written composition, and the first two thirds of it would do credit to any living writer of fiction. The latter part is much less successful, as the treatment becomes conventional, and Mrs. Tennyson, for instance, is a mere lay figure, which might as well have been labeled "Pride" at once. The nearness of some of the characters, especially of Eric Nelson, to actual life, makes the story one of special interest to dwellers in Gloucester, Mass., and summer visitors. "The White Crown" is a story of universal peace in 2894 A.D.; it is too much in the line of mysticism, and readers may well ask a relief from stories of the future, for a few months more at least. Mr. Ward does much better on tales of real life, like "The Value of a Cipher" and "The Semaphore." "A Romance of the Faith" is one of those fictions imposed upon Biblical narratives of which we have also had too many of late years. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Joanna Traill, Spinster.

This book, by Annie E. Holdsworth, belongs with that increasing class of fiction written in the interest of social or individual reform. Joanna Traill, middle-aged, unattractive, and hitherto colorless in character, comes into possession of a fortune. Her two married sisters intend to dominate her, as they have always done; but there enters into her life an eccentric philanthropist, Mr. Boas, and its tenor and purpose are at once changed. He brings to her notice a beautiful young girl who had fallen into evil ways and been rescued by him. Joanna adopts and trains her. Her own character develops strong and noble qualities; indeed, the work wrought in herself by self-sacrifice and high endeavor teaches a lesson quite as well worth heeding as that done for the girl, Christine. The subject is a difficult one to manage, but the author has succeeded in showing that an apparently lost life could be saved. Whether the girl was worth the cost is a question that will occur to the reader.— Charles L. Webster & Co. $1.25.

A Soldier and a Gentleman.

In this story, by J. Maclaren Cobban, a young Englishman, George Ferrers, who had seen many years' service in the army finds himself in London without money or friends and unable to obtain employment. At this crisis he meets an old comrade, who introduces him to Sir William Dawlish. The baronet offers him a handsome sum if he will for a given time call himself "William Dawlish" and answer to that name. Ferrers consents, and naturally finds himself in embarrassing situations. He endeavors to conduct himself like a gentleman, though chagrined at the bargain he has allowed himself to make. Almost as a matter of course he falls in love, and a deplorable outcome is imminent when it comes to his knowledge that there is a genuine "William Dawlish" whom for an evil purpose he is counterfeiting. The final scenes are highly dramatic; the story, indeed, has in it the material for an effective comedy.— Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

The Prisoner of Zenda.

One of the brightest and cleverest stories of the year comes in this little linen-covered volume, and it bears as the name of its author, Anthony Hope. May he live to write more of its kind! It is an impossible story. No such people as the subjects of the kingdom of Ruritania could ever exist except in the brain of a highly imaginative genius, and no such kings as Rudolf and Rassendyll could play their game on life's chessboard. But we begin by believing in Ruritania, and we are as deep in the conspiracy, as eager in the plots, as full of suspense, as anxious about the outcome, as if we knew the two Rudolfs and were in love with Flavia. It is delightful and a relief to turn from the modern novels with a purpose and read of such a hair-brained hero and of such a princess, who was made to love and be loved and to receive the homage of chivalric hearts. Having once accepted the fact that no such a story could be, one believes it all — that the court and the prison, Michael and the incomparable Sapt were real; that still Fritz carries the red rose to Dresden and brings one back. There is no moral to the book. The author has no motive, no theory to work out. He has a story, and he knows how to tell it.— Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

In Varying Moods.

It is not likely that we should ever have heard much about this little book had it not been preceded by the surprising success of Ships that Pass in the Night—a success that gave the name of Beatrice Harraden wide reputation and bespoke for her later books immediate attention. The opening story, at least, has certain qualities in common with the earlier book — earlier, that is, in point of publication, for we do not believe that these stories were written later. "At the Green Dragon" is the episode of a single summer — the visit of a stranger to a country village, where he interests himself in all the details of country living, even to buying "fascinating red pigs" at the market. He achieves the glory of pouring the beer occasionally for customers, and aspires even to the primary glory of making it. These interests are by the way, however, for he is a historian and dictates his chapters to a farmer's daughter, who has longings for a different life than the eternal making of butter and caring for the fowls. The exciseman is in love with her and buys books, storing them up for a possible future when Joan may take him and them together. The end of the love story is only indicated, not told, and the charm of the whole is partly in the influence of the historian over these simple lives and partly in the manner of telling. The other stories are short and less important. Especially good is the thought of the painter who began his picture as a fact and ended it years after as a symbol. Two or three of the stories are fanciful and not especially suggestive.—G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

For Honor and Life.

A tale of the French Revolution could hardly be tame whoever should write it, and Mr. William Westall uses his opportunity to make a very exciting story of valor and true love, for he has a graphic touch and good constructive ability. The reckless bloodshed caused by the half-mad popular government is brought before the reader with new force through the vivid personal interest that these pages awaken. The narrative professes to have been written by a member of the Royal Swiss Guard of France. Thus the point of view is royalist, yet Louis XVI is admitted to have possessed only the passive virtues. Marie Antoinette receives the usual meed of admiration. The tone is that of a thoroughgoing soldier, a descendant of soldiers. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Drolls from Shadowland.

It is by a stretch of language that these shadow pictures are called "Drolls," although they have an element of Gothic fantasy. On a screen, as it were, we see thoughts and deeds projected, and recognize the somber imagery as having some relation to ordinary life. J. H. Pearce, the author of Esther Pentreath, brings the silhouettes before us under such titles as "The Man Who Coined His Blood into Gold," "The Man Who Could Talk with the Birds," and "The Man Who Met Hate." Several of them deal with Cornish folk. All are brief, and most of them are trenchant. They are concerned with the sullying and shriveling that souls too often undergo in the passage through life. As sermons they are effectively preached, and as artistic studies they are usually clever. It is well now and then in our chromatic era to be recalled to a contemplation of the shadows we cast. But those which are here selected for mention are rather grewsome. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Cheap Jack Zita.

In this story Mr. S. Baring-Gould takes us back several decades into the fen district which has for its center the Isle of Ely. "There is not in all England," he says, "there is hardly in the world, any tract of country more depressing to the spirits, more void of elements of loveliness, than the Cambridgeshire Fens as they now are." Here Zita, the daughter of a cheap Jack, was stranded by her father's death. Full of courage and wit she could cope not only with the "general public" that she coaxed and cheated, but with a nature as savage as that which cherished old feuds in the breast of "Tiger Ki," one of the wealthiest fen farmers. The gloom of her surroundings is relieved by her radiant personality, and an element of comedy is maintained throughout by her inbred tendency to make bargains. Primitive human interests are here — love, revenge, and magnanimity. The story is strongly told, and its scenery has for the reader an effect of picturesqueness because of the resemblance to Holland's dykes and windmills. Yet we are assured that "everything is new and ugly," for it is hardly a hundred years since the complete recovery of the fens was accomplished. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.25.

The Literary World

BOSTON 2 JUNE 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

The Breath of Avon.

TO THE PILGRIMS OF GREATER BRITAIN.

I.

Whate'er of woe the Dark may hide in womb
  For England, mother of kings of battle and song —
  Be it rapine, racial hate's mysterious wrong,
Blizzard of Chance, or fiery dart of Doom —
Let breath of Avon, rich of meadow-bloom,
  Bind her to that great daughter severed long —
  To near and far-off children young and strong —
With fetters woven of Avon's flower-perfume.
Welcome, ye English-speaking pilgrims, ye
  Whose hands around the world are joined by him,
Who make his speech the language of the sea,
  Till winds of Ocean waft from rim to rim
The breath of Avon: let this great day be
  A Feast of Race no power shall ever dim.

II.

From where the steeds of Earth's twin oceans toss
  Their manes around Columbia's chariot way —
  From where Australia's long blue billows play —
From where the morn, quenching the Southern Cross,
Startling the frigate-bird and albatross
  Asleep in air, breaks over Table Bay —
  Come hither, Pilgrims, where these rushes sway
'Tween grassy banks of Avon soft as moss!
And, if ye found the breath of Ocean sweet,
  Sweeter is Avon's earthy, flowery smell,
  Distilled from roots that feel the coming spell
Of May, when all the flowers that loved him meet
In meadows that, remembering Shakespeare's feet,
  Hold still a dream of music where they fell.

— Theodore Watts.

Stratford-on-Avon, April 23.

LONDON LETTER.

THE literary excitement of the moment rages around the question of the boycotting, by Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, of Mr. George Moore's Esther Waters. A great many literary men and women have flung themselves into the discussion now going on in the Daily Chronicle, and it is notable that so far all the letters have been on Mr. Moore's side. Among those who are taking an active part are Mr. William Archer, Dr. Conan Doyle, Madame Sarah Grand, and Mr. L. F. Austin. I notice that this morning one of the letters defending the book is from the Rev. W. J. Dawson, the distinguished nonconformist clergyman who, in conjunction with Mr. Frederick Atkins, edits those extraordinarily successful publications, the Young Man and the Young Woman. Mr. Dawson is the author of a notably refined and musical volume of poems which Messrs. Macmillan published some little time ago. Mr. Faux, Messrs. Smiths' manager, who is acknowledged to be the responsible censor in the case, has had so far the charge of his own defense. According to Mr. Faux he is Mr. Moore's friend, and excludes his books most unwillingly because of incidental blemishes. According to Mr. Moore Mr. Faux has excluded all his books save one, A Modern Lover. The exclusions included Vain Fortune, which ran in the Lady's Pictorial, and which, according to my memory of it, was absolutely innocent. So far as I can see there is something to be said for both sides of the quarrel. Mr. Moore has got a bad name for himself, and it is not surprising that some of the mud of his former novels sticks to a serious and vital book, such as Esther Waters undoubtedly is. Then he has the compensation of knowing that his book is receiving the most magnificent of gratuitous advertisements. Meanwhile the British non-Philistine, who, as a rule, bears most amiably the burden of his Philistine fellow countryman, is up in arms against him with true British hysteria. As it stands, it is rather a pretty quarrel.

As to the merits of Esther Waters itself, there is no doubt that Mr. Moore has succeeded in producing in his servant-girl heroine a study of extraordinary patience, gravity, and sweetness. So far as the home goes Esther had better join the far less convincing Tess in the locked cupboard; but for the grown man or woman the book is of the gravest interest and value. A masterpiece of its kind, there hangs over much of it an atmosphere dreary and sordid, but that comes from its extraordinary fidelity in painting a life steeped in dreariness. The one star shining in the mirk is Esther's maternal passion and the strenuous honesty, even purity, which is the most convincing thing in this unmarried mother. In a way I wish Esther Waters had been written by a man with a cleaner literary record than Mr. George Moore. If that were so, one would accept what Mr. Faux calls the blemishes as more surely inevitable in an inevitable tragedy. One thing that strikes me as curious is that Mr. Moore has made Queen Charlotte's Hospital, the famous London maternity hospital, the scene of one powerful and somewhat brutal chapter. Yet no one so far seems to have objected. Perhaps novels take a long time to reach the authorities of Queen Charlotte's; but I should say, judging from the point of view of a mere lay person, that there is ground for even a prettier quarrel over Esther Waters than that at present in the public eye.

It is a long cry from these things to Santa Teresa, Mrs. Cunninghame Graham's big life, in two handsome volumes, of the great woman-saint of Spain. Mrs. Graham, the wife of the chivalrous and erratic member of Parliament, is herself a Spaniard. A thousand pities for the book's sake that, going a step further, she was not a Catholic as well! She has followed Santa Teresa's footsteps in Spain with the ardor of a devout lover. Every spot hallowed by the saint's presence or her foundations Mrs. Graham has learned by heart and paints in her book with a singularly free and picturesque pen. She seems to have gathered in the compass of her work everything that is to be known about Santa Teresa and Mount Carmel. She brought to her task passionate sympathy, unwearying industry, and an excellent literary faculty. This ought to have been the life of Santa Teresa for all time, yet Mrs. Graham spoils her work by not knowing how to let well enough alone. Every miracle, every vision of the saint, she explains after a mundane fashion, intolerably exasperating. She explains away her ecstasies and apologizes for her fervors. It is the last position one would expect Gabriela Cunninghame Graham to take up. It is Santa Teresa viewed from the standpoint of Little Bethel-cum-Bradlaugh, if one could imagine that conjoined with a rare enthusiasm and fervor. I fear Santa Teresa will not please either of the classes to whom it should appeal most strongly — the Catholics or the High Church people. One is very sorry for it, because one cannot help feeling admiration for the love and labor expended on it. I wish Mrs. Cunninghame Graham would revise it for us, leaving out all those objectionable comments. Even as it is, apart from the irritation caused by her explanations, her work is of much historical value. It is most handsomely produced by Messrs. A. & C. Black, and it ought to be the standard work which a little revision on the lines I have indicated would make it. No one will wish Mrs. Graham's pen-pictures of Spanish scenery and the old life of monasteries absent.

Mr. Van Der Poorten Schwartz, better known under his pen-name of Maarten Maartens, is again among us. He is the guest of his publisher, Mr. Bentley, at Slough. Those of us who were fortunate enough to meet him last year will be anxious to repeat the experience. It would not be easy to do justice to the charm of his personality; it is one in which good looks, generous stature, a beautiful voice and accent, and exquisitely cordial and well-bred manners all play their part. Maarten Maartens is veritably a fascinating person. Another distinguished visitor is the great Rudyard, who has not been seen, however, at any of the literary gatherings. Perhaps he will come into the open when leafy June brings the season into full swing. At present the weather might exercise a positive blight on all manner of movements. After a delusive early spring, which forced flowers and greenery alike, we are swept this May by a biting northeaster, which pinches Flora and her train sadly and sets the birds to wondering whether they had not better be migrating than building. I daresay Rudyard has his quiet smile over the Esther Waters controversy, inasmuch as a couple of years ago Mr. Faux interdicted the Christmas Detroit Free Press from the bookstalls, because of Mr. Kipling's free-spoken heroine, "Badalia Herodsfoot." I fear Mr. Faux' standard of morality must be one of outward decorum merely, seeing the stuff the lady novelists are at present stocking the libraries with. Mr. Kipling's Jungle-Book, many of the stories of which have appeared in St. Nicholas and in To-Day on this side of the water, will be published this month.

Mr. Fisher Unwin has just issued, at a shilling, Mr. W. B. Yeats' fairy play, "The Land of Heart's Desire," which, having acted during a short calamitous run as lever de rideau to Dr. Todhunter's unlucky play at the Avenue, is now performing the same office for Mr. Bernard Shaw's amusing and inconsequent "Arms and the Man." Mr. Yeats' little fantasy shared to some extent the damnation of Dr. Todhunter's play, though it yet holds the bill as the subordinate item. One wonders, indeed, how such a little poem could be supposed for a moment to attract a London audience. It is all millions of worlds away from modern Babylon, which appreciated little the fairy child, the mortal bride rapt away to fairyland, Father Hart, and the peasant's cottage, with its crucifix above the fireplace. Painful enough it must have seemed to see these things exposed to the stupid wit of 'Arry in Easter week. Mr. Yeats gets farther and farther away from a true dramatic ideal. "The Countess Kathleen" would have been a far better acting play than "The Land of Heart's Desire;" but "Mosada," an early dramatic fragment of his, would have been incomparably better than either. That was a dramatic conception in which there were strong human motives. Mr. Yeats is injuring his work by his devotion to fairyland and the unseen. One grows tired of it, and to my ear, at least, his later fairy work sounds insincere, or at least half-heartedly sincere. It would be good for him to leave Blake and his mystics and get back to the strong Elizabethan drama, which in old times delighted him. He wants the flesh-and-blood qualities.

An indescribably pathetic book is The Invisible Playmate, by Mr. William Canton, hitherto best known as the author of a distinctively strong book of poems, A Lost Epic. The Invisible Playmate is the poetry of fatherhood. The tenderness and simplicity in it will touch the hearts of all mothers and of all men who love children, and I am sure the love of children is a far commoner thing with men than with women before marriage.

Miss Beatrice Harraden's In Varying Moods is the book of short stories of the month. Miss Harraden is at present in California, whence she hopes to return greatly better in health some time in autumn.

The Yellow Book of Messrs. Matthews & Lane seems to have disappointed most of the reviewers. To my mind it is just a rather elaborate magazine, not differing greatly from other magazines except by displaying the eccentric influence of Mr. Aubrey Beardsley, which gives it its individuality. Mr. Henry James' "Death of the Lion," with its close portraiture of George Meredith, is the principal literary contribution. Miss Ella D'Arcy, a new writer, contributes a grim little story of an unequal marriage, which has the distinct note of inevitable tragedy. Mr. Crackanthorpe is strong and ugly in "A Modern Melodrama," and Mr. George Moore and John Oliver Hobbes contribute a cynical little drama, which seems to be all Hobbes and no Moore. These are the most notable items.

Mr. Swinburne's new volume of poems is mazing us all once more in riotous music and diction. Mr. Andrew Lang's Ban and Arrière Ban has scored at best a success of esteem; and poor Mr. Lewis Morris is being torn to pieces by the exacting critics of a younger day after a fashion and with a ferocity which make one sorry for the amiable Welsh gentleman whom the indiscriminating seventies took for a poet.

KATHARINE (TYNAN) HINKSON.

NEW YORK LETTER.

MR. WILLIAM GEORGE JORDAN, editor of Current Literature, is at work on a book interpreting in detail his system of "mental training," which he has been elaborating for many years. In it Mr. Jordan will point out the defects in our present educational methods and suggest others designed to give the student not merely a collection of facts, more or less valuable in themselves, but also a ready command of these and an alertness in all of the mental processes. Though Mr. Jordan has won a fine reputation as an editor he is one of the youngest of the magazine editors in this city. He has delivered many lectures on mental training in New York, Chicago, Minneapolis, and other cities, and his system has been received with great favor in all of these. During the last year he has brought Current Literature to a place of really notable excellence by the keen watchfulness which he keeps over the literary work that is being done both in this country and in England, by his catholic taste, and by his swift judgment. Besides being a first-rate editor and lecturer he is an admirable writer, as his vigorous editorials prove. Thus far nearly all of his contributions to the magazine have been unsigned, and his forthcoming book, it is thought, will establish his reputation as an author with a distinct and forcible style as well as of strong and original thought.

Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie, editor of the Outlook, is to bring out in the fall a new collection of essays. They will be a continuation of those which he published several years ago under the title My Study Fire, and will deal chiefly with literary topics. Mr. Mabie's work has won very wide reading, and he is one of the most popular of the present day writers in this country. As a lecturer, too, on subjects connected with literature, I doubt if there is an American who is more sought after. He tries, however, to confine his lecturing to talks before colleges and literary societies. The other day I asked him how he managed to do so many things and to do them so well. "My situation," he replied with a smile, "is peculiarly fortunate. I am obliged to be at my office only three days in the week. The rest of the time I can do my work at home in Summit, New Jersey. My purely journalistic work is done in my editorial chair; all of my literary work in my study, where I can look out on the Orange Mountains. I never write more than three or four hours a day. My afternoons at home I spend in walking through the country and my evenings in reading. I get a great deal from my outdoor life; it gives me a change from my work and keeps me in good health. Then, too, I enjoy the study of nature. No, I'm not a botanist or a scientist of any sort. I merely try to observe closely. As for my lectures, they take me out of my routine work and put me in touch with different kinds of people all over the country, which is altogether very interesting and stimulating."

During my talk with Mr. Mabie he spoke of the large number of people who are going in for journalism and literature at the present time. "Only this morning," he said, "I received a letter from a perfect stranger asking me how she could begin a literary career." He looked over his desk and passed me the letter. It was written in an untrained hand, evidently by one who seldom used a pen, and worded in the crudest fashion. It plainly showed that the person who had sent it possessed not the slightest capacity for literary work. Yet that letter is simply a sample of a large number of letters that are sent to certain editors of this city. "What do you say to the people who ask your advice about making literature their profession, Mr. Mabie?" I asked. "I tell them to do anything else in the world if they possibly can," he replied promptly. "But if they have pronounced talent and if they can't do anything else I advise them to go in and do their best. They will probably have great obstacles to overcome, but if they have the right stuff in them they are sure to succeed in the end."

Mr. Henry James is soon to have a new novel published in this country through a newspaper syndicate. He is one of the last authors in the world one would expect to find in newspapers, for his work appeals chiefly to a comparatively small class of readers, and these do not look for their literature in the daily press. However, George Meredith's One of Our Conquerors first appeared here through syndicate publication, and if the public could stand that they will probably revel in James. It would be instructive to know, by the way, just what the devourers of the Sunday journals thought of Mr. Meredith's work.

Mr. James is also to bring out very shortly two comedies, "Tenants" and "Disengaged," in one volume, under the title of Theatricals. Later he will publish a second book with two other dramas, "The Album" and "The Reprobate." Most of these were designed for stage production, but as yet they have not been seen in public, and now that they are to be published it is doubtful if they ever will be played under professional auspices. Mr. James has already had two plays produced, the second of which, a dramatization of The American, had about three years ago, in London, a succès d'estime.

The man on the top wave in literature at the present time is Mr. Stanley J. Weyman. During the past year his work, first made known to the American public through syndicate publication, has attained great popularity, and Longmans, Green & Co. are bringing out his novels in most attractive form. I heard a critic of this city speak of him the other day as a kind of present day Scott. Now that he has attracted attention he will possibly boom fiercely in this country during the next few months.

"The popularity of a writer of such pronounced old-fashioned stories of adventure as Mr. Weyman writes may be thought to indicate a change in the popular taste from realism," said the critic I have already referred to, "but it does not; for every generation produces its writers of adventure, no matter what the prevailing literary taste may be. Ours, however, have one notable quality — that is, the best of them — they write with the skill and finish of first-class artists. Mr. Stevenson is now regarded as a master of style, and Mr. Weyman soon will be." However this may be, there is no doubt that Mr. Weyman's hold on the men readers of this country is sure to be strong. The women readers are hardly likely to "enthuse" over him, for the typical end-of-the-century American woman objects to Mr. Stevenson and the blood-and-thunder school in general.

JOHN D. BARRY.

ECONOMIC LITERATURE.

A Policy of Free Exchange.

Mr. Thomas Mackay collects under this title nine essays, the general object of which, like that of his former collection, A Plea for Liberty, is to exhibit the superiority of freedom of exchange over socialism. As a whole the essays are more temperate in their tone than their predecessors, judged from the standpoint of our practice in the United States, where attacks on public schools and libraries have a curiously antique sound. There is little unity in the volume beyond their general agreement upon moderate social reform. The best essay — and it is one which "Nationalists" cannot ponder too carefully — is Mr. W. M. Acworth's on "The State in Relation to Railways." Mr. Acworth is a high authority on all railroad matters, and his conclusions commend themselves to the sober mind. Hon. J. W. Fortescue, in "State Socialism and the Collapse in Australia," shows the other side of the Australian shield, the bright side of which has been presented so often. Mr. St. Loe Strachey's "National Workshops" is valuable for its quotations from comparatively inaccessible authorities on the Parisian experiments in 1848 which resulted so disastrously. Mr. H. D. MacLeod, in his paper on "The Science of Economics," is as cocksure as usual. Other papers treat "the coming industrial struggle" between England and America, "State borrowing" and commercial crises, "the interest of the working class in free exchange," progressive taxation, and the law of trade combinations. The books written from this standpoint are not so many that this one should be overlooked by the careful student, despite its unevenness of texture. — D. Appleton & Co. $4.00.

The Distribution of Wealth.

Prof. John R. Commons bases his theory of value on the Austrian economists, accepting the doctrine of marginal utility. The question of the "forces which control the supplies of commodities relatively to the demands" interests him most, and he answers it in the second and following chapters on the factors in distribution, diminishing returns and rent and distribution and statistical data, and the conclusion. Professor Commons writes with uncommon ability and in a generous spirit, but some of his conclusions seem to us highly untrustworthy. He accepts the very doubtful "right to employment" by government, which he strangely enough sees recognized in civil service reform! He would have courts of arbitration "empowered to compel employers . . . to submit to punishment for violating the right of employees to work." On the other hand, the most indefensible actions of trade unions in restraint of free labor are considered extensions of "the essential right of freedom in industry!" Very evidently such terms as "right" and "freedom" suffer violence here, and it will need discrimination beyond that of the average reader to separate the gold and the sand in this placer. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

Social Reform and the Church.

This little volume of Professor Commons' is of a more popular character than its predecessor, and may be taken, in a considerable degree, as a statement of the practical applications of his more abstract doctrine. He vigorously urges upon the Church the undertaking of the social reforms needed today from his standpoint. But he seems to us to underestimate the prime importance of dispassionate study by the clergy and church members of these difficult matters. They are matters on which the ordinary theological school has helped to disqualify the ordinary preacher for clear reasoning, and the average church member is likely in discussing them to take one extreme position or another, and be least of all inclined to the proper suspense of judgment on every subject. The paper advocating proportional representation is the sanest, and that on municipal monopolies the most unbalanced. Professor Commons believes "the time will come when cities will carry freight as well as passengers, and will perform this work free of charge, paying the expenses out of taxes." Serious consideration of the municipal problem is not forwarded much by dreams of this sort, but incidentally Professor Commons says numerous good and sound things. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

The Christian Society.

Rev. George D. Herron, D.D., has won considerable reputation of late by several enthusiastic little volumes on social reform. This latest one is cram full of rhetoric, not without a power of its own, but carried to wasteful and ridiculous excess. A "professor of applied Christianity" who tells his hearers that "the first element in political economy is prayer" and that "Nature is Christian" may carry away an audience of the unthinking by his personal magnetism, but he is evidently free from talent for discrimination and, indeed, deserves a severe rebuke from serious men for indulging in the pyrotechnics of which these two sentences are mild specimens. The wholesale indictment which Dr. Herron brings against modern society witnesses much more to his zeal than to his discretion and sobriety. — F. H. Revell Co. $1.00.

The Political Economy of Natural Law.

Mr. Henry Wood's Natural Law in the Business World, published in 1887, was one of the most fair-minded statements of the truth on both sides of the labor contract, and the development of railroads, trusts, and corporations in general, we have ever seen. The substance of this volume has been taken up into the larger book named above. The latter deserves equal commendation as a judicious and impartial endeavor to do right by the employer as well as by the employee, and by the well-to-do as by the poor. It is a work which the clergy especially should read in preference to the heated harangues of writers like Dr. Herron, as ministers of religion are in a position that calls for candid and sympathetic discussion of all the facts of the whole industrial situation. — Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

The Dependent, Defective, and Delinquent Classes.

This volume, by Prof. C. R. Henderson of the Chicago University, is just what it calls itself, "an introduction to the study" of the three classes named above. To each a Part is given, which outlines the field to be studied, states the principal facts, lays down briefly the general principles, and discusses succinctly the courses of action to be followed. The brief, select bibliographies are given under each topic, and a fourth part is devoted to "social hygiene and therapeutics" in general. The work is neither a syllabus nor a treatise, but it is an admirably clear, sensible, and comprehensive survey of its theme, and it should have a wide circulation among the charitable and philanthropic. — D. C. Heath & Co. $1.50.

"The Union Pacific Railway," says Mr. John P. Davis, A.M., closing his well-studied and well-written volume with this title, "has furnished the student of American politics, history, and economics more material for study and reflection than any other factor of American industrial life." He has presented this material with a sobriety and fullness that must give this book a high place in economic literature. It is altogether the best book on its theme, and the theme is one needing the clearest illumination in these days when the cry from the unthinking for government railroads is so loud. The history of the Union Pacific is not reassuring for those who would persuade us that national ownership has no evils to be dreaded by the side of the obvious evils of private ownership. — S. C. Griggs & Co. $2.00.

Mr. George H. Lewis, M.A., of the Des Moines bar presents thirteen conclusions at the end of his book, National Consolidation of the Railways of the United States, which he thinks he has made clear. When we state that one of these conclusions is that the plan "will take railways wholly out of politics," the ingenuousness of Mr. Lewis' mind will appear. Congress is to control a national system of State railways and keep them thus out of politics! Mr. Lewis, who writes with much knowledge of the present situation and of railway literature, is but another example of the touching faith in human nature which nationalizers frequently and copiously display. It is passing strange that they have such complete confidence when they denounce the present so vigorously — the product of the same human nature. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

The Natural Law of Money, by William Brough, is described in its sub-title, "the successive steps in the growth of money traced from the days of barter to the introduction of the modern clearing house, and monetary principles examined in their relation to past and present legislation." It is not, of course, in its 163 pages only, a complete treatise on gold and silver as money and the substitutes for them, but it is an admirable sketch of the origin and history of metallic and paper money, with close reference to American experience, the last chapter treating "the hoarding panic of July, 1893," and another chapter contrasting the excellent monetary system of Canada with our own. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

In Joint Metallism Mr. Anson P. Stokes of New York City explains a plan by which gold and silver may, he thinks, be safely and honorably used together as the basis of currency. As this plan involves the issue each month by the Secretary of the Treasury of a proclamation stating, in accordance with the market price of silver, how much the "standard" silver five-dollar piece shall be worth in gold, the student of finance may well wonder what Mr. Stokes' definition of a "standard" is. A more unsettling method in currency could not easily be imagined than this. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

The Russian Government caused to be prepared for the World's Exposition an exhaustive series of reports on The Industries of Russia. These papers, by experts in their several departments, were translated by our Consul General, Mr. J. M. Crawford, and a limited number of copies are offered for sale by G. P. Putnam's Sons. There are five octavo volumes in paper, the smallest treating of mining and metallurgy and the largest of agriculture and forestry; manufactures and trade fill two volumes, and a fifth is devoted to Siberia and the great Siberian railway. Every careful student of Russia should acquaint himself with this comprehensive work, if he would know the industrial condition of that immense empire as it appears to the most competent authorities at home. — $6.00.

— Maurus Jokai's most popular novel has been translated from the Hungarian, and will soon be issued in an English edition under the title In Love with the Czarina. In the original there is now an édition de luxe of Jokai's works, the whole of which has been sold to special subscribers, and half the proceeds, namely $75,000, given to the author. This sum ought at least to keep the wolf from the door. Jokai's books now number in all over two hundred volumes.

FICTION.

A Man of Today.

Helen Mather writes easily, often brilliantly. She draws characters that are individual and consistent. She has the power of keeping her reader's interest, generally by what she tells him — if not, then by the way she tells it. Yet she reminds one so often of "Ouida" that one cannot help wishing she would strike out in more original lines. This is the story of one man's fancy for one woman. Before her marriage he is not sure of himself; afterwards he is hardly more sure indeed, but he brings her very nearly to the point of compromising herself fatally for his sake and wrecking the happiness of many. The descriptions of life at Penroses are admirable, full of life and humor, and the characters of Jem and Nan show the kind of work Miss Mather might do if she would make such persons as these the central figures in a book. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Broken Links.

The ever effervescing, delighful, and moral Mrs. Alexander gives her readers more plot than sentiment in this tale. Her heroine, Janet, is faultless. After marriage she becomes disillusionized, and when the first Mrs. Palliser, who had been presumed to be dead, reappears, Janet leaves her husband, and even when a divorce is granted him from his first wife she refuses to live with him again. Mrs. Alexander does not enforce morality à la Sarah Grand, but she can do it as effectually though more agreeably than that virile writer. Janet's father is one of those true, simple characters that our author loves to draw and that redeem English novels from their present phase of social vulgarity. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

A Modern Buccaneer.

Rolf Boldrewood's novels of adventure are well-known favorites with lovers of this class of literature. But a book must appeal either to youth or to maturity, and trying to appeal to both falls to the ground between two stools. The first two thirds of this volume comprise a series of nautical adventures, which will undoubtedly stir and interest any boy, especially one fond of the sea. But the last third has much less action; dealing, as it does, with a quieter and more civilized life, it would probably be pronounced dull by any youthful reader who would enjoy the earlier pages. The style of the book is thoroughly good both from a literary and a moral point of view. The scenes are laid among the islands of the Pacific. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

The Lone House.

Mrs. Barr is not at her best in this story. Compared with most of those from her pen it is heavy and tedious. The locality is Galloway, where in an isolated stone house on the cliff overlooking the Irish Channel lived a stern old Covenanter, Andrew Carrick, and his two daughters. The interest is divided between his labors for Dr. Chalmers and a Free Kirk and a feud with his neighbor, David Grahame. Jeannie, the favorite daughter, runs away with Walter Grahame; troubles growing out of theological matters arise in the neighborhood, resulting in the desertion of the few families, who remove to another place, leaving Andrew and Ann to the lone house, impoverished and friendless. The purpose of the story is to show how determined a man can be in maintaining his religious convictions whether right or not, and what time and circumstances can do eventually to change him to a gentler and more yielding spirit.— Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

A Valiant Ignorance.

Mary Angela Dickens has here drawn a capital picture of a woman of the world who is dominated by intense affection for her son. She hides from him any knowledge of his father's crime, lest the boy fancy that the curse of heredity will blight him. At the end comes the revelation of all that has been, disclosed passionately to withold him from wrong-doing. The scene is dramatic and well conceived, as is the whole plot. It is a book of remarkable vigor, — consistent, sustained in its action, and clear and easy in style; it has far more originality than most novels. If there is any truth in heredity, its taint is here shown in the undoing of the son and the death of his mother.— Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Mr. B. L. Farjeon had a right to name his latest story A Fair Jewess, not because the gentle woman thus designated is often distinctly visible, but because she is a constant and potent influence in the life of her husband, Aaron Cohen, whose history forms the main theme of the novel. Through his affection for her, but without her knowledge, the hitherto high-minded and devout Cohen commits one serious sin, of which he deeply repents. The plot is somewhat melodramatic and the style is without distinction, yet as a picture of conjugal affection the book has its value. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

A pleasanter picture of English family life and its Indian connection could scarcely be given than that in A Devoted Couple, a lengthy novel by J. M. Masterman. The tale runs smoothly, with the usual accessories of love and death, which are all wholesome and natural. It is full of homely details and varied scenes and people — only one of the last is a villain, and he is not of the sensational type. Such a story shows the blessedness of large families and the dependence of England upon India as a military outpost for her boys.— Harper & Brothers. 60c.

In The Rubicon Mr. E. T. Benson's heroine passes the fatal stream when, as a married woman, she falls in love with a man who is already engaged, and then as an antidote to such evil commits suicide. The elegant details of the deed are not given in full. If such a picture is true to life it is a pity it is drawn; and, being drawn, it is a great pity to read it. English life must be very nasty, according to the author of Dodo, but apparently English and Americans like to read of it.—D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Mystery of the Patrician Club solves that other mystery of The Englishman in Paris, whose author avows himself on its title-page as Albert W. Vandam. It is an exciting tale of a murder, a vengeance, and a detective of the modern school of observant and almost omniscient ubiquity, and, as the characters are nearly all of the upper circle of English nobility, crime and its results have here more than their usual charm for every-day readers. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

This Picture and That, by Brander Matthews, in Harper's Black and White series, is a gay little comedy, which will serve excellently in private theatricals, though it was acted at the Lyceum Theatre in New York in 1887. The action of the play lies in a widow's discovery that her husband's unworthiness of her justifies her in marrying a second time. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

A Sheaf of Poems.

The widow of the late Mr. George Perry, who was for many years the literary editor of the New York Home Journal, has collected these poems by her husband, which she calls "the aftermath of a life devoted to large ideals." Mr. Perry was by nature idealistic, and his tastes, if followed out, would have inclined him to be a writer of verse; but circumstances turned him to a different kind of work, on literary and social topics and in various departments of criticism. The poems gathered into this modest little volume probably only indicate the power and aspirations of the writer. In general they show a spirit pondering the loftier themes of life, inquiring into its profound mysteries. "Siva, the Destroyer," is the expression of his feelings on the approach of death; "Alone" has an atmosphere of refined sentiment; "In the Valley of Shadows" has a pathetic tone revealing an undercurrent of deep feeling. In a different vein is this dainty poem, called "Sunbeam and Rose:"

> A sunbeam, flying from the eve,
>   Paused by a rose, its beauty seeing,
> And sighed, "How sweet therein to live
>   Did other beams not fill its being!"
>
> In grief he spread his wings of light
>   And onward passed, to wander ever;
> But sweet throughout his endless flight
>   The rose's fragrance breathes forever.

A portrait of Mr. Perry, in which some resemblance to Longfellow appears, fronts the title-page. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

When Hearts are Trumps.

Tom Hall may be called a successful writer of vers de société, and he writes much for various periodicals like Life and Truth. The verses are nearly always light, touched occasionally with feeling just deep enough to point a compliment or suggest a serious thought without dwelling on it. Cynical he must be often, of course, for how could he write society verses otherwise? In technical quality there is much difference between the poems; but that matters less, perhaps, in this sort of writing, where both subject and style are likely to suggest an impromptu rather than a finished production. One does not do them justice if he takes the whole at a reading, but many are bright and some are witty. The book is beautifully printed.— Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

Shakespeare Studies, and Other Essays.

This volume, by the late Thomas Spencer Baynes, LL.D., professor in the University of St. Andrews and editor of the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, contains the admirable life of Shakespeare contributed to that great work — which we can emphatically commend as the best concise account of the dramatist's life and literary career that we have seen — with the scholarly papers on "What Shakespeare Learnt at School," which attracted much attention when they appeared in Fraser's Magazine in 1879 and 1880; the article on "Shakespeare Glossaries," printed in the Edinburgh Review for July, 1869, and much quoted since by editors of Shakespeare; another on "New Shakespearian Interpretations," from the same review for October, 1872, no less noteworthy in its way; and another on "English Dictionaries," also from the Edinburgh (July, 1868), in which there is a deal of curious lexical matter. The only fault we can find with the book is that it has neither table of contents nor index, nor even "headlines" to distinguish the Shakespeare articles from one another. "Shakespeare" and "English Dictionaries" are the only such headings in all the 409 pages, and yet the work is that of the Aberdeen University Press! — Longmans, Green & Co. $2.50.

Total Eclipses of the Sun.

The editor of the Columbian Knowledge series, Prof. David P. Todd of Amherst College, has taken an excellent subject for the first volume. Total eclipses of the sun are treated by Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd in an intelligible and attractive way, not for astronomers, but for interested persons who have not technical knowledge. The style is pleasing, and the various details, statistics, and scientific facts are made as picturesque as is practicable. Eclipses are considered historically and almost in a dramatic, certainly in a spectacular, aspect. Here is to be found an account of the earliest known record of an eclipse, and here are the charts giving the paths of future eclipses till 1937. Narratives of expeditions and observations are given and explanations of calculations, instruments, methods, and the modes of electric telegraphing and automatic photography. The book is of handy size, prettily made, equipped with abundant footnotes, an ample index, and lists of works of reference, and has more than eighty illustrations.— Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

A Short History of the Crusades.

With a rather lavish use of capitals Dr. J. I. Mombert has prepared a capital book, which busy people will read, while scholars will be gratified by its maps and index. The author shows the effect of the crusades in leading to a centralization of political, civic, and social influence, which in turn produced constitutional government. The present volume deals, however, with actions, as it records the good and bad elements, deeds, and leaders of the crusades. The delays and self-inflicted disasters of the crusaders are candidly acknowledged. — News Printing Co.

It does not detract from the cleverness of the volume of essays by E. V. A., In Maiden Meditation, to suggest that they have probably been inspired by Ik Marvel's Dream Life, though they are much less coherent and direct. They are reveries of a girl bachelor, as the popular expression goes, and their titles, like "After the Ball," "After Church," and "After Dinner," reveal the starting point of each long monologue. Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller said the other day, referring to the three women who had helped her, that the first of these was the one who showed her how little the world cared for her opinions and how much it might care for her facts, thus leading her to the early Gradgrind stage of her literary life. E. V. A. disguises all her opinions by covering them with fancy and reminiscence, and she is capricious, tender, and thoughtful by turns. She confesses frankly that she has availed herself of other people's thoughts whenever they served her turn, and she does not mind that we catch many reflections from Balzac, Dickens, George Eliot, and others. — A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00.

Under the title Selected Letters of Mendelssohn W. F. Alexander has made a wise choice of letters from the famous Mendelssohn correspondence, which will introduce him as a letter-writer to many who have only known him as a musician. Not only had Mendelssohn a wonderful insight into scenes, events, and persons, but he had a rare gift of expression and his relations to his family were unusually frank and affectionate. Those who are familiar with the correspondence know that the letters of Fanny Mendelssohn are even superior to those written by her more distinguished brother. The main value of a pocket volume like this is that it serves as a first chapter and is sure to send its readers to the complete edition of the letters of this remarkable family. The introduction is written by Sir George Grove, and there is a portrait. — Macmillan & Co. 90c.

The Venetian Painters of the Renaissance is an essay which owes its origin to the author's belief that Venetian painting is the most complete expression in art of the Italian Renaissance. The writer's main idea is to show "how the Renaissance reveals itself in Venetian painting," and to make the essay useful as a handbook lists have been appended of the works in and out of Italy by the principal Venetian masters. The topics of some of the chapters are the Church and painting, pageant pictures, the young Titian, apparent failure of the Renaissance, and humanity and the Renaissance. As an aid to the study of this special art period the book has much value. The frontispiece is a "Shepherd with Pipe," from the painting by Giorgione at Hampton Court. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

Musical Education and Musical Art, by Edith V. Eastman, consists of suggestions gathered from a wide experience in Europe on the subject of a musical education. She does not write so much for the musical student — the man or woman who intends to make music a life study — as for the average person who, perhaps, does not consider himself musical. Miss Eastman believes that we can all be musical if we are rightly educated and that children's ears should be trained in the kindergarten at the earliest possible age. Many of her ideas are original, and her methods seem practical. We commend the volume to teachers and parents. — Boston: Damrell & Upham. $1.25.

Studies in the Evolution of English Criticism is a thesis presented by Laura Johnson Wylie to the philosophical faculty, and now printed at the expense of Yale University. It traces the evolution of criticism from Dryden to Coleridge. From its wide range of subject and its condensed style it is not easy reading. It lacks in salient features that hold the attention, as its level of attainment, though high, is very even. Its value is increased by a bibliography and numerous references. — Ginn & Co. $1.10.

Eben J. Loomis is the author of an unpretentious volume of short sketches and bits of verse, entitled Wayside Sketches, in which he describes his country walks near Washington and the Potomac with sympathetic enjoyment of nature's operations. He is a good observer, especially of the birds. The accounts of his own experiences are more successful than the fanciful stories of elves which he includes at the end of the book. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

Mr. Charles Belmont Davis, in his article on "The City of Homes" in Harper's for June, is more occupied with the literati of Philadelphia (among whose faces we see that of our regular correspondent, Mr. Morris) and uppertendom in general than with the building associations which have given the city the name employed for the article. This is none the less entertaining and instructive. Salem, Cambridge, and Mr. Lowell are the main subjects of Mr. Howells' installment of "My First Visit to New England," which, it is needless to say, is very readable. Professor Matthews' "Vignettes of Manhattan," Mr. Du Maurier's "Trilby," Mr. Alfred Parsons' "Japanese Spring," and Mr. Owen Wister's story, "Little Big Horn Medicine," are the other illustrated papers; beside which we have the second portion of Mr. James L. Allen's "Kentucky Cardinal," M. De Blowitz' "French Diplomacy under the Third Republic," Miss Woolson's last story, "A Waitress," another by Mr. Hamlin Garland, "God's Ravens," and Mr. Smalley's "Memories of Wendell Phillips" — a fascinating number.

The tragedy of an individual and the delivery of a nation are recalled in a very interesting paper by John Heard, Jr., in the June Scribner's. His narrative of "Maximilian and Mexico" is based largely upon collections of documents made public in later years. Prof. N. S. Shaler's article on "The Dog" is excellent in text, but the illustrations might have been much better. Mrs. Burnett has a touching story of the Invalid Children's Aid Association — "The Story of a Beautiful Thing" she well calls it. Mr. Cable's "John March, Southerner," goes on, and Mr. Bishop's Monte Carlo serial, "A Pound of Cure," is finished. "American Game Fishes," by Leroy M. Yale, Mr. Archibald Forbes' discussion of "The Future of the Wounded in War," a good story by Mary Tappan Wright, "A Portion of the Tempest," with a sketch of Stanhope A. Forbes, whose spirited picture, "The Lighthouse," is the frontispiece, fill out an agreeable summer number.

Mr. Blackmore has a dull and prosy installment of "Perlycross" in Macmillan's for May, and the general contents of the number are not very enlivening. "A Discourse on Sequels" is chiefly taken up with Shakespeare in bringing Falstaff in a second time, Cervantes, Daudet, and Beaumarchais, with references to Thackeray, Balzac, George Sand, and Alice in Wonderland. "Ditas," by an anonymous writer, is a Mexican story; "The Cliff-Climbers" is a sketch of adventure. In "The Melancholy Man" the pessimist is contrasted with his genial and welcome opposite, the optimist. Andrew Lang has for a subject "The Last Fight of Joan of Arc." An unsigned paper is on "Begging Letters and Their Writers." Most readable among the articles is that on the parliaments and ministers of the century, by C. B. Roylance-Kent, which is concise and full of information.

In the Popular Science Monthly for June the opening article, by Dr. Andrew D. White, on "The Final Effort of Theology," describes the hostile reception which theologians gave to Darwin's epoch-making book. The Mosquito country is described in a fully illustrated article by Dr. Robert N. Keely, Jr., under the title "Nicaragua and the Mosquito Coast." Mr. Lester F. Ward treats of "Weismann's Concessions," endeavoring to show that Weismann has conceded all the important points involved in his controversy with Spencer. Prof. G. F. Wright gives an account of "The Cincinnati Ice Dam," showing how the effects of its presence can be seen for many miles back from Cincinnati. The distinguished physiologist, Dr. Austin Flint, contributes an illustrated account of "The Eye as an Optical Instrument." Of special interest to parents and teachers is the essay by James L. Hughes, entitled "The Kindergarten a Natural System of Education." The author of Astronomy with an Opera-Glass, Mr. Garrett P. Serviss, has in this number the first of a series of illustrated papers under the general title "Pleasures of the Telescope." Dr. T. D. Crothers asks, "Should Prohibitory Laws Be Abolished?" and gives reasons for questioning the confident assertion of Mr. Appleton Morgan in an earlier number. Prof. F. W. Woll writes on "Dairy Schools and Dairy Products," describing, with four full-page views, the pioneer dairy school in the United States, now four years old. There is another installment of A. R. Wallace's paper on "The Ice Age and its Work," and a biographical sketch, with portrait, of Gerard Troost, for many years State Geologist of Tennessee.

The most striking article in the June Century is the illustrated account of Edison's new invention. In a letter from the inventor himself he says: "I believe that in coming years, by my own work and that of Dickson, Muybridge, and Marie, and others who will doubtless enter the field, that grand opera can be given at the Metropolitan Opera House at New York without any material change from the original and with artists and musicians long since dead." This article and one on the growth of German cities, which shows that our American cities are not growing so fast as the German cities and yet are not nearly as well governed, are well worth careful study. The second article, called "Across Asia on a Bicycle," is fully illustrated and graphically written. "The Mother of Ivan Tourguéneff" is described as a most disagreeable and uncomfortable person, and one may hope she was not a type of the Russian mamma of this or any other age. An account of Kossuth, an article on "Bookbindings of the Present," "Field Notes," and "A Cumberland Vendetta" are the titles of other interesting articles; while Mr. Frank Stockton's "Magic Egg" is the cleverest story the Century has published for several months. It is a modern tale, in which hypnotism plays a prominent part, and in which the element of suspense is well worked out, as it always is in Mr. Stockton's dramatic tales.

The complete novel in the June number of Lippincott's is "The Wonder-Witch," by M. G. McClelland. It is a romance of Virginia, beginning in war times and happily concluded long afterwards. The title refers to a ring which had a strange story of its own and the supposed power of keeping its wearer constant to its giver. Gilbert Parker's serial, "The Trespasser," reaches its close after carrying the hero through queer adventures and dire social and moral dangers. "The Rumpety Case," by Anna Fuller, the well-known author of A Literary Courtship, tells how justice was done upon a domestic tyrant by the joint action of Providence and an honest farmer, after the forms of law had failed to reach the case. Under the heading "Sea Island Cotton Respun" Dora E. W. Spratt tells how those islands, with their simple population, passed under Northern care in war times. In "The New Northwest Passage to the Orient" J. Macdonald Oxley writes of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its line of steamers to Japan. In "Hot Work on the Pampas" Morgan S. Edmunds describes the suppression of brigandage in the Argentine Republic in 1873. The venerable poet and essayist, R. H. Stoddard, supplies in "My First Literary Acquaintances" a pleasant semi-autobiographical sketch. Agnes Repplier discourses in her own brilliant vein of "The Passing of the Essay."

The article in the Atlantic for June on "Hamburg's New Sanitary Impulse," by Albert Shaw, might be read with profit by the boards of health of all cities as showing what intelligent supervision scientifically applied and backed by sufficient funds can do, even when applied to the worst sanitary conditions. In "American Railways and American Cities" Henry J. Fletcher shows the great damage that has been done to the smaller towns and cities of this country by unjust discriminations in freight rates. In "The Scope of the Normal School," by M. V. O'Shea of the State Normal School at Mankato, Minnesota, tells the history of the normal school in this country, and shows its relations to the schools, comparing its method with those of the chief European countries and describing what the colleges and universities have done in the direction of courses for teachers. The other articles are: "A Summer in the Scillies," by J. William White; "The End of Tortoni's," by Stoddard Dewey, incidentally an account of the social side of Parisian literary life in this century; "At the Opra Di Li Pupi," by Elisabeth Cavazza, an interesting account of the plays of the famous Italian Marionettes; and "Some Letters and Conversations of Thomas Carlyle," by Sir Edward Strachey; continuations of J. Irving Manatt's "Behind Hymettus," and of Frank Bolles' series of articles on Nova Scotia, "Ingonish by Land and Sea;" a further installment of Margaret Deland's "Philip and His Wife," and a very bright story by Kate Douglas Wiggin, "The Nooning Tree."

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Mr. Thomas Niles, one of the oldest book publishers of Boston and a member of the firm of Roberts Brothers, died May 18 at Perugia, Italy. Mr. Niles was born in this city in 1825. After his graduation from the Latin school he became a clerk in the publishing house of Ticknor, Reed & Fields (Old Corner bookstore), remaining with them for sixteen years, a part of the time taking the entire charge of the publishing business. Then he retired from the position (giving place to Mr. James Osgood) and entered the publishing house of Whittemore, Niles & Hall. From there he entered the house of Roberts Brothers, and after several years' service became a partner in 1872. Mr. Niles introduced Jean Ingelow, Philip Gilbert Hamerton, Edwin Arnold, and Ecce Homo to American readers, and had as choice a catalogue as any Boston publisher. In all his relations with those who have anything to do with books — as authors, reviewers, printers, publishers, or sellers — he was a gentleman of a fine strain. His warmest friends, perhaps, were among the authors; in their relations to him all the traditions of distrust were set aside. He magnified his office by making it truly a literary function, and he had no deeper desire than to publish the best books and to see that the makers of them received their due reward.

—Mr. Benjamin Kidd's Social Evolution, which has been received everywhere with the most favorable comments, will soon be issued in a second and cheaper crown octavo edition, in which a certain number of minor changes have been made by the author with reference to criticisms which have appeared in regard to the book.

—Mary Fenwick's Daughter is the title of a new novel by the popular author Beatrice Whitby, which appears in Appletons' Town and Country Library. As the name indicates, some of the characters described in Miss Whitby's first novel reappear in this.

— Noah Farnham Morrison (877 Broad Street, Newark, N.J.) has issued a new and attractive Catalogue of Rare and Curious Books and Pamphlets, including Americana, Travels, Rebellion, and General Literature, sized according to rules of American Library Association.

—Capt. Julius A. Palmer has for many years made a study of the esculent and poisonous qualities of mushrooms, and the results of his investigations are soon to be given to the public through the house of Lee & Shepard. This firm will soon issue Professor Dolbeare's Matter, Ether, and Motion in a new edition with much additional matter; John Harrington Keene's The Boys' Own Guide to Fishing, Tackle Making, and Fish Breeding; A Modern Magdalene, by Virna Woods; and Baron Nils Posse's revision of his Educational Gymnastics under the title of Special Kinesiology of Educational Gymnastics.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have just issued as Extra No. 62 of the Riverside Literature series (15c.) the first five chapters of a new history of the United States for schools, by John Fiske, with auxiliary matter by Frank A. Hill. The complete book will be ready sometime this month.

— Prof. George John Romanes, F.R.S., LL.D., died suddenly at Oxford, May 23. He was born in Kingston, Canada, May 20, 1848, his father being the late Rev. Prof. Romanes, M.A., LL.D. The professor wrote and lectured extensively on scientific and philosophical subjects.

— Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have just issued a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, entitled Good Literature, divided into three parts. The first contains the opinions of eminent men who favor the use of literature in schools. In part two are given the methods of using literature adopted by numerous superintendents. The third part contains a graded list of literary masterpieces suitable for school use. There is an interesting introduction to the whole. The pamphlet will be sent free on application.

— Ginn & Co. issued last month The Inflections and Syntax of Malory's Morte d'Arthur, by Charles Sears Baldwin.

— Mr. Noah Brooks, who has resigned from his Newark paper, is about publishing Tales from the Maine Coast, a volume of short stories.

— A governess was trying to explain the meaning of "poet laureate" and had rashly defined the term as applicable to the man who wrote the best poetry in his day. Sharp as a needle a young lady asked, "Was Shakespeare poet laureate?"

— Alfred Altherr, the pastor of St. Leonard's Church at Basle, Switzerland, is the latest biographer of Theodore Parker.

— Mr. J. M. Barrie has decided to call his new book about Thrums The Sabbath Day.

— Leopold Sacher-Masoch, who died at Lindheim on May 6, was born in 1835. He was a historian, an enemy of the German Empire, and the champion of the Polish Jew. Among his works are Der Aufstand in Ghent unter Kaiser Karl V, Ungarns Untergang und Maria von Œsterreich, Kaunitz, Prussians of To-day, Jews and Russians, Idyls, Hadaska, and Ueber den Werth der Kritik.

— Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have in the press a new edition of Dr. Mannington Caffyn's novel, Miss Milne and I, which has been out of print for some time. The book is a study of a female character of a very extraordinary type, and might well have been written to match A Yellow Aster.

— Froissart, by Mme. Darmesteter (Miss Mary Robinson), is announced for publication in the series of Grands Écrivains Français, by MM. Hachette & Co., who have just published in the same series Joseph de Maistre, by G. Cogordan, and are preparing new volumes on Diderot, by M. Joseph Reinach, and on Guizot, by M. Bardoux.

— The prolegomena to Tischendorf's critical edition of the New Testament, on which Professor Gregory has been working for the last eighteen years, are now complete. They contain a full account of all the existing sources of our New Testament Text, of the text of the MS. of the Vulgate, of the Syriac tradition and of the Æthiopic, Coptic, and Gothic versions. The English publishers are Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

— Hachette & Cie., Paris (New York: Dyrsen & Pfeiffer), have begun to publish in installments Professor Maspero's Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient, a work bearing the same title as that of 1875 by the same author, but otherwise wholly new in text and illustrations. The work will form three volumes or 150 livraisons.

— Mr. Henry B. Fuller will spend the summer abroad, probably visiting Baireuth during the festival. He has just finished a second novel of Chicago, in which he dwells less on the harsher and less agreeable phases of life in the inland metropolis than he did in The Cliff-Dwellers and more on what Mr. Ralph has termed "the gentler side" of that vigorous community. Mr. Fuller is no less of a musician than of a man of letters, and has written the scores of at least half a dozen (unpublished) operas. — The Critic.

— Under the title of Sober by Act of Parliament Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. are about to publish an account of the results obtained from various systems of drink legislation, written by Mr. F. A. McKenzie. Commencing with the story of the State saloons of South Carolina, the book goes on to describe the colonial laws, the state distilleries of Switzerland, prohibition and high license in America, and the growth of the English licensing system. One chapter is devoted to the connection between whisky and politics in the United States.

— Dodd, Mead & Co. have in press The Issues of the Press in New York from 1693 to 1783, by Charles R. Hildeburn, a handsome volume of some 500 pages, illustrated with two dozen facsimiles of title-pages, the edition being limited to 350 copies printed from type; also an English translation of Balzac's letters to Mme. Hanska, lately given to the light in the Revue de Paris.

— Congressman Thomas Dunn English is said to have two claims to literary distinction. He is the author of Ben Bolt and he once thrashed Edgar Allan Poe.

— Henry Morley, one of the most industrious and prolific literary workers of the age, died at Carisbrooke, Isle of Wight, on Monday, May 14. He was born in London, September 15, 1822. He practiced medicine from 1844–48, established a school at Liscord, Liverpool, on a new method, but gave up all his other plans to devote himself wholly to literature, especially to making literature attractive and get-at-able to students. He became a journalist, and did much good work in the columns of Household Words and the Examiner. From 1857 to 1865 he was English lecturer at King's College, then professor of English language and literature at University College, London, and then emeritus professor. He also served for many years as examiner in English language, literature, and history at University College, and professor of English language and literature at Queen's College, London. From 1882 to 1889 he was principal of University Hall, London. Edinburgh gave him the degree of LL.D. in 1879. He was not related, or not closely related, to any of the other eminent men of his time who bear the same patronymic. Among his best-known works, many of which first appeared as essays for his journalistic work, are lives of Palissy, Jerome Cardan, Cornelius Agrippa, and Clement Marot, and English Writers. Professor Morley also edited Steele and Addison's Spectator, Florio's Montaigne, Boswell's Johnson, a library of English literature in five volumes, the Carisbrooke Library, Morley's Universal Library, in sixty-three volumes, and Cassell's National Library.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published May 26: Two Strings to His Bow, by Walter Mitchell; The Silva of North America, by Charles Sprague Sargent, director of the Arnold Arboretum, Vol. VI, Ebenaceæ – Polygonaceæ; Claudia, by Frances Courtenay Baylor; Familiar Letters of Henry D. Thoreau, edited by F. B. Sanborn, large-paper edition; His Vanished Star, by Charles Egbert Craddock; My Summer in a Mormon Village, by Florence A. Merriam; The Christian Ministry: its Present Claim and Attraction, and other writings, by Theodore C. Pease, late Bartlett professor of sacred rhetoric in Andover Theological Seminary, with an introduction by Prof. Egbert C. Smyth; revised editions for 1894 of M. F. Sweetser's American guide-books — New England, The White Mountains, and The Maritime Provinces; and A Journal of American Ethnology and Archæology, edited by J. Walter Fewkes, Vol. IV, The Snake Dance at Walpi, with illustrations in color by Julian Scott and others.

— Rev. Dr. Richard Morris died in London, May 16. He was born September 8, 1833, at Bermondsley, Southwark, and was a graduate of St. John's College. He was appointed lecturer on English language and literature in King's College school in 1869, and ordained by the bishop of Winchester as curate of Christ's Church, Camberwell, in 1871. He was created LL.D. in 1870 by the archbishop of Canterbury. He was a member of the council of Philological and Early English Text Societies, elected president of the Philological Society in 1874, and in the same year received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford. His works are: The Etymology of Local Names (1850), Specimens of Early English (1867, 1872, 1882), Historical Outlines of English Accidence (1872), Elementary Lessons in Historical Grammar (1874), Primer of English Grammar (1875). Among the many works he edited are: Early English Alliterative Poems, The Story of Genesis and Exodus, Chaucer's Poetical Works, Old English Homilies, Spenser's Works, and Legends of the Holy Rood.

— Mr. F. Marion Crawford's "Modern View of Mysticism," the leading article in Book Reviews for June, has peculiar interest by reason of its unique subject-matter, the result of the most earnest investigation into a phase of life and thought that has always appealed very strongly to Mr. Crawford's imagination. "The present paper is tentative," writes Mr. Crawford, "in so far as it is an attempt to put with some clearness before the average reader the views of modern mystics. Should any interest be shown in this exposition, it is the writer's intention to carry it as far as he can by future papers of a similar kind in the pages of this Review. The writer wishes to state that he is not, and never has been, either a 'theosophist' or a spiritist; he also begs that whatever is said here may be judged, if read, without regard to allusions to this and kindred subjects which he has made in novels and purely for purposes of fiction. He claims no authority to be heard as the mouthpiece of the modern mystic, though much of what he has to say is the result of long intercourse with persons engaged in the practice of mysticism in various parts of the world."

— D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, have in press for immediate issue in their Modern Language series Halévy's L'Abbé Constantin, edited, with introduction and notes, by Prof. Thomas Logie of Rutger's College. A few sentences that might be regarded as objectionable in a text for schools have been omitted.

— The Lothrop Publishing Co. (Purchase St., Boston) announces that it has purchased the entire plant, good will, accounts, copyrights, and stock of the D. Lothrop Co., D. Lothrop & Co., and the Interstate Publishing Co., and solicits orders for its publications. These publications comprise their entire list, including full lines of the best-known books bearing the popular Lothrop imprint. The company have in press new books and new editions for early issue by such writers as "Pansy," Margaret Sidney, Willis Boyd Allen, and other popular writers whose names are identified with the Lothrop imprint.

— J. Selwin Tait & Sons announce Cavalry Life in Tent and Field, by Mrs. Orsemus B. Boyd, and The Green Bay Tree, by the author of A Yellow Aster.

— Old and New Unitarian Belief, by the Rev. John W. Chadwick, will soon be published by George H. Ellis, Boston.

— Longmans, Green & Co. have ready Letters of Harriet, Countess of Granville, 1810–1845, edited by her son, Hon. F. Levison Gower, in two volumes; Shakespeare Studies and Other Essays, by Thomas Spencer Baynes; and a new and cheaper edition of Lay Down Your Arms.

— Macmillan & Co. announce the early publication of another volume of the late Professor Freeman's History of Sicily. The volume, which has been carefully edited and annotated by the author's son-in-law, covers the period from the tyranny of Dionysius to the death of Agathocles.

— J. J. Little, receiver of the Worthington Co., submitted to Mr. Anthony Comstock some book which he was told Mr. Comstock had restrained Mr. Worthington from selling some ten years back, and submitted to the court the question whether he had any right to sell as assets of the company books that had been put under Mr. Comstock's ban. In looking over these forbidden books Mr. Comstock for the first time glanced into the pages of Tom Jones, and is shocked to think that this book has been sold for 145 years. In future he will do his best to check its sale. Gibbon, Thackeray, and Coleridge held different opinions about Tom Jones, but they are only immortal critics and — had read the book. — American Newsman.

— D. Appleton & Co. announce a new novel, A Daughter of To-Day, by Mrs. Everard Cotes, formerly Miss Sara Jeannette Duncan; a vivid account of mountaineering in India, by William Martin Conway, vice-president of the Alpine Club, Climbing in the Himalayas; Cleopatra, a new historical romance, by Dr. Georg Ebers; a new edition of Dr. Doty's Prompt Aid to the Injured; and in the Town and Country Library Mary Fenwick's Daughter, by Beatrice Whitby. The Appletons have prepared for the convenience of students topical classed lists of their publications, and have issued a catalogue of the large selection of their books made for the World's Fair Model Library, now on permanent exhibition in the United States Bureau of Education, Washington.

— Macmillan & Co. have ready the second volume of their Oxford Chaucer, edited by Rev. Walter W. Skeat, containing "Boethius" and "Troilus and Criseyde" — the remaining four volumes to follow at short intervals during the year. They also announce Eight Hours for Work, by John Rae, author of Contemporary Socialism; a second, cheaper edition of Kidd's Social Evolution; Biological Lectures and Addresses, by the late Professor Marshall of Owens College; The Friendship of Nature, a chronicle of New England birds and flowers, by Mabel Osgood Wright; The Celtic Twilight, by W. B. Yeats; and a revised and enlarged edition of Old Celtic Romances, translated from the Gaelic by P. W. Joyce. A novel by Laurence Alma-Tadema is in press, called The Wings of Icarus. The Macmillans have lately published A History of the Christian Church in the First Six Centuries, by Archdeacon Cheetham; The Letters of Edward Fitzgerald, edited by W. Aldis Wright, in the Eversley series; Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, selected from the Spectator by Richard Holt Hutton; and Poushkin's Prose Tales, in one volume.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Dante Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement. By Esther Wood. Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00

Letters of Edward Fitzgerald. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $3.50

Recollections of a Virginian in the Mexican, Indian, and Civil Wars. By Gen. Dabney H. Maury. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

A True Teacher: Mary Mortimer. A Memoir. By Minerva Brace Norton. F. H. Revell Co. $1.60 net.

Economics and Politics.

Canadian Independence, Annexation, and British Imperial Federation. By James Douglas. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

Eight Hours for Work. By John Rae, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Educational.

The Principles and Practice of Teaching and Class Management. By Joseph Langdon, F.G.S. Macmillan & Co. $1.60

A Class in Geometry. By George Iles. E. L. Kellogg & Co. 30c.

A System of Lucid Shorthand. Devised by William George Spencer. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Elementary Psychology. By Amos M. Kellogg, A.M. E. L. Kellogg & Co. 25c.

First Book in English. By Wm. H. Maxwell, M.A. American Book Co. 40c.

Outlines of Herbart's Pedagogics. By Ossian H. Lang. E. L. Kellogg & Co. 25c.

Report of the Commissioner of Education, 1890–1891. In two volumes. Government Printing Office.

Essays and Sketches.

My Farm of Edgewood. By Donald G. Mitchell. Charles Scribner's Sons. 75c.

Wet Days at Edgewood. By Donald G. Mitchell. Charles Scribner's Sons. 75c.

Satan as a Moral Philosopher. By Caleb S. Henry, D.D. Thomas Whittaker. 50c.

Pastime Papers. By Frederick Saunders. Thomas Whittaker. 50c.

Shakespeare Studies, and Essay on English Dictionaries. By the late Thomas Spencer Baynes, LL.B., LL.D. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.50

The Journal of Martha Pintard Bayard. London, 1794–1797. Edited by S. Bayard Dod. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

Courage. By Chas. Wagner. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

Steps into Journalism. By Edwin Llewellyn Shuman. Evanston, Ill.: Correspondence School of Journalism. $1.25

With the Wild Flowers, from Pussy-Willow to Thistle-Down. By E. M. Hardinge. Baker & Taylor Co. $1 00

The Empire: its Value and its Growth. By W. E. H. Lecky. Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

The Friendship of Nature. By Mabel Osgood Wright. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

The Celtic Twilight. Men and Women, Ghouls and Faeries. By W. B. Yeats. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Fiction.

The Green Bay Tree. By W. H. Wilkins and Herbert Vivian. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 50c.

Cord and Creese. A Novel. By James De Mille. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Upper Berth. By F. Marion Crawford. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

A Little Journey in the World. By Charles Dudley Warner. Harper & Brothers. 75c.

Red Cap and Blue Jacket. A Story of the French Revolution. By George Dunn. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Shen's Pigtail, and Other Stories of Anglo-China Life. By Mr. M. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

The Robb's Island Wreck, and Other Stories. By Lynn R. Meekins. Stone & Kimball.

Outrageous Fortune. A Novel. By Edgar Fawcett. Chas. T. Dillingham & Co. 50c.

The Last Sentence. By Maxwell Gray. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

The Waverley Novels. Dryburgh Edition. Vol. XXI. Woodstock. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Salem Kittredge, and Other Stories. By Bliss Perry. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

The Perkins Peril. A Novel. By George V. Wells. Laird & Lee. 25c.

Mary Fenwick's Daughter. By Beatrice Whitby. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Daughter of To-Day. A Novel. By Mrs. Everard Cotes. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Mildred's New Daughter. By Martha Finley. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

Claudius, the Cowboy of Ramapo Valley. By P. Demarest Johnson. Middletown, N. Y.: Slauson & Boyd.

Her Little Highness. By Nataly von Eschstruth. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

His Vanished Star. By Charles Egbert Craddock. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Two Strings to His Bow. By Walter Mitchell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The Prose Tales of Alexander Poushkin. Translated from the Russian by T. Keane. Macmillan & Co. $1 75

The Duke of Arcanum. By Frank Carleton Long. Laird & Lee. 50c.

Young Sam and Sabina. By Tom Cobbleigh. The Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Though the Gods and the Years Relent. By Mrs. Edmund Nash Morgan. New York: Home Book Co. 50c.

The Story of a Modern Woman. By Ella Hepworth Dixon. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00

Elton Hazlewood. A Story. By Frederick George Scott. Thomas Whittaker. 25c.

The Diary of a Nobody. By George and Weedon Grossmith. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

History.

Christopher Columbus and the Participation of the Jews in the Spanish and Portuguese Discoveries. By Dr. M. Kayserling. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

A Song of Companies, and Other Poems. By Orrin Cedesman Stevens. Holyoke: H. C. Cady Co. $1.00

Sebastian: a Dramatic Poem. C. Wells Moulton.

The Plays of Richard Steele. Edited by G. A. Aitken. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited by Walter W. Skeat. Vol. II. Boethius and Troilus. Macmillan & Co. $4.00

Religion and Theology.

The Second Book of Kings. By F. W. Farrar, D.D. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Absolution: Examined in the Light of Primitive Practice. By Hugh Miller Thompson. Second edition. Thomas Whittaker. 50c.

Philosophy and Development of Religion. The Gifford Lectures, 1894. By Otto Pfleiderer, D.D. Two vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

Judaism at the World's Parliament of Religions. Robert Clarke & Co. $2.50

The Life Beyond. By George H. Hepworth. E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

Science.

Progress in Flying Machines. By O. Chanute, C.E. American Engineer and R. R. Journal. $2.50

Travel and Observation.

A Journey Across Tibet. By Capt. Hamilton Bower. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $3.75

A Man from Corpus Christi; or, the Adventures of Two Bird Hunters in Texan Bogs. By Dr. A. C. Pierce. Forest and Stream Publishing Co.

Miscellaneous.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s Pocket Maps. Minnesota. — So. Dakota. — Montana. Each, 25c.

The Gem Encyclopedia. Laird & Lee. 25c.

The Truth About Beauty. By Annie Wolf. Illustrated. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

Catalogue and Announcements, 1894. Ginn & Co.

The Care and Feeding of Children. By L. Emmett Holt, M.D. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Traffic in Girls, and Florence Crittenton Missions. By Charlton Edholm. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Pub. Association. $1.00

"No man in this country speaks with the same authority, or deserves more earnest attention."

SOCIALISM AND . . . SOCIAL REFORM.

BY

PROF. RICHARD T. ELY, LL.D.,

Author of "The Labor Movement," "Problems of Today," "Taxation in American States and Cities," "Social Aspects of Christianity," etc.

12mo, $1.50.

Part I.—The Nature and Progress of Socialism. The differences existing between the various schools.

Part II.—The Strength of Socialism. Some of its advantages and possibilities.

Part III.—The Weakness of Socialism. Some of its dangers and defects.

Part IV.—Practicable Social Reform. Showing how far society can reasonably go in the direction of socialism.

Numerous appendices and an exhaustive Bibliography add to the value of the work. The author's views are presented in a clear, candid and fearless manner, and furnish one of the best discussions of this subject.

For sale by all booksellers.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,
New York and Boston.

Artistic Specialties IN Fixtures FOR Lighting BY Electricity OR Gas.

Fine Goods at Fair Prices.

Entirely new Designs for this Season.

Fixtures Made to Order from Special Drawings.

BEAUTIFUL LAMPS WITH SHADES TO MATCH.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.,
Manufacturers and Importers,
523-525 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR JUNE.

The Final Effort of Theology. By ANDREW D. WHITE.
An account of the hostile reception given to Darwin's epoch-making book by misguided theologians.

Nicaragua and the Mosquito Coast. (Illustrated.) By Dr. R. N. KELLY, Jr.
Describes the country about Bluefields, which Nicaragua is threatening to absorb, its government, inhabitants, and fruit plantations.

Pleasures of the Telescope. (Illustrated.) By GARRETT P. SERVISS.
Advice and directions for amateurs in astronomy.

Dairy Schools and Dairy Products. (Illustrated.) By Professor F. W. WOLL.
Dairy schools are a new thing in this country, and the pioneer institution, founded only four years ago, is here fully described.

OTHER ARTICLES:

WEISMANN'S CONCESSIONS; THE CINCINNATI ICE DAM; THE EYE AS AN OPTICAL INSTRUMENT; A NATURAL SYSTEM OF EDUCATION; SHOULD PROHIBITORY LAWS BE ABOLISHED? THE ICE AGE AND ITS WORK, IV.; SKETCH OF GERARD TROOST (with Portrait).

CORRESPONDENCE; EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

Literary Curios,

Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.

Send stamps for separate lists.

Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.

Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

IF YOU ARE GOING

WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Public Library,

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 16 JUNE 1894

Vol. XXV No. 12 Whole No. 508

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Climbing in the Himalayas.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M. A., F. R. G. S., Vice-President of the Alpine Club; formerly Professor of Art in University College, Liverpool. With 300 Illustrations, by A. D. McCORMICK, and a Map. 8vo. Cloth, $10.00.

This work contains a minute record of one of the most important and thrilling geographical enterprises of the century—an expedition made in 1892, under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, the Royal Society, the British Association and the Government of India. It included an exploration of the glaciers at the head of the Bagrot Valley and the great peaks in the neighborhood of Rakipushi (25,000 feet); an expedition to Hispar, at the foot of the longest glacier in the world outside the polar regions; the first definitely recorded passage of the Hispar Pass, the longest known pass in the world; and the ascent of Pioneer Peak (about 23,000 feet), the highest ascent yet authentically made. No better man could have been chosen for this important expedition than Mr. Conway, who has spent over twenty years in mountaineering work in the Alps. Already the author of nine published books, he has recorded his discoveries in this volume in the clear, incisive and thrilling language of an expert.

Creatures of Other Days.

By Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON, B. A., F. G. S., author of "The Autobiography of the Earth," "Extinct Monsters," etc. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $3.00.

" . . . The disjointed and often fragmentary bones by which these animals are usually represented in museums convey no ideas whatever to the majority of those who see them. It is quite otherwise with such representations as the figures of this work; and if in some cases the idea conveyed may not be strictly correct, it offers a fair approximation, and at all events gives a vivid conception of some remarkable creature which in its main outlines cannot be far from the actual reality."—From the Preface, by Sir W. H. Flower, F. R. S.

Man's Place in Nature.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The seventh volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS.—On the Natural History of the Manlike Apes. On the Relations of Man to the Lower Animals. On some Fossil Remains of Man. On the Methods and Results of Ethnology. On some Fixed Points in British Ethnology. On the Aryan Question.

The Psychic Factor.

AN OUTLINE OF PSYCHOLOGY. By CHARLES VAN NORDEN, D. D., LL. D., Late President of Elmira College. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

This, the latest treatise on a subject that is now engaging the attention of all educators and philosophers, is a most admirable summing up of the extended discussions and investigations that have been carried on in the field of psychological research up to the present time. The purpose and spirit of the book are strictly scientific and are intended to embody the trustworthy results of safe thought in the realm of current psychology. It is the most readable and entertaining work of the kind that has appeared, and one that may be perused with interest and profit, not only by students, to whom it is especially addressed, but by all intelligent persons.

General Washington.

By General BRADLEY T. JOHNSON. A new volume in the Great Commanders Series, edited by Gen. JAMES GRANT WILSON. With Portrait and Maps. 12mo. Cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

A Virginian, appreciating the history and spirit of his State, the author has approached the career of the greatest of Virginians with a comprehension of his hero's personality which has been denied to some who have been unfamiliar with the latter's environments. He deals with Washington as a soldier, but his sympathetic attitude renders it easier to understand Washington the man. On the military side General Johnson will be found a most competent biographer and well-equipped critic, and his presentation of this phase of Washington's career will be fresh in some respects, and of constant value.

Acting and Actors;

ELOCUTION AND ELOCUTIONISTS. A Book about Theater Folk and Theater Art. By ALFRED AYRES, author of "The Orthoëpist," "The Verbalist," etc. With Preface by Harrison Grey Fiske; Introduction by Edgar S. Werner; Prologue by James A. Waldron. 16mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"A book which has exceeding interest. The author talks in a very agreeable and instructive way about the art of acting, and while his book has a peculiar charm for those who sit in the orchestra chairs, it has a special value for the ladies and gentlemen on the stage."—New York Herald.

NEW EDITION OF

Prompt Aid to the Injured.

Designed for Military and Civil Use. By ALVAH H. DOTY, M. D., Major and Surgeon Ninth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., etc. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

This book has been enlarged by the addition of a chapter on Hygiene, and the substitution of the United States Ambulance Corps Drill for the original chapter on Transportation of the Wounded. As it now stands it is without doubt the best work of its kind ever published, and, in addition to its value for popular use, is especially adapted to the needs of the Ambulance Corps of the National Guards of the United States.

The Care and Feeding of Children.

A Catechism for the use of Mothers and Children's Nurses. By L. EMMETT HOLT, M. D., Professor of Diseases of Children in the New York Polyclinic, Attending Physician to the Babies' Hospital, etc. 12mo. Cloth, 50 cents.

Originally prepared for use in the Training School for Nursery Maids connected with the Babies' Hospital, New York, this manual has been elaborated in ways suggested by experience, and is now published by request of numerous persons interested. It will be found exceedingly useful, not only in similar institutions but to mothers, either for themselves or to be put into the hands of the ordinary (untrained) child's nurse. The author's standing as a successful specialist of wide experience in children's diseases guarantees the character of the hints and instructions given.

Cleopatra.

A ROMANCE. By GEORG EBERS, author of "Uarda," "An Egyptian Princess," etc. In two volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 80 cents.

In "Cleopatra" Dr. Ebers offers to the public one of the most important of his historical romances. The subject is one which has engaged his attention for many years, and his treatment is characterized by an enthusiasm, as well as a mastery of historical coloring, which will place "Cleopatra" among his most popular works.

RECENT ISSUES IN

Appletons' Town and Country Library.

Each 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

A Daughter of Music. By G. COLMORE.

Red Diamonds. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, author of "A History of Our Own Times," "Dear Lady Disdain," etc.

Mary Fenwick's Daughter. By BEATRICE WHITBY, author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," "Part of the Property," etc.

The Rich Miss Riddell. By DOROTHEA GERARD, author of "A Queen of Curds and Cream," etc.

The Trespasser. By GILBERT PARKER, author of "The Translation of a Savage," etc.

The Rubicon. By E. F. BENSON, author of "Dodo."

Appletons' Guide-Books.

(REVISED ANNUALLY.)

Appletons' General Guide to the United States. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. 12mo. Flexible morocco, with tuck, $2.50. (Part I., separately, NEW ENGLAND AND MIDDLE STATES AND CANADA; cloth, $1.25. Part II., SOUTHERN AND WESTERN STATES; cloth, $1.25.)

Appletons' Canadian Guide-Book. Part I., EASTERN CANADA, by Prof. CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS. Part II., WESTERN CANADA. Numerous Maps and Illustrations in each volume. Each 12mo, flexible cloth, $1.25.

Appletons' Guide-Book to Alaska. By Miss E. R. SCIDMORE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, flexible cloth, $1.25.

Appletons' Hand-Book of American Summer Resorts. With Maps, Illustrations, Table of Railroad Fares, etc. 12mo, paper, 50 cents.

Appletons' Dictionary of New York. 16mo, paper, 30 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO., 72 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Longmans, Green, & Co.'s New Books.

NEW NOVEL BY EDNA LYALL.

DOREEN,

THE STORY OF A SINGER,

By EDNA LYALL,

Author of "Donovan," "We Two," "The Autobiography of a Slander," etc. 12mo, buckram cloth, ornamental, $1.50.

"Edna Lyall's . . . new story . . . is one of her best. It has, naturally, enough of tragedy to make it intensely interesting without being sensational in any offensive sense. The heroine, Doreen, is a delightful character study, strong, lovable, womanly, and genuinely Irish. Miss Bayly is a conscientious writer, imbued with deep feeling, a high purpose, and her style is attractive and pure."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"The book will be read with interest, . . . it is yet well written and comprehensive, treating of universal principles in a broad way and presenting characters in whom one becomes interested for their own sake."—Literary World, Boston.

"It is a very clever story, indeed, and skillfully written. The heroine is a bright and beautiful Irish girl, and a musician."—New Orleans Picayune.

"A very interesting story, and is full of interesting and exciting incidents, and its characters are well drawn and sustained throughout the book. It is tastefully bound and will doubtless prove popular with this writer's many admirers."—Portland Advertiser.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

and the Participation of the Jews in the Spanish and Portuguese Discoveries.

By DR. M. KAYSERLING.

Translated from the Author's Manuscript with his Sanction and Revision by CHARLES GROSS, Ph. D., Ass't Professor of History in Harvard College. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

"He has collected a mass of evidence in favor of his theory that is well worth serious consideration. . . . The student cannot afford to neglect Dr. Kayserling's book, which is likely to reverse several of the traditional verdicts of the old historians."—Beacon, Boston.

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH,

To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By GEN. VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with 10 plates (8 portraits)' 11 plans, and illustrations and index, $10.00.

"These volumes are finely illustrated, the notes are full, and the index excellent. The style is clear . . . to one who knows something of the politics, the history and the literature of its day, it is a work to be eagerly sought, and read with absorbing interest."—Churchman, N. Y.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., Publishers, 15 E. 16th St., New York.

INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER.

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S Great Works have been recognized everywhere for their originality and power, and as historical contributions of the highest importance.

They are simply great; the best things ever written. ADMIRAL TRYON.

Captain Mahan, whose name is famous all the world over. . . . WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Of great permanent value and exceptional interest. THE NATION.

Three remarkable volumes. MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

One is everywhere made to feel the author is master of his subject. CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER UPON HISTORY—1660–1783. By CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN, U. S. Navy, late President of the War College at Newport. 8vo, cloth, $4.00.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER UPON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION AND EMPIRE. By CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

For Sale Everywhere.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO., Publishers,
254 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

Literary Curios,

Rare Books, Portraits, Autographs.

Send stamps for separate lists.

Picking up Scarce Books a SPECIALTY.

Address, AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

Book-Cover Designs.

A COMPETITION.

Three Prizes: $50, $40, $25

The recent exhibition of modern commercial bookbindings at the Grolier Club has drawn attention to the fact that the cloth book-cover has become an important detail in the manufacture of books. A number of artists now employ almost all their time in making cover designs, yet the demand is said to exceed the supply. Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, through THE BOOK BUYER, announce a competition in such designs, open to all until August 1.

The prizes offered are $50, $40 and $25 for the best three designs for covers, to be submitted to the editor of THE BOOK BUYER. Designs are asked for a novel, a book of poems, and a juvenile, and must show the color scheme. The full terms of the competition are printed in the June number of the BOOK BUYER.

The June BOOK BUYER will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

Publishers,

153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

JUST OUT.

A New Volume of Poems by EDWARD RANDALL KNOWLES, LL. D.

For sale by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

J. STILMAN SMITH & COMPANY,
8 Hamilton Place, Boston.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 16 JUNE 1894 No. 12

CONTENTS

A Daughter of To-Day 179
Fitzgerald's Letters 179
The Bourbon Among Us 180
Dante Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement 180
Perlycross 181
Paul the Pope, and Paul the Friar . . 182
Secularism 182
Vernon's Readings on the Inferno . . . 182
Poushkin's Prose Tales 183

Poetry:
  A Volume of Dante. Caroline Wilder Fellows, 184
  Refuge. Hugh McCulloch, Jr. 184
The Bard of the Dimbovitza 184
New York Letter 184
Philadelphia Notes 185
Fiction:
  The Man in Black 185
  How Like a Woman 185
  The Shen's Pigtail 186
Minor Notices:
  Hours in a Library 186
  A Lover's Diary 186
  The Quest of Heracles 186
  Junius Revealed 186
  Good City Government 187
  Sandow on Physical Training 187
  Poems, Sonnets, Songs, and Verses . . . 187
  Courage 187
Periodicals 187
News and Notes 188
Publications Received 191

A DAUGHTER OF TO-DAY.[*]

MRS. COTES' first elaborate novel is a distinct success, and shows a notable ripening of her talent. She has dropped the humorous or semi-humorous style of her earlier books of travel and description, and writes with entire seriousness of that extremely interesting character — the young woman of today, who has all the freedom but not quite all the wisdom of the end of the century. Mrs. Cotes need hardly have gone to Sparta, Ill., for her heroine, Elfrida Bell, unless she wished to justify the extraordinary scene in the London drawing-room where Elfrida does embarrassing homage to George Jasper, a popular novelist. An Eastern girl, however emancipated, would hardly have been capable of such a faux pas, and we must think that Elfrida had too much Western optimism to make the tragic catastrophe altogether probable.

The process and progress of Elfrida Bell, an Illinois girl of beauty and talent, from her native Sparta through a year in the Quartier Latin, where she adopts the most liberal principles and adheres to morality in practice, is traced very cleverly. She finds she has no real power in art, and her father's failure sends her to London to follow journalism. John Kendal, a painter of original genius, and his friends, Janet Cardiff and her father, the Persian professor, are the other principal characters. Elfrida and Janet, who has great talent as a writer, become intimate friends. The complications that follow from the professor's folly, Janet's love for Kendal, his artistic interest in Elfrida, her free views of marriage and her desire to make a sensation in letters even if she has to go on the stage in tights to get material, are skillfully handled, and there is much subtle analysis of the characters of Janet and Elfrida. Whether some of this is not pushed too far may be a question, but there can be no question of the strength of Mrs. Cotes' delineation and the distinction of her style, and the total effect of a new writer to be reckoned with in serious fiction, that A Daughter of To-Day produces. She lets the moral of her story tell itself. It is certainly plain enough, and one may hope that it will have some effect in preventing a few of the many shipwrecks which the new freedom for womankind renders only too probable in our generation when they oppose their lively impressions and their hasty opinions to the customs and institutions by the restraints of which civilization painfully protects itself from the beast.

FITZGERALD'S LETTERS.[*]

THE letter-writer, like the poet, is born, not made. There are letters and letters, and the worst of them may answer their immediate purpose and pass to their appropriate waste-basket doom. Many might well have met that doom which get into print; but those which deserve to be perpetuated in type are few, even in the correspondence of authors and other notable people. The art of talking naturally and well on paper — and that is the essence of good letter-writing — is a rare gift, like that of conversational talent.

The letters of Edward Fitzgerald are exceptionally good both in manner and in matter. The majority in these two volumes have been already published with his Literary Remains, and we are not surprised that, as Mr. Aldis Wright tells us in the preface, there has been "a very generally expressed wish" that they should be issued separately. It is pleasant, moreover, to learn that since these volumes were completed "a large number of letters addressed by Fitzgerald to his lifelong friend, Mrs. Kemble, have come into the possession of Messrs. Richard Bentley & Son and will shortly make their appearance."

The letters bear internal evidence of having been written with no thought that they would ever be printed; otherwise they might have been less easy, natural, and "like his conversation," as the editor says they were. His life was for the most part that of a literary recluse, and they were the chief means he had of talking with his friends. How much the recipients enjoyed them we may infer from what Carlyle wrote in reply to one of them:

> Thanks for your friendly human letter, which gave us entertainment in the reading (at breakfast time the other day) and is still pleasant to think of. One gets so many *in*human letters — ovine, bovine, etc. [It is a wonder that he did not add "asinine."] I wish you would write a little oftener; when the beneficent Daimon suggests, fail not to lend ear to him.

A striking feature in his correspondence, as another friend said, "is the exquisite tenderness of feeling which it exhibits in regard to all family matters; the letters might have been written by a mother or a sister." He said of himself that his friendships were more like loves, and love, as its nature is, begot love in return. Tennyson said of him: "I had no truer friend; he was one of the kindliest of men, and I have never known one of so fine and delicate a wit." The genial dedicatory poem of the "Tiresias" volume, beginning was written just before the death of Fitzgerald, who never saw it. When Thackeray, not long before he died, was asked by his daughter which of his old friends he had loved most, he replied, "Why, dear old Fritz, to be sure, and Brookfield."

Old Fitz, who from your suburb grange,

To these friends, and others like them — Frederic Tennyson, Bernard Barton, Lord Houghton, James Russell Lowell, Charles Eliot Norton, and many less widely known — these letters are addressed. They abound in free and easy comment on the books Fitzgerald was reading at the time, with other bits of bright criticism. He did not like Tennyson's "Princess" — in which he was by no means alone; but it is surprising that his dislike extended to the songs which were introduced into the poem in 1850 — in which, so far as we are aware, he was absolutely alone. He writes to Frederic Tennyson: "I saw Alfred in London. . . . He has written songs to be stuck between the cantos of the 'Princess,' none of them of the old champagne flavor, as I think." Of "Lucretius" he wrote to a friend later: "'Locksley Hall' is far more like Lucretius than the last verses put into his mouth by A. T. But once get a name in England and you may do anything." Neither was he much pleased with the "Idylls," of which he said: "I am not sure if such a romance as Arthur's is not best told in the artless old English in which it was told to Arthur's artless successors four hundred years ago, or dished up anew in something of a ballad style like his own 'Lady of Shalott' rather than elaborated into a modern epic form;" but, as he adds, he "never cared for any chivalric epic, neither Tasso nor Spenser nor even Ariosto, whose epic has a sort of ballad humor in it." He gives us elsewhere this charming anecdote of the laureate:

---

[*] A Daughter of To-Day. By Mrs. Everard Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan). D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

[*] Letters of Edward Fitzgerald. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. $3.50.

> I dare say I may have told you what Tennyson said of the Sistine Child, which he then knew only by engraving. He first thought the expression of his face (as also the attitude) almost too solemn even for the Christ within. But some time after, when A. T. was married and had a son, he told me that Raffaelle was all right, that no man's face was so solemn as a child's full of wonder. He said one morning that he watched his babe "worshiping the sunbeam on the bedpost and curtain."

In a letter to C. E. Norton, referring to Dante, Fitzgerald says: "What Mr. Lowell says of him recalled to me what Tennyson said to me thirty-five or forty years ago. We were stopping before a shop in Regent Street where were two figures of Dante and Goethe. I (I suppose) said, 'What is there in old Dante's face that is missing in Goethe's?' And Tennyson (whose profile then had certainly a remarkable likeness to Dante's) said, 'The divine.'" Of Milton Fitzgerald says that though the whole scheme of Paradise Lost, after a lapse of forty years since he read it, and certain parts of the poem "loom as grand as anything" in his memory, yet he "never could read ten lines together without stumbling at some pedantry that tipped me at once out of paradise, or even hell, into the schoolroom, worse than either;" but Tennyson "thought Milton the sublimest of all the gang." In the same letter Fitzgerald refers to "old 'Daddy Wordsworth,'" a name, he fears, of his "own christening," and adds:

> His brother was then Master of Trinity College; like all Wordsworths, unless the drowned sailor, pompous and priggish. He used to drawl out the chapel responses so that we called him the "Mēēserable Sinner" and his brother the "Mēēserable Poet." Poor fun enough; but I never can forgive the Lakers all who first despised and then patronized "Walter Scott," as they loftily called him; and he, dear, noble fellow, thought they were quite justified. Well, your Emerson has done him far more justice than his own countryman, Carlyle, who won't allow him to be a hero in any way, but sets up such a cantankerous, narrow-minded bigot as John Knox in his stead.

Writing to Lowell he says: "I cannot understand why I have not yet taken to Hawthorne, a man of real genius, and that of a kind which I thought I could relish. I will have another shot. His Notes of Travel seemed to me very shrewd, original, and sincere." To FitzEdward Hall he writes:

> I remember old Hudson Gurney caviling a little at realize, as I innocently used the word in a memoir of my old Bernard Barton near thirty years ago; this word I have also seen branded as American; let America furnish us with more such words; better than what our "old English" pedants supply, with their Foreword for Preface, Folk-lore, and other such conglomerate consonants. Party has good authority (from Shakespeare himself, as we know), and is a handy word we ought not to dismiss; better than the d—d Individual, which should only be used in philosophic or scientific discrimination. Still, Crabbe, in his fine, opium-inspired World of Dreams, should not recall his beloved as 'that dear party.

This is a sample of the humor in the letters, of which we should like to give many another specimen if space allowed. We will add only the reference to Handel's wig:

> Handel wore the Sir Godfrey Kneller wig — greatest of wigs — one of which some great general of the day used to take off his head after the fatigue of the battle and hand over to his valet to have the bullets combed out of it. Such a wig was a fugue in itself.

These volumes belong to the tasteful Eversley series, and have the merit of a double index — of the persons to whom the letters are addressed and of the subjects in the letters, the latter being exceptionally complete, filling fifteen double-columned pages.

THE BOURBON AMONG US.*

THE writer of this review well remembers the pleasing excitement caused in the household when paterfamilias read from Putnam's Magazine, in 1853, the article by Rev. J. H. Hanson, "Is There a Bourbon Among Us?" The funny men responded promptly with paragraph and caricatures in which the favorite product of Bourbon County, Ky., was set forth in its demijohns. Now we have the question answered, if not with demonstration, certainly with interest and in readable style. Miss Evans has "won her spurs," so to speak, by writing the story of Kaspar Hauser, and she seems to have a special fitness for tracing out clews. A granddaughter of a gentleman at whose house Eleazer Williams often called, she read the magazine article before mentioned to her uncle, who had often listened to descriptions of Williams' fleeting reminiscences of what had happened in his childhood. The uncle immediately saw the explanation of Williams' recollections of beautiful scenes and splendidly dressed people. These extravagant descriptions had been laughed at by his companions as the sentimental dreams of an excited brain.

This Eleazer Williams the author, in common with many other persons, believes to have been the dauphin, that is, Louis XVII of France. As we know from the generally accepted accounts, Charles, the second son of Louis XVI of France, was born at Versailles, March 27, 1785, and received the title of Duke of Normandy. On the death of his brother, in 1789, he became dauphin. In the earlier days of the Revolution he was sometimes dressed in the uniform of the National Guard and decorated with the tricolor to gratify the populace. After the death of his father he was so brutally treated by a Jacobin shoemaker named Simon that he became a wreck in mind and body. It has all along been generally believed that he died June 8, 1795, the popular report being that he was poisoned, though a committee of physicians disproved this report.

To make a long story short, it is believed by the author that in 1795 this dauphin was brought to Albany, N.Y., by a family of French refugees, and that a Catholic priest in whose charge he was left came to Ticonderoga, near Lake George, and gave the boy in charge of an Iroquois chief — a half-breed named Thomas Williams, whose mother had been stolen by the Indians from the English settlement at Deerfield, Mass., in 1704. Remittances came from France, which Williams went to Albany occasionally to collect. In time the boy Eleazer was sent to Long Meadow and to Boston, Mass., to be educated. He became a missionary among the Indians. He married, had a family of children, and his descendants still live at Green Bay, Wis. In 1841 the Prince de Joinville came to America, visited Williams, and had some communication of a private nature with him, in which it is believed that the prince informed the lonely missionary that he was the son of Louis XVI and rightful king of France under the title of Louis XVII. Williams was requested to abdicate his rights and titles in favor of the reigning king, Louis Philippe. For his abdication he was to receive a princely establishment either in France or America, together with the private property of the former regal house. This offer Eleazer Williams refused, and nothing further came of the interview. A large portion of the space here is taken up with three short chapters and one very long one about "the Pretenders," the chief of whom was a German named Naundorff. The book is far from convincing, though highly interesting. It may serve, possibly, as a basis for research that may in time amount to demonstration.

DANTE ROSSETTI AND THE PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT.*

GABRIELE ROSSETTI, the father of Dante Gabriel, was wholly Italian, a man of high literary tastes and achievements and a poet of genuine quality. In 1824 he settled in England and became a professor of Italian in King's College, London. It was there that the artist-poet was born. The Rossetti home, unpretentious but hospitable, became the resort of many a political refugee, a gathering place for kindred souls:

> All that was best in the young democracy of the mid-century — its eager idealism, its narrow but profound hero-worship, its poetry, its self-devotion — was here brought before the children's eyes; its coarser elements eliminated by the personal distinction of such men as Gabriele Rossetti loved to have near him.

Dante Rossetti's father was an enthusiastic Dante lover, after whom he named his eldest son.

At the age of fifteen the father sent this son, who already showed a strong artistic bent, to Cary's Art Academy. There Dante Rossetti showed the same brilliancy and waywardness that distinguished him through life. A fellow student recalls one morning when the truant was taken to task for his absence on the previous day. "Why were you not here yesterday?" said his master. "I had a fit of idleness," said Rossetti coolly. But when his master's back was turned he pulled from his pocket a bundle of manuscript sonnets, which he proceeded to paste inside all his friends' hats quite impartially.

---

* The Story of Louis XVII of France. By Elizabeth E. Evans. Macmillan & Co.

* Dante Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement. By Esther Wood. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.

Whoever wishes to have a striking example of the artistic temperament cannot do better than to study the life and character of Rossetti. Hypersensitive, lawless, with a nervous temperament so delicately strung that even joy was a pain, Rossetti resembled Shelley and Keats more than any other of our men of genius. "For him there was no life without emotion. He craved sensation, as one craves a narcotic, to destroy its own results. Ennui was his bane."

Ruskin was the first inspiration of the pre-Raphaelites. He was weary of the level of triviality to which modern art had sunk, and in Modern Painters he struck the keynote of the new school. Ruskin declared for originality and truth in design, and bade men turn from the art of the past to nature and seek inspiration at the primal source.

It was not to the splendors of Raphaelesque art that this new school turned for inspiration, and "not to the pseudo-classicism of the later Renaissance, but to the pristine freshness and purity of its youth." The leaders in the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood were Millais, Holman Hunt, and Rossetti. These three men, of very different temperaments, were welded together at first in the "glow of a common enthusiasm of revolt." There soon clustered around them a band of earnest followers much less gifted. They were pledged to contribute original drawings in regular succession to a portfolio, which was passed round for criticism by their fellows. The poetry of Keats afforded an inexhaustible treasure house of subject-matter for the young painters, and in 1849 the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood held their first "Private View." Soon after appeared the Germ, a monthly magazine for the promulgation of pre-Raphaelite principles. This magazine, though it contained some of Rossetti's best poems, was destined to have a very brief career.

Meantime the diatribes of the press were scathing, and even Charles Dickens, in his Household Words, could see nothing to admire in the work of the new brotherhood. The critics insinuated not only that their conceptions were graceless, but that their technique was defective as well. Indeed, there was some measure of truth in this last assertion. In 1851 Ruskin, though personally unknown to the brotherhood, publicly espoused their cause and wrote a series of letters to the Times in vindication of the new movement in art, and soon the three leaders by their really great pictures aroused the enthusiastic devotion of a large circle of admirers. Many of these were blind to the principles of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, and made it ridiculous by a pseudo-imitation. But the influence of this school on the religious paintings of their contemporaries and successors was very great. Mr. Burne-Jones and his work illustrate the great religious principles for which these painters stood.

Rossetti, it has been rightly said, "was a pilgrim who had got out of the region of shrines, but who at every crosslike thing knelt down by the force of thought and muscle." It is the instructive perception of "crosslike things" that gives nobility and tenderness to the work of Rossetti and his colleagues. They transfigure every theme, and a classic myth to them is as rich in meaning as a Christian parable. The group made a protest against asceticism and the mediæval spirit. Much of their work was crude, and their earlier disciples exaggerated their faults; but they brought a new spirit into the world of art, and to them we owe much of what is best in the art of this latter part of the nineteenth century.

The history of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood is little known in this country, so that Mrs. Wood has done a real service for Americans, at least, in preparing this volume. We hope for a full biography sometime of Rossetti, written by his friend, Mr. Theodore Watts, who was with him constantly after his wife's death. This volume is the history of the whole movement rather than of Rossetti himself, though there are more reminiscences of him than of any others of the brotherhood. The writer has endeavored to treat the movement on its ethical side, and to show its large intellectual and spiritual tendencies. She has left the domain of the art critic to other writers. Her volume is enriched with eight exquisite illustrations; several of them are here engraved for the first time, and add much to the reader's enjoyment. The book is finely bound and well printed on thick paper. We commend it to lovers of Rossetti's poetry as well as to lovers of his paintings, though the space that can be given to Rossetti's wonderful verse in a volume of this size is necessarily small.

PERLYCROSS.[*]

MR. BLACKMORE is one of the very few writers of fiction whose books appear at too long intervals to suit the large majority of his admiring readers. A long time elapsed between the publication of Springhaven and Kit and Kitty; since the appearance of the latter, in 1890, the wish has often been expressed that Mr. Blackmore would write another book. We are not quite certain that Mr. Blackmore's readers are not gainers by reason of these long waits. It would be a very easy thing to name more than one author whose latest book, following closely on its immediate predecessor, furnishes the reader with scarcely anything worth his time or attention. Mr. Blackmore's habit, just the reverse of this, is undoubtedly due largely to his unwearied devotion to his pet occupation of market gardening, which he pursues with unabated zeal, despite the fact that he does it, if all reports be correct, at a pecuniary loss, or, as he once expressed it in a letter to an American correspondent, "casts out with his spade all that he makes with his pen." But his readers are enriched by the wealth of illustration which this occupation furnishes the author for the embellishment and perfection of his rare volumes. This was so with Kit and Kitty and in a less degree only with this volume.

Perlycross will, we think, be more popular than either Springhaven or Kit and Kitty. It betrays no loss of old-time vigor, and it shows very conclusively that the author's pen has lost nothing of its cunning. It is, indeed, a story of a higher grade than these two predecessors. In reading it we have been reminded more than once of Alice Lorraine, which the author himself considers, on the whole, the best of his books. The scene of Perlycross is in Devon — "the fairest county of England" — and Mr. Blackmore is always at his best when he chooses the "west of England" for the location of his scenes. This is due in part to the fact that his boyhood and youth were passed in that region. The novel will thus be all the more likely to please the countless admirers of Lorna Doone — that unrivaled prose poem, whose pen pictures of Devon and Somerset have made that Exmoor region a classic land, familiar in outline and scenery to thousands who will never see it save through Mr. Blackmore's masterpiece.

The date of Perlycross is 1835–36, after the passage of the famous reform bill, and the story is "semi-medical" in character. At the outset two young lovers appear — the hero a doctor, and the heroine the beautiful daughter of Sir Thomas Waldron. The early death of Sir Thomas interferes very speedily with "the course of true love." Ere long the commission of a mysterious crime is intimated, of which the young hero is very generally believed to be the perpetrator. From this point the interest increases in intensity to the close of the story, where the mystery is made clear; unlike many "solutions," so-called, it will satisfy the most exacting of readers. Christie Fox, sister of the hero, is the most enjoyable character in the book, not to say the most lovable; the curate in charge, Rev. Philip Penniloe, is as noble a character as the author ever conceived. Others, like Harvey Tremlett, stalwart and rough but kind-hearted, "low down" but still proud of what the Tremletts once were; Dr. Gronow, who proves to be better at guessing secrets than at catching fish with his patent Ichthyophylax, especially when it is set so as to "work in the wrong direction" and thus keep all the fish out of his domain; and "High Jakes," the one-armed schoolmaster who does not believe in sparing the rod, furnish the author the opportunity for indulging in many a characteristic turn of thought and quaint conceit, served up in that unique style of which Mr. Blackmore is a perfect master. The New Education comes in for the author's respects, paid in no equivocal terms, while the modern institution of interviewing, under the name of "private inquiry firm," is characterized with words the reverse of flattering. The scene of the story gives the author a chance to introduce a chapter devoted to a favorite entertainment of his — "a wrestling bout." Perlycross is, in our opinion, one of the best of Mr. Blackmore's works.

---

[*] Perlycross. By R. D. Blackmore. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

PAUL THE POPE, AND PAUL THE FRIAR.*

THIS is an age of monument building, when the prophets are having their tombs rebuilt and decorated. Old Mortality has sharpened his chisel, and is busy scrapping, cleaning, and reinscribing the gravestones. The men who in Rome and Italy were incarcerated, incinerated, or hounded to death are now having their bronze statues erected in the public squares, and the world is snapping its fingers at tyrants, both theological and political. One of the signs of the times is visible in this scholarly work, easily read in a couple of hours, which sets forth the intellectual achievements of "the greatest of the Venetians." With Mrs. Oliphant, Mr. Robertson believes that Fra Paolo is "a personage more grave and great, a figure unique in the midst of this ever-animated, strong, stormy, and restless race," and with Macaulay that "what he did, he did better than any one."

A man of marvelous attainments in science, Fra Paolo anticipated many of the discoveries of modern times, and he was well known to the great investigators of Europe, whether they were studying the circulation of the blood, the higher mathematics, or the mighty problems of politics and theology. As a state counselor, he broke down juridical sophisms. As a Christian, he condemned the dissimulations of hypocrisy. As a scientist, he viewed with a fearless eye all the aspects of truth. As a historian, he laid bare the motives that took the cloak of religion. As a writer, he disdained every artifice, and used his words as a chisel that cuts and not as a flower that decorates. Despite lifelong persecutions and the dexterous malignity of his enemies, this pure and noble man was able to resist the assassin, the poisoner, and the pope until his work was well done. His body had to be hidden and guarded for centuries, but after the troops of Victor Emanuel entered Rome, it became possible to bury him decently and to erect his statue. This public memorial, first decreed in 1623 because of his brilliant defense of the Venetian republic against the threatened interdict of Rome, was not erected and unveiled until the 20th of September, 1892.

Fra Paolo was the historian of the Council of Trent; his manuscript has been published in translations, and the original is now at last to be put into the hands of the printer. To the secular influence of the popedom Paolo ever showed a determined and implacable opposition. He stood as the incarnation of the principle of the free church in the free state. The period of his life was between 1552 and 1623. He died at the hands of assassins, who inflicted on him no less than twenty-three wounds. Preserving one of the stilettos which the assassins had left in his body, the victim surmounted it with the inscription, "Stilo della chiesa Romana." Although many books, or parts of books, have been written about this great man, and though T. A. Trollope and possibly other authors have set forth his life in romance, yet this little monograph, scholarly, brilliant, and critical, is welcome.

SECULARISM.*

THIS very interesting and suggestive book is by the author of Industrial Liberty. In it he shows not only the changed aspect of the universe in modern as compared with ancient times, but also the working of the human mind amid industrial surroundings as contrasted with the effect produced by an intellectual environment. By the former phrase he means those impersonal forces which have grown out of modern discovery and invention; by intellectual surroundings he means those influences by which one mind acts upon another. His illustration is that of two boys of equal natural intelligence — one a deaf mute, the other endowed with normal powers of hearing and speech. The first is placed in a shop, where he is taught mechanics entirely by association with machinery and the steam engine; and the other is put in school, where he is taught the theory of mechanics and of the steam engine. Mr. Bonham discusses intuition, advanced theology, qualified science, ethics, the standard of morals accompanying the transition from ecclesiasticism to secularism, and sacred authority as influenced by the progress of knowledge. Throughout the volume he seeks to show the comparative worthlessness of what he calls "theology" and the excellence of what he calls "secularism."

To the reviewer Mr. Bonham seems to set up as many men of straw as the much-berated pulpiteer does. His idea of "theology" is certainly very different from that of those who, while familiarized with the shop and the tools by actually learning a trade, have also added to their culture the study of theology. The friends who by their conversation have helped him to illustrate his thesis seem to be (if we may judge from his telltale footnotes) devout female members of the church who are not good reasoners. Evidently, also, he seems to be but slightly cognizant of the fact that not only in Christendom but throughout the world thinking men of every sort of religion are clearly discerning between theology, which is temporary in its statements, and religion, which depends neither on "theology" nor "secularism." Nevertheless the work is admirable in its spirit and ought to be read especially by professional theologians, dogmatists, traditionalists, and polemic converters. We are not certain, however, that even the most liberal-minded will agree with the author in his interpretations of actual Christianity. The author does not seem to see that the whole gravitation of the Christian Church is toward a theology founded on the teachings of Christ, not of Paul. The book is strong in its defense of what the author calls "secularism" and exceedingly weak in its attack on what is called "theology."

VERNON'S READINGS ON THE INFERNO.*

THESE two stout octavos, with their predecessors devoted to the "Purgatorio," witness to a taste and a talent which some would call hereditary and others the effect of the literary tradition. Lord Vernon, the father of the present editor, brought out in 1858–1865 a noble folio edition of the "Inferno," which will honorably preserve his name among the apt disciples of the great Florentine. (Mr. Vernon reproduces, by the way, from his father's work the musical setting by Rossini of Francesca's words in Canto v, 127–138.)

Mr. Vernon's volumes have a more modest aim, as they are intended "to make plain to a beginner the difficulties of the . . . immortal Cantiche." Taking for foundation Benvenuto's lectures in Latin, which were first printed at his expense in 1887, Mr. Vernon gives their pith and substance, making use, too, of the other early commentators, the later translators of all nationalities, and the copious Dante literature in general. His method is to give five or ten lines of the original at a time, followed immediately by an excellent prose translation, bringing out (sometimes with a few supplementary words) the full sense of the passage; then comes a page or more of comment, chiefly from Benvenuto, accompanied with full notes — critical and explanatory — at the foot of the page, based on other authorities. To give but one example at haphazard, Mr. Vernon translates the lines v, 64–69:

---

* Fra Paolo Sarpi. By Rev. Alexander Robertson. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

* Secularism: its Progress and its Morals. By John M. Bonham. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

* Readings on the Inferno of Dante Chiefly Based on the Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola. By the Hon. William Warren Vernon, M.A. Two vols. Pp. cxi, 576, and 721. Macmillan & Co. $12.00.

> "See Helen (there), for whose sake so long a time of guilt (i. e. the ten years' siege of Troy) rolled on, and see the great Achilles who in his last hour (lit. at the end) fought with love (for Polyxena). See Paris, Tristan; " and with his finger he showed me more than a thousand shades and named them whom love had parted from our life.

A note on vedi, in line 64, instead of the vidi given by Scartazzini and Witte (whose text Mr. Vernon usually follows) and another on Paris fill a page and a half; the second quotes from Chaucer, the Roman de Renart, and a thirteenth century MS. to show that Paris, the son of Priam, and not the mediæval Paris was probably intended here. With text, translation, and notes 1,270 delightful pages are occupied. They form a continuous commentary in which little knowledge of Italian is presupposed, and thus they offer a kind of aid most welcome to students of Dante who desire to have the original text before them but do not feel competent to translate with ease for themselves. The combination of text, translation, and notes on the same page gives the maximum of convenience.

Mr. Vernon has done his work with a care and skill which are most highly appreciated by the foremost Dante scholars, like the Rev. Edward Moore of Oxford, who furnishes an admirable introduction devoted mainly to the character of the poet as shown in the "Inferno." The other preliminary matter treats Dante's cosmography, the plan, date, and beauties of the "Inferno," and Dante's itinerary; and there are full chronological tables. The plates and illustrations comprise a profile and a full view of the death mask, several woodcuts, and a map of Italy in Dante's day. In brief the beginner will find here the kind of help to a full understanding of the "Inferno" that he most needs, and he must be far advanced in the study who will not find profit as well as pleasure in Mr. Vernon's loving and capable labor.

POUSHKIN'S PROSE TALES.*

POUSHKIN'S name, although familiar through references in the works of other Russian poets and novelists to his influence on Russian literature, is very little known on its own merits to English readers. Mr. Keane's volume of collected prose stories ought, therefore, to be of great value in introducing to a wider circle of readers the man whom Russians of every school unite in considering as the father of modern Russian literature.

"The Captain's Daughter," which opens this collection, is the longest and most finished of Poushkin's prose stories. The scene is laid at the time of the insurrection of Pougatcheff, the false Peter III. Peter Andreitch, a young Russian nobleman, is sent to a poor fort in a remote corner of Russia, as his father wishes him to be removed from the temptations of St. Petersburg. While on duty at Bailogorsk he falls in love with Maria, the daughter of his captain. The description of Maria gives one of the most charming and innocently delicate pictures of a young girl in any language. Peter and Maria are not permitted to marry on account of their extreme youth, and they are separated by many adventures. Peter is finally accused of complicity in Pougatcheff's rebellion and is sentenced to Siberia for life. When Maria hears of this she travels alone to St. Petersburg to see the empress, to prove Peter's innocence and beg for his pardon. The scene between Maria and the empress can only be compared to the interview between Jeanie Deanes and the queen for simplicity and vividness. Poushkin's self-restraint and condensation are very striking in "The Captain's Daughter," and there is much vigor in his handling of the usurper's character. The only weak point in the story is Shvabrin, the villain of the plot.

"Doubrovsky," the other long story of the volume, is of much less interest and is more conventional, although it displays much cleverness as well as power of description in several of the incidents; but Doubrovsky himself, the brigand who becomes a tutor for love of the heroine, is hardly more than a figurehead.

Artistic as "The Captain's Daughter" is, Poushkin's best powers are displayed in the short stories, of which the rest of the volume is composed; rapid, condensed, and dramatic, "The Queen of Spades," "The Postmaster," and "A Shot" are worthy to rank with the very best French efforts in this line. Prosper Mérimée has scarcely surpassed in "Tric-Trac" the gambling scene described in "The Queen of Spades," while in a wholly different style "A Shot" has all the condensed passion and flashlight realism of Maupassant. The humanity of feeling which seems so essential a quality of the best Russian genius is in Poushkin coupled with a sense of humor which makes his slightest sketches delightful.

Mr. Keane's volume, presenting to a larger audience Poushkin's prose stories, will add to the better understanding of that remarkable literary development which year by year occupies a larger space as an interest and an influence in European literature.

— According to a Paris correspondent of the evening Post another hitherto unpublished work of Stendhal is coming out soon. It forms part of the six volumes of MSS. preserved mainly in the library of Grenoble: "Lucien Leuwen, the name of the new romance, was never finished by the author, though begun before any of his great works. In 1834, however, he gave careful instructions about publishing it in due time. It scarcely disguises even the names of the personages whom he had in mind. . . . It has been found necessary to suppress certain things which might come home to the children of those whom Stendhal desired to castigate for the part taken in the politics of the First Empire and the Restoration. . . . In over five hundred pages it pursues the answer to the initial question put before its hero by his father, 'Will you be knave enough to be employed in politics?'"

— M. Daudet had to change the name of his most famous character because he discovered, to his surprise, that a gentleman who bore the name he had first chosen actually existed and was full of threatenings and anger. Mrs. Humphry Ward has — no doubt unwittingly — made the same error by putting in the pillory the editor of a paper she calls the Labour Clarion, and the real editor of the real Clarion demands an explanation. A press-cutting agency actually sent him a quoted paragraph as an allusion to his paper. No doubt the disclaimer will soon be forthcoming, and Mrs. Ward will consult the Newspaper Directory before she writes her next book. The mistake is all the more curious because the Clarion in real life also is a labor paper. — Literary World, London.

— It is not often that we read of the principal inhabitants of a town turning out to welcome an author who has written upon its districts, but this seems to have been the pleasant lot of Mr. James Baker, the author of Mark Tillotson, in Bohemia lately. Deputations met him at railway stations, and professors and learned doctors awaited him at hotels, helped him to all information, and acted as his guide in town and country. At one town, Kuttenberg, where his work was well known, a concert was given in his honor and a ribbon-decked, inscribed bouquet presented to him with the thanks of the burghers for his two visits to their town and for his work in their country. — Literary World, London.

— "The pictures they publish of me," says Mr. R. L. Stevenson, "vary considerably. They represent every type, from the most godlike creatures to the criminal classes; and their descriptions of me vary in proportion — from a man with a 'noble bearing' to a 'blighted boy.' I don't mind what they say as a general rule, only I did object when somewhere in the States an interviewer wrote, 'A tall, willowy column supported his classic head, from which proceeded a hacking cough.' I could not forgive that!" — The English Illustrated Magazine.

— An important work by Hans Sachs, volume containing fourteen hitherto unknown mastersongs, has been accidentally found in library at Nuremberg.

---

*The Prose Tales of Alexander Poushkin. Translated from the Russian by T. Keane. Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

The Literary World

BOSTON 16 JUNE 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

A Volume of Dante.

I lie unread, alone. None heedeth me.
Day after day the cobwebs are unswept
From my dim covers. I have lain and slept
In dust and darkness for a century.
An old forgotten volume I. You see!
Such mighty words within my heart are kept
That, reading once, great Ariosto wept
In vain despair so impotent to be.

And once, with pensive eyes and drooping head,
Musing, Vittoria Colonna came,
And touched my leaves with dreamy finger-tips,
Lifted me up half absently, and read;
Then kissed the page with sudden tender lips,
And sighed, and murmured one beloved name.

— Caroline Wilder Fellows.

Refuge.

Fain would I journey from these barren lands
Where I was born, unto the magic isles
Of tropic seas, where Winter kindlier smiles
Than doth the Summer of our northern strands.
And I would wander on the golden sands
Of tropic rivers, reaching miles and miles
Through orchid bowers, where the sun beguiles
Our hearts with scattered gifts from lavish hands.

Then Homer to the Old World carries me
In hollow ships across the crested main;
And Chaucer shows each April-haunted lane
Of England. Spenser gives enchanted sea,
His summer woods and purple pageantry,
While Dante guides me through the world of pain.

— Hugh McCulloch, Jr.

THE BARD OF THE DIMBOVITZA.*

THE second series of these Roumanian folk-songs, collected by Helene Vacaresco, and translated by Carmen Sylva, the royal author, and Alma Strettell, do not fall below the others in point of interest. It is breathing another atmosphere to go from reading our later Victorian poets, with their delicate dreams, their self-questioning and careful technique, to these strange, melancholy chants and rhythms born in peasant hearts and throbbing with primal emotions. The characters in the novels of Sienkiewicz might have known such songs as these — fierce, direct, and untutored. They are peculiar to one district of Roumania, where Mdlle. Vacaresco spent years adapting herself to the life of the peasants in order to get these songs at first hand as sung among themselves. Most of them have been sung by the lute-player, who wanders from door to door with his "cobza" or lute. Fourteen are spinning songs. For these the girls stand in a circle to spin. The best singer begins to improvise, but throws her shuttle at any moment she chooses to another girl, who must then go on spinning and singing in her turn, while the first girl pulls out the flax.

One of the poems, "The Incantation," bears witness to the belief in magic arts, and the translators tell us that Mdlle. Vacaresco has been present at just such a scene as this, where the witch began her song by waving a bough of hazel wood over the dead ashes on the hearth:

Where is my sweetheart? speak, when will he come?
I have charged sleep to leave him;
The water that he drinks, to bring before him
In every drop my image;
The fragrance of his breath, to call my kiss
To his remembrance.

This shalt thou do, thou little hazel bough,
Thou that dost grow so near the river
That it is fain to kiss thee,
Thou that canst never see the sun,
Because thou growest all too near the river.

A striking and pathetic song is that of the flower child or foundling, who longs for his mother and wonders about her:

She will not come tomorrow,
Nor came she yesterday,
She who could end the stranger's life I lead.
Perhaps I meet her every day,
And she doth turn away her face
To hide her tears from me.

I hear them say, "My mother."
I listen, that I too may learn to say it,
And when I am alone repeat it low.
But when I say it 'tis as though I had
A different voice from them, the mothers' children,
For whom the mothers pray upon their knees,
And weave them shirts so fine the livelong day,
And sing them off to sleep with lullabies.

The lute-player sings of mother-love and sorrow and of the deeper sadness of him who has no son; he tells wherefore the moon is pale, and how many secrets are known to Sleep; he knows how the steps of prisoners leave the road white with dust, and how the tears of men may make a necklace for the maid that will rest heavy on her grave; and he repeats the death song of the soldier and the moan of the infant murdered by its mother, who turns in the earth to ask,

Little mother, O tell me why
I have gone to sleep, or ever 'twas time for sleeping?

NEW YORK LETTER.

MR. RICHARD HENRY STODDARD, the venerable poet and critic, will spend the summer at his cottage at Sag Harbor, where he goes for a few months each year. Sag Harbor, by the way, has for many years been the home of Julian Hawthorne, and there is quite a literary colony there. During his absence from the city Mr. Stoddard continues his admirable reviewing for the Mail and Express; this work he has been doing steadily since 1880, and its excellence is the best proof of the poet's vigor and enthusiasm; indeed, he has made the paper the authority on literary matters that it now is. I saw Mr. Stoddard the other day and I noticed that, though physically he seemed not to be as sprightly as he must once have been, his eye was keen and bright and his talk was full of animation and sparkle and spiced with delicious wit. He has been identified with New York for so many years that I was surprised to hear from him that he spent the first decade of his life near Boston, in Hingham, where he was born nearly seventy years ago. His family had been seafaring people there since 1638 — rather an odd and a decidedly auspicious ancestry, it seemed to me, for a literary man. But one would expect such an ancestry to produce a Clark Russell, or possibly a Robert Louis Stevenson, rather than a literary critic and poet. Mr. Stoddard sometimes regrets that he left Boston. Perhaps a quarter of a century and more ago a man of his caliber might have felt most at home in the New England atmosphere of letters rather than in the commercial atmosphere of New York; but now we certainly have enough literary life here to gratify almost any writer, and this Mr. Stoddard himself has helped to create. Indeed, his own household is a little literary world, for every member of it writes. Mrs. Elizabeth Barstow Stoddard's three admirable novels are well known to two generations — to the younger through their republication, with an introduction by Mr. Stedman, a few years ago — and her verse is frequently seen in the magazines. Her son, Lorimer Stoddard, though still a very young man, has contributed poems to the Cosmopolitan and the Independent and other periodicals, and he has also written several plays.

Mr. W. D. Howells sailed away for England on the Lucania the other day. For several months he has had in mind a trip abroad for the summer, but he made up his mind to go only recently, so that comparatively few people knew of his departure until it had been made. A few months ago it was reported that he intended to spend the coming winter in Venice, but as a matter of fact he will return to New York in September and probably spend the season here. Though he has justly criticised many things here, he enjoys living in New York and finds it a good place to work in. During his absence he will spend a month in Paris, a month in London, and a few weeks in roaming through Holland. He is accompanied by his daughter, Miss Mildred Howells, whose contributions and illustrations in the periodicals have made her known both as a writer and as an illustrator.

Mrs. Burton Harrison is another American writer who will spend the summer abroad. A few weeks ago she reconsidered her determination to go for the season to Bar Harbor. It is her present plan to spend most of the summer in England resting after her winter of hard work, but taking a little time to put the final touches on a new book.

Mr. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell, son of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia, whose poems have already attracted considerable attention, has taken up his residence in New York and is devoting himself chiefly to play-writing. Mr. Mitchell's wife, by the way, was Miss Marion Lea, who assisted another American, Miss Elizabeth Robbins, in the notable production of Ibsen's plays in London not long ago.

There are rumors of the proposed starting of still another magazine here, to be conducted by an editor of well-established reputation. The plans have been so far laid that the editor has returned from Europe, where he went in search, it is said, of writers for the new periodical. Of course the more magazines we have and the keener the competition between them the better for the authors of the country, whose market grows larger and more remunerative. But it looks a little now as if a reaction might set in, and as if some of our minor periodicals could not stand the strain of the competition. Mr. Stedman maintains, however, that each new periodical of genuine merit creates its own constituency without necessarily robbing its predecessors of any of theirs; so the multiplicity of our periodicals may, after all, be an unmixed blessing.

---

*The Bard of the Dimbovitza. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.

In more than one regard the condition of authors in this country has notably improved of late. Indeed, it is doubtful if it ever was better than it has been during the past ten years; nevertheless we still hear a great many complaints about the relations between the author and the publisher. There seems to be an impression that the average author suffers at the hands of the average publisher, and that his grievances are no longer to be borne. The society formed not so very long ago for the purpose of helping the guild of authors in their business arrangements is very active. This is all well enough in its way, for it is only natural that writers should endeavor to sell their wares as profitably as any other class of workers, and they are perfectly justified in improving their condition to the best of their ability. But as a matter of fact is it not true that literature has never received so much encouragement as it is receiving now, and that the sales of books have been greater during the past few years than ever before? Moreover, when once a writer becomes known his work is almost sure to be sought after and to be well paid for. Indeed, the competition among publishers at the present time is so great that the prices paid for good literary work have gone up surprisingly within the past few years. It is true that the past season has not been so good for the publishing trade as the dozen or more that went before it, but in this regard the trade has merely shared in the general depression. This has so far been felt indirectly than directly, and it is probable that its direct effects will be noticeable in next season's output of books. Last year the financial upheaval came so suddenly and so late in the spring that most of the houses did not have a chance to hedge.

Apropos of the present dullness, the story is told of a certain well-known American novelist that he has during the past year written two books, both of which he has set aside until times are better and he can obtain his usual returns from the publication of his work. This indicates the possession of great self-restraint on his part, as well as a business shrewdness that is not supposed to belong to the average literary man.

Robert Buchanan's drama, "Lady Gladys," was recently produced here for the first time in this country. It proved to be like much of Mr. Buchanan's work — conventional in plot and treatment and commonplace in dialogue, though constructed with a certain theatrical skill which might be expected of one of Mr. Buchanan's extensive experience. It is distinctly second-class and not likely to be received with favor. How curious it seems that Mr. Buchanan should once have been a kind of protégé of Carlyle!

The Scribners have moved into their fine new building on Fifth Avenue, very near Hudson Square. It is probable that before very long other publishers will follow their example, and he avenue become known as the place where the publishing business of the country is centered.

JOHN D. BARRY.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

AS the season of outdoors approaches there is a scattering of the clans, with a hubbub of exhibitions, closing exercises, and speeches. This we are in the midst of. The Academy of Fine Arts, the School of Design for Women, the Spring Garden Institute, the Industrial Art School, the Ogontz School, the University Architectural School, and the Drexel Institute have each put forth displays of the year's work in art, and in comparison with the recent shows of similar work in New York Philadelphia need fear no rival from that quarter. We are the home of industrial art, and our Academy is the oldest art institution in the land. Its records contain the names of the very best Americans working today at home and abroad.

These facts lend a peculiar significance to the movement now on foot for the artistic decoration of the council chambers in the city hall. This great marble building, which some Philadelphians are after twenty years just beginning to value, has reached the stage where it may be made internally a thing of beauty or forever disfigured. The cry is abroad for artistic decoration and for our native artists to do the work. The Academy of Fine Arts has secured the designs for the Oyer and Terminer Court Room in New York, recently exhibited there by the New York Municipal Art League, and will probably give a reception to the city authorities, where speeches will be made and the designs shown in furtherance of this excellent purpose. It would be highly beneficial were a Municipal Art League to grow up about the movement, and, as New York and Boston have already formed leagues, a community of interests between the three great Eastern cities would be a powerful lever in the movement for the dignified and lasting adornment of our public structures. Art will never gain a firm foothold among us — so say the artists — until it has some permanent hold upon society. The example of Boston, let me add, in engaging those notable Philadelphians, Abbey and Sargent, to do the designs for the Public Library, has been very helpful here.

I learn that Mr. George Morgan, one of the editors of the Record, has written a novel founded on the Revolution. Valley Forge and the near-by country is the ground on which it proceeds, and many of the characters of Washington's army are introduced. The title is In Contempt of Kings — "a Story of Whig, Tory, and the War of Liberty." Very few tales of the romantic incidents centering in Philadelphia at this time have been written, and there is a rich and untilled field for the writer of historic fiction in the records preserved in our Historical Society and in the traditions that linger in the neighborhood of the battlefields. Pemberton; or, a Hundred Years Ago, a book written by Mr. Peterson a generation since, showed, notwithstanding its defects, how much may be drawn from these valuable deposits of history. Mr. Morgan's novel is said by the most competent critics to be strong, stirring, and ably written, and a success is predicted for it.

The alumni of the University of Pennsylvania have just issued a large but very compact volume bound in paper, which gives the name and a brief biography of all who have attended the college since the beginning. The work is capably done, and will be of value to graduates here and elsewhere.

Mr. Francis Howard Williams, whose admirable and scholarly paper on that obscure mystic of early Germantown, John Kelpius, recently appeared in the New World, has issued some copies in pamphlet form. The essay indicates another and earlier source from which the storyteller may draw material of a fascinating kind. Mr. Williams knows his Germantown as a native only can, and he has succeeded in doing a thing which the local historians had long ago thought accomplished — fixing the site of the cave of Kelpius. He has upset the older traditions, and is undoubtedly right in his identification.

The article on Philadelphia in the June Harper's has aroused a breeze of criticism by opening the old question of Market Street as a social dividing line. It bids fair to become a line of conflict, but the only harm done is the galvanizing of a feeling that must soon die a natural death. Philadelphia is a city now, no longer a provincial town, and interest in such things lingers only in the most conservative quarters.

Mr. Owen Wister is again in the West seeking the material for his picturesque tales of adventure which appear in Harper's. Mr. Bok and Mr. Decatur Smith, Jr., have gone abroad in the interest of the Ladies' Home Journal. Miss Anne H. Wharton is making colonial researches in Boston.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

FICTION.

The Man in Black.

Mr. Stanley J. Weyman has already achieved the distinction of writing thoroughly good, original, and picturesque tales of adventure, not unworthy to be compared with those of Stevenson. This tale of life in France during the days of Richelieu is not so exciting as the others, but it is pure narrative, the action being uninterrupted by reflection or analysis, and the interest cumulative. It is the story of a lost child, subject first to a cruel showman, then to a crafty and equally cruel astrologer — a figure of considerable interest. The boy is accustomed to repeat the patter taught him in childhood, announcing himself as the lord of seventeen lordships in whose veins flows the blood of Roland and among whose ancestors are three marshals of France. Through his interference the poisonous potion prepared by the astrologer for the murder of a wife is given by her to the husband as a love potion. The husband dies, and the climax of the story comes in the trial scene of the wife for murder. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

How Like a Woman.

The willful heiress has not yet finished her wayward course through British fiction, and in this book Florence Maryatt leads her again from independent folly to complete womanliness. Of course it is love that works the miracle, and love for the artist son of a tradesman, who has, properly speaking, no right to aspire to the hand of a duke's granddaughter. She brings herself to accept her lover, hosiery shop and all; but, fortunately, in the nick of time it is discovered that two centuries back their families are the same. He too has "noble blood" in his veins, although history recordeth not how the various admixtures of other blood have affected it in the course of two centuries. His family change their name to the ancient one, theirs by right, and the Hon. Miss Saltoun marries the man she loves with no necessity of altering her name at all. The book is occasionally absurd and extravagant, especially in the first part, which relates the whims and selfishness of the heiress, but it will doubtless be found interesting by many. — Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

The Shen's Pigtail.

Anglo-Chinese life, as drawn by one of the "gentlemen in the customs," seems to be an alternation of deadly dullness with an excess of excitement, though there is no pretense here of presenting all its phases. The opening story, from which the book takes its name and which occupies about one third of the space, relates the mystery of a robbery accompanied by murder and the subsequent surprising explanation. In the course of the narrative the reader receives many hints about the ordinary course of justice, or injustice, among these Orientals. "A Little Chinese Party" gives a realistic and circumstantial account of a night's dissipation — Chinese dinner, dancing girls, general drunkenness, opium smoking, and all. This is doubtless trustworthy, but it is not art. "J's Last Horror" is a sketch of the last days of a drunkard, and it is psychologically curious and curiously sad. The volume is one of the Incognito Library, a series of small books by writers whose names are withheld for the present. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

His Broken Sword is a new edition of a book which attracted attention when it first appeared some years ago. It is a strong story not dependent for its interest on the thread of earnest purpose which runs through it. Its writer, Miss Winnie Louise Taylor, is personally better known in the West than in the East, but Edward Everett Hale writes of her in the preface: "She has been my nearest adviser and counselor in the business of management of prisons for many years. I never think of solving these [questions] without consulting her." The story is of one who learned to "give up his broken sword to Fate, the conqueror, with a manly and humble heart," and it is well worth the reading. — Stone & Kimball.

The first issue of the Autonym Library contains two stories by F. Marion Crawford, each good enough of its kind, but not of an enlivening quality. "The Upper Berth," which gives the title, is a grewsome ghost story of the sort to make one's hair stand on end and give a creepy feeling along the nerves. The other, "By the Waters of Paradise," is a love tale with an element of the supernatural. The make-up of this slim blue volume is dainty and tasteful. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

The Rich Miss Riddell, by Dorothea Gerard, though not a very brilliant story, is interesting enough to deserve a place among the handy books to be taken into the country when one goes on the summer vacation. Miss Riddell is very rich, very plain, awkward, and dresses to disadvantage, but she has good sense, is sensitive, and desires to be loved. Unfortunately her wealth is the obstacle to the only man she cares for and who truly loves her. The story tells how the attachment came about and what the result was. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

In Cadet Days Capt. Charles King hurries along his readers by his brisk manner and a series of climaxes. He shows the value of West Point discipline in developing obedience and loyalty. "Corporal Pops" is an almost impossible hero in manliness. He is entertaining, and well illustrates in his own career the life at West Point — a life which eight-hour laborers would much object to. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The handy editions which Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co. have issued of the ever-delightful Cranford, by Mrs. Gaskell, and M. Halévy's Abbé Constantin are models of their kind, and remind one of the best French work, with their clear type, good paper, and frequent and excellent illustrations. — Each, 50c.

Vol. XVIII of the cheap and excellent Mermaid series contains six Plays of Richard Steele, edited, with introduction and notes, by Mr. G. A. Aitken. It is emphatic commendation to say that it is fully up to the high standard of its predecessors. — Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

MINOR NOTICES.

Hours in a Library.

A new edition, with additions, of Mr. Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library is issued in three neat volumes. There is little critical writing in the English language that can be compared with these essays for keenness and breadth of view. Taking, for example, the papers on De Quincey, Macaulay, and Carlyle's Ethics, one may search far and wide before finding estimates more discriminating, penetrating, and withal judicial. Mr. Stephen's especial service has been, however, in rescuing the eighteenth century from the contempt into which it had undeservedly fallen among the critics, and his essays on Gray, Sterne, Dr. Johnson, Cowper, Defoe, Richardson, Pope, and Horace Walpole are among the most instructive and delightful. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.50.

A Lover's Diary.

Mr. Gilbert Parker is better known as a writer of stories than as a poet, but this small volume proves that he has claims to the latter name that must be acknowledged. The series of songs in sequence includes over a hundred sonnets, written in the illegitimate or Shakespearean form. Their import and character are well expressed by the title, and they bear the poet through many moods of rapture or of grief. The sequence is not so imperative that one needs to read the poems in order for their full enjoyment. Even if he does so, he gains little by any attempt to read a connected story into them, since they are naturally the expression of inward rather than outward experience. One might summarize them, perhaps, as, first, the outpourings of aspiration, joy, and gratitude in love, followed by separation on account of "a fatal feud," "no act of thine or mine;" then at the last, after a long time, after "the whole course of those years in which communion slept," came a day of understanding and yet of farewell. We quote the envoy, both because it is fairly representative of the poet and because it gives the conclusion:

When you and I have played the little hour,
  Have seen the tall subaltern Life to Death
  Yield up his sword; and, smiling, draw the breath,
The first long breath of freedom; when the flower
Of Recompense hath fluttered to our feet,
  As to an actor's; and the curtain down,
  We turn to face each other all alone —
Alone, we two, who never yet did meet,
Alone, and absolute, and free; O then,
  O then, most dear, how shall be told the tale?
Clasped hands, pressed lips, and so clasped hands again;
  No words; but as the proud wind fills the sail,
My love to yours shall reach, then one deep moan
Of joy; and then our infinite Alone.

— Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

The Quest of Heracles.

Judging Mr. Hugh McCulloch, Jr., by his main poems, one must call him a poet by choice rather than by necessity. To write poems is probably an avocation which he finds pleasant indeed but not absorbing — something that draws him aside from pursuits that he considers more serious and more important. In a certain sense this is true of most poets. There is only here and there one who wonders, as he talks in later years, at the "audacious obstinacy which had made him, when a youth, determine to be a poet and nothing but a poet." The Muse seems to have accepted her fate in this nineteenth century, and has revealed herself in most gracious mood to many who could steal only stray half hours for the worship of their divinity, and who sway our hearts today by thin but precious volumes. Still, she is a jealous goddess, shy to yield herself wholly to one who brings only a divided allegiance. There is much in Mr. McCulloch's poems to interest and to charm. It is wonderful how the fascination of old Grecian tales survives their countless reincarnations. Like the vision of Helen herself, they are always young and always beautiful. The search for the golden apples, the metamorphosis of Hermaphroditus and Salmacis, and the mad course of Phaeton draw the poet's fancy today still, and it is good to forget for their sake the more prosaic demands of the present. The last mentioned of these poems is especially good. Phaeton falls indeed "like a star that slips from heaven," but he pays his last breath gladly for the infinite rapture and exaltation. Fresher than these, perhaps, is the version of Antinous and his devotion to the emperor, in some respects the strongest poem of the collection. One writes gladly under his own favorite "image of Antinous" the closing lines:

The fair face
And sweet lips, telling us 'twixt sigh and smile
The memory and mystery of the Nile —
That tell us without need of speech or breath
The joy of life, the wondrous peace of death.

The remaining poems include four or five ballades, a group of five love sonnets, and nearly a score of others, from several of which one would like to quote. — Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

Junius Revealed.

All the world knows of the letters of Junius, which appeared in the London newspaper, the Public Advertiser, during the three years covering the last year of the administration of the Duke of Grafton and the first two years of that of Lord North, from 1769 to 1772. They numbered in all about two hundred. They denounced the inefficiency of the ministry of King

George III, and they made the high courtiers writhe under the lash of the anonymous author's biting sarcasm. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that had the writer been discovered at the time his life would, in all probability, have been forfeited. For one hundred and twenty-five years the "higher criticism" has been busy in assigning the authorship of these letters. At first, as in the later instance of the higher criticism of the Pentateuch, the critics disagreed. The consensus of opinion, however, long ago settled down upon Sir Philip Francis as the author. In this little book of less than a hundred pages the surviving grandson of the "great unknown," Mr. H. R. Francis, assembles the evidence and gives several folded pages of the author's handwriting, which set the question at rest. It turns out that the joint action of two female memories furnishes the perfect clew to that Junian labyrinth which had perplexed so many cæca vestigia. As to the signature used, it seems now pretty clear that Sir Francis Junius was, in one sense, a "redactor." He simply borrowed his nom de guerre of "Francis" Junius from a Dutch writer who had been secretly employed by Louis of Nassau to draw up a protest against the tyranny of the Inquisition, and of whom Motley has since written brilliantly. — Longmans, Green & Co.

Good City Government.

The Proceedings of the National Conference for Good City Government, held at Philadelphia last January, have been printed in a solid and handsome volume. The contents include a stenographic report of the proceedings at the Conference proper and of the speeches at the dinner and the public meeting in Association Hall; a condensed statement of the methods and objects of the various municipal reform organizations throughout the country; a bibliography, including both books and pamphlets; and the extremely valuable series of papers given before the Conference on the municipal governments of Boston, Brooklyn, Chicago, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York; on the possibilities of municipal government and the relations of municipal reform to civil service reform, to women, to education, and to the churches; and on such other important problems as the separation of elections, influence upon officials, and the choice of good officers. Taken altogether, the volume is quite an encyclopedia of reform in a direction where all agree it is very much needed. The sagacity and the patriotism of these reformers are equally in evidence upon every page. The task before them is great, but the reform appeals so obviously to the self-interest of all but a few that its progress will be sure and steady. — Philadelphia: Published by the Municipal League. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Sandow on Physical Training.

Capt. G. Mercer Adam has compiled and edited a handsome volume under the direction of the marvelous strong man of the day; it gives full details of Mr. Sandow's early life, when he was not remarkable for strength, of his development, and his public career. The biographical matter precedes an exposition of the system which Sandow practices, and which he thinks would very greatly increase the muscular power of any one following it. He believes in light dumb-bell and bar-bell exercises, and his scheme is given here. To the lay mind Mr. Sandow appears to be an extremely sensible athlete. The volume is adorned with many photographs of its subject and marginal cuts of an appropriate character. Altogether it is one of the finest books in the library of physical culture. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $3.50.

Poems, Sonnets, Songs, and Verses.

It is rather difficult to imagine why Messrs. Bell & Sons, the English publishers, should have found it worth their while to publish in so pretty an edition the poems by the author of The Professor and Other Poems. "Poems, sonnets, songs, and verses," all and each are equally destitute of originality and fire. Cleverness of rhythm and an unfortunately large vocabulary we do not wish to deny to the author, but these are hardly a wide recommendation. One quatrain we find worthy of quotation, for it seems to be an unintentional parody on Hood's verses:

We watched her breathing through the night,
Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
Kept heaving to and fro.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
Our fears our hopes belied;
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

In the anonymous author's version these lines read:

A watchful night, my ears hung on a cough,
I started up if I but heard her sigh;
I thought the patient never would doze off,
And when she slept that she was going to die.

It seems quite obvious the similarity must have been unintentional. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Courage.

The author of Youth, Charles Wagner, has more suggestions for young persons, which he embodies in a new book to which the title of Courage is given. It is along the same line as the previous volume, abounding in helps towards the possible realization of a working ideal. The author has studied the history of humanity and pondered the subjects which have to do with the issues of life. The great and profound questions to which every thoughtful person must sooner or later give attention receive from him the most earnest consideration. He treats them with the gravity as well as the candor which they demand. His conclusions, advice, and suggestions are wise, healthful, and stimulating, and are more especially applicable to young men. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. of London continue their now long line of admirable reprints of the best English literature of other days with Charles Lamb's Specimens of English Dramatic Poets, in two volumes, which Mr. I. Gollancz has edited, including the extracts from the Garrick plays, here incorporated with the earlier Specimens ($4.00); and with The Lyrics and Ballads of Sir Walter Scott, which the all-editing Mr. Andrew Lang has cared for. Mr. Lang will not do what Scott himself did not do — exaggerate the poetical value of this verse — but he properly reminds us that little poetry has had so much of a man behind it as Sir Walter's, and he well says: "Truly to enrich one day's blood with the very life blood of the past is the gift of Scott as well as of Homer. He storms our hearts with a reveillez from the dewy woods where the hart has been tracked; he makes us art and part with outlaws 'where mavis and merle are singing;' he enlists us in a company of cavaliers who fight for the king; he harps for us in hall among fair ladies. . . . The border was his inspiration; the clear west wind singing over the purple hills was the accompaniment of his lyre." — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

The marks of a skilled hand are noticeable in the little red-edged and neatly bound handbook, The Pilgrim Pastor's Manual, by George M. Boynton, which, with its round edges, slips easily into the pocket. Forms of words very largely adapted from the Book of Books and available for the special services which pastors are statedly called to perform are here set forth in type that is welcome to the eyes. While it is especially designed for ministers of the Congregational phase of the Christian faith and polity, almost any preacher of the gospel and consoler of his fellow men will find it valuable. The treasures of the past are set forth in the forms most needed at the present time. We recommend it on its literary as well as its typographic side. It has an index of Scripture texts used. — Cong. S. S. & Pub. Co. $1.00.

Three recent additions to the comely Muses' Library, issued in London by Laurence & Bullen, and imported by Charles Scribner's Sons, are The Poems of William Blake, edited, with a full introduction, by W. B. Yeats; and The Poems of William Browne of Tavistock, in two volumes, which Mr. Gordon Gardiner has edited and Mr. A. H. Bullen has furnished the introduction to. "Britannia's Pastorals," "The Shepherd's Pipe," and "The Inner Temple Masque" fill most of the pages, but the collection of the poems of this disciple of Spenser and predecessor of Cowper in the description of country life is complete. — $1.75 per volume.

Parts IV, V, and VI of The Book of the Fair take one through a large part of the central building in point of interest of the Chicago Exposition — that devoted to Manufactures and Liberal Arts. Besides the many views of the more remarkable exhibits, the exterior of the wonderful structures and the enchanting grounds about them are pictured from many points. This is indeed the Book of the Fair. — The Bancroft Co. Each, $1.00.

The first two volumes we have received of the charming Temple Shakespeare are Two Gentlemen of Verona and The Merry Wives of Windsor. Mr. Gollancz shows great felicity as an editor in his prefaces, notes, and glossaries, and the preliminary illustrations and extracts to each volume. An abundant use of red letters, a good-sized type, and excellent paper and binding make this a model Shakespeare, one volume to a play. — Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

PERIODICALS.

These startling yellow covers, with their vivid silhouette as decoration, are a fitting signpost to the startling contents of the Yellow Book, the new English quarterly started by the advanced guard of English artists and literary men, who mean to make this magazine their théâtre libre. Mr. Henry James has joined forces, and the opening story here is his clever sketch "The Death of the Lion." As a satire on English society and lion-hunting the story is excellent and extremely entertaining. The cleverest thing in the collection is a dialogue in two parts, by Fred. M. Stimson, "The Dedication;" for the first act of a comedy "The Fool's Hour," by John Oliver Hobbes and George Moore, is, although full of wit, too slightly outlined to command much attention. Mr. Max Beerbohm has a strained article, full of mannerisms but not destitute of ability, on "The Defense of Cosmetics." Herbert Crackenthorpe's "Modern Melodrama" and Ella D'Arcy's "Irremediable" are wanting in nature and have too many of the earmarks of the English fin de siècle school. The poems are none of them remarkable. The illustrations, including two clever sketches, effective but ill-drawn from the anatomical point of view, by Sir Frederick Leighton, are interesting in their wild mannerisms and revolt from the French school. Aubrey Beardsley has four startling conventionalized figures, brilliantly clever. Two portraits by Will Rothenstein are the most important of the illustrations, although Joseph Pennell's "Le Puy en Velay" and "The Reflected Faun," by Laurence Housman, are worthy of notice.

On the whole, though the trail of the serpent, affectation, pervades the Yellow Book, as it does all the productions of the recent English school in art, in poetry, and in letters, this first number is well worth reading, and the second number will be awaited with interest. One essay in the volume is so sane, normal, and almost conventional in the best sense that we wonder how it found its way into the Yellow Book. "Reticence in Literature," by Arthur Waugh, is an article which one longs to see "read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested" by all the modern school who have taken the Yellow Book as their own especial mode of utterance, and the outside world can only be diverted by seeing the disease and its antidote presented in the same volume.—London: Elkin Mathews & John Lane. Boston: Copeland & Day. $1.50.

The New World is now alone in the American field as a free review of religion, ethics and theology, bound by no sect or denomination; one can depend upon it for the untrammeled statements of scholars and investigators. The right proportion of subjects is well observed in the June issue. Prof. H. Holtzmann of the University of Strassburg, writing of "Baur's New Testament Criticism in the Light of the Present," shows that the great master of Tübingen has brought the original condition of primitive Christianity into the light of historical probabilities, making common ground for historians and theologians. "He was a pioneer in the best sense of the word." Mr. F. H. Williams of Philadelphia writes charmingly of "John Kelpius, Pietist," whose work today is carried forward by the Seventh Day Baptists. Mr. Edward Porritt surveys with impartiality and clear insight "The Movement for Religious Equality in England," incidentally showing how the political church could, if it had the proper mind and heart, hold its own for centuries yet to come. Prof. Frank C. Porter of Yale puts into the hands of practical preachers a paper which shows how Biblical religion and history can help in the settlement of each other's questions. "The Episcopalian Polity" is discussed by Rev. Dr. Kirkus, who gives some food for thought to Congregationalists while showing also how the Episcopalians can become the greatest ecclesiastical power in the United States. President Cone discusses luminously the "Pauline Teaching of the Person of Christ." R. A. Holland, Jr., of St. Louis furnishes the strong philosophical paper, which one may always look for in every issue of this review; in "The Significance of Pessimism" he shows that, as a final theory of life, it is one-sided and false, but that any optimistic theory which aims at rationality and completeness must emphasize and retain the element of pessimism. With Yankee common sense N. P. Gilman, in discussing "Democracy and the Poet," shows that no poetical or sentimental reconstruction of society can strike against science or nature without being demolished; in Bryant, Whittier, and Lowell we see what "the poetic mind and the Democratic faith produce when joined in natural union." A delightful literary study is that of the "Book of Job," by Dr. Bernhard Duhm of Basel. The fifty pages or more of book reviews cannot, we think, be matched for ability, grasp, and fairness by any other review in this country; at least two of them, by Profs. H. P. Forbes and T. K. Cheyne, are significant and suggestive beyond the information given and judgments delivered.

In the June Forum Hon. J. S. Morton, the able secretary of agriculture, utters many pungent truths in his article on "Farmers, Fallacies, and Furrows;" Mr. E. L. Godkin asks, "Who Will Pay the Bills of Socialism?" and echo answers, Who? Hon. C. D. Wright summarizes "The Census of Sex, Marriage, and Divorce;" Dr. E. R. L. Gould tells "How Baltimore Banished Tramps and Helped the Idle"—an example to all our cities. Woman suffrage, Romanism and the schools, taxation of church property, scholarships and fellowships in college, silver coinage, missions in India, and explorations in the Antarctic are the other topics of the issue.

The most attractive matter in the Magazine of Art for June from a literary point of view is "The Authentic Portraits of Robert Burns: a Sketch," by the late J. M. Gray; the illustrations, some of which give rare portraits of the peasant bard, are nine in number. Albert Moore's "The Fan" is an appropriate frontispiece for hot weather; the etching of the issue is "Great Yarmouth," by Percy Robertson. Mr. Spielmann's first article on "The Royal Academy, 1894," has eight studies by Sir F. Leighton. The second part of "Little Roubillac," by Mr. Dobson; "Emmanuel Hospital, Westminster," by the Rev. W. J. Loftie; and "Wild Nature in London," as seen by an animal painter, are other most important illustrated articles.

The Arena for June presents a smaller number than usual of sensible articles and a larger assortment of crude essays by unbalanced thinkers of various descriptions, social, financial, and otherwise. The Hon. John Davis, M.C., for instance, informs us that "paper, and not coin, is the saviour and developer of nations. In time of war it is the only resource of the people, and in time of peace the best device known to man." As a fit companion to this folly we have an article by Walter Blackburn Harte on "The Back Bay: Boston's Throne of Wealth," the tone of which may be inferred from this sentence about the churches in that quarter, "These churches, as much as the mansions which surround them, are built with blood money, at the cost of blighted human lives and human souls." The editor of the Arena, we observe, calls for aid to the "Union for Practical Progress," which is to teach men "to live the Golden Rule." Mr. Flower may be well assured that he is doing more to increase hatred and dissension among men by printing such articles as Mr. Harte's—thoroughly false as it is in its representation of the main facts of the situation—than he can undo by years of repentance for such "malignant reform," in Mr. E. P. Whipple's phrase.

The July number of the Chautauquan magazine will be a notable one in the history of that periodical and in the development of the great Chautauqua movement, of which it is the official organ. The number for July will be a distinctively summer issue. It will contain the complete detailed programme of the Chautauqua Assembly which is held at Chautauqua Lake in Western New York during July and August, giving the list of lecturers, preachers, singers, and musicians who will take part in the programme, besides the general programme of fifty other Chautauqua Assemblies which will be held during the summer from one end of the country to the other.

The Portfolio for May is a choice monograph on Dante Gabriel Rossetti. As we have elsewhere in this issue spoken at length of Mrs. Wood's book on the Pre-Raphaelite movement, we can only say here that Mr. F. G. Stephens' volume, with its admirable plates and illustrations, is one of the very best treatments of Rossetti's work as an artist that are now to be found.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Messrs. Flood & Vincent, Meadville, Penn., publishers of the Chautauqua text-books, announce the following volumes, which will constitute the Chautauqua course of reading for the autumn and winter of 1894–95: The Growth of the English Nation, by Profs. Katharine Coman and Elizabeth Kendall of Wellesley College; Europe in the Nineteenth Century, by Prof. H. P. Judson of the University of Chicago; Renaissance and Modern Art, by Prof. William Goodyear of the Brooklyn Institute; From Chaucer to Tennyson, by Prof. Henry A. Beers of Yale University; Walks and Talks in the Geological Field, by the late Prof. Alexander Winchell of the University of Michigan.

—The Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens, author of Sources of the Constitution of the United States, the book now attracting attention as an answer to Mr. Douglas Campbell, is an American, and not an Englishman, as some of the reviewers make out. He is a native of Boston and rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, the old church of Washington and Franklin.

—Edward Jackson Lowell, a distant cousin of James Russell Lowell, and author of The Eve of the French Revolution, died in Boston, May 11, at the age of forty-nine.

— The author of Mr. Bailey-Martin, one of the books that is being much read and talked about just now, and which deserves its reputation, is Mr. Percy White, the editor of Public Opinion. He is the son of the late Dr. Charles White, who carried on a private school for many years at Hove. Mr. White's first intention was also to follow a scholastic career, but after some time spent as professor of English language and literature in a French college he drifted into journalism. For the last eight years he has edited Public Opinion, which has prospered exceedingly under his direction. During that time he has been a very busy leader-writer, his contribution of leaders to the press amounting to thirteen hundred. Short stories and reviews from his pen have also appeared from time to time in the magazines. Mr. Bailey-Martin, his first novel, has had a distinct success, but its author believes it has been a good deal misunderstood. He intended his central character to be something more than a snob, in fact, a sort of up-to-date cad and scamp into the bargain. It is interesting to note that it was Marie Bashkirtseff's Memoirs, which Mr. White once reviewed, that suggested him. He is a very dissimilar person, of course, but the Frenchwoman is popularly believed to have meant her self-revelations to be a valuable human document, and Mr. Bailey-Martin had the same ambition as an autobiographist. — The Bookman.

— The Japan Weekly Mail of March 17 has a long and curious article on "Foreign Literature in Japanese Garb." The task of presenting European and American books to Japanese readers is not one of translation merely, but of trans-nationalization, so to speak. Japanese views of life are so different from ours that a literal translation would often be incomprehensible except to Japanese who have traveled. Much ingenuity, sometimes perverse, sometimes praiseworthy, has been shown in overcoming this difficulty. Under the first head comes an old version of the "Merchant of Venice" (known in Japan as "Nin-niku saiban," or the human flesh trial at law), in which Shylock is a palpable Aino, Portia a smirking music girl, Jessica a Miyanoshita teahouse girl to the life, and so on. Ten years ago English novels were the first favorites; today Russian and German books have a larger sale, Tolstoï being the most admired of all Western writers of fiction. Goethe's Sorrows of Werther is a great favorite and his Reinecke Fuchs is also popular, although "the Japanese lose much of the exquisite humor of this satire in their sympathy with the woes of the maltreated wolf." Schiller's Robbers has not proved popular. Molière's L'Avare has given general pleasure, while of Zola's books only one has been translated. Disraeli's Coningsby did not succeed, nor did Ivanhoe, partly owing to inadequate translation. Jerrold's Curtain Lectures seems to have struck a responsive chord. Robinson Crusoe also took well. Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," Stanley's Darkest Africa, and Mrs. Burnett's Little Lord Fauntleroy are among recent successful productions. — New York Evening Post.

— The Russian painter, Verestchagin, has written a novel, to which he gives the title The War Correspondent, in which capacity, we believe, the author at one time figured. An English translation of the story is announced, for which Mr. Poultney Bigelow has written an introduction.

— Capt. Alfred Mahan of the United States cruiser Chicago seems to be the best-dined man of our day. One of the last feasts in his honor was given by the English publishers of his works, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., in the course of which Mr. Marston announced that the French translation of Captain Mahan's History of Sea Power had been completed, and that the German translation was progressing rapidly. In his own speech the captain said that he was engaged in the preparation of a third section of his naval history reaching to 1815 and covering the career of Lord Nelson.

— Harper & Brothers will publish shortly Carlotta's Intended, and Other Tales, by Ruth McEnery Stuart, and a volume of short stories by Charles Egbert Craddock, entitled The Phantoms of the Footbridge.

— The Fleming H. Revell Co. have just ready the first and second volumes of the new Present-Day Primers, namely: Early Church History: a Sketch of the First Four Centuries, by J. V. Bartlet, lecturer on church history in Oxford; and The Printed English Bible, by Richard Lovett.

— Rev. Dr. Edward Bright, editor of the Examiner, the leading Baptist newspaper in the United States, died at his home in New York City on May 17, aged eighty-six years. For almost half a century he had been prominently identified with Baptist interests in America.

— The Messrs. Putnam will begin in July the publication of the Hudson Library, a new fiction series of bi-monthly issues. The initial volume will be Love and Shawl-Straps, by Annette L. Noble. They have also in press Eyes Like the Sea, by Maurice Jókai, and The Story of South Africa, by George M. Theal.

— A bronze tablet to the memory of E. P. Roe, the novelist, was unveiled at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, May 29. The tablet was procured by public subscription and is placed in a natural wall of rock in the E. P. Roe Memorial Park. The Roe family was represented by two of the novelist's sons, Eltinge and Murray Roe. The orator of the day was the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott of Brooklyn. The other speakers were Hamilton Gibson, the Rev. Dr. Teal of Elizabeth, N. J., and Mr. Frank Dodd of Dodd, Mead & Co.

— Macmillan & Co. have just issued The Natural History of the Christian Religion, a study of Christian teaching as developed from Judaism and converted into dogma, by Rev. William Mackintosh; The Diary of a Journey Across Tibet, by Capt. Hamilton Bowers; The Protected Princes of India, a short account of India under "home rule," by William Lee Warner; Ethics of Citizenship, by Prof. John McCunn of University College, Liverpool; and The Aged Poor in England and Wales, by Charles Booth.

— A dispatch from Florence announces that the furniture and other portable property of "Ouida" (Louise de la Ramée) has been sold there at auction, the Americans and English being the best buyers. The library was divided and sold in small lots. Many manuscripts were purchased at high prices by the bidders.

— The Cassell Publishing Co. will publish shortly The Unpublished Letters of Count Cavour to Madame Circourt, translated by A. J. Butler. With her husband she belonged to the Liberal-Catholic school of Lacordaire and Montalembert, but her friends were of all schools in politics and religion. Her name appears in the memoirs of Mme. Swetchine, Mme. Mohl, and others who, like herself, knew how to bring together all sorts of persons on the common ground of intellectual eminence.

— John D. Wattles & Co., Philadelphia, have just ready Studies in Oriental Social Life, by H. Clay Trumbull.

— Prof. W. D. Whitney of Yale College died at New Haven, June 7. He was at one time president of the American Oriental Society and was the first president of the American Philological Association. He held membership in many other learned bodies. He ranked as one of the foremost Sanskrit scholars of his time, and many have termed him the leading philologist in America. He superintended the preparation of the Century Dictionary. William Dwight Whitney was born in Northampton, Mass., in 1827, and graduated from Williams College in 1845. He first engaged in banking at Northampton, and then devoted his leisure to the study of languages, particularly Sanskrit. These studies were continued later at Yale and in Europe. In 1854 he became professor of Sanskrit at Yale, and in 1870 assumed the chair of comparative philology.

— It is reported that since her marriage Olive Schreiner calls herself Mrs. Olive Schreiner, and that to restore the equilibrium her husband has changed his own name by adding hers to it, and is now, according to his visiting cards, Mr. Cronwright Schreiner.

— Justin McCarthy's new novel, Red Diamonds; A Daughter of Music, by G. Colmore; and Creatures of Other Days, by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson, author of Extinct Monsters, are among the latest publications of D. Appleton & Co.

— The Great Eastern Railway Company of England publish a small guidebook of no little literary interest, called Holidays in England, via the Cathedral Route, the Tennyson and Dickens Country, Homes of the Pilgrim Fathers. — H. J. Ketchum, agent, 379 Broadway, New York.

— The Cassell Publishing Co. announce as the latest number in their Unknown Library, Chaperoned: a Brief Page from a Summer Romance. Owing to the repeated demands for an edition of The Heavenly Twins, by Sarah Grand, in paper binding, they issue a special edition, limited to fifty thousand copies, in Cassell's Sunshine series of choice copyright fiction by popular American and foreign authors.

— E. P. Dutton & Co. have in press An Easter Vacation, a story by Moira O'Neill, and Everybody's Fairy Godmother, by Dorothy Quigley.

— Brentano's announce the publication during July of the volume of short stories from the German which won the prize in their competition for translations. The successful competitor was Miss Constance Stewart Copeland of Sparkill, New York. The volume will be entitled A Divided Heart, and will contain besides the story of that name two shorter tales, viz., "Rothenburg on the Tauber" and "Minka," all from the pen of Paul Heyse.

— MM. Paul Bourget, the novelist, and Albert Sorel, the historian, were elected May 31 as members of the Academy, to fill the vacancies caused by the death of MM. Ducamp and Taine. No votes were cast for M. Zola.

—The Fleming H. Revell Company will issue about June 20 a new book by Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., entitled The Church and the Kingdom.

—Harper & Brothers have lately published From the Easy Chair, third series, by George William Curtis, with portrait; Pastime Stories, by Thomas Nelson Page, with illustrations by A. B. Frost; A Traveler from Altruria and A Likely Story, a farce, by William Dean Howells; Literary and Social Silhouettes, by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen, with portrait; A Prodigal in Love, a novel, by Emma Wolf; and The Potter's Thumb, a novel, by Flora Annie Steel.

—Roberts Brothers have just ready two new books—The Wedding Garment, by Louis Pendleton, a story of life after death, relating the experiences of a young man awakening after earthly death to an existence in the other world, in an intermediate region between heaven and hell; and The Dancing Faun, by Florence Farr, a story with an original motif and dramatic action.

—It was the intention of the late M. Taine to collect and publish his papers which have appeared since the Nouveaux Essais were put forth, and his literary executors have the work in hand. The book will include essays on various subjects of historical and critical interest, and there are special studies of Schopenhauer, Bain, Herbert Spencer, George Sand, and Sainte-Beuve.

—The Hon. Roden Noel, the well-known poet, died May 26. He was the younger son of the Earl of Gainsborough, and at an early age devoted himself to poetry. His works include: A Little Child's Monument, Beatrice, The Red Flag, Livingstone in Africa, The House of Ravensburg, Songs of the Heights and Depths, A Modern Faust, and a pathetic little pamphlet called Poor People's Christmas. He was extremely popular in literary circles, and had a ready appreciation of the works of others. From time to time he contributed notable articles to the reviews.

—The works of Mr. R. L. Stevenson have hitherto been issued by various publishers, and are not to be had in any uniform or complete edition. This deficiency will now be supplied by the issue of his entire works in a new and uniform edition, limited to 1,000 copies and of the choicest possible style and appearance. This is to be called the Edinburgh edition, and is to be printed by the Constables on paper especially manufactured for the purpose and from a new font of type, with the view of making it an example of the very best that can be done in the way of book production in Scotland at the present date. The edition will include several juvenilia and other papers, both tales and travels, which have not hitherto been reprinted from the periodicals in which they appeared and are not likely to be reprinted in any other form. The edition will consist of twenty volumes, divided in groups according to their subject-matter, namely, essays and miscellanies, travels and excursions, tales and fantasies, romances, history and biography, poems and ballads. The first volume will probably be published in October, and will be followed by others at intervals of about a month. The title-page will bear the names of all the publishers interested, viz., Longmans & Co., Cassell & Co., Seeley & Co., and Chatto & Windus, the last named firm undertaking the distribution of the edition to subscribers. Three hundred copies of the edition will be reserved for the American market.

—Longmans, Green & Co.'s recent publications include The History of Trade Unionism, by Sidney and Beatrice Webb; On the Wallaby; or, Through the East and Across Australia, by Guy Boothby; Speeches and Addresses of Edward Henry, XVth Earl of Derby, K.G., selected and edited by Sir T. H. Sanderson, K.C.B., and E. S. Roscoe, with a prefatory memoir by W. E. H. Lecky; Recollections of Old Country Life, Social, Political, Sporting, and Agricultural, by J. K. Fowler; Woman's New Opportunity: an Address, by Daniel Greenleaf Thompson; Christopher Columbus, and the Participation of the Jews in the Spanish and Portuguese Discoveries, by Dr. M. Kayserling; The Primitive Church and the See of Peter, by the Rev. Luke Rivington, M.A.; Christianity and the Roman Government: a Study in Imperial Administration, by E. J. Hardy, M.A.; Verba Verbi Dei: the Words of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, harmonized by the author of Charles Lowder; Speculum Sacerdotum; or, The Divine Model of the Priestly Life, by the Rev. W. C. E. Newbolt, M.A.; The Amateur Telescopist's Hand-book, by Frank M. Gibson, Ph.D., LL.B.; Micro-Organisms in Water, by Dr. and Mrs. Percy Frankland, Ph.D.; and Papers and Notes on the Glacial Geology of Great Britain and Ireland, by the late Henry Carvill Lewis, M.A., F.G.S.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons add to their announcements for the summer season as follows: In the Autonym Library, Mad Sir Uchtred, by S. R. Crockett; in the Incognito Library, The Honorable Stanbury and Others, by Two, and Helen, by Vocs. They will begin in July the publication, under the title of the Hudson Library, of a new series of fiction. The July volume will be Love and Shawl-Straps, by Annette L. Noble. Eyes Like the Sea, which they have in press, is the latest work of the veteran Hungarian author, Maurice Jókai. No Enemy: the Story of a Gentleman Tramp, by Elbert G. Hubbard, has a certain timeliness. On and Off the Saddle: Characteristic Sights and Scenes from the Great Northwest to the Antilles, is a series of travel sketches by a well-known New Yorker, who uses for his volume the pseudonym of Lispenard Rutgers. In the Story of the Nations series the next volume will be The Story of South Africa.

—The March Library Bulletin of Cornell University records the gift of a remarkably rich and extensive Spinoza collection, thought to be the largest in existence, from ex-President White; some two hundred volumes of works on Romance philology from Professor Crane; and such additions to Prof. Willard Fiske's Dante collection as to bring it up to nearly three thousand volumes and to constitute it "undoubtedly the richest outside of Italy." The library has just issued a catalogue of Professor Fiske's Rhæto-Romanic (Romaunsch) collection, gathered rapidly by the donor three years ago in the Tyrol. It fills thirty-two pages in double columns, and the collection, which has a curious linguistic interest, probably has no rival in completeness.—Evening Post.

—To Messrs. Henry Holt & Co.'s pretty series of 16mos, which includes The Prisoner of Zenda, they are about to add a collection of Quaker Idyls, by Mrs. S. M. H. Gardner.

—It is the generous practice of young authors to present copies of their works to distinguished persons. Such copies are generally acknowledged, but it would appear that they are seldom read. The fourpenny box receives them with their leaves uncut, and the inscriptions, as was lately shown in these columns, are often a source of amusement to an irreverent and satirical public, that prefers criticising to buying. Occasionally recipients retain complimentary volumes, though not for reading purposes. A writer in Scribner's for June reminds us that when the library of the late Guy de Maupassant came to be examined "almost all the modern books in it were gifts from the authors of them, and that their leaves were almost in every instance uncut." The explanation is not that Guy de Maupassant did not care for modern works, but that he had no time to read them. The older books he had, of course, read before beginning to produce on his own account. Dr. Johnson's theory that a man of letters ought to have all his important reading done by five and twenty is probably a sound one. After that age the chances are that he will read little save in the way of business. The fact might profitably be borne in mind by those intending to bestow their works upon busy celebrities. Mr. Gladstone, indeed, reads everything, but, as Mr. Lang observes, Mr. Gladstone is a sprinter. Few men can read a novel in thirty-five minutes, and fewer still are willing to attempt the feat.—Publishers' Circular.

—We frequently hear that the magazines are controlled by cliques and that contributions from beginners receive no attention. That is not the opinion of Mr. Frank H. Scott, president of the Century Co. Last year, according to Mr. Scott, the Century published 396 articles by 324 writers, many of whom were new hands. It is interesting to note, too, that the editors of the Pall Mall Magazine make a similar statement. During the last twelve months over 2,200 contributions were received at 18 Charing Cross Road and considered on their merits. Of course only a small proportion could be accepted, and by a law of nature the authors of the rejected papers were disappointed, angry, and convinced that they were unjustly treated. Youthful contributors too often forget the limited space available in periodicals. The editors of the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary, and Fortnightly receive in the course of a year some 2,000 articles apiece, and out of the total of 6,000 not more than 400 can be used. Under such circumstances, how is every one to be pleased?—Publishers' Circular.

—The design of John L. Pearson, a member of the Royal Academy, for the Tennyson memorial has been accepted by the English committee. The memorial is to be an Ionic cross thirty-four feet high, and will be called the Tennyson Beacon. The cross will bear an inscription showing that it was erected by the friends of Tennyson in England and America. The beacon will occupy a commanding position, 716 feet above high water, near Farringford, the home of the laureate, at Freshwater, Isle of Wight. It will be visible for many miles landward and seaward.

—Gen. Matthew M. Trumbull died in Chicago, May 9, aged sixty-eight. He wrote chiefly under the pen-name "Wheelbarrow."

—The Queen has conferred a knighthood upon Mr. T. Wemyss Reid, editor of the Speaker and general manager to the publishing house of Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.

— The Oriental Club of Philadelphia has just issued a volume of the papers which have been read at its sessions during the six successful years of its existence. The club is quite unique in being formed wholly of the scholars of Philadelphia who devote themselves to Oriental learning. There have been thirty-two members, all Philadelphians except one — Professor Haupt of Johns Hopkins University. The work done has been thorough and far-reaching, as a list of the contributors to this first publication will show. This includes: Professors Easton, Jastrow, Brinton, Hilprecht, and Dr. Sarah Y. Stevenson of the University of Pennsylvania; Professors Barton, E. W. Hopkins, and Collitz of Bryn Mawr College; Prof. W. Max Müller, Dr. Marcus Jastrow, Mr. Meyer Sulzhoger, Mr. Talcott Williams, and Rev. H. Clay Trumbull.

— The removal of the old firm of D. Appleton & Co. from Nos. 1, 3, and 5 Bond Street to No. 72 Fifth Avenue, where they will occupy the new building at the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirteenth Street, is an interesting illustration of the uptown movement on Manhattan Island. When the founder of this house, Daniel Appleton, came to New York from Boston, in 1825, he began the importation of English books in connection with other business in Exchange Place. The book business was in the charge of his oldest son, William Henry Appleton, the present head of the firm, who has well earned his title as the Nestor of American publishers, occupying as he does in this country the place held by the late John Murray in England. After a short stay in Exchange Place Daniel Appleton removed to Clinton Hall, Beekman Street, and devoted himself entirely to the importation and sale of books. In 1835 William H. Appleton was sent to London, where he founded an agency. The first publishing venture of the firm was a little 32mo book called Daily Crumbs from the Master's Table, issued in 1831. In January, 1838, William H. Appleton was taken into partnership, and the firm removed to No. 200 Broadway. In 1848 Daniel Appleton retired, and W. H. Appleton formed a partnership with his brother, John Adams Appleton. Three other sons subsequently became partners — Daniel Sidney, George Swett, and Samuel Francis. The business was removed from No. 200 Broadway to the old Society Library Building at Broadway and Leonard Street. The next removal of the firm was to Nos. 443–445 Broadway. Later a building was erected at No. 94 Grand Street, corner of Greene, and occupied for some years, until a change was made to Nos. 549–551 Broadway. About 1880 Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. removed to Nos. 1, 3, and 5 Bond Street. Each one of these periods has witnessed some increase and development. In 1853 a printing office and bindery were established in Franklin Street, but the business grew so large that the manufacturing department was removed to Brooklyn, and buildings were erected which cover a square. There are five members of the firm — William H. Appleton, William W. Appleton, Daniel Appleton, Edward Dale Appleton, and D. Sidney Appleton.

— The memorial to Phillips Brooks has been placed in the wall along the south aisle of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. It symbolizes the command, "Feed my sheep." The Archbishop of Canterbury composed the Latin quatrain inscribed underneath.

— Prof. William Roscher, the German political economist, died at Leipzig on June 4. He was born at Hannover on October 21, 1817, and was for many years professor of economics in Berlin and Leipzig. Among his works are; Thoughts upon Socialism and Communism, History of Political Economy in England in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries, and History of National Economy in Germany.

— Mr. J. M. Barrie has been seriously ill of late, but is recovering. Sir John Seeley is also on the sick list, but the latest reports are favorable.

— One of the unfinished plans of the late Prof. Robertson Smith was a dictionary of the Bible, which was to be brought out by the Messrs. Black of Edinburgh. Canon Cheyne has now undertaken to edit the work.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Roger Williams, the Pioneer of Religious Liberty. By Oscar S. Straus. The Century Co. $1.25

Oliver Cromwell. A History, comprising a Narrative of His Life, etc. By Samuel Harden Church. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00

Newton Booth, of California. His Speeches and Addresses. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Lauren E. Crane. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

Maximilian and Carlotta. A Story of Imperialism. By John M. Taylor. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

The Life of John Paterson, Major-General in the Revolutionary Army. By Thomas Egleston, LL.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

Books for Young People.

The Jungle Book. By Rudyard Kipling. Illustrated. The Century Co. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

The Aged Poor in England and Wales. Condition. By Charles Booth. Macmillan & Co. $3.50

Ethics of Citizenship. By John Maccunn, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Educational.

Select Specimens of the Great French Writers. In the 17th, 18th, and 19th Centuries. Edited by G. Eugene Fasnacht. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

A Grammar School Geography. By John N. Tilden, A.M. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.25

Essays and Sketches.

From the Easy Chair. By George William Curtis. Third Series. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Studies in Mediæval Life and Literature. By Edward Tompkins McLaughlin. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

The Garden that I Love. By Alfred Austin. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Brief for Plaintiff. Bacon vs. Shakespeare. By Edwin Reed. $1.50

Literary and Social Silhouettes. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Harper & Brothers.

The Lowell Lectures on The Ascent of Man. By Henry Drummond. James Pott & Co. $2.00

The Burden of Ill-Health. How to Bear It. By Leila Lyon Topping. E. P. Dutton & Co. 50c.

Man's Place in Nature. Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Acting and Actors; Elocution and Elocutionists. By Alfred Ayres. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Fiction.

In the China Sea. By Seward W. Hopkins. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

A Common Mistake. By Jeanne M. Howell. The Merriam Co. 50c.

The Dancing Faun. By Florence Farr. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

The New Timothy. By William M. Baker. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Girl from Macoupin. By H. E. Scott. Laird & Lee. 25c.

Under the Second Renaissance. By Florence Traill. Chas. Wells Moulton. $1.00

Against Odds. By Lawrence L. Lynch. Rand, McNally & Co. 30c.

Belle-Plante and Cornelius. By Claude Tillier. Trans. by B. R. Tucker. The Merriam Co. $1.25

A Prodigal in Love. A Novel. By Emma Wolf. Harper & Brothers.

The Potter's Thumb. A Novel. By Flora Annie Steel. Harper & Brothers.

The Wedding Garment. A Tale of the Life to Come. By Louis Pendleton. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Pharais. A Romance of the Isles. By Fiona Macleod. Derby, England: Frank Murray. 5s.

Claudia Hyde. A Novel. By Frances Courtenay Baylor. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

A Suburban Pastoral, and Other Tales. By Henry A. Beers. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

Old Celtic Romances. Trans. from the Gaelic by P. W. Joyce. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

An Initial Experience, and Other Stories. Edited by Capt. Charles King. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Pastime Stories. By Thomas Nelson Page. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

A Traveler from Altruria. By W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

A Brighton Night, also A Brooklyn Bachelor. By Margaret Lee. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

Divorce; or, Faithful and Unfaithful. By Margaret Lee. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

Esther Waters. A Novel. By George Moore. Charles H. Sergel Co. 50c.

A Flower of France. By Marah Ellis Ryan. Rand, McNally & Co.

History.

The Empire of the Tsars and the Russians. By Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu. Part II, The Institutions. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3 00

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

A Likely Story. A Farce. By W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

A Gauntlet. Being the Norwegian Drama, En Hanske. By Bjornstjerne Bjornson. Tr. by Osman Edwards. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50

Old English Ballads. Selected and edited by Francis B. Gummere. Ginn & Co. $1.35

The Mouse-Trap. A Farce. By W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Theatricals. Two Comedies: Tenants; Disengaged. By Henry James. Harper & Brothers.

Balder the Poet, and Other Verses. By George Herbert Stockbridge. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Religion and Theology.

The Life and Teachings of Jesus. By Arthur Kenyon Rogers. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians. By James Denney, B.D. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Discipleship: the Scheme of Christianity. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Christian Ministry: its Present Claim and Attraction. By Theodore C. Pease. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ. By the Discoverer of the Manuscript, Nicolas Notovitch. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

Christianity Practically Applied. In two volumes. The General Conference; The Section Conference. The Baker & Taylor Co. $4.00

Travel and Observation.

My Summer in a Mormon Village. By Florence A. Merriam. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

The Gypsy Road. A Journey from Krakow to Coblentz. By Grenville A. J. Cole. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

On the Wallaby; or, Through the East and Across Australia. By Guy Boothby. Illustrated. Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00

My Paris Note-Book. By the author of "An Englishman in Paris." J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

In and Out of Three Normandy Inns. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

Good Style and Small Expense. By Ben Holt. Baker & Taylor Co. 50c.

Miscellaneous.

The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine. Nov., 1893–Apr., 1894. The Century Co. $3.00

Yachting. By Sir Edward Sullivan, Lord Brassey, and others. In two volumes. Illustrated. Little, Brown & Co. $7.00

Guillaume II, a Londres et l'Union Franco-Russe. Par Gaston Routier. Paris: H. Le Soudier.

The Navigator's Pocket-Book. By Capt. Howard Patterson. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00 net.

University of the State of New York. Regents Bulletin, No. 25, May, 1894. Secretary's Report. Albany: Published by the University.

THE CHAP-BOOK.

A MINIATURE MAGAZINE AND REVIEW.

Published semi-monthly. Price 5 cents.

$1.00 per year.

"It would be quite impossible to overlook the delightfully unassuming and perfectly dressed little semi-monthly publication of Messrs. Stone & Kimball, entitled the Chap-Book."—The Independent.

"A unique and daintily printed little semi-monthly is the Chap-Book, published by Messrs. Stone & Kimball. Its mingling of red with the customary black ink of the bulk of its typographical work is most tastefully accomplished, else it would not be the really charming little literary journal that it is. It is a particularly welcome outcome of this era of condensing into small space all possible essential excellences.

"The Chap-Book is destined to become a popular literary success, and one may legitimately thank the publishers for its appearance. Eugene Field, J. Percival Pollard, Richard Henry Stoddard, Louise Chandler Moulton, Hamlin Garland and Louise Imogen Guiney will be among its early contributors."—Boston Times.

"An exceedingly pretty little pamphlet with contributions by some well-known writers and containing among the other attractions of its first issue a portrait of Aubrey Beardsley 'After Himself.'"—New York World.

"This little book is entertaining. There is the enthusiasm of youth tempered agreeably with disdain for the commonplace. There is the feeling of delight in color, perfume and rhythm. There is left in the mouth of a reader a pungent, fragrant, exhilarating taste, although the tongue may have been pricked for a moment."—Boston Journal.

"This is certainly the most unique of all the magazines ever published, and because of its uniqueness it attracts you. Its size is about the shape of the popular coat-pocket editions of many publishers and contains some twenty-five pages; the paper is heavy and unglazed; the type clear; the title-page printed in red and black."—Boston Times.

"It is to be the medium of communicating to the public all that is most modern and aggressive in the young man's literature. It is to contain book reviews, literary essays, poems and short stories, and, as this first number shows, illustrations in the fearful and wonderful style of young Mr. Beardsley. The cleverest thing in the number is a little sketch by Maria Louise Pool—a bit of work whose motive, so far from bristling with 'modernity,' is as old as it is pathetic."—New York Tribune.

"The Chap-Book is a semi-monthly of hardly twenty small pages, its plain paper cover made attractive by quaint red and black lettering. While the Yellow Book vies with French caricature and has a Gallic tone in more respects than one, in very name and style the Cambridge magazine suggests the little pamphlet containing verse or prose which our ancestors in this country or Great Britain liked to buy from the chap-men or peddlers. The Yellow Book, within its own covers at least, gives no explanation of its purpose. The Chap-Book makes a simple statement that besides signed reviews and literary essays each number will have poems and short stories both by well-known and unknown writers. . . . For future numbers the Chap-Book offers a good array of names. The Chap-Book is about one-fifteenth the size of the Yellow Book, costs just one-thirtieth as much, and will have twenty-six issues a year to the Yellow Book's four. While we may predict for the Chap-Book a longer life than for its more pretentious contemporary, future numbers of both will be looked for with much interest. The American publishers of the Chap-Book and the English publishers of the Yellow Book are both engaged in the praiseworthy work of bringing out in artistic form the works of the best poets and prose writers of this country and England. Both firms, though new to the work, have met considerable success, and the periodicals that they have started are well worth serious attention."—Editorial in Boston Transcript.

Published by STONE & KIMBALL,

Cambridge and Chicago.

MESSRS. STONE & KIMBALL'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEARLY READY.

THE EBB-TIDE.

A SPLENDID STORY OF ADVENTURE IN THE SOUTH SEAS.

BY

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

AND

LLOYD OSBOURNE,

AUTHORS OF "THE WRECKER," ETC.

16mo. 200 pages. Cloth, $1.25.

EUGENE FIELD.

THE HOLY CROSS AND OTHER TALES. With decorations by L. J. Rhead. 2d edition. 16mo, 192 pages. Cloth, $1.25.

"In some of his more serious work Mr. Field reminds one of certain French writers of short stories—of Coppée frequently, and sometimes even of Maupassant."—The Critic.

HAMLIN GARLAND.

MAIN-TRAVELLED ROADS. Six Stories of the Mississippi Valley. New edition, with an introduction by W. D. Howells. Illustrated. 16mo, 252 pages. Buckram, $1.25.

"Mr. Hamlin Garland's name is new, but his work is finished of its kind. He is a realist. His stories are all of the Mississippi valley, but full of variety. They are fit to rank with the best continental work of the kind."—New York Tribune.

JOAQUIN MILLER.

THE BUILDING OF THE CITY BEAUTIFUL. A Romance. 2d edition. 16mo, 192 pages. Cloth, $1.50.

"It is one of the most powerful prose poems of our times, and alone would give the author a permanent place in literature."—The Arena.

LYNN R. MEEKINS.

THE ROBB'S ISLAND WRECK AND OTHER SHORT STORIES. 16mo, 192 pages. Cloth, $1.00.

"This is one of the daintiest, brightest story-books of the year."—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

LOUISE TAYLOR.

HIS BROKEN SWORD. A Novel. Introduction by Edward Everett Hale. 3d edition. 12mo. Cloth, 355 pages, $1.25.

"It is a book of unusual merit and interest throughout, written with an evident but very noble purpose, . . . devoid of all cant and sentimentality, and a worthy contribution to modern fiction."—Open Court, Chicago.

NORMAN GALE.

A JUNE ROMANCE. 2d edition. 16mo, $1.00. The first edition, although issued in 1892, is already one of the scarcest and most valuable of recent publications.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

PLAYS: An Unhistorical Pastoral; A Romantic Farce; Bruce, a Chronical Play; Smith, a Tragic Farce; Scaramouch in Naxos, a Pantomime. With frontispiece and cover design by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley. Small 4to, 294 pages. Cloth, $2.00.

Published by STONE & KIMBALL,

Cambridge and Chicago.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

IF YOU ARE GOING WEST

TAKE THE RELIABLE

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis

WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Public Library,

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy
BOSTON 30 JUNE 1894
Vol. XXV No. 13 Whole No. 509

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. "A GREAT BOOK," BY A NEW AUTHOR.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

By BENJAMIN KIDD. 8vo, $1.75.

"It is a study of the whole development of humanity in a new light, and it is sustained and strong and vigorous throughout. . . . It is a profound work, which invites the attention of our ablest minds, and which will reward those who give it their careful and best thought. . . . Undoubtedly the ablest book on social evolution that has been published for a long time."—Boston Herald.

"Whatever fault may be found with some of Mr. Kidd's theories, there can be no question as to the signal ability with which he argues them out, and it is quite possible to profit by the constant suggestiveness of his style of treating the subject, even while we refuse to accept his particular conclusions. . . . The book itself is deeply interesting from first to last."—Glasgow Herald.

"There is scarcely a page in Mr. Kidd's book which is not full of suggestion regarding the social problem of our time, and it is not a little comforting in the battle and turmoil, the running hither and thither of the age when we 'scarce possess our souls before we die,' to find a writer who calmly applies the most recent doctrines of science to modern society and life, and who is yet able to say that the future is hopeful and the prospect fair."—Observer.

"Altogether this is one of the most suggestive and inspiring books which have ever dealt with problems of the imminent future."—Daily Telegraph.

"This notable contribution to the science of social life."—The Outlook.

Ethics of Citizenship.

By JOHN MACCUNN, M. A., Professor of Philosophy in University College, Liverpool. 12mo, cloth. Price, $1.50 net.

The Protected Princes of India.

By WILLIAM LEE-WARNER, C. S. I. 8vo, cloth. Price, $3.00.

"The design of these chapters is to bring together in one view . . . a short account of India under Home Rule."—From the Preface.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE WINGS OF ICARUS.

Being the life of one Emilia Fletcher, as revealed by Herself in (I.) Thirty-five Letters written to Constance Norris between July 18, 188–, and March 26th of the following year; (II.) A Fragmentary Journal; (III.) A Postscript. By LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA. 18mo, cloth, gilt top. Price, $1.25.

Life on the Lagoons.

By HORATIO F. BROWN, author of "Venice: an Historical Sketch of the Republic." Second Edition, revised. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price, $1.75.

"Seldom have we come upon so satisfactory and charming a book as this . . . To the real lover of Venice . . . we can recommend this book, as being full of that spirit which comes only of long acquaintance and knowledge and sympathy."—Nation.

New Book by John Ruskin.

Verona, and Other Lectures.

Delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions between 1870 and 1883. Illustrated with Frontispiece in color and 11 Photogravure Plates from Drawings by the Author. Medium 8vo, cloth. Price, $2.50, net.

"An exceedingly dainty and enticing edition."—Congregationalist.

THE TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE.

NEW VOLUMES.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE. COMEDY OF ERRORS.

With Prefaces, Glossaries, etc. By ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, M. A. Imperial 16mo. Printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper, in black and red. Cloth extra, flexible covers, gilt top. Price, each, 45 cents. Paste grain roan, limp, gilt top. Price, each, 65 cents.

⁂ By permission, the text used is that of the Globe Edition, but carefully amended from the latest Cambridge Edition.

Prospectus, with specimen pages, on application.

NOW READY. SECOND EDITION.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE.

A Chronicle of New England Birds and Flowers. By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT. 18mo, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

⁂ Also a Large-paper Edition, limited to 250 copies, with twelve full-page plates. Crown 8vo. Price, $3.00 net.

JUNE NUMBER NOW READY.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal devoted to New and Current Publications. Price, 5 cents per number; yearly subscription, 50 cents.

⁂ The leading article this month is by Mr. F. MARION CRAWFORD, entitled "Modern Views of Mysticism." The July number, which is just ready, contains Mr. Crawford's second paper on the same subject.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S

New Books of Fiction.

Claudia Hyde. A very interesting view of an attractive, old-fashioned Virginia household, with an engaging love story, by Frances Courtenay Baylor, author of "Juan and Juanita." 16mo, $1.25.

His Vanished Star. A striking story of East Tennessee mountain life, scenery and characters, told with remarkable vigor by Charles Egbert Craddock (Miss Mary N. Murfree). 16mo, $1.25.

Two Strings to His Bow. By Walter Mitchell. 16mo, $1.25. "The style is sparkling and epigrammatic, the plot in the highest degree humorous, and the book one of the most charming to while away summer leisure." —The Churchman, New York.

The Story of Dan. By M. E. Francis. 16mo, $1.25. "A tale of life among the Irish peasantry, exquisitely told."—Boston Beacon."

The White Crown, and Other Stories. By Herbert D. Ward. 16mo, $1.25. "Mr. Ward's stories, every one, have the supreme merit of being interesting."—The Churchman, New York.

Bayou Folk. By Kate Chopin. 16mo, $1.25. "These Creole and Acadian tales are so fine that no words save 'charming' and 'fascinating' will serve to describe them."—Portland Transcript.

In Exile, and Other Stories. A tasteful volume of excellent short stories by Mary Hallock Foote, author of "The Chosen Valley," "The Led-Horse Claim," "John Bodewin's Testimony," "The Last Assembly Ball," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and Other Stories. By Gertrude Smith. 16mo, $1.25. "Six strong and delightfully breezy, fresh tales."—Boston Journal.

The Petrie Estate. By Helen Dawes Brown. 16mo, $1.25. "Helen Dawes Brown is pleasantly remembered as the author of 'Two College Girls,' an extremely well constructed and entertaining story, which gave promise of better attainments in the future. These expectations are delightfully realized in 'The Petrie Estate,' a story with many felicitous touches."—Boston Transcript.

A Native of Winby, and Other Tales. By Sarah Orne Jewett. $1.25. "It would be hard to name stories better than are four at least of these."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Rachel Stanwood. By Lucy Gibbons Morse. $1.25. "A pretty romance runs side by side with anti-slavery fairs, the Hutchinson concerts, Wendell Phillips's eloquent speeches, and the strong, quiet influences of Lydia Maria Child."—New York Christian Advocate.

Two Bites at a Cherry, with Other Tales. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. $1.25. "Nowhere else has he displayed his versatile gifts, the pathos, the quaint humor, the delicate wit, the refined feeling, and the felicity of style by which his works are distinguished, to better advantage."—Home Journal, New York.

The Son of a Prophet. By George Anson Jackson. $1.25. "We do not hesitate to rank this story in respect to both interest and power with 'Ben Hur' and the 'Prince of India.'"—Boston Congregationalist.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

NEW BOOKS.

Prose Fancies.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, author of "The Religion of a Literary Man," etc. 12mo, with portrait of Mr. Le Gallienne, cloth, $1.00.

"Common Sense" Applied to Woman Suffrage.

A statement of the reasons which justify the demand to extend the suffrage to women, with consideration of the arguments against such enfranchisement, and with special reference to the issues to be presented at the New York Constitutional Convention of 1894. By MARY PUTNAM JACOBI, M. D. (Questions of the Day Series, No. 80.) 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

On and Off the Saddle.

Characteristic Sights and Scenes from the Great Northwest to the Antilles. By LISPENARD RUTGERS. 12mo, illustrated, $1.00.

The Sphere of the State;

Or, The People as a Body Politic. With Special Consideration of Certain Present Problems. By FRANK SARGENT HOFFMAN, A. M., Professor of Philosophy, Union College. 12mo, $1.50.

Balder, the Poet, and Other Verses.

By GEORGE HERBERT STOCKBRIDGE. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"There is a delicate flavor in the verse of Mr. Stockbridge."—Richard Henry Stoddard, in the Mail and Express.

"The author is a deft workman after the manner of Sir Philip Sidney, old Andrew Marvell and Herrick. . . . The conception [of the poem entitled 'Columbus'] is characterized by breadth of thought, and there is an easy mastery in the handling of the theme—a perfect continuity to a noble climax. . . . If the author of the small volume offered here for consideration never brings forth another, it seems fitting that this one alone should give him a place in the regard of all those whose feeling is quickened by, and whose mind is responsive to, the message of the real poet."—F. B. Stanford, in the Lewiston Journal.

"The poems are characterized by much sincere, original, profound and, at times, striking thought, expressed in a manner at once robust and delicate. Although the main themes relate to the usual emotional topics of poetry, they are handled with a most unusual dignity and reverence, and the author's deep probing down into the fundamental causes of action and emotion tends to stimulate the reader's own reflection in an extraordinary degree. Mr. Stockbridge also displays much originality in the lines of phraseology, versification, rhythm and rhyme, as well as in thought, but it is in respect to the latter quality that the book is most remarkable."—C. S. Elliot, in the Washington Post.

 Notes on New Books, a quarterly bulletin, prospectuses of the Knickerbocker Nuggets, Heroes and Stories of the Nation Series, sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
27 West 23rd St., N. Y.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher, 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

RAND, McNALLY & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

JUST ISSUED,

MARAH ELLIS RYAN'S

A FLOWER OF FRANCE.

A Story of Old Louisiana.

In artistic cloth binding; price, $1.00.

Robert G. Ingersoll, the Rev. David Swing, and the press at large pronounce the works of this author to be of the highest merit.

A Marvelous Revelation.

THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST.

By the discoverer of the manuscript, NICOLAS NOTOVITCH. Translated from the French. In paper cover, 25 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"The greatest addition to what is known of Christ since the writing of the New Testament."

AGAINST ODDS. A Romance of the Midway Plaisance. By LAWRENCE L. LYNCH, author of "A Dead Man's Step," etc. In paper cover, 25 cents.

A story of intense interest, full of startling surprises, the outcome of the plot remaining in uncertainty until the last page is reached. One of this well-known writer's strongest works.

THE TWO-LEGGED WOLF. From the Russian of N. N. KARAZIN. Illustrated by the author. In paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"Every chapter is intensely dramatic, even to excitement. . . . Excellently well done and enjoyable."—Literary Weekly.

REED'S RULES.

A Manual of Parliamentary Law.

By the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives. In cloth, 75 cents; full seal grain flexible leather, $1.25. Size, 4x6 inches—convenient for the pocket.

"Reasonable, right and rigid."—J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture.

"I commend the book most highly."—W. McKinley, Governor of Ohio.

IN PREPARATION.

THE RED HOUSE. By "THE DUCHESS."

In this, her latest work, the authoress has added fresh laurels to her crown. In strength of color, interest of plot, and insight into the intricacies of human nature, this novel surpasses all her former efforts.

HIS WILL AND HERS. By DORA RUSSELL.

A charming love story of modern society. The difficulties of a struggling authoress, the many dramatic incidents of her career, and her final success and happiness, are told with the delightful art of which this authoress is the mistress.

MAGDALENA. From the Spanish of PONS-LEVI.

A dashing romance of spirited action, treating of modern life in Madrid. A delightfully vivid and refreshing story.

THE RED SULTAN. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

Beyond doubt the best story of adventure that has been written in many years.

RAND, McNALLY & CO., Publishers,
CHICAGO AND NEW YORK.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 30 JUNE 1894 No. 13

CONTENTS

The Celtic Twilight 195
Socialism and Social Reform 195
Esther Waters 196
Through Australia 196
The Wings of Icarus 197
Piers Plowman 197
The Pioneer of Religious Liberty . . . 198
The Christian Ministry 198
The Exiles and Other Stories . . . 199

Poetry:
  Sonnet. Gilbert Parker 200
  The Old Books. Andrew Lang 200
The Ascent of Man 200
New York Letter 200
Fiction:
  The Flower of Forgiveness 201
  A Traveller from Altruria 201
  The Jungle Book 201
  Pharais 202
  With Edged Tools 202
  The Potter's Thumb 202
  The Story of a Modern Woman 202
  The Robb's Island Wreck, and Other Stories . 202
  Theatricals 202
  Red Cap and Blue Jacket 202
Minor Notices:
  The Kingdom of the White-Woman . . . 202
  God's City 202
  Waymarks in Church History 203
  Dean Hole's Addresses 203
Periodicals 203
News and Notes 204
Publications Received 206

THE CELTIC TWILIGHT.[*]

"Celtic sadness and Celtic longing for infinite things the world has never seen." These words are the keynote of the little volume of sketches, stories, and reminiscences of life and fancy among the Irish peasantry which Mr. W. B. Yeats has written to show "something of the face of Ireland to any of my own people who care for things of this kind." The Celtic Twilight is simply a volume of unconnected sketches touching on the supernatural for the most part, rich in humor and fancy, racy of the soil, and yet filled with delicate pictures of nature as a setting for the stories. Throughout the whole book we are aware of the sound of the sea, the breath of the moorland wind, green circling hills and downs, and we catch passing sights of the unhopeful, expectant eyes of the Irish peasantry.

From the first page to the last Mr. Yeats knows how to hold his readers by the charm of his style as well as by the novel subject he has chosen. Many of his stories deserve quoting, but, as a foretaste of the pleasure Celtic Twilight holds in store for pure humor as well as for imagination, we must limit ourselves to quoting from two. Paddy Flynn was fond, for instance, of telling how Collumcille cheered up his mother: "How are you today, mother?" said the saint. "Worse," replied the mother. "May you be worse tomorrow," said the saint. The next day Collumcille came again, and exactly the same conversation took place; but the third day the mother said, "Better, thank God." And the saint replied, "May you be better tomorrow."

The Irish captain's account of his conversation with his mate is almost as delightful as St. Collumcille's wishes. "Why, sur, we war in mid-Atlantic, and I standin' on the bridge, when the third mate comes up to me lookin' mortial bad. Says he, 'Captain, all's up with us.' Says I, 'Didn't you know when you joined that a certain percentage go down every year?' 'Yes, sur,' says he; and says I, 'Aren't you paid to go down?' 'Yes, sur,' says he; and says I, 'Then go down like a man, and be damned to you.'"

The beauty of the other sketches, where Mr. Yeats tells us of the Golden Age and how that perfect world still exists — "The fairies and the more innocent of the spirits dwell within it, and lament over our fallen world in the lamentation of the wind-tossed reeds, in the song of the birds, in the moan of the waves, and in the sweet cry of the fiddle" — and his stories of "Love, fortune, adventure, wonder, the four winds of desire" — these are far too complete in their condensation and delicacy to bear removal from the context, and we must leave these for readers to seek for themselves. Mr. Yeats' chronicle of "that world of glory and surprise, imagined in the unknown by the peasant as he leant painfully over his spade," must surely appeal to minds tired of dreary realism and materialism, and some of us who have long lost the key to

> Magic casements opening on the foam
> Of perilous seas in fairyland forlorn, will gladly find it again in Mr. Yeats' hands.

SOCIALISM AND SOCIAL REFORM.[*]

Professor Ely's new volume is a more popular discussion of socialism than Mr. John Rae and Prof. W. Graham give in their valuable treatises. He has done nothing here to supersede the former's Contemporary Socialism or the latter's Socialism, New and Old. In expounding in Part I the nature of socialism and in Part II its strength, Dr. Ely shows a much more friendly feeling than the two authors just named. One who is familiar with their volumes will note with much surprise the absence here of severe criticism of the socialist doctrines of surplus value and interest, to mention no others. The estimate of socialism as an intellectual scheme, from which we have a right to demand consistency with itself and with facts, is far too favorable. Professor Ely might well have spared us several quotations from Karl Marx's admirers to the effect that they consider Darwin and Marx the two great names in nineteenth century science, and shown instead the inadequacy and falsity of several of the leading principles of the "Bible of Socialism." Dr. Ely is also so friendly to socialism as to state that it allows "private property in the larger proportion of income," leaving out of sight the very moderate size of this income and the still smaller sum which would be left to each individual after the ordinary wants of himself and his family were supplied; he speaks, too, of "the general desire on the part of socialists to reduce the functions of government to a minimum!" His assertion of "the absurdity of the ordinary talk about the importation of socialism from a foreign land" is quite contradicted by the later account (p. 68 f.) of socialism in this country. On this subject he concludes that "it cannot be granted that, up to the present moment," the adherents of the Socialistic Labor Party "have exercised a strong influence, likely to have a lasting effect on the country."

In all probability, however, Professor Ely's book will have more effect upon the moderate socialist in making him see the error of his ways because it concedes so much more strength to the socialistic creed than this has actually shown in logic or in practice. While he passes over the grave intellectual inconsistencies of the Marxian theory, he sees plainly that socialism would not work in practice; that a socialistic state could not, with any probability, resist the enormous dissatisfaction which would rise against it when it would be justly the one target for all kinds of discontent; that the socialist is too optimistic for the future and too pessimistic for the present; that the socialistic state would not be a free state under any rational definition of personal liberty; and that it would be, worst of all, an unprogressive state, just as Mr. Kidd has forcibly argued, like many others before him. A large number of amiable dabblers in socialism in this country will derive more profitable warning, it is likely, from Dr. Ely's book than from Mr. Gilman's more critical volume on Socialism and the American Spirit. But when the two writers come to the practicable social reforms which they advocate as offering a better way than socialism, their differences of view are comparatively slight. Dr. Ely is a well-known advocate of public ownership or management of all "natural monopolies," such as gasworks and railways. He does not here set forth the argument in detail, but assumes that the case has been made out in favor of this step. It is altogether probable, however, that a much larger body of favorable evidence will be needed to convince Americans in general of the feasibility and desirability of government railways than we have at present offered us. Dr. Ely reviews briefly a large number of definite reforms, industrial and political, which we believe will be wisely attempted in coöperation, in preference to such a revolution as scientific socialism would begin with. The appendix contains much interesting and valuable matter on socialism in foreign countries, the manifestoes of the Social Democrats, the Fabian Society, and similar organizations, and an elaborate bibliography more than forty pages in length.

---

[*] The Celtic Twilight. By W. B. Yeats. Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

[*] Socialism: an Examination of its Nature, its Strength, and its Weakness, with Suggestions for Social Reform. By Richard T. Ely, Ph.D., LL.D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.

Theoretically, Professor Ely's volume seems to us to concede too much to the socialist; practically, he stands on the statesman's platform of steady and careful reform. We do not doubt that he will be fully open to conviction by experience if this should show that in this country, at least, not all "natural monopolies" can wisely be intrusted to such administrations as our democratic polity is likely to give us. There is less of the doctrinaire element here than in some of the same writer's earlier works; for this reason, and for the large amount of information it conveys and the many practical suggestions it makes and, above all, for its excellent spirit toward all classes, it deserves a wide reading.

ESTHER WATERS.*

IT takes time, apparently, in some cases for a literary sensation to cross the Atlantic in its full bodily form. Mr. George Moore's latest novel has been the talk of literary London for weeks, if not months, and the boycotting of it by the Mudie Library and the W. H. Smith news agency has resulted in an immense deal of free advertisement of the book. Of all this our London correspondent has kept our readers duly informed. A Chicago firm has now reissued the book over which so much controversy has raged, but there can be no controversy as to the poorness of the paper and the badness of the much-battered type which the publishers of this "authorized edition" have employed. These would be fit companions of a novel properly to be characterized as literary "dirt," but they are entirely out of keeping with the pure tone and the high artistic excellence of Mr. Moore's novel.

The British Philistine is surely an extraordinary being to object with vehemence to a book of this sort. It may be read through from beginning to end without discovering an indecent suggestion or a vulgar expression. Its heroine is a servant girl, illiterate but devout, of a rich and strong nature, who becomes a mother through yielding to her lover's passion (he was a fellow servant) in an unguarded moment. She has such a horror of his offense that she is to a considerable degree responsible for the failure of the marriage which he honorably proposes and has always intended to take place. His master's daughter unfortunately falls in love with him at this time and they elope. Then follows the moving history of poor Esther's efforts to maintain herself and her boy. It is a story of virtue preserved at fearful odds, of long and faithful endurance, and of maternal heroism. Her lover, after a severe experience with his wife, comes across Esther again; they still love each other. They marry and keep a public house in London. But William Latch is a professional better on horse races, and betting is finally his ruin. He dies in a hospital, and Esther again has to earn her living, after years of comparative ease. But this time of trial is shorter; she goes back to her old mistress at Woodview; her boy turns out finely and enters the army; her future is serene in the dear company of Mrs. Barfield, to whom she is companion as well as maid.

This is the briefest outline of a story told in great detail, in a straightforward fashion which seems to disdain ornament and to be due to the keenest observation of the humble life which is depicted in the servants' quarters and the barroom. It is a study — grave, dignified, serious, and pure — of the life of a true woman, whom one can only respect and admire. The immorality which some see in it must be ascribed to one or two scenes like that in Queen Charlotte's maternity hospital, which introduces details that had better be left unsaid, but these are not introduced with any coarse intention. Mr. Moore's spirit is thoroughly humane; both his intention and his execution are in a high degree moral, unless morality means closing our eyes to certain evils in the world and our hearts to the heroism of those who sin once a sin of the flesh and are true ever after to the sincerest nobilities of the spirit. It would be hard to name a novel which would bring home more emphatically to the reader the wrong of seduction and the iniquity of horse-racing as practiced in England today. Between Mr. George Moore, the writer of this clean and affecting book, and Lord Rosebery, the winner of race after race and the upholder of the betting system, Mr. Gladstone would probably find little difficulty in determining moral values. A horse-racing prime minister should feel himself rebuked by the ethical code which this realistic novelist draws from life.

THROUGH AUSTRALIA.*

THIS is one of those books which are delightful for a single reading. It is a typical English book, with good print, paper, and binding, and an abundance of illustrations; but the place of index is filled by a plethora of advertisements. Its twenty chapters are taken up with a lively account of journeys in Ceylon, glimpses at the edges of Peninsular Asia, and observations and experiences in New Guinea and Australia. The larger part of the volume deals with the continent of the kangaroo. Its humor is of the English sort — a sort which we Americans think distinctly below ours in quality, but it serves excellently well to vary the descriptions and the occasional dashes of statistics. The three vehicles most used by travelers were the steamship, the jinrikisha, and the pony carriage. It seems almost incredible that the little Japanese manpower carriage has so quickly made its way over the world, and has become an "institution" in countries where human labor is cheap and where one half of the world is ready to pull the other half around. The plentiful illustrations are rather "washy," but give a sufficiently clear idea of the intense contrast of sunshine and shade, and enable us to understand how large are the areas of the human cuticle which are continuously exposed for tanning by the sun.

The pages are plentifully besprinkled with the dialect of skippers, interpreters, officials, Chinamen, and Malays. There is a good deal of important information about Australian mining, agriculture, horse dealing, and camp life. Naturally, comparatively little is said about the vegetable world of the Australian continent, but the procession of animal life is very wonderful, and the extremes and variations in the biological chain of destruction are as wonderful as anything invented in the Arabian Nights. It seems in many places to be something like this: first, heavy rainfalls and grass begins to grow where formerly grass there was none; then follows a plague of caterpillars, and the green is all eaten up; rainfalls, and grass grows again, but locusts come and eat it down; just as the squatter wonders if his troubles are now complete, rain and grass appear in succession. One morning he kills a gray rat near his hut; before evening he kills a half a dozen. A great army of rodents appears and eats saddles, harness, books, clothing, and everything digestible, and then disappears as mysteriously as it came. The story begins to suggest India rubber, and awakens incredulity when we are told that after the rats came a plague of cats, which also disappear in due time. How the sheep are shorn by machinery is an interesting story, and so also is that of the rearing of wool and its transportation across the plain. Of course the usual episode of being "lost in the bush" and suffering agonies from thirst is here, and the plague of mosquitoes and rabbits is encountered. Finally the tedious wanderings are over, and the story of the good-natured travelers ends in a way that is satisfactory to the reader. It is a good summer book, and, although not likely to attract American emigrants to Australia, will fill pleasantly an hour or two in the hammock or under the trees.

---

* Esther Waters. A Novel. By George Moore. Charles H. Sergel Co. 50c.

* On the Wallaby; or, Through the East and Across Australia. By Guy Boothby. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00.

THE WINGS OF ICARUS.*

THERE seems to be a never-failing supply of novels dealing with overstrained, overemotional, hysterical heroines, eager to reform the world and reluctant to perform such small-minded trifles as ordinary home duties. Miss Laurence Alma-Tadema presents another sample of this class in Emilia Fletcher, whom she describes in a "series of letters," "a fragmentary journal," and "a postscript."

Emilia Fletcher inherits an English estate, and goes to live with some elderly relatives there after a life spent in Italy. She leaves in Italy an intimate friend, with whom she corresponds garrulously. Emilia thinks she has lost the love of her lifetime, vaguely referred to by her in one of her letters as "a man's back going out of a door. I seldom see his face now, only his back as he left me that evening. He never looked behind, although I wrote 'I love you' with my eyes upon his shoulders."

Emilia's habit of writing "I love you" with her eyes on men's shoulders seems to have become a fixed one, for shortly after she reaches England she begins to do it again on the shoulders of a very strange specimen of the male sex. Gabriel Norton is a young man who never brushes his hair and never wears a hat and goes round in very strange clothes; these delinquencies, however, he atones for by "reading every known language," "eating voraciously," and talking "in the silliest fashion," and when he escorts Emilia home from his aunt's house, "bounding forth bareheaded with a yell of exultation." These attractive habits so win the admiration of the sober-minded Emilia that she falls desperately in love with him. They sympathize on all subjects, even to the conscientious atheism, of which Emilia is inordinately proud. For some time she writes despairingly to her friend in Italy that she fears Gabriel Norton will never love her. After a time, however, he proposes, and Emilia is overjoyed. They then make a compact that they shall only be bound to each other so long as their love lasts, and if either one grows tired of the other he or she is to come immediately and confess to the other.

Up to this point the letters tell the tale; then the journal begins and tells us how Emilia's friend to whom the letters had been written comes to visit Emilia and at once falls in love with Gabriel, as he with her. He is not honest enough to tell Emilia and keep the compact, and Emilia, although she realizes the state of affairs perfectly, will not voluntarily set him free. They marry, and after a year Emilia decides to set Gabriel free, since she sees that she cannot make him happy. She tells him and her friend so; they fall into each other's arms, "rising suddenly;" "for an instant Emilia looked at them with a strange sense of exaltation, as if, perhaps, she were the spirit of love and not a jealous woman." All this is very pretty, but not, perhaps, very moral, and we really do not quite see how Miss Alma-Tadema would have ended her story with all due deference to the sensibilities of the British public had not Emilia's friend, appreciating the situation, good-naturedly taken it into her head to drown herself and so save the proprieties.

There are, here and there, scattered through the book clever bits of writing and discrimination, and the reader is certainly entertained from beginning to end; but the strain and artifice of the style and characters are marked, and the plot is absurdly unnatural in relation to the characters themselves.

PIERS PLOWMAN.*

M. JUSSERAND has added to his fascinating volumes on English Wayfaring Life and The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare a study at once scholarly and popular on that most interesting figure, William Langland, and his famous book. He is one of the authors who has written nearly all that we know of him in his own poems:

> No contemporary has spoken of the author of the Visions, and no one seems to have known him; but while studying carefully his poem we can discern the traits of his character and the outline of his biography, for he has described his person and way of life and said what he thought of both in his work. He spent his existence in remodeling his poem, and so identified himself with it that he and it are one. He has drawn there his moral and even his physical portrait.

The son of a bondman, made free by his entrance into the service of the church, Langland was at school and university a wide reader rather than a deep student, like many a man of talent or genius after him. His fortune as an ecclesiastic seems to have depended on friends, who were probably swept away in the plague of 1349. He left beautiful Malvern, now a neatly kept health resort, where "everything looks inviting" today, and M. Jusserand believes that "if the dark figure of Piers Plowman were to appear again, it would be whitewashed by the careful inhabitants." Langland went up to London a disappointed man to be a chanter at St. Paul's for the souls of dead men who had had money as well as sins, and thus derived his living from a business he must have detested:

> The reader ought to remember that . . . the poet's character is not a straight, clear, logical one. If some deny the above theory [of Langland's mean descent] under the plea that to admit it means that the author of the Visions could, at the same time, strongly condemn certain abuses while deriving himself a benefit from them, the answer is, Quite so; and it is a fact that our writer was such a man.

M. Jusserand has, of course, no new facts to offer concerning the poet's life or work, but he has industriously investigated the authorities, French and English, from which the many illustrative quotations in his footnotes are drawn. He sets Langland fully before us in every aspect in his successive chapters on "The Work and the Day," "The Three Versions of the Poem," "The Author's Name, Life, and Character," "The World," "The Church," "The Art and Aim of Langland," and "The Place of Langland in Mystic Literature." The most important contribution this volume makes is to a just estimate of the character of the poet, whom M. Jusserand compares with other mystics of the Middle Ages not a little to his advantage:

> If his will was weak his judgment is sound; and no one . . . has preached with more energy, on many important questions during the Middle Ages, the simple laws of common sense. . . . Because Langland reveres virtue many commentators have made a saint of him; because he condemns, as an abuse, the admission of peasants' sons to holy orders they have it that he was born of good family; and because he speaks in a bitter and passionate way of the wrongs of his time they have made him out a radical reformer, aiming at profound changes in the religious and social order of things. He was nothing of all this. The energy of his language, the eloquence and force of his words, may have given rise to this delusion. In reality he is, from the religious and social points of view, one of those rare thinkers who defend moderate ideas with vehemence, and employ all the resources of a fiery spirit in the defense of common sense.

In a very convincing fashion M. Jusserand shows repeatedly that Langland's great poem voices the same ideas that were expressed by the House of Commons of his day. "He is, above all, the only author who gives a sufficient and contemporaneous idea of that grand power, the power of Parliament." So he was a kind of compound of statesman and mystic. Sincere to the last drop of his "herte's blood" in his cry for righteousness in church and state, dedicated austerely to the service of "Do Best," he resembled such German mystics as the Strasbourg banker of the fourteenth century, Rulman Merswin; but his true comparison is with such Englishmen as George Fox, John Bunyan, and John Wesley. His passionate cry for purity of heart and life has never ceased from the best religion of England, even in its most spiritual expression. His method is sane and his ideal is attainable, despite the allegorical form in which his ideas are clothed, and he makes plain his place among the modern prophets of true religion.

M. Jusserand's delightful volume is destined to increase the interest that all readers of early English literature feel in this somber figure, the antipodes of Chaucer in many ways, but a needful character to show the whole English genius which the blithe teller of the Canterbury Tales did not exhibit in its sterner aspects. Many excellent full-page illustrations of places, churches, and mediæval life — the latter drawn from manuscripts — increase the interest of this extremely readable book.

---

*The Wings of Icarus. By Laurence Alma-Tadema. Macmillan & Co. 1.25.

*Piers Plowman. A Contribution to the History of English Mysticism. By J. J. Jusserand. Translated from the French by M. E. R. Revised and enlarged by the Author. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50.

THE PIONEER OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.*

THE writer of this book is a typical American, and has represented the United States at the court of the Ottoman Empire. There he found a congenial field, for he expressed personally and with timely effect the spirit of the American government in the matter of religious freedom. He also insisted that the Sultan and his advisers should follow out the logic of their creed, which is absolute equality before Allah and full toleration toward all Christians, according to the capitularies granted long ago at the conquest of Constantinople. A Hebrew by blood and religion, he admires the country which sets up no inquisition over the conscience. He has sought the origin of the republican form of government in the United States, and finds it in the representative system founded by Moses at the beginning of the Hebrew commonwealth. To him the subject of Roger Williams has been most congenial. Over all the pages of this work broods a spirit remarkably free from the bias manifested in most controversial works, whether written in Rhode Island or in Massachusetts, concerning "the apostle of soul liberty." Most of the men of Aquidneck, in writing of the radical whom the Pilgrims tolerated and the Puritans banished, are very apt to flaunt the red flag, while those living north of the boundary line seem to fear the destruction of that elaborate structure of historiography which their pens have erected. In a temper that is remarkably judicial, while yet warm with unconcealed admiration for his subject, Mr. Straus reviews the old evidences and brings forward not a few fresh facts, whereby truth is enlarged. He has found signatures of the founder of Rhode Island and discovered other new documentary proofs which enlarge the basis of historic demonstration.

Roger Williams was the son of a London tailor, and attended the Charter House school and Cambridge University. Coming to America, he found the spiritual atmosphere of young Boston too close and "stuffy" for healthful spiritual life. From the first he denied the right of the British king to the soil, and claimed that the Indians should be considered the real owners and compensated for the spoliation in the name of God and king. He was in favor of the system which now rules in the Appleton Chapel at Harvard, and objected to compulsory attendance at church. The popes of Puritanism banished him from the Bay Colony, and so he escaped by night and migrated to that part of the world which in American history is called Rhode Island, but which in Massachusetts parlance was long dubbed "the Land of Crooked Sticks." Very naturally the little commonwealth which imitated the form of the Hebrew state was as much troubled by "cranks," who imagined that liberty meant license, as was Israel by the "mixed multitude." Nevertheless, from the first the idea of liberty of conscience was discriminated from license, or anarchy, in the state, and this fact is made abundantly clear throughout the volume. Kept out of the New England confederacy because its ideas were so far ahead of the Puritan commonwealths, Rhode Island found it necessary to secure a charter. This object was consummated by Roger Williams, who obtained from Cromwell the needed document. While in the mother country he kept his pen busy in maintaining those tenets which are now commonplace in our nation, but which then were novel in both Old and New England, and looked upon as rebellion, heresy, and witchcraft. He championed the separation of church and state, and proposed the readmission of Jews into England. He returned to the colony to live to a good old age. He was a master of the Indian languages, and his close friendship with the red men enabled him to save the colonies from a bloody Indian war. Rhode Island refused to persecute the Quakers, made large provision for liberty of conscience and democracy, and was the leading element in New England in the evolution of that idea of religious freedom to which nations and governments are, in every part of the world, steadily approaching. Incidentally, the author answers the criticisms of the late Dr. Dexter and others, and sets forth the old story in clearest light. The book is enriched with many notes and references, and has an unusually full index.

---

* Roger Williams. By Oscar S. Straus. New York: th Century Company. $1.25.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.*

THIS neatly printed, unpretending volume is in intention a memorial of the late Rev. Theodore C. Pease, Bartlett professor of sacred rhetoric at Andover. It has been prepared with a singular discernment of the ideal of such a memorial and a rare good judgment in the selection of materials. For a frontispiece there is an excellent portrait of Mr. Pease, whose head was well balanced, his brow lofty and well rounded, his countenance intellectual and spiritual, and his expression pure and sweet. The introduction, by Prof. Egbert C. Smyth, is written with undisguised but just and discriminating admiration. There is a short biographical sketch, simple and sufficient. These prolegomena lead the way to Professor Pease's inaugural address at Andover, in September, 1893, which is the pièce de résistance of the book, and whose subject, "The Christian Ministry," gives it its title. Following this, and growing out of it, are two of the few lectures which Professor Pease had fully prepared — the only two he had written; one on "Primitive and Fundamental Elements in Preaching," the other on the "Relation of Homiletics to Logic, Rhetoric, and Eloquence." Then come two sermons, but only two, for Professor Pease, in his two pastorates at West Lebanon, N. H., and Malden, Mass., had been an extemporaneous preacher almost exclusively, and of sermon manuscripts he had none to leave. These discourses, respectively on "Called to be Saints" and "The Enigma of Life," are printed from stenographic reports. The remaining fifty pages are devoted to some of the fruits of Professor Pease's purely literary work. One of these is an essay on Dante's "Vision of Sin and Judgment;" the other consists of a number of his poems and hymns. Of Dante he was a diligent and devoted student. He had read the Commedia in the original nearly seventy times.

In one sense the LITERARY WORLD was the discoverer of Mr. Pease. He was introduced to this journal when he was an undergraduate at Harvard, and his first public literary work, next to that in the college paper of which he was an editor, was done in these columns. He speedily became a constant and a valued contributor, and for years some of the best critical writing in our pages came from his scholarly and delicate pen. How vividly we remember now, though ten, fifteen, twenty years have passed, his fresh, enthusiastic personality, his scholarly manner and method, his always neat and dainty manuscripts, his critical insight and dexterous touch! His specialty in those days was English literature and its allied subjects — poetry, belles-lettres, and literary biography; but he was at home in most fields, and there was little published that he was not competent to handle. His technical power as a reviewer strengthened with years and experience, and the writings in the volume before us show large growth in the second twenty years of his life. Had his life been prolonged we believe the record of its third twenty years would have given him a very high and conspicuous place among American scholars.

Professor Pease was distinctly a scholar. How broad and ripe a scholar even at the early age of forty these pages show. He was not only familiar with the best literature of classic tongues, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, but Spanish as well as Italian and both German and French were at command, and he could go almost everywhere in the originals that his love of letters carried him. His large library, just now being dispersed, testifies impressively to the strength of that love, to the catholicity of it, to the wisdom of it. He was not only a collector, but a selecter. The lectures printed in this volume, and the sermons, show not only how widely he read, but how recollectively and with what power of assimilation. He certainly was a skillful preacher, and was well on toward the mastery of both the science and the art of homiletic discourse. His method of preparing for the pulpit, as here described, is at once a reproof to negligent and slovenly preachers and the sensationalists, and a guide and inspiration to those who wish seriously to make the best of a great opportunity. These two Andover lectures cover broad ground and ought to be extensively read. They are full of suggestion and high in their promise. They exhibit a lofty conception of the preacher's office and the best of common sense as to the way of rightly discharging its duties. If any of Mr. Pease's friends had misgivings over his election to the important professorship at Andover, these misgivings could not stand after the reading of these lectures.

---

*The Christian Ministry and Other Writings. By Theodore C. Pease. Edited by the Fortnightly Club. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

In poetry Mr. Pease was fond of the sonnet, had studied it in its best forms, English and Italian, and tried his own hand in it with no slight success, as nine specimens in this little collection of his verse bear witness. We close this notice with one of them:

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

Here Shakespeare's eyes first opened to the sun.
  These vine-wreathed elms, green fields, and skies of blue
  Cradled his infancy. Here first he drew
Love's breath of life, and here his first songs won
Love's praise. What wonder when his course had run
  In wider circles, tried of heart but true,
  Hither he came the old life to renew,
And sleep by Avon when his life was done.

So should the favored life begin and end:
  Child unto man and birth with death close bound.
    An even stream through all the channel flows;
The friend of youth should be old age's friend,
  The natal bells the passing knell should sound,
    And on familiar scenes the eyelids close.

THE EXILES AND OTHER STORIES.*

"THE Exiles" is the most remarkable of Mr. Richard Harding Davis' tales. We might except "Gallagher," perhaps, but nothing else that he has written. It deals with life in a typical foreign colony, made up of American men and women, all of whom are estranged from their native land because of some social or political misdemeanor. There is a good-natured, but not strictly honest, New York alderman; an unlucky youth, whose drunken quarrel with his cabman was too near the line of murder; a man and wife whose right to live together legally might be questioned in any American city; and others of the same uncertain sort. Into this group of good-natured, clever, and entertaining exiles fortune throws a New York lawyer of a type we all know in real life. He is a young man who has had all the advantages of family, education, and fortune. He has been a stern supporter of conventional morality, and has been prominent in all kinds of social and philanthropic reforms. But he has never known a temptation himself, and has never been thrown into intimacy with any real sinners. All his life, as he says himself, "I have been fighting causes and principles;" now for the first time in his life he is brought "face to face, not with causes, not with laws, but with my fellow men."

The attitude of the impeccable lawyer when he first realizes the characters of the men and women of the foreign colony, where he goes for health and rest, is one of stern disapproval; but with great cleverness and skill Mr. Davis lets him be gently drawn into friendly relationships. The human side of these men and women gradually reveals itself, the sunny atmosphere of the far-away Southern life softens many of the young lawyer's prejudices, and the crisis comes when the hero finds himself, from the highest motives, about to commit an act which, judged from a legal standpoint, would oblige him to be a member of the colony for life. The motif of the story is entirely original, the writer's handling of his material shows both delicacy and strength, and the dramatic contrasts in the situations and characters are magnificent — Holcombe, with his finely spun theories, is so utterly ignorant of the real forces in human nature and the mixed motives which rule even the worst man.

It is never easy to find a team of horses in which each draws as well as the other; so in a volume of short stories one or two are usually obliged to "float" the others. "The Exiles" is the leader in this volume, and "His Bad Angel" ranks second in strength and merit. Perhaps the latter is a little melodramatic, but it is striking and creates a vivid impression standing out in clear lines. "The Writing on the Wall" is blurred and feeble. "An Anonymous Letter" brings us back again to our beloved Van Bibber. Stories about him are not great, but they are entertaining, and the different young women to whom the anonymous letters were sent are skillfully differentiated. Hefty Burk's friends will rejoice in meeting him again, and the whole collection is one to provoke discussion among clever people this summer. The volume has a portrait of the author, but the face is not an attractive one. "I am the coming man" seems too plainly written on it.

— A literal translation from M. Gausseron's article on "La Littérature Contemporaine aux États-Unis" in the Revue Encyclopédique brings to light the following delicious paragraphs: "Miss Mary N. Murfree, today Mrs. Charles Egbert Craddock." Mr. Howells — "This little man, beginning to grow gray and aldermanic, yet even more rounded intellectually than physically." Mr. Richard Harding Davis — "He loves New York because of the worldly success which he found there. He is the literary lion of the city, and when one considers his magnificent physique, his great height, the energy and regularity of his life, and his sweet smile, it is easy to see why."

— The 400th anniversary of Hans Sachs' birthday, November 5, 1894, will be appropriately celebrated by the University of the City of New York, a number of well-known university professors of German participating.

— The George William Curtis Memorial Committee has resolved to raise a fund of $25,000, to be devoted in part "to the procurement and erection of an appropriate artistic monument in the city of New York as a permanent record of the outward presence of Mr. Curtis, and in part to the foundation and endowment of an annual course of lectures upon the duties of American citizenship and kindred subjects, under the title of the 'Curtis Lectureship' or some similar designation, the lectures delivered in such course to be annually published for distribution." Mr. Seth Low is president of the committee, Mr. William Potts its secretary, and Mr. William L. Trenholm its treasurer. Subscriptions should be sent to the latter's address, at 160 Broadway, New York.

— We regret to chronicle the death of Dr. Charles Henry Pearson. Dr. Pearson was the son of John Norman Pearson, a clergyman of Tunbridge Wells and a well-known theological writer. He was born in London in 1830, and received his education at Rugby and at Exeter College, Oxford. He was elected a Fellow of Oriel in 1854. He was professor of modern history in King's College for the ten years ending with 1865, and some years later he lectured on modern history at Trinity College, Cambridge. As the fruit of his King's College professorship he published works on the early and middle ages of England; and his historical maps of England, with explanatory essays, published in 1870, were commended by so great an authority as Mr. J. R. Green. No one before, said the author of the Short History of the English People, had so clearly understood the influence which physical change had exerted on our national history. In Australia, whither he removed in 1872, Dr. Pearson was both professor and politician. Ultimately he joined Victorian Governments, and was Minister of Public Instruction from 1886 to 1890. Bad health compelled his return to England, where he held the post of secretary to the Agent-General of Victoria. His book on National Life and Character, published in 1893, is probably the best known of his works — Alan St. Aubyn, author of A Fellow of Trinity and other successful books, is a woman, the wife of a don at Cambridge.

---

*The Exiles and Other Stories. By Richard Harding Davis. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 30 JUNE 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Sonnet.

Since I rose out of chill oblivion
  I have walked in a world of many dreams,
  And noble souls beside the shining streams
  Of fancy have with beckonings led me on.
Their faces oft, mayhap, I could not see,
  Only their waving hands and noble forms.
  Sometimes there sprang between quick-gathered storms,
  But always they came back again to me.
Women with smiling eyes and star-spun hair
  Spake gentle things, bade me look back to view
  The deeds of the great souls who climbed the stair
Immortal, and for whom God's manna grew:
  Dante, Anacreon, Euripides,
  And all who set rich wine upon the lees.

— Gilbert Parker.

The Old Books.

Deep in the past I peer and see
  A child upon the nursery floor,
Holding a book upon his knee,
  Who asks, like Oliver, for more.
  The number of his years is IV,
And yet in letters hath he skill.
  How deep he dives in fairy lore!
The books I loved, I love them still.

One gift the fairies gave me, three
  They commonly bestowed of yore —
The love of books, the golden key
  That opens the enchanted door;
  Behind it Bluebeard lurks, and o'er
And o'er doth Jack his giants kill,
  And there is all Aladdin's store:
The books I loved, I love them still!

Take all, but leave my books to me!
  Those heavy creels of old we loved
We fill not now, nor wander free,
  Nor wear the heart that once we wore.
  Not now each river seems to pour
His waters from the Muse's hill,
  Though sometimes gone from stream to shore:
The books I loved, I love them still.

— Andrew Lang.

THE ASCENT OF MAN.*

THERE are nine of these thoughtful, brilliant, and persuasive lectures, and Professor Drummond has prefixed an introduction of some sixty pages, which treats of evolution in general, the missing factor in current theories, why evolution was the method chosen, and evolution and sociology. He states here the substance of his method and the positions to which it leads him. One who has read much in this species of literature has little hesitation in saying that this volume, fresh and poetical as it is in an extraordinary degree, is a much-needed supplement to the exclusively scientific or even philosophical writings on the subject. Professor Drummond is so accurate a man of science himself that he does not distort or conceal facts in order to make room for his very moral and spiritual reading of the life of the universe. His interpretation, on the contrary, derives its strength from the comprehensiveness of his vision, including the whole situation, intellectual and moral, as well as physical. He properly emphasizes at the outset the modest spirit which characterizes the true evolutionist:

> This is the age of the evolution of Evolution. All thoughts that the Evolutionist works with, all theories and generalizations, have been themselves evolved and are now being evolved. Even were his theory perfected its first lesson would be that it was itself but a phase of the Evolution of further opinion, no more fixed than a species, no more final than the theory which it displaced. Of all men the Evolutionist, by the very nature of his calling, the mere tools of his craft, his understanding of his hourly shifting place in this always moving and evermore mysterious world, must be humble, tolerant, and undogmatic.
>
> These, nevertheless, are cold words with which to speak of a Vision — for Evolution is, after all, a Vision — which is revolutionizing the world of Nature and of thought, and, within living memory, has opened up avenues into the past and vistas into the future such as science has never witnessed before. While many of the details of the theory of Evolution are in the crucible of criticism, while the field of modern science changes with such rapidity that in almost every department the text-books of ten years ago are obsolete today, it is fair to add that no one of these changes, nor all of them together, have touched the general theory itself except to establish its strength, its value, and its universality.

The strong, central thought of this very informing and inspiring volume is that, besides the struggle for existence,

> There is, in point of fact, a second factor, which one might venture to call the Struggle for the Life of Others, which plays an equally important part. Even in the early stages of development its contribution is as real, while in the world's later progress — under the name of Altruism — it assumes a sovereignty before which the earlier Struggle sinks into insignificance. . . . The functions discharged by all living things, plant and animal, are two in number. The first is Nutrition; the second is Reproduction. The first is the basis of the Struggle for Life; the second, of the Struggle for the Life of Others.

This very important and, indeed, vital doctrine is especially developed by Professor Drummond in the last four lectures, in which he treats of the evolution of the father and the mother and of involution. One thus restores to nature that moral principle and life which Professor Huxley has been lately denying with such vigor, and Professor Drummond properly criticises Mr. Kidd for his interpretation of evolution as containing only the competitive features:

> All that Mr. Kidd denies is really to be found in Nature. There is no single element, even of the highest sanction, which is not provided for in a thoroughgoing doctrine of Evolution — a doctrine, that is, which includes all the facts and all the factors, and especially which takes into account that evolution of Environment which goes on pari passu with the evolution of the organism and where the highest sanctions ultimately lie.

Obviously, the tremendous and all-searching distinction of sex corresponds in a general way to the two great functions of life and to the two great struggles, and the bearing of this elementary scientific doctrine on current discussions is plain:

> No efforts, or explanations, or expostulations can ever break down that distinction between maleness and femaleness, or make it possible to believe that they were not destined from the first of time to play a different part in human history . . . the contribution of each to the evolution of the human race is special and unique.

Professor Drummond's book marks an important stage in the history of evolutionary doctrine. When it can be presented with so much beauty of language and so much enthusiasm of conviction, when its moral and spiritual aspects are so luminously developed, the last excuse for hesitation in accepting it is gone. As a philosophical and religious exposition of a universal law of life, these lectures clear the air and will do much to prevent vain controversies hereafter between men of science and men of faith.

NEW YORK LETTER.

IT is always interesting to hear of the "coming man" in literature. He frequently does not arrive; sometimes he keeps on coming for a long time, and then, when he does reach the goal, those who believed in him boast of their shrewdness in recognizing his ability before the critics put their seal of approval on it. The other day a publisher told me, with a good deal of enthusiasm, that he had found a coming man. "He's young and he comes from the country," was all he would say in answer to my questions with regard to the identity and history of the new genius; but he did consent to describe the work that is going to give the young man fame. "It is a novel, and yet not a novel," he said. "In fact, I believe that it is an absolutely new thing — the very kind of thing that is going to make the literature of the future." Anything definite, except in the literary essay, about the literature of the future is apt to be interesting, so I pricked up my ears and asked for further information about the work. "Well," said the publisher, "it is a combination of the novel, the essay, and poetic prose." This sounds curious enough to serve as a prophecy of the literature of the future. As for the work itself, it will probably appear in the fall, and, as the firm that is to bring it out has made a reputation for excellence of workmanship, it will doubtless be made very attractive in appearance. The publisher expects to be obliged to make a hard fight to force the book into popularity, but he believes in it so thoroughly that he thinks it will eventually win recognition.

The Professional Women's League — the flourishing club founded a little more than a year ago, and consisting chiefly of actresses and journalists and artists — is at present engaged on a novel undertaking. It consists of the writing of a book on literature by some fifteen of its more prominent members. The introduction will be prepared by Mrs. Ida Jeffries-Goodfriend, who made a success as the mother in Ibsen's "Ghosts" last season; and among the other papers will be one on the Victorian Age, by Miss Mary Shaw, the well-known Shakespearean actress. The league has done admirable work during the past year in maintaining classes for the instruction of its members in various branches and in bringing the professional women of the city into helpful coöperation. A publisher has already spoken for the book, and, if the work is carried out successfully, it will probably appear in about a year.

---

* The Lowell Lectures on the Ascent of Man. By Henry Drummond, LL.D. James Pott & Co. $2.00.

Mr. Marion Crawford's "Love in Idleness," which is to run in the Century magazine during the summer months, is said by those who have seen it to be an interesting study of Bar Harbor life. It will present again several of the characters that appeared in Katharine Lauderdale, which, by the way, has attained an extraordinary popularity. Mr. Crawford spent several weeks at Bar Harbor last year, and his new book is doubtless the fruit of his observations there. It is possible that the play which he wrote for the Daly Company more than a year ago, and which Mr. Daly had planned to produce in London last season, will first be given in New York after all, as the company returns to the city next fall. Mr. Crawford has had a very busy winter in this country — so busy, in fact, that few people have known of his presence here. For the present, at least, he has abandoned writing about Roman life and is devoting himself to this country — much to the regret of some of his admirers, who miss the glow of Italy which he caught so happily, and to the gratification of others, who detect in his recent work a decided tendency to turn from romance to realism.

Prof. Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen has recently completed a novel on which he had been engaged for some time. It is a careful study of a peculiar and interesting side of New York life, with a curiously complex character for the heroine. It will probably appear in the fall. The coming summer the professor will spend at Southampton, Long Island, where he has a pretty cottage, and where he devotes himself to outdoor life and incidentally to his writing, for he is too devoted to his literary pursuits to abandon them altogether at any season.

The coming dramatic year promises to be notably brilliant. Sardou's new play, which is to be produced here in the fall, is said to be very powerful. Then, too, we are to have new plays from Bronson Howard, who returned not long ago to his home in New Rochelle from his travels in the Pacific Ocean; from Augustus Thomas, Henry Guy Carleton, and several other American writers. Indeed, the American dramatist is now flourishing, and has no reason to complain of public indifference. Of course theatrical managers still draw largely on foreign works, but they are eager for plays on American subjects treated from the American point of view. The success of "Shore Acres," which ran through the past season in New York, shows that a simple play with a genuinely human interest in it can win popular favor.

The Cosmopolitan Magazine will announce its removal from New York to Irvington in a few weeks, probably early in August. Prof. A. S. Hardy, however, will still keep his editorial office in the city. The building which McKim, Mead & White have been engaged to erect for the magazine in Irvington promises to be ornamental, and the little literary colony that will cluster round it will make a most interesting experiment.

The era of cheap magazines seems to have come. Several publications here are now thriving as they never thrived before simply because they have cut down their prices. The larger magazines, however, still refuse to join in the movement, and their prestige is so strong that they can afford to maintain their present subscription rates for some time to come.

The publishers' announcements for the season are the best evidence that could be found of the present prominence of the modern novel. Several novels are to be issued during the next few weeks by writers hitherto unknown. There is no doubt that we are becoming more and more a nation of readers of fiction. If this were not so the publishing trade would not be half so extensive as it is now. In this connection it is worth noting as a curious circumstance that no New York house has brought out the most successful novel of the year in England — George Moore's Esther Waters. George Moore is comparatively little known in this country, but it is safe to predict that his future work will be sought in the American market. English novelists seem to be sweeping the field at the present moment. After Stanley Weyman, whom every one here is still talking about, comes S. R. Crockett, whose recent publications through the Macmillans have sent him floating on the top of the wave.

However, so far as the short story is concerned, America still holds the palm. The Harpers are about to bring out a volume that is sure to enhance the reputation of a short-story writer whose work has grown in favor with wonderful rapidity during the past three years — Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart. No less an authority than Herbert Spencer has compared some of Mrs. Stuart's work to the work of George Eliot.

The series of articles on Paris which Mr. Richard Harding Davis has written from his studies of the French capital a year ago will shortly appear in Harper's Magazine, with illustrations by Mr. C. D. Gibson. Mr. Gibson has been in Paris since last fall, and his recent work in Life shows that he has very happily caught some of the most interesting of the French types.

JOHN D. BARRY.

FICTION.

The Flower of Forgiveness.

Flora Annie Steel has lived in India long enough to be thoroughly steeped in the life of the natives. There is a weird Eastern atmosphere about this volume of stories which is very remarkable. The material is all new, the local color is picturesque, and the tales have an East Indian aroma about them as permeating as sandalwood. "The Flower of Forgiveness" reads like one of the Arabian Nights, with its strange account of an Eastern pilgrimage, where "young men and maidens and hoary old sinners journeyed together to the cave of Amar-nâth in order to get the Great Ledger of Life settled up to date and so to return scot-free to the world, the flesh, and the devil, in order to begin the old round all over again." The stories are marked by extreme simplicity, and give one the impression that they are records of personal experiences or have been written down verbatim from the mouths of natives. They are sad, wild tales of crimes committed for love, or stories in which the Brahman theology, with all its strange pieties and perversities, plays a leading part. It is as folk-lore rather than as fiction that the volume is chiefly valuable, however. The writer has everything except the dramatic touch. She is graceful in style, thoroughly imbued with the atmosphere and the traditions of the East, and only lacks a certain virility to make her a formidable rival of Mr. Kipling. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

A Traveller from Altruria.

Mr. Howells has lately been telling a reporter that an author ought to be writing steadily for the sake of keeping his hand in. His own latest book seems constructed on this principle. A very thin vein of thought is worked for much more than it is worth. A superficial indictment of human society as it exists in America, which is meant to be severe but produces much more the effect of shallowness, is put into the mouth of a traveler from Altruria, a country where Mr. Howells' very amateur socialism is in full blast, and everything is, of course, rose-color in contrast with the utter blackness of our civilization. It is about time, one would say, to inquire how far our novelists who are exploiting the denunciation of the respectable and successful are willing to practice what they preach. Will they begin, for example, by giving the proceeds of the copyright of their novels to pay for socialistic propaganda? Mr. Bellamy is reported to have given very convincing proof of his sincerity by sinking on his paper, the New Nation, all that he made on Looking Backward. Mr. Howells will command more respect as a dabbler in socialism when he gives some similar proof of his earnestness.— Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

The Jungle Book.

Few writers are so well equipped as Mr. Rudyard Kipling to tell stories of animal life to children. The son of a father whose knowledge of the animate creation of India is extraordinary, he has himself grown up in the atmosphere of good stories and of animals good and bad — from the young folks' point of view. He has been acquainted with the keepers of elephants and with the hunters of big game. He has hobnobbed with the men who "snatch a fearful joy" in studying serpents, and who care more about knowing than living. Rudyard Kipling understands well the special limitations of children and their extraordinary sympathy with animal life. The stories in this collection have been in print before, and the copyright inscription is a mosaic of three names. The stories take us into the "jungle" of both land and water, for in the pretty one of "The White Seal" we go down into the wonderful undergrowth of the ocean. "Toomai of the Elephants" is the most wonderful story, besides being tricked out with poetry. "Her Majesty's Servants" is a good picture of army and especially cavalry life in the land where rain means a steam bath. "Rikki-Tikki Tavi" tells us charmingly of a Mongoose whose allies were the tailor bird, the muskrat, and a jolly little master Teddy, but who wrung the necks of the cobras and other serpents, exercising his own wit and muscle. The book is beautifully printed on thick paper, and the illustrations, counted by the score, are unusually spirited. It is just the book for boys and girls who like to know all about their "poor relations" in the animal world, and the binding is of the sort with which to ornament the young folks' row of books.— Century Co. $1.50.

Pharais.

The poetical element in Gaelic natures and in Gaelic imagination is almost too highly wrought to bear translation into another language; to the Anglo-Saxon nature there seems always a touch of strain in the heaping up of adjectives and in the elaborate analysis of emotion so dear to Gaelic writers. Pharais, by Fiona Macleod, is a story of the madness of Alastair Macleod, and it tells how he and his wife Lora attempted to drown themselves through dread of the horrible "mind-dark" which had come upon him. The stress and strain of the story is too great, and the piling up of agony is unpleasant and artificial, but a certain exotic charm of fancy relieves at times the rigor of the plot. The Gaelic poems and verses interwoven with the story are really beautiful. — Derby, England: Frank Murray. 5*s*.

With Edged Tools.

This is likely to be the most popular of the novels by Henry Seton Merriman. He has used his material with evident intention to make the sensational situation as effective as possible, and the style has a kind of dash, rapidity, and feverish earnestness in accord with the rush of events. The action changes from England to Africa with marvelous abruptness and ease. There are two heroes, with whom a brilliant but shallow girl, Millicent Chyne, is playing a perilous game. In fine contrast with her is Jocelyn Gordon, true, noble, self-sacrificing, and altogether womanly. Life in Africa, in almost impenetrable regions, with the deadly climate, the ways of the natives, the horrors of the wilderness, and perils from mysterious diseases swift in their deadly work, was never more graphically pictured. But, after all, nothing is so conspicuous or admirable as the friendship of the two men, Meredith and Oscard, their magnanimity and loyalty, their fortitude and chivalry, and finally the manner in which they deal justice to the frivolous beauty who came near wrecking both their lives. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The Potter's Thumb.

Novels of life in India, and especially in Simla, have received a tremendous impetus since Mr. Rudyard Kipling first introduced Anglo-Indian society to the book world. Mrs. Flora Annie Steel is one of the most successful of the writers who have followed in his wake. Her long and elaborate novel, The Potter's Thumb, is interesting, but if it were cut down one half it would be more artistic as well as more readable; it shows care and study, as well as ability in character-drawing. The plot of the story is based on the desire of the native rulers of Hodinuggar to obtain control of the sluice gates of a canal which controls in the dry season the water supply of the Hodinuggar district. The young English civil officer who has the charge of the sluice gates is too honest to be bribed and too careful to be surprised, and the native princes can find no way of effecting their object except through bribing the woman whom George Keene loves and who finally betrays him. She is a cleverly described member of the class of Indian widow and flirt whom Mr. Kipling delights to write of. Mrs. Steel is better at describing men than women, and Fitzgerald, Gordon, and Keene are far more vivid than the women here. We should be hardly justified in calling Mrs. Steel's book an important novel, but when she learns to keep her details more in hand she will have a future before her, for honest, painstaking work in novel writing is not too common among the lesser lights of present day story-tellers. — Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

The Story of a Modern Woman.

It would be impossible to recount from memory alone the number of recent novels that attempt to present the woman at odds with society, the woman with theories of her own perhaps, stirred by a sense of new possibilities, and independent enough to live out her own life, either for good or ill. These "superfluous women" have met their problems in widely different ways, and are quite as interesting when studied collectively for the light they throw on present tendencies, as is any one of them taken by herself. Ella Hepworth Dixon, the writer of this story, is the daughter of a well-known London man of letters, and she has studied her subject thoughtfully. In certain outward points the plot has a curious resemblance to that of Mrs. Cotes' new novel, A Daughter of Today, which appeared about the same time. In each the heroine turns first to art as a life work and studies in the schools of Paris. In this they fail; both go to London, and there they achieve a reasonable success in journalism. Both are disappointed in love, and both are brought face to face with temptation. Here the resemblance ceases. Miss Dixon's Mary Erle is an earnest, patient woman who accepts her life and makes one of the great army of working women, unnoticed in their heroism and endurance. — Cassell Publishing Co.

The Robb's Island Wreck, and Other Stories.

There is a distinct quality about these stories, by Lynn R. Meekins. The first is pathetic; the others have in common an element of humor, pervading them like a subtle perfume. Especially is this true of the political episodes in the four chapters in the life of David Gad. The inside workings of a campaign, the intrigues, double-dealing, and underhandedness, the uncertainty as to issues, the final surprises, and the costs of success are adroitly shown up in these capital sketches. The volume is artistic and elegant both in its outside make-up and in paper, type, margins, and everything else that goes to make choice and admirable work. — Stone & Kimball.

Theatricals.

The preface which Henry James has prefixed to his two plays, "Tenants" and "Disengaged," warns us that they were conceived and constructed wholly in the line of possible representation. The thought of the theater and the company is always present, and one can enjoy them thoroughly only with the help of a vivid imagination of how each part might be acted. There are many who enjoy the plays of Browning none the less for having been repeatedly told that they are failures so far as stage representation is concerned, and contrariwise one is willing to believe that these dramas would be very interesting on the stage, however unable he may be to supplement the written word in such a way as to fit them for quiet home reading. They are experiments in the line of comedy pure and simple. The plots are not complicated, and their charm is in the conversation, which to be really bright and effective, however, needs the accompaniment of look and tone. — Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

Red Cap and Blue Jacket.

George Dunn, a new writer, has written quite a remarkable story, though one may complain of its undue length. The scene is laid in Scotland and France at the time of the French Revolution, and the book might be called a historical romance. The writer has saturated himself in the atmosphere of the times, and some of his scenes are rich in color and as vivid as anything in Dr. Conan Doyle or The Raiders. The characters stand out strongly, and the author has a mastery of Scotch dialect and a keen sense of Scotch humor. There is a fight between an English and a French man-of-war, a description of the closing scenes in the revolution, and considerable clever dialogue. The reader's interest is held continuously throughout the novel. The author is lacking in the dramatic sense. All the elements of a great novel are here, but without dramatic power the writer only succeeds in being interesting. The novel is one to find plenty of readers, and the writer has a future if he continues to work and improve on these same lines.— G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Kingdom of the White-Woman.

We object to a title like the above on the ground of its ambiguity, whereas a title should be definitive. Pray, Mr. M. M. Shoemaker, what is "the Kingdom of the White-Woman?" Why, Mexico. Well, why not, then, say so? Mr. Shoemaker's visit to Mexico seems to have been as far back as 1879; since that time there have been changes in the country to the visitor — changes in the ways of getting there, changes in difficulties and dangers, and changes in impressions. From one point of view this circumstance detracts from the present value of what the author has to say; from another it adds to it. Those who have recently made the Mexican trip will like to see, perhaps, how what they saw looked to an intelligent American fifteen years ago. There are as many as forty-five chapters in Mr. Shoemaker's book, so that they are extremely short — scarcely more than so many sketches, each of some one object or impression; but they are, for the most part, graphically written and appeal to the eye. There are a number of pictures, too, which might have been better. — Robert Clarke & Co. $1.50.

God's City.

Here we have a volume of thoughtful and highly finished sermons, by a highly intellectual and spiritual preacher, Canon Scott Holland of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The volume has unity, purpose, and plan. Its fourteen sermons are bound together by an idea and develop that idea deliberately, with pains and with a large degree of literary beauty. The idea is, that if the Incarnation be a fact, then the Church of God, as the society of redeemed humanity, must be a reality; and the questions arise: What are the marks and credentials of this City of God — the Church? What are the methods of its growth? What are the signs and tokens of its coming? The first of these questions is answered in three discourses from the Revelation of St. John and the Epistle of St. Paul; the second, in six from the teachings of our Lord, chiefly the parables of the Kingdom; the third, in four discourses from the Acts of the Apostles. Ingenuity, method, and deep spiritual discernment characterize all these sermons. That on the parable of the sower is peculiarly exemplary of Dr. Holland's homiletic style. — Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00.

Waymarks in Church History.

We have here a collection of short historical papers, by Canon William Bright, the distinguished professor of ecclesiastical history at Oxford. Most of these are upon patristic topics, though there is an "Appeal to Bede" and one paper on Laud. In "The Clergy and Secular Employments" the author argues learnedly against what is known as the limited diaconate. "The Arian Controversy," "The Episcopate of S. Basil," and "Pelagianism" are three of the more important chapters, if those may be called chapters which are more or less independent fragments. We should describe this as a bundle of short, miscellaneous, historical essays, tied around with a string. Any one can be slipped out and read away from its companions. They are reflections on historical persons or events, and presuppose some knowledge on the part of the reader. Their tone is judicial, their foundation of learning ample, their style simple and good. One of three appendixes discusses the views of Irenæus on the sacraments; the other two, the relation of Arianism to modern Unitarianism. — Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00.

Dean Hole's Addresses.

Dean Hole of Rochester, England, is coming to this country on a lecturing tour, and this collection of his Addresses is a sort of avant coureur, as his Reminiscences published last year were an introduction. There is but one Dean Hole, and his individuality is stamped on every page of this book, as it was on every page of the other. All of its contents were originally spoken to English workingmen from pulpit or platform, and we venture to say that he had actual "hearers" every time. As sermons, these addresses are broadly secular; as addresses, these sermons are deeply religious. There are nineteen of them, on such topics as "Do You Read the Bible?" "Unbelief;" the "Gentleman in the Loose Box," which, as an utterance against pewed churches, would delight the heart of the Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow; "Bible Temperance;" "Gambling and Betting;" "Who is a Gentleman?" and "Work and True Education." Dean Hole is always friendly, generally interesting, never dull; he is bright, quick, full of anecdote, a sensible man, not afraid to use wit and humor, given to smiles as well as tears; in a word, he is a first-rate preacher of every-day righteousness. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

Of a new edition of Owen Meredith's poems we have received Lucile and Selected Poems, bound in claret cloth and excellently printed. Mrs. Balfour, the poet's daughter, has made the selection, and explains its plan in her modest introduction. She accounts for the comparative unpopularity of her father's verse, with the exception of Lucile, thus: "Circumstances, in some respects, were against him. For the larger part of his life he was an exile. Neither books, periodicals, nor reflection on his art could supply the place of direct intercourse with the representatives, few or many, of that outer circle to which he addressed himself. . . . On his return from exile his own contemporaries had in large measure passed away, and he failed to gain touch with the spirit of a younger age." — Longmans, Green & Co.

My Summer in a Mormon Village, a sketch by Miss Florence A. Merriam, is a pleasantly written little book of average merit. The descriptions of scenery evince a love of nature and a minute attention to detail, which add vividness to her pictures of Utah, while her character-drawing in describing the people among whom she lived shows sympathy and painstaking. The book strikes us as an honest picture of the life and occupations one would be apt to find in Utah, and such truthfulness is not a quality to be despised in life or in books.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

The Macmillans have issued two more illustrated volumes in the line of English classics, bound in dark green covers, with a design on the front cover and full gilt, of which they have before given pleasing examples. Hood's Humorous Poems have a preface by Canon Ainger and one hundred and thirty excellent illustrations by Charles E. Brock. Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie writes a pleasant introduction to the selection from Miss Mitford's Our Village, to which Mr. Hugh Thomson has furnished one hundred pictures. The quiet style of the book and Mr. Thomson's well-known manner match each other well. Both volumes are of the first quality in their authors, editors, and artists. — Each, $2.00.

Three volumes of popular science adapted to the very beginner in botany are E. M. Hardinge's With the Wild Flowers from Pussy-Willow to Thistle-Down, in which only the English names are used (Baker & Taylor Co. $1.00), and Mrs. W. S. Dana's According to Season — a smaller book of familiar talks about wild flowers in the order of their appearance (75c.). The Scribners accompany this text with a selection of fifty plates taken from Mrs. Dana's highly popular book of last season, How to Know the Wild Flowers. These are printed in black and white on water-color paper. — $1.00 net.

The painstaking and trustworthy gentleman who writes under the name of Alfred Ayres has revised and much enlarged his manual of pronunciation, The Orthoëpist ($1.25), and has also sent forth a sensible book on behavior, called The Mentor, intended especially for men and boys who "would appear to advantage in the society of persons of the better sort" ($1.00). The two volumes are issued in uniform style by the Appletons.

In The Amateur Telescopist's Handbook Frank M. Gibson, Ph.D., has endeavored to meet the wants of those who can command at the most a three-inch aperture telescope. He has therefore compiled a descriptive catalogue of 468 celestial objects, and prefixed nine practical chapters on the construction and uses of the telescope. The little book seems to fill excellently well a real void in astronomical literature. — Longmans, Green & Co.

Alden's Nutshell Cyclopedia is intended as a supplement to other cyclopedias concerning subjects of the day. The first volume extends from A to Coimbra, and seems to justify its own existence, especially at the small price charged for it. — John B. Alden. 60c.

The fourth volume of Mr. H. B. Wheatley's definitive edition of The Diary of Samuel Pepys carries the record of that minute chronicler of things both small and great from January 1, 1664, to the end of June, 1665, and has for frontispiece the Kneller portrait of Pepys himself. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

My Farm of Edgewood and its sequel, Wet Days at Edgewood, by Donald G. Mitchell — two of the most readable books ever written about amateur farming, are brought out by the Scribners in a neat and inexpensive edition at seventy five cents each.

Mr. Alexander Black is an amateur photographer of repute, and his book for amateurs, Photography Indoors and Out, is a comprehensive and readable manual of this fascinating art.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

PERIODICALS.

The July Century is a good seasonable number. It has some excellent fiction, one new serial by Mr. Crawford, "Love in Idleness," and another, "A Bachelor Maid," by Mrs. Burton Harrison. Both begin cleverly and leave the reader in a discontented frame of mind because they end abruptly, as is the fashion of the continued novel. "Painting at the Fair," with appreciative notices of the Scandinavian artists, is a fully illustrative article, while "A German Comic Paper" tells us of the growth of the most successful humorous paper which the world has ever seen. Fliegende Blätter is known the world over, and the delightful illustrations chosen from its volumes will show one of "whys" of its success. The author of "The Star Spangled Banner" has a well-deserved biographical notice, and "A Portrait of Thomas William Parsons" has a footnote by Mr. Aldrich full of sympathetic appreciation. "What German Cities Do for Their Citizens" shows the German method of "poor relief," which divides the work among small local committees — an admirable plan, not unlike our system of Associated Charities in some respects, but each committee contains from five to twelve citizens appointed on the ground of character and worthiness. An appointment on such a committee is deemed an honor, and the duties cannot be shirked. The third article on "Across Asia on a Bicycle" is as entertaining as were the other two. "Her Mother's Success" is an admirable short story, but "An Unexpected Legacy" and "Susanna' are below the Century's average. "Where Goest Thou?" by Edith M. Thomas, is the best bit of poetry. The last stanza has much poetic power:

> Thou goest to mold thy life, brave youth? Well, go.
> But whosoever thou shalt take to friend,
> And wheresoever thou shalt turn thee, know
> 'Tis Life itself shall mold thee in the end.

Antonin Dvorak's article on "Franz Schubert" will interest all musicians, and "The Evolution of a Battle-Ship" will appeal to the more practical mind.

"Philip and His Wife," Mrs. Deland's serial in the Atlantic, takes on new interest as it goes into Sections XX–XXII in the July number. Mrs. Catherwood's story, "Pontiac's Lookout," is the only other fiction matter here, unless Mr. Lafcadio Hearn's "Red Bridal," a story from real life in Japan, be included. Literature proper is represented by a first installment of "Letters of Sidney Lanier," sympathetically edited by Mr. W. R. Thayer; "Lucretius," a strong paper by Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell; and "Coleridge's Introduction to the Lake District," by Myron B. Benton. Three outdoor papers are appropriate to the season — "The Home of Glooscap," by the late Frank Bolles; "On the Beach at Daytona," by Bradford Torrey, and "The City on the Housetops." There is an interesting sketch of the retiring author of Quits, the late Baroness Tautphoeus. Mr. Harvey N. Shepard discusses with vigor "The Mayor and the City," and Prof. J. L. Laughlin explains the "Monetary Reform in Santo Domingo," in which he has been active. "In the Dozy Hours" is a bright little paper by Agnes Repplier. The miscellaneous matter of the number — poetry, reviews, and contributors' club — is varied and good.

Harper's Magazine for July is a really remarkable number. A Bay of Fundy tide of good things flows through its pages. We recall no recent single issue of this monthly with such variety, brilliancy, and excellence of contents. The opening pages of a realistic story, by Mr. Warner; the timely description of a Harvard–Yale boat race, by W. A. Brooks; the sketches of White House life in Washington, by H. L. Nelson; Mr. Howells' most interesting narrative of his first visit to New England — to Lowell and Holmes and Fields; Miss Spence's Australian impressions of America; Commodore Jewell's account of a great naval gun factory; the continued chapters of Du Maurier's "Trilby," with its added interest now that we know of the real life behind it, and its very effective illustrations; Mr. Deshler's reminiscences of old times — that is, half a century ago; the editor's impressions of Bermuda — lovely Bermuda; these are the main features of one hundred and sixty pages of as entertaining reading and picture matter as one often finds within magazine covers.

"The North Shore of Massachusetts" is an entertaining paper, by Robert Grant, in Scribner's for July, well illustrated by W. T. Smedley; Judge Grant's account of the summer life of the Bostonese on this favorite coast is extremely readable, but Gloucester and Rockport will learn with surprise that "civilization properly ceases before you come to Gloucester;" there is an amusing northerly limit set at Magnolia. Another kind of Americanism is described by Carl Lumholtz in his paper on the Mexican cave-dwellers, "Among the Tarahumaris." Mr. Ernest Flagg proposes a cure for the "New York Tenement-House Evil" in a different method of building on the 25 x 100 lots. "The Gettysburg Week" is an interesting diary by the late Dr. Philip Schaff. Miss Repplier, in her paper, "Aut Cæsar aut Nihil," hits the nail on the head when, referring to much of the work done by women's clubs, she quotes, "We encourage one another in mediocrity." "Beasts of Burden" is Professor Shaler's illustrated article, for which Mr. E. L. Weeks has been the artist.

The complete novel in the July number of Lippincott's is "Captain Close," by Captain Charles King. It deals with the Reconstruction period, and relates the experiences of a newly fledged lieutenant in camp near Tugaloo and of his very curious commanding officer. Louise Stockton begins a strong story, "A Mess of Pottage," to be concluded in the August issue. Other tales are "At Marrini's," a lively character sketch by Richard Hamilton Potts, and "A Case of Hoodoo," an amusing dialect tale from a Virginia police court. Ellen Olney Kirk depicts "A Roman Nurse" in her habit as she lives, with the pampered pride which marks her above her congeners in any land but Italy. Elizabeth Morris writes of "Mill-Girls" here at home. Francis Leon Chrisman tells the history of "the Conscience Fund" of the United States Government, and gives some recent examples of the contributions to it. Under the heading "A Scattered Sect," H. V. Brown describes a queer organization which flourished not long ago in England and called itself "The Army of the Lord."

"Perlycross" leads off in Macmillan's for June, and is drawing near conclusion. An anonymous writer indulges his fancy in an unprofitable vision of what India may be a century hence. The next paper, likewise unsigned, is the first of a series on the beginnings of the British Army, and treats of the infantry, closing with complimentary words for the discipline established by Cromwell. Two slight sketches occupy a few pages, and, with an article on "Trout Fishing in New Zealand" and one on the "Cape of Good Hope," comprise the lighter portion of the number. Some readers may be surprised at the enormous size of the trout, and will wonder if the quality will bear comparison with the quantity. The paper on the cape is very readable, and the account of the region is very fresh, quite out of the usual way. The remaining contributions are on Cardinal Retz and a reminiscence of Kossuth, with a brief biography by Professor Nichol.

"Some Portraits of Byron," by F. G. Kitton in the Magazine of Art for July, gives eight illustrations of the poet — an admirable subject for the painter. Walter Armstrong describes and G. C. Haité pictures "The City of Dordrecht in 1893." Seymour J. Lucas discourses of "The Art of Dressing an Historical Play," and gives five illustrations of characters in Mr. Irving's "Ravenswood" as examples. Sir E. Burne-Jones' beautiful tapestry, "The Adoration of the Magi," accompanies an article by Canon Rawnsley.

No. VI in the new style of the Portfolio for June is a sympathetic monograph on Frederick Walker, by Claude Phillips. Walker was born in 1840, and died suddenly in 1875. He is best known to the world in general by his illustrations of Thackeray's Philip and Denis Duval and Miss Thackeray's novels, but the four plates and numerous illustrations here given show his wide range as an artist and confirm much of Mr. Phillips' praise.

President Eliot, with his wonderful twenty-five years' record at Harvard, is naturally the chief subject of the Harvard Graduates' Magazine for June. A fine portrait is followed by the leading article, on "President Eliot's Administration," by Prof. C. F. Dunbar, which concludes thus: "After all is said, in the long list of makers and benefactors of Harvard no name after that of the founder is engraved so deeply on this enduring monument as that of Charles William Eliot." Articles follow on the Medical School and the Law School, and "Comparisons, 1869–94," by the editor. The Latin Play is fully described by H. W. Haynes, and there is the usual abundance of information concerning university men and matters.

The Chap-Book is a unique little semi-monthly periodical, published by Stone & Kimball, largely in the interests of the books and authors that this young and enterprising firm represents. The second issue, for June 1, contains a quatrain by Mrs. Moulton; a review of "Mr. Parker's Sonnets," by Mr. Stoddard; "The Prayer in the Rose Garden," a poem by Bliss Carman; and four short sketches. It is a very "modern" affair, with some of the amusing affectations of the latest "school" about it.

In the Popular Science Monthly for July Mr. L. G. McPherson has a solid and sober article on "The Meaning of Corporations and Trusts," in which he maintains that both are a natural development and will in time assume their proper and helpful function in our industrial society. Some of the more important articles that follow are Professor Sully's first paper in his "Studies of Childhood — the Age of Imagination;" "The Great Bluestone Industry," by H. B. Ingram; "Lady Mary Wortley Montagu and Modern Bacteriology," by Mrs. H. M. Plunkett; and "Savagery and Survivals," by Prof. J. W. Black. The subject of the biographical sketch and portrait is Heinrich Hertz, a German electrician.

The International Journal of Ethics for July has a good variety of practical and theoretical matter. The Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour discusses "Naturalism and Ethics," and Mr. D. S. Miller more briefly "The Relation of 'Ought' and 'Is.'" Rev. H. Rashdall attempts to define "The Limits of Casuistry." "Effect of the Clerical Office upon Character," by the Rev. L. C. Stewardson, is a valuable and candid treatment of a subject too little treated by the professional preachers. Prof. Wm. Knight contributes a short paper on "Practical Ethics," and M. M. Mangasarian another on "The Punishment of Children." The book reviews keep well abreast of the ethical literature of the day.

With its issue for July, commencing Vol. XV, Romance has reduced its size, and changed its price from twenty-five cents to ten cents a number. The present issue gives a dozen short stories and sketches.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Prof. A. S. Isaacs of the University of the City of New York has received permission from the author and publisher to translate into English Prof. Max Koch's admirable History of German Literature, issued a few months ago in Germany. The work has been very favorably noticed in the press.

— Dr. Murray, who is passing the letter D of the New English Dictionary through the press, states that American readers can render a great assistance by noting early instances of all the terms of American politics, since this research is very difficult if undertaken in England. Examples of the use of such terms, duly authenticated by chapter and verse (author, edition, volume, page), with date, should be forwarded to "Dr. Murray, Oxford, England," no other address being necessary.

— Mr. T. Bailey Saunders will shortly publish, through Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., a Life of James Macpherson. The volume contains an account of the publication and influence of the Ossianic poems and the full story of Macpherson's famous quarrel with Dr. Johnson. The greater number of the letters, never previously printed, have been kindly supplied by the Marquess of Abergavenny, and some are from MSS. in the British Museum, while much of the information is from hitherto unpublished matter. A photogravure of the portrait by Romney forms the frontispiece.

— They have begun to make and print lists of the "most popular" books in Norway, from which, as thus far indicated, Charles Dickens seems to be the most popular of foreign authors. The Danish Peer Gynt is the best liked book of all.

— Macmillan & Co. are preparing a new edition of Jane Austen's novels in single volumes, illustrated by Hugh Thomson.

— Messrs. Longmans will publish this summer the lectures Professor Froude has delivered at Oxford on the life and letters of Erasmus.

— The second volume of Messrs. Williams & Norgate's Theological Translation series will be Vol. I of Professor Harnack's large work on the History of Dogma, not to be confounded, by the way, with a smaller work by the Berlin professor, of which an American translation appeared some time ago. The translation of the present volume has been made under the supervision of Prof. A. B. Bruce of the Free Church College, Glasgow, and the translator has had the benefit of the advance sheets of the third German edition, which has enabled him to embody in the translation Professor Harnack's latest conclusions, which differ in a marked degree from those expressed in former editions. Professor Harnack has written a new preface specially for this edition.

— Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have in preparation an edition of Coleridge, to be edited by Mr. Stopford Brooke.

— The American Academy of Political and Social Science has just published The Theory of Sociology, by Prof. Franklin H. Giddings.

— Arrangements have been completed in London for a uniform edition of Thomas Hardy's novels. More than one firm of publishers having an interest in Mr. Hardy's works, there have hitherto been obstacles in the way of a uniform edition which have now been cleared away. Osgood, McIlvaine & Co. will be the English publishers of the edition.

— A new work by Mr. D. G. Ritchie will shortly be added to their Library of Philosophy by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. The volume, which is entitled Natural Rights, is entirely new, with the exception of one chapter, of which an Italian translation has just been published.

— Mr. Edward Clodd will shortly issue, through Messrs. Longmans, an abridgment of his Story of Creation, under the title of A Primer of Evolution. The book will be copyrighted in the United States.

— A new edition of Mr. G. Barnett Smith's Life of Gladstone, brought down to the time of the ex-premier's resignation, is promised immediately by Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. Mr. G. W. E. Russell, M.P., has made similar additions to the "Life" of this eminent statesman which he contributed to the series entitled the Queen's Prime Ministers, edited by Mr. Stuart J. Reid, brother to Sir Wemyss Reid.

— A new work on Switzerland, by W. D. McCrackan, will soon be published by the Joseph Knight Co., Boston. It will be issued in two volumes, one with the title Romance Switzerland and the other Teutonic Switzerland. The first volume covers that portion of Switzerland where the French and Italian languages are spoken, and the second the German-speaking Cantons.

— A pleasing portrait of the venerable Rev. William Henry Furness, who recently celebrated his ninety-second birthday, is given in a recent number of the Chicago Inter-Ocean. Mr. Furness, according to the writer, Mr. Moses Handy, can still "preach a sermon, smoke a pipe, enjoy a play, or take a morning constitutional of a few miles, with as much zest as most men who are fifty years his junior. He is one of the most interesting men I ever met, almost reminding me of Gladstone in his clean and wholesome trend of thought, in his versatility, in his thorough permeation with the spirit of good-fellowship, and in his domestic virtues. He was a classmate of Ralph Waldo Emerson, and a bosom friend of Longfellow and Alcott."

— Mr. Albert Turner, for thirty years connected with the house of Fowler & Wells Co., is announced as the business manager of a new journalistic venture to be called Health, a journal of practical hygiene, issued by the Health Publishing Co., 84 Reade Street, New York. This company will take up the publication and sale of health literature.

— The first volume of the Memoirs of the Baron de Méneval, private secretary of Napoleon I, is to be published immediately by D. Appleton & Co. An edition of one thousand copies of Mr. W. M. Conway's great work, Climbing in the Himalayas, has been sold in England, and large editions have been sold in India and the colonies. The American edition, published by D. Appleton & Co., has met with the reception due "an epoch-making book." Some dainty little handy volumes of fiction are to be published this season in permanent covers by the Appletons. A story of New York and Newport, by Henry Goelet McVickar, will appear first under the original title of The Purple Light of Love. Mr. William Allen Butler, the author of Nothing to Wear, has revised a story which first appeared anonymously, entitled Mrs. Limber's Raffle, and there is a promise of a new book by Miss Kate Sanborn. A Daughter of Music, by G. Colmore, a novel which is attracting a remarkable degree of attention in England, is published in the Town and Country Library.

— In the new Walt Whitman Fellowship (International) these officers were elected at the organization meeting, held in Philadelphia, May 31, 1894: president, Daniel G. Brinton, Philadelphia; vice-presidents, Robert G. Ingersoll, New York; John Burroughs, West Park, N. Y.; Richard Maurice Bucke, London, Can.; Thomas B. Harned, Philadelphia; Francis Howard Williams, Philadelphia; Isaac Hull Platt, Lakewood, N. J.; council, Charles G. Garrison, Camden, N. J.; Horace L. Traubel, Camden, N. J.; John H. Johnston, New York; F. H. MacIntire, Philadelphia; Thomas Earle White, Philadelphia; Mrs. L. N. Fairchild, Boston; Miss Charlotte Porter, Boston; Henry L. Bonsall, Camden, N. J.; Wayland Hyatt Smith, Philadelphia; Joseph Fels, Philadelphia. On June 5, at a meeting of the council, Horace L. Traubel was elected secretary and treasurer. The constitution provides that any person may become a member of the fellowship by declaring himself such to the secretary, in writing, and upon payment of the annual due of two dollars.

— E. P. Dutton & Co. have in press a volume of stories by Mary D. Brine, called Margaret Arnold's Christmas and Other Stories, profusely illustrated.

— The Primary School, a new magazine for the primary teacher, is an expansion of the Primary School Journal, a monthly which completes its third year of life in this new form. The first page bears a table of contents that tells its own tale of helpfulness, and an excellent portrait of Froebel, a brief sketch of whose life is given within. The pages are plentifully illustrated and strong with practical educational articles and primary lessons. Varied "Busy Work" is a leading feature of this journal. It is to be issued monthly, at one dollar per year. E. L. Kellogg & Co. are the publishers, New York.

— Ginn & Co. issue Essays and Letters Selected from the Writings of Ruskin, edited by Mrs. Lois G. Hufford.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons have just ready a volume of Prose Fancies, by Richard Le Gallienne, with a portrait of the author by Wilson Steer; On and Off the Saddle: Characteristic Sights and Scenes from the Great Northwest to the Antilles, by Lispenard Rutgers; and in the Incognito Library three sketches under the title of the leading one, The Hon. Stanbury. They will publish shortly a student's edition of Washington Irving's Tales of a Traveller, edited, with an introduction and notes, for the use of reading classes and of instructors and students of English literature, by William Lyon Phelps of Yale. The Sketch-Book and Alhambra are in preparation. These volumes have been prepared with the special purpose of meeting the requirements for matriculation examinations in English literature at the colleges, and are printed on a clear, readable page. They announce a new story by Mrs. Rohlfs (Anna Katharine Green), entitled Miss Hurd: an Enigma.

— Richard Watson Gilder, the editor of the Century, is preparing for publication a complete edition of his poems, which will soon be brought out.

— There were eighteen thousand paid admissions to Shakespeare's birthplace in Stratford-on-Avon last year, a considerably smaller number than the year before.

— Poor Folk, translated from the Russian of F. Dostoievsky by Lena Milman, with an introduction by George Moore, is a new issue in the Keynote series, published by Roberts Brothers.

—Mr. Stanley J. Weyman is a barrister and, like so many barristers, has forsaken the law for literature. Born in 1855, he was educated at Shrewsbury and at Oxford, and was called to the bar in 1881. He clung to the law for nine years, then gave it up to devote himself wholly to novel-writing. He was contributing short stories to the Cornhill as early as 1883, and two years later, that is to say when he was thirty years of age, he wrote a novel at the suggestion of Mr. James Payn. It was a failure and, after going the round of the publishers in vain, was consigned to the flames. But it brought the writer valuable experience. "I learned," he says, "a great deal as to the value of incident and plot and the danger of any divergence from the story; for the story is the thing." In 1887 he wrote The House of the Wolf, which appeared serially in the English Illustrated Magazine and, after various vicissitudes, was published in book form by Messrs. Longmans & Co. The Story of Francis Cludde followed, and then came A Gentleman of France, which has made Mr. Weyman's name familiar to the readers of two continents. Mr. Weyman has been mainly influenced by four British novelists — Scott, Thackeray, Mr. Blackmore, and Mr. Stevenson. He greatly admires Lorna Doone, and he reads Mr. Stevenson's books again and again. Critics have pretended to find traces of the influence of Dumas in his tales, especially in A Gentleman of France, but we believe Mr. Weyman does not care for the author of Monte Cristo and does not read his novels. There is more of Scott than of Dumas in Mr. Weyman's most popular book, as readers of Quentin Durward may judge for themselves. The style is evidently modeled on that of Mr. Stevenson, who perhaps more than any other contemporary writer has influenced the younger generation of novelists. But Mr. Weyman has a distinct and original note of his own. — Publishers' Circular.

—The new building of Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, at 153, 155, and 157 Fifth Avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets, is now completed, and the firm has been occupying it since May 23. The importance of this removal is equaled by the celerity with which the mechanical part of moving has been accomplished. The first announcement of the firm's intention to move uptown was made on October 13 last, and it was not until some time after that the ground was opened and the foundations laid. The new building is a fine structure of white limestone, graceful, with classic simplicity, and has been erected by the Scribners exclusively for their own use. The first floor is given up entirely to retail stock, and impresses one at once by its roomy proportions, its liberal supply of light and air, and its handsome fittings. Now that the shelves are filled with books the effect upon the observer is more that of a handsome library than a bookstore. A broad flight of marble steps leads up to the second floor, on which are the publication offices of the firm and the manufacturing, advertising, and wholesale departments. The third floor is given up to the magazine department, the fourth floor to the subscription book department, while the fifth and sixth floors, as well as the basement, contain the stock. Two electric elevators facilitate access to all these various departments. The building is also lighted by electricity. This removal places the Scribners in the very center of the bookselling section of the city. One by one the various publishers have been gathering on Fifth Avenue and Twenty-third Street. Only a few are now left in the neighborhood of Astor Place, the former publishing center. This is the fifth removal of the firm of Scribners during their long career of forty-eight years. Throughout its career the firm has done no printing, but confined itself exclusively to book publishing. Its publications represent, in almost every case, the works of living authors. A notable feature of their business has always been a line of standard theological works. A large importing trade has also been an important part of their business, conducted for a long time under the name of Scribner & Welford, but now included under the name of Charles Scribner's Sons. Scribner's Monthly, published first in 1870 and sold to the Century Co. in 1882, and the new Scribner's Magazine, started in 1887, are other notable features of their career.

—The American monument to Keats, which is to be placed in the parish church at Hampstead, England, is primarily due to the enthusiasm and energy of Mr. Norwood Day of Norwood, Mass. In 1889 he urged upon Lowell, Dr. Parsons, Professor Norton, Messrs. Aldrich, Gilder, and others, that the American admirers of Keats ought to erect a memorial to him at Hampstead, where the poet wrote his "Ode to the Nightingale," where he met Fanny Brawne, and where he made his last home in England. Through the gifts of a hundred authors and artists of America the work is now done, and Mr. Day has arrived in England with a marble bust of the poet, the work of Miss Anne Whitney of Boston. Mr. Edmund Gosse is the English representative of the movement, and in the course of a letter to the London Times says:

> Lovers of Keats — and this is but a synonym for lovers of poetry — will presently receive a formal announcement of the date when the little ceremony of presenting and accepting the bust will be performed at Hampstead. So far I obey the duty which has been laid upon me by our American friends. Will you permit me to add one word for ourselves? Surely, while we accept this gracious gift from our transatlantic kinsfolk, we shall not be able to do so without some sense of shame at our own negligence in rites so appropriate and seemly. How long are we to be contented to accept from others monuments to those men of genius who are, after all, not theirs, but ours? In a few months a hundred years will have passed since the birth of one of the most illustrious and original of the long line of English poets, yet if there is any scheme on foot for the celebration of that event by Englishmen on English soil, I have not been fortunate enough to hear of it. There is no other country in the world that could have produced a Keats a hundred years ago, and yet could still point out no public monument to his memory. It is fortunate that America, at least, is sensitive about those national glories to which we seem perfectly indifferent.

—Mrs. Blaine is working steadily upon the life of her husband. The family have been living very quietly in the famous old red house on Lafayette Square this winter, and all have been doing literary work. Mrs. Blaine is to do more than collect the material for Gail Hamilton to write. She is a literary woman herself, and the two will collaborate. The son and the daughter help to get up the material.

—Twelve thousand copies of the first volume of Miss Emily Dickinson's poems are said to have been issued and seven thousand of the second volume. A collection of her letters will soon appear, edited by her friend, Mrs. David P. Todd of Amherst.

—The third volume of Canon Liddon's biography of Pusey will be issued by Messrs. Longmans in the autumn.

—After eighteen years Mr. Austin Dobson promises a second volume of Eighteenth Century Vignettes early in the fall.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

The Memoirs of Edmund Ludlow. 1625–1672. Edited by C. H. Firth, M.A. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $9.00

General Washington. By Gen. Bradley T. Johnson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Educational.

The Psychic Factor. An Outline of Psychology. By Charles Van Norden, D.D. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Object Teaching; or, Words and Things. By T. G. Rooper. E. L. Kellogg & Co.

Our Wonderful Bodies. Hutchinson's Physiological Series. First Book, 30c.; Second Book, 50c. Maynard, Merrill & Co.

Essays and Sketches.

A Burne-Jones Head, and Other Sketches. By Clara Sherwood Rollins. Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00

Prose Fancies. By Richard Le Gallienne. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Three Weeks in Politics. By John Kendrick Bangs. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Verona, and Other Lectures. By John Ruskin D.C.L., LL.D. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Fiction.

"In the Quarter." By Robert W. Chambers. F. T. Neely. 50c.

The Major in Washington City. Second series. F. T. Neely. 25c.

The Princess of Alaska. By Richard Henry Savage. F. T. Neely. 50c.

Up and Down the Nile. Illustrated. By Oliver Optic. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Invisible Hands. By F. Von Zobeltitz. Tr. by S. E. Boggs. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Carlotta's Intended, and Other Tales. By Ruth McEnery Stuart. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

The Light of Other Days. By Mrs. Forrester. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

An Interloper. A Novel. By Frances Mary Peard. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Romance of a Transport. By W. Clark Russell. Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00

Struthers, and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

The Speaker of the House. By Angelina Teal. Laird & Lee. 25c.

A Modern Magdalene. By Virna Woods. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

The Hon. Stanbury and Others. By Two. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

Six Years in Heaven. By Alex. C. McCleneghan. Laird & Lee. 50c.

The Grandee. By Armando Palacio Valdés. Tr. by Rachel Challice. London: William Heinemann.

The Husband of One Wife. By Mrs. Venn. Harper & Brothers. 60c.

A Daughter of Music. By G. Colmore. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Cleopatra. A Romance. By Georg Ebers. Translated by Mary J. Safford. In two volumes. D. Appleton & Co. 80c.

Red Diamonds. A Novel. By Justin McCarthy. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Miscellaneous.

Our Home Pets, and How to Keep Them Well and Happy. By Olive Thorne Miller. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Family Pocket Homœopathist. By D. A. Baldwin, M.D. Rochester, N. Y.: E. Darrow & Co. 50c.

Children's Singing Games. Collected and edited by Alice B. Gomme. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Matter, Ether, and Motion. By A. E. Dolbear. Revised edition, enlarged. Lee & Shepard. $2.00

THREE JUNE BOOKS.

THE DANCING FAUN. A Novel. By FLORENCE FARR. With title-page by Aubrey Beardsley. American copyright edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

POOR FOLK. A Novel. By FEDOR DOSTOIEVSKY. Translated from the Russian by Lena Milman. With a critical introduction by George Moore. American copyright edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

These are the only American editions of two books about to appear in England, which will surely create a sensation by their strength and originality. They are both exceedingly clever, and show deep insight into the actualities of life.

THE WEDDING GARMENT. A Tale of the Life to Come. By LOUIS PENDLETON, author of "In the Wire Grass," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00. White and gold, $1.25. A new view of our future life as it appears to a Swedenborgian.

SOME RECENT BOOKS.

COLUMBIAN KNOWLEDGE SERIES.

Total Eclipses of the Sun. By MABEL LOOMIS TODD.

Public Libraries in America. By W. I. FLETCHER, Librarian of the Amherst College Library.

Edited by Professor Todd, of Amherst College. A series of timely and readable monographs on subjects of permanent interest. Scientific, but untechnical, and illustrated. Each, 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

By Moorland and Sea. By FRANCIS A. KNIGHT. Illustrated by the Author. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Wayside Sketches. By EBEN J. LOOMIS. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Art for America. By WILLIAM ORDWAY PARTRIDGE. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

AT ALL BOOKSTORES. POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Publishers, BOSTON.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR JULY.

The Meaning of Corporations and Trusts. By LOGAN G. MCPHERSON.

Points out the causes and tendencies that are producing combinations of capital and of labor.

Studies of Childhood. I. The Age of Imagination. By JAMES SULLY, M. A., LL. D.

The first of a series by the eminent English psychologist. Much of the curious activity of childish minds is explained in this article.

A Colonial Weather Service. (Illustrated.) By ALEXANDER MCADIE.

An account of the observations and correspondence of Thomas Jefferson and Prof. James Madison, in which our modern weather service is foreshadowed.

Sunshine through the Woods. (Illustrated.) By BYRON D. HALSTED.

Describes the texture of various well-known woods, with pictures showing the grain of each by transmitted light.

OTHER ARTICLES:

HOMES OF SOCIAL INSECTS (illustrated); LATITUDE AND VERTEBRÆ; DEATH OF PROF. BILLROTH (with Portrait); THE GREAT BLUESTONE INDUSTRY, (illustrated); LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU AND MODERN BACTERIOLOGY; JOSEPH NEEF: A PESTALOZZIAN PIONEER; KILN-DRYING HARD WOOD; ON ACQUIRED FACIAL EXPRESSION; SAVAGERY AND SURVIVALS; SKETCH OF HEINRICH HERTZ (with Portrait).

EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

NO EXPERIMENT.

HUNDREDS FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,

Actually spoken and mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership $5.00 for each language.

OF THOUSANDS

All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

MEISTERSCHAFT PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON.

MEISTERSCHAFT SOLD

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

NOW READY.

LIFE OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

BY

PAUL SABATIER.

Translated from the French by LOUISE SEYMOUR HOUGHTON.

8vo. $2.50.

No work of recent years has created a greater stir in literary and religious circles than Paul Sabatier's masterly work. The interest aroused has been widespread and sincere, prominent reviewers on the Continant and in England pronouncing it a biography of the very first rank in historical and literary value. It has passed rapidly through numerous French editions, and is now, in answer to an eager demand, issued in an English edition for American readers.

FROM ALPHONSE DAUDET:

"For long, very long, nothing has moved me so deeply as this lofty and simple story."

THE LONDON EXPOSITOR:

"A book which can hardly fail to be monumental. It may stand on the same shelf with Villari's 'Life of Savonarola.'"

N. Y. EXAMINER:

"M. Sabatier has sought to present Francis as he actually was, emphasizing the human side of his character. He has succeeded admirably; better, we think, than any of his predecessors."

THE LONDON SATURDAY REVIEW:

"We have seldom seen so masterly and careful a criticism. It is a remarkable and excellent book; nor, great as is the progress which the French historical school has recently made, have we seen a better example of it."

⁂ Sold by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

JULY

166 Pages; 74 Illustrations.

The Golden House.
A Story. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Part I. With 7 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

My First Visit to New England.
By WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. Third Part. With 6 Illustrations.

The Harvard and Yale Boat-Race.
By W. A. BROOKS. With 5 Illustrations by C. D. GIBSON.

In Fly-Time.
A Story. By ROBERT GRANT. With 6 Illustrations by C. D. GIBSON.

The President at Home.
By HENRY LOOMIS NELSON. With 6 Illustrations.

Specimen Jones.
By OWEN WISTER. With 4 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

The United States Naval Gun Factory.
By Commander THEODORE F. JEWELL, U. S. N. With 5 Illustrations by GEORGE W. BRECK.

The Evening Party.
A Story. By GRACE KING.

Vignettes of Manhattan. VII. Before the Break of Day.
By BRANDER MATTHEWS. With 3 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

An Australian's Impressions of America.
By Miss C. H. SPENCE.

Un Mauvais Quart d'Heure.
A Summer Sketch. By CHARLES STANLEY REINHART. With 5 Illustrations by the Author.

The Storage Battery of the Air.
By ALEXANDER MCADIE.

Ebb and Flow.
A Story. By EVA ANSTRUTHER.

Snap-Shots at the Olden Times.
By CHARLES D. DESHLER.

Trilby.
A Novel. By GEORGE DU MAURIER. Part VII. With 15 Illustrations by the Author.

Editorial Departments as usual.

SUBSCRIPTION, $4.00 A YEAR.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers' New Books

Perlycross.
A Novel. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

The Exiles, and Other Stories.
By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "Van Bibber and Others," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Our Home Pets:
How to Keep Them Well and Happy. By OLIVE THORNE MILLER. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A Prodigal in Love.
A Novel. By EMMA WOLF, Author of "Other Things Being Equal." Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A Traveler from Altruria.
Romance. By W. D. HOWELLS. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50.

Literary and Social Silhouettes.
By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. ("Harper's American Essayists.")

The Expert Waitress.
A Manual for Pantry, Kitchen and Dining-Room. By ANNE FRANCES SPRINGSTEED. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

Orations of George William Curtis.
Orations and Addresses of GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS. Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. Three Volumes. With Photogravure Portrait. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $3.50 per volume.

Harper's Black and White Series.
Recent Issues: Five O'clock Tea. Farce. By W. D. HOWELLS.—Three Weeks in Politics. By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.—The Mouse-Trap. Farce. By W. D. HOWELLS. Illustrated. 32mo, Cloth, 50 cents each.

Carlotta's Intended,
And Other Stories. By RUTH MCENERY STUART, Author of "A Golden Wedding," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Theatricals.
Two Comedies: "Tenants"—"Disengaged." By HENRY JAMES. Post 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges, $1.75.

Pembroke.
A Novel. By MARY E. WILKINS, Author of "Jane Field," "A Humble Romance," "A New England Nun," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

An Interloper.
A Novel. By FRANCES MARY PEARD, Author of "Catherine," "The Swing of the Pendulum," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Potter's Thumb.
A Novel. By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Pastime Stories.
By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. Illustrated by A. B. FROST. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Cadet Days.
A Story of West Point. By CAPTAIN CHARLES KING, Author of "A War-Time Wooing," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Jewish Question.
The Jewish Question and the Mission of the Jews. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.75.

Life's Little Ironies.
A Set of Tales; With some Colloquial Sketches entitled A Few Crusted Characters. By THOMAS HARDY, Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Wee Ones of Japan.
By MAE ST. JOHN BRAMHALL. Illustrations by C. D. WELDON. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

The above works are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. HARPER'S CATALOGUE will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 14 JULY 1894

Vol. XXV No. 14 Whole No. 510

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY.

NEW FICTION.

Claudia Hyde. By Frances Courtenay Baylor, author of "Juan and Juanita." $1.25.

"It is a real pleasure to read such a story, strong and graceful, fresh, picturesque, ennobling and fascinating from the first page to the last."—The Congregationalist.

"A delightful sketch of Southern life in later times. . . . One of the novels which should be read without skipping." —Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Altogether a taking story."—New York Times.

His Vanished Star. A striking story of East Tennessee mountain life, scenery and characters, told with remarkable vigor by Charles Egbert Craddock (Miss Mary N. Murfree). 16mo, $1.25.

The White Crown, and Other Stories. By Herbert D. Ward. 16mo, $1.25.

"Mr. Ward's stories, every one, have the supreme merit of being interesting."—The Churchman, New York.

Bayou Folk. By Kate Chopin. 16mo, $1.25.

"These Creole and Acadian tales are so fine that no words save 'charming' and 'fascinating' will serve to describe them."—Portland Transcript.

In Exile, and Other Stories. A tasteful volume of excellent short stories by Mary Hallock Foote, author of "The Chosen Valley," "The Led-Horse Claim," "John Bodewin's Testimony," "The Last Assembly Ball," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and Other Stories. By Gertrude Smith. 16mo, $1.25.

"Six strong and delightfully breezy fresh tales."—Boston Journal."

Two Bites at a Cherry, with Other Tales. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. $1.25.

"Nowhere else has he displayed his versatile gifts, the pathos, the quaint humor, the delicate wit, the refined feeling and the felicity of style by which his works are distinguished to better advantage."—Home Journal, New York.

The Son of a Prophet. By George Anson Jackson. $1.25.

"We do not hesitate to rank this story in respect to both interest and power with 'Ben Hur' and the 'Prince of India.'"—Boston Congregationalist.

No Heroes. A Story for Boys. By Blanche Willis Howard. Illustrated. 75 cents.

"Blanche Willis Howard tells a vigorous and sparkling story of a boy who is not improbably good, but perfectly natural and nice."—New York Tribune.

A Native of Winby, and Other Tales. By Sarah Orne Jewett. $1.25.

"It would be hard to name stories that are better than are four at least of these."—New York Evening Post.

Two Strings to His Bow. By Walter Mitchell. 16mo, $1.25. A novel with a skillful plot, plenty of dramatic situation and incident, and told in a very attractive style.

The Story of Dan. A strong, well-written, thoroughly interesting story of Irish peasant life, by M. B. Francis. 16mo, $1.25.

EXCELLENT STORIES.

The Petrie Estate. By Helen Dawes Brown. 16mo, $1.25.

"Helen Dawes Brown is pleasantly remembered as the author of 'Two College Girls,' an extremely well-constructed and entertaining story, which gave promise of better attainments in the future. These expectations are delightfully realized in 'The Petrie Estate,' a story with many felicitous touches."—Boston Transcript.

Polly Oliver's Problem. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. Illustrated. 16mo, $1.00.

"As a story for girls the book is unexcelled, for, aside from the interest in Polly's solution of her problem, there are many lessons of courage and hopefulness that are good for girls to think about."—Public Opinion, Washington, D. C.

Rachel Stanwood. By Lucy Gibbons Morse. $1.25.

"A pretty romance runs side by side with anti-slavery fairs, the Hutchinson concerts, Wendell Phillips's eloquent speeches, and the strong, quiet influence of Lydia Maria Child."—New York Christian Advocate.

A Protegee of Jack Hamlin's, and Other Tales. By Bret Harte. $1.25. A new volume of Mr. Harte's inimitable stories, nearly all relating to California and the West.

HISTORICAL NOVELS.

By EDWIN LASSETTER BYNNER.

Agnes Surriage. 16mo, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Begum's Daughter. 16mo, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

Zachary Phips. 16mo, $1.25.

Three historical novels of great value as pictures of the times to which they relate, and of unusual interest as stories.

DELIGHTFUL STORIES.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

"Miss Jewett's stories are marvelously true to life, delightful in humor, exquisite in style, and charming in their spirit."

A Marsh Island. A Novel. $1.25.

A Country Doctor. A Novel. $1.25.

Deephaven. Short Stories. $1.25.

Old Friends and New., $1.25.

Country By-Ways. Stories. $1.25.

The Mate of the Daylight and Friends Ashore. Short Stories. $1.25.

The King of Folly Island, and Other People. $1.25.

A White Heron, and Other Stories. $1.25.

Strangers and Wayfarers. $1.25.

Tales of New England. $1.00.

Play Days. For Children. $1.50.

Betty Leicester. A Story for Girls. $1.25.

A Native of Winby, and Other Tales. $1.25. A delightful new book.

OUT-DOOR BOOKS.

ALEXANDER BLACK.

Photography Indoors and Out. A Book for Amateur Photographers. With illustrations. 16mo, $1.25.

"One of the most interesting and instructive books we have yet seen on photography."—Canadian Photographic Journal.

BURROUGHS'S WORKS.

Each volume, 16mo, gilt top, $1.25; the set, 8 volumes, uniform, $10.00; half calf, $18.00.

Indoor Studies.
Signs and Seasons.
Wake-Robin.
Winter Sunshine.
Birds and Poets.
Locusts and Wild Honey.
Pepacton. A Summer Voyage.
Fresh Fields.

"Pleasanter reading, to those who love the country, with all its enchanting sights and sounds, cannot be imagined." —The Spectator (London).

OLIVE THORNE MILLER.

Bird-Ways. 16mo, $1.25.
In Nesting Time. 16mo, $1.25.
Little Brothers of the Air. 16mo, $1.25.
A Bird-Lover in the West. 16mo, $1.25.

"Among the many agreeable studies of bird life and bird character, none have been more charming than those from the pen of Olive Thorne Miller."—Christian Union (New York).

MARY CAROLINE ROBBINS.

The Rescue of an Old Place. 16mo, $1.25.

"Mrs. Robbins is entitled to the gratitude of every one who wishes to make a country place beautiful."—Louise Chandler Moulton.

HENRY D. THOREAU.

A new Riverside Edition of Thoreau's Works. In ten volumes. Crown 8vo, $1.50 each; the set, $15.00; half calf, $27.50.

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers.
Walden; or, Life in the Woods.
The Maine Woods.
Cape Cod.
Early Spring in Massachusetts.
Summer.
Autumn.
Winter.
Excursions.
Miscellanies. With a Biographical Sketch, by Ralph Waldo Emerson, and General Index.

"There is no such comprehensive observation as his recorded in literature, united with a style so racy, so incisive, so pictorial."—George William Curtis.

BRADFORD TORREY.

A Rambler's Lease. 16mo, $1.25.
Birds in the Bush. 16mo, $1.25.
The Foot-Path Way. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

"He is not merely a philosopher and a sayer of happy things. He observes nature keenly and feels as sympathetically."—The Auk.

SWEETSER'S GUIDE-BOOKS.

Carefully revised for 1894.
New England. 6 maps, 11 plans.
The White Mountains. 6 maps, 6 panoramas.
The Maritime Provinces. 4 maps, 4 plans.
Red cloth, $1.50 each.

"Incomparable handbooks for the tourist."—New York Evening Post.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I.,

From 1802 to 1815. By BARON CLAUDE-FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL, Private Secretary to Napoleon. Edited by his Grandson, BARON NAPOLEON JOSEPH DE MÉNEVAL. With Portraits and Autograph Letters. In three volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00 per volume. Volume I. now ready.

These volumes furnish a picture of Napoleon's daily life which is believed to be unexcelled in point of closeness of observation and graphic detail by any other narrative. That Méneval was not the man to neglect his opportunities is shown abundantly by the glimpses of character revealed in his diaries and notes. Yet, for personal and other reasons, his invaluable recollections were not given to the world. They have been treasured by his family until the present time of profound interest in Napoleonic history. Of Napoleon's relations with Josephine and Marie Louise—of all the features of his domestic and social existence—Méneval had abundant knowledge, for he shared Napoleon's private life; and since he was sitting at the fountain head of information he is able to shed new light on many features of the Napoleonic campaigns. His narrative is most interesting; its historical importance need not be emphasized.

Outlaw and Lawmaker.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL-PRAED, author of "Christina Chard," "December Roses," etc. No. 146, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In this romance of Australian life Mrs. Campbell-Praed returns to the field in which she gained her first success. "Outlaw and Lawmaker," a story of love and adventure, is characterized by unflagging interest, and will be ranked among the strongest of the novels which have had their scenes in the antipodes.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

WANTED.—A Retail Salesman in a New York bookstore. Applicants will please state age, qualification and business experience. Address "Books," care of Publishers' Weekly, New York City.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON.
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

None Genuine unless bearing the Trade Mark.

MEISTERSCHAFT French, German, Spanish, Italian,

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

PRACTICAL

MEISTERSCHAFT PUBLISHING CO.

196 Summer St.
Boston, Mass.

LINGUISTRY

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

UNMOUNTED PHOTOGRAPHS

of Ancient and Modern Works of Art, reproductions of famous paintings, sculpture and architecture, with views from all parts of the world. Send 15 cents for catalogues of 14,000 subjects (including 1893 supplement)

World's Fair Views
- - AND - -
Art at the Fair

SPECIAL LIST OF 130 SUBJECTS.

Now Ready.

Lantern Slides to order from any of our Subjects. Glass Panels for Holiday Gifts. Photograph mounting in Albums or on Cards a Specialty. Albums Supplied. Yacht and Squadron Photos, New England Coast Views.

SOULE PHOTOGRAPH CO.,

PUBLISHERS.

338 L Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PRINCIPAL AGENCIES.
NEW YORK: E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23rd Street.
CHICAGO: M. O'Brien & Son, 208 Wabash Avenue.
PHILADELPHIA: J. E. McClees & Co., Ltd., 1417 Chestnut Street.
WASHINGTON: W. H. Veerhoff, 1217 F. Street.
SAN FRANCISCO: W. K. Vickery, 224 Post St.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 14 JULY 1894 No. 14

CONTENTS

The Friendship of Nature 211
Man and Woman 211
Through Tibet 212
His Vanished Star 212
Christopher Columbus and the Jews . . 213
Cleopatra 213
Switzerland, Romance and Teutonic . . 213
Recollections of a Virginian 214
A True Teacher 214
Maximilian and Carlotta 215
My Paris Note-Book 215

Original Poetry:

Two Destinies. W. L. Shoemaker . . . 216
Verona 216
The Grandee 216
London Letter 216

Fiction:

Claudia Hyde 218
Two Strings to His Bow 218
The Wedding Garment 218
Salem Kittredge and Other Stories . . 218
The Trespasser 218
The Flight of the "Swallow" 218
Belle-Plante and Cornelius 218
An Interloper 218
Up and Down the Nile 218

Minor Notices:

Old English Ballads 219
Boethius and Troilus 219
Prose Fancies 219
The Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America 220
The First American Wood Engraver . . . 220
Periods of European History 220
The Gypsy Road 220
The Story of Our Planet 220
The Life and Teachings of Jesus . . . 220
Sermons of Courage and Cheer . . . 220
The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ . . . 220
The Snake Dance of the Moquis . . . 221
On and Off the Saddle 221
Periodicals 222
News and Notes 222
Publications Received 224

THE FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE.*

THIS "New England chronicle of birds and flowers" is a pleasant handbook, well worth dropping into the corner of a trunk or slipping into a coat pocket at the beginning of the vacation. In small compass it says many suggestive things. From May Day to snowfall we are led along by a keen-eyed guide, who shows us witcheries that we might easily have overlooked. At the outset it is admitted that "here in New England we have no calendar of nature, no rigid law of season or of growth. The climate, a caprice, a wholly eerie thing, sets tradition at defiance and forces our poets to contradict each other. The flower which one declares the harbinger of spring may be a lazy vanguard in another year; the fringed gentian set by Bryant in frayed and barren fields, frosty and solitary, usually follows the cardinal flower in late September."

With genuine affection "The Story of a Garden" is told: "Nature began it, and, following her master touch, the hand and brain of a man, impelled by a reverent purpose, evolved its shaping. . . . What endless possibilities creep into the garden with every barrow of wood earth! How many surprises cling about the roots of the plant you hope to transfer uninjured from its home!" Thus in a mat of club moss came the seed of a shy orchid, the dark pink Indian moccasin.

Even winter is not viewed as a dead season by this close observer. "There is no winter or age for the heart that feels nature's throbbings and crowns the earth's beauty with human brotherhood." In confirmation an extract is given from an unpublished letter written by Dr. Holmes. The title of the little book is well chosen, for is not friendship compounded of love and knowledge? Both will be stimulated by these studies, at once accurate and poetical.

MAN AND WOMAN.*

THIS "anthropological and psychological study of those secondary sexual differences which recent investigation has shown to exist among civilized human races" is a volume of extreme value. Mr. Ellis occupies the true scientific standpoint; and he has endeavored, with great industry, to gather from all quarters the most exact information concerning his subject — those differences between the two sexes not due to the essentially reproductive organism. Such secondary differences are the amount and position of the hair, the qualities of voice, the shape of the skull, and the relationship of the parts of the brain to each other. In his various chapters the author takes a thorough review of all these topics, treating by turns the growth and proportions of the body, the pelvis, the head (including the brain and the skull), the senses, motion, the intellectual impulse, metabolism (the process of renewal of the tissues), the viscera, the functional periodicity of women, hypnotic phenomena, the affectability of women, the artistic impulse, morbid psychic phenomena, the variational tendency of men, and natality and mortality.

Under each of these headings Mr. Ellis first inquires what is actually known concerning the likenesses and differences of the two sexes. In numerous directions he finds, as a simple fact, that very little is scientifically known, and he has no hesitation in proclaiming this practical ignorance. He is extremely careful to refrain from those easy generalizations which vitiate the majority of discussions of woman's position, work, or sphere, and he appears singularly free from prejudices for or against the conservative or the radical view of her "emancipation." We can imagine no more profitable study than the careful reading of this book for any one who would speak or write, in public or in private, on any phase of the "woman question." Mr. Ellis' competence and fairness will appear to some extent in the few quotations we can make from a book which handles subjects of vital concern in a very satisfactory manner.

One of the most important truths concerning the historical position of woman is brought out in the introduction. Her status in savage society is often represented as one of slavery almost, on account of her bodily weakness. In fact, as is here shown by an abundance of evidence, the woman is much more nearly the equal of the man in strength under savagery than under civilization; and > while among many races women have been to a greater or less extent in subordination to their more powerful mates, on the whole the wider control which women have had over the means of production, as well as the skill of women in diplomacy, have given them influence and even authority.

In respect to bodily proportions and growth, it is shown that "women are more precocious than men; in women there is an earlier arrest of development. As a result of these two facts, the proportions of women tend to approach those of small men and children. This greater youthfulness of physical type in women is a very radical characteristic, and its influence vibrates to the most remote psychic recesses." In respect to cerebral development, "men possess no relative superiority of brain mass; the superiority in brain mass, so far as it exists, is on women's side. This, however, implies no intellectual superiority, but is merely a characteristic of short people and children. Nor is there any well-marked sexual arrangement of the nervous elements which implies relative inferiority on one side or the other. The parietal predominance of man is possibly such a character; but, as we have seen, this predominance is so inconspicuous that it has been possible in the past to attribute it to woman. From the present standpoint of brain anatomy and brain physiology there is no ground for attributing any superiority to one sex over another."

Mr. Ellis, as a man of science, sides with Coleridge, the poet, in regard to a matter which is the subject of much confusion in the common mind:

> There is some interest in considering how women have obtained their reputation for delicate sensory perceptions. On this point there can, I think, be little doubt. It is due to a popular confusion of two totally distinct nervous qualities — sensibility and irritability, or, as it is perhaps better called, affectability. The first means precision and intensity of perception of stimulus; the second is the readiness of motor response to stimulus. These two nerv> ous qualities may, and usually do, vary independently. The clear distinction between sensibility and irritability in the present connection has been of late clearly stated by Sergi and by Lombroso and Ferrero, but the keen intuition of Coleridge had long before noticed that an important sexual difference is the greater irritability of women, the deeper sensibility of men.

---

*The Friendship of Nature. By Mabel Osgood Wright. Macmillan & Co, 75c.

*The Contemporary Science Series. Man and Woman: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By Havelock Ellis. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Mr. Ellis' main conclusion on the relation of the sexes is that of sensible people everywhere, who will be glad to have the voice of common sense confirmed by that of impartial science — which, indeed, is usually but an extension of common sense:

> Any reader who has turned to this book for facts or arguments bearing on the everlasting discussion regarding the "alleged inferiority of women," and who has followed me so far, will already have gathered the natural conclusion we reach on this point. We may regard all such discussion as absolutely futile and foolish. If it is a question of determining the existence and significance of some particular physical or psychic sexual difference, a conclusion may not be impossible. To make any broad statement of the phenomena is to recognize that no general conclusion is possible. Now and again we come across facts which group themselves with a certain degree of uniformity, but as we continue we find other equally important facts which group themselves with equal uniformity in another sense. The result produces compensation. Thus we find that the special liability of women to be affected by minor vital oscillations is balanced by a special resistance to more serious oscillations; that against the affectability of women we must place their disvulnerability. Again, the greater variability of men, while it produces many brilliant and startling phenomena, also produces a greater proportion of worthless or even harmful deviations, and the balance is thus restored with the more equable level of women. In the intellectual region men possess greater aptitude for dealing with the more remote and abstract interests of life; women have, at the least, as great an aptitude in dealing with the immediate practical interests of life. Women, it is true, remain nearer than men to the infantile state; but, on the other hand, men approach more nearly than women to the apelike and senile state. The more clearly and broadly we investigate the phenomena the more emphatically these compensations stand out. It could scarcely be otherwise. A species in which the maternal half exhibited a general inferiority of vital functions could scarcely survive; still less could it attain the somewhat special and peculiar position which — however impartially we may look at the matter — can scarcely be denied to the human species.

We regretfully leave unnoticed very many points of interest in this most significant and illuminating book — such as the treatment of criminality, dexterity in the sexes, the artistic impulse, the causes of the deceptiveness of women as compared with men, and the hypnotic and religious phenomena in the world of womankind. On all such matters Mr. Ellis is not an advocate of either sex, but a careful inquirer after truth. He has no fear that movements for emancipating woman will unsex her and drive out nature. We may well share his confidence:

> An exaggerated anxiety lest natural law be overthrown is misplaced. The world is not so insecurely poised. We may preserve an attitude of entire equanimity in the face of social readjustment. Such readjustment is either the outcome of wholesome natural instinct, in which case our social structure will be strengthened and broadened, or it is not; and if not, it is unlikely to become organically ingrained in the species.

THROUGH TIBET.*

To trace the route of the journey described in this volume open the map of Asia and discover the vast mountain plateau lying between India on the west and China on the east — a region lifted up to the height nearly of the summit of Mont Blanc, seamed with rivers, dotted with lakes, buttressed with mountain ranges, peopled by nomads, cold as arctic latitudes in winter, sterile and inhospitable in summer, dominated by storms, priest-ridden by the lamas, trackless, townless, verdureless, except for some pastures and occasional oases, swept by keen winds or parched by a pitiless sun. That is Tibet. The Himalayas are its southern boundary; its northern boundary may be said to be almost unknown. Across this wild and lonely country, from west to east, from the Indus of India to the Yang-tse-Kiang of China, and down the latter to Hankau and Shanghai, and so back to India, went the author of this volume, a captain of the Bengal Cavalry, in the summer and autumn of 1891 and the early winter of 1892. He crossed the Tibetan frontier on the west near the first of July and reached Shanghai near the end of March; say 2,700 miles in 270 days, or an average of ten miles a day, a good rate of progress considering the odds against him.

The story of the expedition is simply but circumstantially told in diary form — the entry under each day giving the altitude, distance traveled, and the number of the camp, which latter corresponds to a number on the map inserted at the beginning of the book, so that with the map spread open the reader can follow the author step by step and day by day. His sole European companion was Dr. Thorold of the Indian medical service. His servants included a native (Indian) surveyor and orderly, a cook, and the necessary drivers for the caravan. The beasts of burden were yaks and ponies. The outfit included scientific instruments, apparatus for preserving specimens, medicines, the warmest clothing and bedding, firearms and ammunition, Shakespeare, Napier's Peninsular War, and Carlyle's Sartor Resartus.

So accoutred and equipped our expeditionists set forth upon their long and arduous journey across this bleak and barren land — a land, as we have said, of lofty elevation, cut up into rounded hills and broad and open valleys; of no trees and few shrubs; of pastures tramped over by the wild yak, the antelope, and the gazelle; of a rude and sparse pastoral people living on their flocks and herds in tents of hair — a cowardly, faithless, and immoral people; a land of polyandry and Buddhist priesthood; of avarice and dishonesty; of wool production and tea consumption; of a few poor flowering plants and some nourishing grasses; of salt lakes and savage brigands; of frozen streams and snowy horizons; a land where the thermometer shows a range of 80° between midday and midnight; a land where snow falls in August and grass grows green in December; a land great for game both large and small; a land of perpetual surprises, contradictions, and disappointments, where only an occasional prospect pleases and every man is vile.

The story of the nine months' tramp across this mountain desert, this abomination of desolation, is a monotonous tale of exposure, hardship, danger, pluck, perseverance, patience, fortitude, and indomitable purpose. We will not say that only an Englishman could do it, for a Frenchman, M. Bonvallot, with his imperial protégé, has done the same, or nearly the same, before; and have not two Americans been just now doing something like it on bicycles?

HIS VANISHED STAR.*

Miss MURFREE again leads us into that province where, thus far, she is the exclusive guide. Against the background of Tennessee mountains and mists, whose varying phases are poetically and polysyllabically noted, she points out a group of "moonshiners" pursuing their illicit work and living out their primitive loves and hates. Only one outsider comes among them, an architect, who plans a great summer hotel in the picturesque wilderness. Their antipathy to this project takes very definite form, and there is much clashing of strong wills.

It is needless to say that the different types are clearly indicated — Cap'n Lucy, with his caustic wit; Taft, with his bold and scheming selfishness; Larrabee, with his essential nobility; the silent Julia; the optimistic Adelècia; the hospitable Mrs. Larrabee; and that phenomenally prim and keen little person known as "Sis."

Despite their narrow life and their uncouth dialect, these dramatis personæ are "servigrous" enough to command the reader's interest after it is once enlisted. How soon this may occur depends upon his liking for deliberation in the description of environment and motives. The boy who told his teacher that he found it advisable to begin at the twelfth page of any story is typical of a class who will be impatient with many passages of His Vanished Star, and Miss Murfree's stanchest admirers must admit that somewhat greater simplicity would make her style more musical and effective. For instance, who does not long to weed out a few long words in the following sentences: "His partners in the undertaking had not been induced to cast their lot with his save by the exercise of infinite suavities of crafty eloquence, overpowering doubt and fear, and indisputable demonstrations of disproportionate profits in the very air. One was a seer in a commercial sort, an adept in prognosticating unexpected expenses for which no covenant of provision had been entered into, and he beheld full-armed disaster menacing every plan save that of his own preference." But such heaviness of touch vanishes when the terse dialogue of the mountaineers is to be recorded. Evidently this is done with great precision. After all a ponderous movement rather befits the unfolding of this strong, elemental story.

---

* Diary of a Journey Across Tibet. By Capt. Hamilton Bower. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

* His Vanished Star. By Charles Egbert Craddock. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS AND THE JEWS.*

EVERY expedition or party of exploration must be well supplied with money. In the Middle Ages the Jews, who were allowed to shear the Gentiles as sheep led to the slaughter, usually supplied the needed cash for war or adventure. Sometimes the money was extorted by red-hot pinchers, and often for the glory of God in the Inquisition; but probably, in the great majority of cases, it was obtained by simply asking for it and paying roundly the usury specified. It was long ago a matter of suspicion that Columbus was aided in his venture across the "sea of darkness" by Israelites with fat pocketbooks. The author of this volume discussed thirty-six years ago the question whether the Jews assisted in the discoveries made by Columbus. Now, in a volume of real historical value, he settles the question in the affirmative; and he succeeds, we think, in depriving Queen Isabella of the credit of being the chief or the sole promoter of the expeditions and discoveries of Columbus. Saint Colon was undoubtedly sustained by his strong religious faith, but it is equally certain that he had an eye on the main chance, and especially on the gold mine which he hoped to exploit in that "Xipangu" which he expected to find. In short, it is evident that Columbus' visage was like that alleged to be visible upon the statue of Benjamin Franklin in front of the Boston City Hall — for not a few who gaze thereon declare that they discover a Dr.-Jekyll-and-Mr.-Hyde duality of expression.

Dr. Kayserling has produced a book of high literary and historical value; he visited Spain in order to complete his collection of material by exploring the Spanish archives and libraries. Such documents as he found were transcribed and are printed in full in the appendix, forming a thesaurus which historical students will highly appreciate. The author's manuscript has been translated by Charles Gross, Ph.D., assistant professor of history in Harvard College. Good use of the manuscripts is made in the text, and it seems impossible to doubt that among Columbus' best financial supporters were the Jews of the Iberian Peninsula. These people, under the name of "Marranos," figured outwardly as orthodox Christians, but inwardly were unchanged Jews, as eager for conscience and for money as the other hypocrites around them. The author seems to vitiate his work by introducing very uncertain derivations like that of the name of Guanahani, which a ballad asserts to have been derived from the utterances of Hebrew sailors to their Jewish comrades. Furthermore, he goes rather unnecessarily into the question of the identification of the lost ten tribes of Israel with the aborigines of America. It is true, however, that the author merely mentions these things, without giving the seal of his approbation to questionable theories. The book is written in an interesting style, and proves that the large sums of money which had been taken from the banished Jews were appropriated by the crown and used by the Spanish Government to further the enterprises of Columbus. The author closes with a tribute to the United States of America as the land where the light of freedom first shone for the adherents of Judaism.

CLEOPATRA.*

GEORG EBERS has drawn a vivid picture of the Egyptian queen, a picture which shows that he has studied faithfully all existing sources of information in order to reconstruct a character which should seem to him consistent with admitted facts. He says in the preface that while the Roman poets and authors admired her beauty and gifts of intellect, they could hardly be expected to estimate correctly the personal qualities of one opposed to the state, who had succeeded in enchaining both Cæsar and Antony. Yet Horace, even in the hymn written to celebrate the victory over Antony and Cleopatra, calls the fallen queen "a woman capable of no baseness." Dr. Ebers follows Plutarch closely in his descriptions of the days after Actium, and the closing scenes are written with a vigor that does much to atone for the multiplicity of detail that crowds the rest of the book and weakens somewhat the interest. We are confronted at first with many characters, whose place in the book it is not quite easy to determine, and we find ourselves continually turning back to pick up some thread that has been dropped.

A third of the book must be read before Cleopatra herself appears, although her influence is felt from the beginning, and the story of her early life is so narrated as to indicate her ambition and the devotion which she inspired in the hearts of her friends and attendants. At the opening of the book Alexandria is impatiently awaiting news of the battle of Actium amid alternations of hope and dread. The story of the flight, Antony's withdrawal to the sea-bound retreat, the overtures towards reconciliation, the dramatic meeting, the closing days of revel amid the certainty of approaching ruin, and the final scenes of disaster follows. An important feature of the book is the love story of Barine, a beautiful young widow, which affords the needed foil to the tragedy of the great queen. Barine loves and is beloved by Dion, but she is unfortunate enough to win the passionate admiration of Cæsarion, son of Cleopatra and Cæsar, and even to attract the notice of Antony himself. Enemies prejudice Cleopatra against her, and she is saved only by the devotion of her friends and the connivance of Charmian, the queen's attendant, who understands Cleopatra better than she understands herself. She has known before that her beloved mistress could forget in petty jealousy the justice and kindness which she believed to be marked traits in her character, and she knew, too, that the ambition which had inspired her noblest deeds had more than once led to acts afterwards deeply regretted. Thus she guarded Cleopatra from future repentance.

Dr. Ebers pictures the queen as a woman of rare depth of feeling, steadfastly loyal, sincere, and devoted to her children. Yet she could forget the prosperity of her country in the desire to impress her lover with her magnificence, and she could neglect important affairs of state in the care for her own beauty. The interview with Octavius is the climax of the book, and in its alternating moods and its sudden transitions it sums up Dr. Ebers' portraiture.

SWITZERLAND, ROMANCE AND TEUTONIC.*

THIS pair of tasteful little volumes amply fulfill their avowed purpose of being a series of pen pictures amplifying the mere guidebook. Mr. McCrackan, who has lived long enough in Switzerland to feel at home there, takes us first through the Roman or Latin part of the country and then through the portion distinctively Germanic, describing the towns, the mountains, and the lakes; stopping to sketch the lives of famous men and women associated with Geneva, Basel, or Bern; tracing the footsteps of the mythical Tell; and outlining the institutions of this most democratic of democracies. He writes in a familiar, chatty style, and one may recommend the handy volumes with equal confidence to those who have been over the ground they pleasantly sketch and to those who would scale the Matterhorn or Mont Blanc on paper of a winter evening by an American fireside.

---

* Christopher Columbus and the Participation of the Jews in the Spanish and Portuguese Discoveries. By Dr. M. Kayserling. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

* Cleopatra. By Georg Ebers. D. Appleton & Co. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 80c.

* Romance Switzerland: Teutonic Switzerland. By W. D. McCrackan, M.A. Two volumes. Boston: Joseph Knight Co. $1.50.

At Geneva one is most impressed, says Mr. McCrackan, by "its cosmopolitan gayety. . . . Geneva is, in summer at any rate, a veritable holiday town." But he seems unfamiliar with Calvin's Sunday afternoon practices, for he alludes to the Sundays as being sure to disturb "the great reformer in his last resting place." Rousseau, of course, could not be passed over, but one is surprised to find no intimation of the damage wrought by his preposterous picture of the state of nature and his altogether imaginary social contract, and of the entire abandonment of the whole doctrine of "natural rights" by careful thinkers. The description of the Fête des Vignerons at Vevay sets before us with animation the most splendid and naïve of popular performances:

> It is the celebration of the vintage in song and dance, the supreme symbolic expression of this vineyard land of Vaud. Pitched in the key of rustic gayety, and acted on the plane of animal spirits, it yet deserves to rank with the Passion Play at Oberammergau for the genuine, spontaneous, and truthful manner of its production. The Fête des Vignerons is the artistic apotheosis of the grape.

Payerne, Avenches, Grandson, and Morat are four of the numerous places off the usual tourist's track to which Mr. McCrackan takes us; at Neuchâtel he reminds us of Agassiz and Arnold Guyot; the land and castle of Gruyère are the subject of an especially interesting chapter; he slips over the border on Lake Como ("there is no place in the world where it is so easy to become idiotically sentimental as on the Lake of Como!"); at Davos he describes the famous health resort; Holbein and Erasmus come to the front at Basel; railroads through the mountains are said to be "as inevitable as carriage roads were before them;" the Landesgemeinde of Uri is vividly pictured; and by the side of the quiet, sober, thrifty, democratic, and independent Swiss character we have this interesting paragraph on Americans:

> Those shrewd people who manage the tourist business say there is one unfailing sign of Americanism. It is the eye. In Paris they already speak of the American eye as something new and wonderful — that observant, careworn eye from which nothing escapes, which seems burning itself out with the fire of some inner spirit of unrest. . . . In Switzerland hotel-keepers have learned to watch for this eye when all other signs fail. Even if the new arrivals are thickly overlaid from top to toe with Anglomaniancy, their eyes will betray them. They need not speak with the slightest accent; the young women of the party need not order their mothers about or have small hands and feet; the elderly ladies may avoid wearing diamonds on excursions into the mountains or camel's-hair shawls on Sundays; it is not necessary that the children should call for butter at dinner or for sugar to put on their lettuce — a Swiss hotel-keeper, who knows his business, will pick out his special victims every time and make his prices high accordingly. . . . Their open-minded intelligence, their readiness in picking up the languages, their frank admiration of democratic institutions, endear them to the natives. Besides, they have one supreme virtue compared with all other nationalities — they never grumble.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A VIRGINIAN.*

THERE is nobody just like a Virginian. To say of a man that he is one gives a very exact idea of his appearance, training, spirit, and history, and all the elements that go to make up his personality. The author of these Recollections is a true Virginian. He looks like one in the process portrait which serves as frontispiece. He writes like one, with a proper pride in his native State.

Fredericksburg was General Maury's boyhood home, amidst reminiscences of Washington and Lafayette, and association with such names as Brooke, Cobb, Randolph, Spottswood, and Lee. He was educated first at the University of Virginia and later at West Point, where he was thrown with Jackson, McClellan, Grant, Hill, Hancock, and Franklin, of later fame. Graduating from the Military Academy in 1846, he was off for Mexico under Scott and Taylor, assisted in the capture of Vera Cruz, and was wounded at Cerro Gordo. Next in turn he was for several years instructor at the academy, served on the Texan frontier and in sundry campaigns on the plains, and joined the Virginia forces when the Civil War broke out. He was at Manassas, in the Mississippi Valley, and at Mobile. The war ended, he went into business in New Orleans and failed, and has brought his career up to date by serving as United States Minister at Bogota.

The story of this long and eventful life General Maury has recounted with a vivid memory, an entertaining attention to detail, and many anecdotes and particulars respecting men of whom we shall never be tired of hearing. General Lee, Gen. Dick Taylor, General Forrest — whom the author pronounces the greatest soldier of this generation — General Grant and Admiral Porter, Van Dorn and Quinby, Johnston and Thomas, Burnside and Meade, Hancock and Fitz John Porter are among the notabilities who figure with more or less prominence in these pages.

There are pleasant touches of old Virginia plantation life before the war, such as the Dabney family has given us before. There are graphic and thrilling narratives of life and adventure on the plains, when the Indians had free range and the overland journey was an experience of weeks of excitement if not of peril. There are side lights on not a few of the battles of the Civil War, and personal observations with criticisms pertinent to history. The closing chapters on the South American mission are a little out of joint with the bulk of the book that has gone before, but we become so far interested in the author that we follow him willingly on his Colombia expedition.

Making due allowance for the author's point of view, his book will be found uncommonly readable. The personal flavor is strong, and the volume is full of anecdote, of definite little touches of life and of humor, that give it great animation. Though an autobiography, the first personal pronoun is never offensive. We are sure that few persons who begin the book will leave it unfinished.

A TRUE TEACHER.*

PROBABLY to many readers the name of the subject of this memoir is unfamiliar; but to a large number, especially in the West, it is associated with educational work of the highest importance and far-reaching influence. Mary Mortimer was born in England in 1816, but while a child came to this country with her family, who settled in Central New York. She had an intense thirst for knowledge, and in spite of great disadvantages qualified herself for teaching, which became her life work. The story of her struggles, her self-denial, her great eagerness to help others, her devotion to the one purpose, her fidelity and conscientiousness, and her power of stimulating all with whom she came in contact brings vividly to mind the kindred experience and qualities of another honored woman — Mary Lyon.

Miss Mortimer had not only rare insight but forecast, and a wonderful ability in laying foundations. The results of her labor in different schools in the State of New York and in the West are the evidence of her judicious management and carefully considered plans. In 1849 she became acquainted with Miss Catherine Beecher, who was then attempting to establish special schools for young women in the West — one of the consequences being the important Milwaukee institution, where Miss Mortimer became a teacher. Her labors and her devotion to that school, and later to that at Baraboo, with an inadequate salary and at personal sacrifice, are a part of the history of education at that preparatory period. She was one of the small but most honorable number of women who made possible the girls' colleges of today. Miss Mortimer was more than merely a faithful and successful teacher; she was a woman of deep spiritual insight, rich in vital experience of the deeper meaning and purpose of life, and signally fitted to inspire others with the highest aims. As such a guide, helper, and friend, she is tenderly cherished by those whose lives were made better and potent for good by her influence. One of the number is the author of this appreciative memoir of the beloved instructor, who passed from this life on the 14th of July, 1877.

---

* Recollections of a Viginian. By Gen. Dabney Herndon Maury. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

* Mary Mortimer. By Minerva Brace Norton. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.60.

MAXIMILIAN AND CARLOTTA.[*]

NEVER before has the story of the Mexican Empire been so graphically told as now by Mr. John M. Taylor. The time was that of our Civil War, and the constant juxtaposition of events in the United States and in Mexico affords Mr. Taylor many striking contrasts. He writes impartially as far as facts are concerned, but single sentences are too heavily loaded with climaxes for the calm style of a historian. He describes persons by a series of epithets, whose cumulative force, at first effective, finally becomes wearisome. With this single exception the volume is worthy of high rank in historical annals. The motives of Louis Napoleon are keenly analyzed — his desire for personal supremacy under semblance of zeal for the church, his duplicity, and his final perfidy toward Maximilian when he had been awed by United States diplomacy. Maximilian's career, his strength and weakness, his fatal order for the immediate execution of all found in arms against his government, and his tragic and brave death are intimately treated. Carlotta's political foresight and ambition counteracted each other, until she too saw friend and ally desert her cause, when insanity laid its blight upon her life. The book is of intense interest to those ignorant of the lives of these two unfortunate sovereigns; but to the student its greatest value will be its clearness and its quotations from original documents, which unveil the real motives of the actors in the struggle for French supremacy, and the blindness of Maximilian to the wiles of Napoleon.

MY PARIS NOTE-BOOK.[†]

TWO or three years ago the literary excitement of the season was the appearance of a book entitled An Englishman in Paris. It contained so much that was piquant, so much, also, that was evidently true, and so much that was manifestly noted down at short range, that the diplomatic and social world was for a time divided between admiring and angered people. It became necessary even for the representatives of a certain famous English family to disclaim the authorship of the volume. It turned out that the writer was a Dutch journalist, far more familiar with the boulevards of Paris than with the Kalvar Straat. Nevertheless, that he was from Amsterdam and the yellow waters of the Y was in due time made evident.

The enterprising Dutchman now comes out with a new work, if anything more piquant than his former skit. Without naming his own name he tells frankly who he is and who were his granduncles, and he seems to have enjoyed highly the amusement and the exasperation which he induced by his former venture. He professes to know the boulevards from end to end, and it is very evident that he knows well, also, the back stairs and kitchens and servants' quarters, while it is equally certain that his eyes and ears are both open when in the presence of the great, the famous, and the infamous. In whatever capacity he can obtain access to the keyhole, entrance to the dining hall, or admittance to the salon, he carries his notebook with him; for there is on every page evidence of his close observation, while his knowledge of the wrong side of life is amazing. He talks about most of the great Frenchmen who have lived since the Crimean War, stringing on the thread of his story anecdotes, relishable and piquant, and as numerous as the beads of a Buddhist rosary. He keeps up the vraisemblance by quoting provincial English slang with both accuracy and gusto. In fact, he seems to be abundantly able to compile offhand a dictionary of "pseudology" containing the very best specimens of American, Scottish, English, French, and Dutch slang. The chief men and women who sit for their portraits in these chapters are Napoleon the Great and Napoleon the Small, Victor Emmanuel, and numerous dramatists and authors. Among the ana are some new things about Ernest Renan. This great man, who in character seemed to be a cross between a buffoon and a sage, was always jocose in the presence of mature human beings, while solemnly serious in the presence of children. In both his speeches and his writings Renan was "a recruiting sergeant of thought. He rarely failed to perceive possibilities of making robust soldiers of his cause out of apparently very unpromising material by dint of good feeding and judicious training." From the literary men we enter the circles of French society under the Third Republic. The author mourns the "absence of the nice female element from the principal thoroughfares." He shows how the politics of the country are influenced by the women, and compares the salons of the present with former days. Most of the prominent men in France today sit before his camera. The theaters, he declares, are barometers in times of public excitement. But here we must stop. This is one of the most delightful literary ragbags that we have come across for months.

— According to the Westminster Budget, Mr. A. C. Swinburne is a regular habitué of Putney Heath and Wimbledon Common. "There is scarcely a day all the year around on which he does not walk at least once from his residence, at the bottom of Putney Hill, along the Heath and Common," says the Budget. "Everybody in the district knows the poet, but the poet has evidently eyes and ears for nobody except the babies toddling about among the furze and brambles. These he honors with a great deal of interest and attention, and there is many a bright-eyed small girl and boy of the neighborhood whose parents recount with great self-satisfaction the story of how Mr. Swinburne has, some day or other, taken special notice of their child. . . . There is [at Wimbledon] a tobacconist and stationer's shop, where the two daughters, refined and charming girls, supply him with ephemeral literature. Then, a little further on in the village, there is a clean and bright-looking baker's shop at the corner, into which the poet often turns in order to buy such goodies as he may distribute to the children on his return walk to Putney. Mr. Swinburne is never accompanied by anybody on these favorite walks of his. . . . Even Mrs. Thackeray Ritchie, though in her genial way she may attract the solitary promenader for a considerable time, has never yet succeeded in persuading him to come back with her to her home at Wimbledon." The poet's home is at Putney Hill, and is known as the Pines. From a picture it appears that it is a substantial mansion, consisting of a large, square, central tower, with lateral wings extending out into a fine garden.

— We should have lost much of the most charming work of the century but for the fidelity and wisdom of Madame Renan. She was in appearance, as by descent, a comely Dutch vrouw, but was born and educated in Paris. She early formed the resolution of allowing her husband the utmost mental freedom, and cherished no jealousy for the wanderings of her husband's somewhat wayward fancy. Renan was perfectly chaste in life, but he used to confess very freely, Truth's correspondent in Paris tells us, how his imagination sometimes wandered from the wife whom he yet always considered a necessity of his life; and he did much of his best work under others' inspiration. He concealed from her the first chapters of L'Abbesse de Jouarre, but afterwards asked whether he should publish it. "Yes," she replied, "if you have sincerely felt and thought what you have written, and had no desire to make money by appealing to the public that runs after top-shelf literature." Since her husband's death, eighteen months ago, she has been editing his papers. — Literary World, London.

— Lord Tennyson has applied to the Bishop of Winchester for a faculty to erect a tablet to his father in Freshwater Church, for which he has written the following epitaph:

"In loving memory
of
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Whose happiest days were passed at Farringford,
in this parish.
Born Aug. 6th, 1809.
Died Oct. 6th, 1892.
Buried in Westminster Abbey, Oct. 12th, 1892.
'Speak, living Voice! With thee death is not death;
Thy life outlives the life of dust and breath.'"

---

[*] Maximilian and Carlotta. By John M. Taylor. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

[†] My Paris Note-Book. By the author of "An Englishman in Paris." J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.

The Literary World

BOSTON 14 JULY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Two Destinies.

Like an enchanted bark with store of gold,
The prosperous poet who has made a name
Against all adverse winds his course doth hold,
And the bright wake he leaves behind is fame.

Yet may some bard, more rich in thought than he,
More fraught with fancy, bear the world's neglect,
And, like a frail bark on a stormy sea,
Be driven upon unpitying rocks and wrecked.

But the bright wake called fame may not last long,
The seeming gold prove dross, while the true ore,
In scattered fragments of diviner song,
Saved from the wreck, is precious evermore.

W. L. Shoemaker.

VERONA.*

MR. W. H. COLLINGWOOD, the able and sympathetic biographer of John Ruskin, has put together five of his hitherto unprinted lectures and indicated in an introduction their relation to other courses of talks. Three out of the five, and the more important three, belong to the year 1870, "Ruskin's annus mirabilis," as the editor calls it. The last two were planned as part of a book to be called Valle Crucis, which should review the early growth of Christianity in England. Two more chapters were needed to complete the volume, but these fragments are fairly complete in themselves. The opening lecture on Verona is a vigorous and characteristic utterance. It studies the Stones of Verona, interpreting the story of the city, noting its situation, its history, its art. Ruskin pictures successively the periods of so-called Lombard and Gothic architecture and the early period of revival with its connected painting, closing with urgent expressions of the need for a proper system of irrigation that should arrest the rainfall on the hill surfaces, and thus prevent destructive inundations, and turn the waters to the improvement and cultivation of waste plains. Ten of the twelve illustrations are in connection with this lecture. The frontispiece, which represents a single niche and ironwork from the tomb of Can Signorio in Verona, is in color, and the others are photogravure reproductions of drawings by Ruskin himself. They add much to the beauty and interest of the book.

"The Story of Arachne" is an address delivered before students of art and science. The first few pages of the original manuscript are wanting, and a condensed paragraph, compiled from the newspaper reports, takes their place. Its ethical earnestness, the vigor of its comparisons, and the beauty of the Arachne myth as Ruskin tells it place it high among those lectures which have an interest especially for young people as elevating as it is genuine. "The only way to be loved is to become lovable, and the only way to be trusted is to be honest." Ruskin says this over and over in his own way, and we listen. Professor Norton calls Ruskin's sight "the supreme faculty of his genius, the source of his happiest inspiration and of its most trustworthy and helpful guidance." Whatever be the source, it is certain that he is an inspiration to many and a delight to many more, even to those who find his judgments and assertions on numerous points most unwarrantable and misleading.

The third lecture, "The Tortoise of Ægina," was intended for the seventh and last lecture of the course on Greek sculpture as illustrated by Greek coins, the course now published as Aratra Pentelici. In this connection the lion of Liontini and the tortoise of Ægina are reproduced from casts of the Greek coins. The book is one which the lover of Ruskin rejoices to add to his library and which increases his gratitude to the editor, who has already done much to render deserved honor to this great writer.

THE GRANDEE.*

THE question whether novels repulsive to the canons of morality and decency should continue to be published will be a moot one so long as the best talent of France, Russia, and Spain make their field of study chiefly in the diagnosis of various forms of moral disease.

Señor Valdés' novel, The Grandee, is, perhaps, the most degrading picture of social corruption which any modern realist has ever given to the world. Mr. Edmund Gosse in his introduction to this English translation of El Maestrante tells us that he can say, by authority of the author, that Lancia, the scene of The Grandee, is intended to represent Oviedo, the capital of Asturias. Our ignorance of Oviedo is such that we cannot say whether Señor Valdés' description of its society is correct or whether it is the fruit of his imagination. If the picture is correct, Oviedo must be the most corrupt city in Europe; if incorrect, there is nothing to say in comment.

The Grandee opens with an account of an unlawful connection described in the coarsest terms. We are given the full benefit of the methods by which the heroine, Amalia, who is afflicted by a malady of the moral nature unmentionable among decent people, seduces an innocent and religious young fellow. The book closes with an account of the way in which she tortured their child, whom Amalia has clandestinely introduced into her husband's house. "The wife of the grandee covered the distance between them with two steps and fell upon her like a hungry tiger. She struck, bit, and tore her. The child, mad with fear, uttered piercing cries. Amalia, insatiable, went on striking and hurting. Then she caught her by the ears and nearly dragged them off." But there is no need of continuing such a brutal narrative; it is sufficient to say that the description of the torturing of this unhappy child to death occupies one third of the whole novel, and the details are of the utmost brutality. Nor is this revolting picture of a mother torturing her child to death the only painful description, although it is the worst in Señor Valdés' book. One chapter of The Grandee is given up to a detailed picture of a drunken orgy; another to a description of a young girl of good society who upon learning of her lover's connection with Amalia deliberately makes herself drunk, and the results of her drunkenness; yet another chapter is given up to the details of a practical joke so coarse in nature that we should hardly expect a "Bowery tough" to be amused by it.

There is nothing to redeem the coarseness of The Grandee — no one noble character, no one brilliant scene. Mr. Gosse in his introduction says, "Whether these maladies of the soul are or not fit subjects for the art of the novelist is a question which every reader must answer for himself." This may be true of many books, but we believe there are some which are so wholly corrupt that they should be suppressed and put out of power of doing harm, and of such books we believe The Grandee to be one of the most pernicious ever published; and the fact that it is issued in a series edited by Edmund Gosse widens greatly its power of doing harm.

LONDON LETTER.

THE output from the publishers is just now at its thickest, but after June 30 there will be less to chronicle till the autumn publishing season is launched in September. Yet even the long vacation does not prevent an occasional hardy volume from putting forth its head, and it may be its appearance is not unwisdom, since the little audience that waits for books always can give its undistracted ear, and the newspapers and reviews are in search of mild sensations to tide them over the dull days of August. Within the last few days Messrs. Chapman & Hall have published George Meredith's latest volume, Lord Ormont and His Aminta. I suppose a genius like Mr. Meredith need not fear overlooking in the flurry of fashionable folk and legislators going out of town, since his books are for all time, not for a season or the season. The new novel has his perennial qualities of wit, romance, subtlety, and adventure; his words poise themselves as exquisitely, often as bewilderingly, as of old; he has the old exquisite knowledge of the feminine heart, the old savoir-faire, or savoir-vivre, that looks on the world gayly and tenderly, that is of the world yet outside its hardness and its follies. At the recent fashionable wedding of Lord Salisbury's son with Miss Maxse, Mr. Meredith attracted more attention than even the bridegroom's father. More than any man of genius one can think of does Mr. Meredith look his qualities. His austere beauty of face, a beauty that goes with the most gracious character, is indeed unforgettable.

---

* Verona. By John Ruskin. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

* The Grandee. By Armando Palacio Valdés. London: William Heinemann 2s. 6d

The wittiest book we have had for many a day has just been issued by Messrs. Mathews & Lane, and by the J. B. Lippincott Co. on your side of the water. This is The Autobiography of a Boy: Passages Selected by His Friend, J. S. Street. This exquisite piece of humor appeared in installments in the pages of the National Observer, and was worthy of that paper's best traditions of distinguished wit. J. S. Street is probably a pseudonym, but the Boy one recognizes everywhere in London literary circles. It is a quite modern type, one which has sprung partly out of Oxford, partly out of the pernicious little fashion among little literary folk of aping the eccentric and the improper. The boy is extraordinarily true to the type. His portraiture is the finest kind of humor, one which never insists too much or too long. There is just so much of it that one closes it longing for more. In its way it is a broad and kindly humor without a touch of malice, exquisitely satiric as it is. In the days of that benighted thing called "the New Humor," The Autobiography of a Boy is really a book to thank the gods for. It is strange and laughter-provoking to turn from it to any one of half a dozen books issued by the same publisher, and to notice how the tone of the Bodley Head authors is precisely the tone of the boy. One may read pages with a sense that it is still the boy's clever fooling and not the serious pronouncement of cultivated if not specially robust young men.

A very poignant novel of Irish life is Dan, by M. E. Francis, recently issued by the Anglo-American firm of Osgood, McIlvaine & Co. Mrs. Francis made her reputation last year with her sketches of life in a little Lancashire village, called In a North-Country Village—a book the Pall Mall Gazette compared to Cranford, and other reviews to A Window in Thrums. The north country village is Blundellsands, which has been Catholic since pre-Reformation times, and close to which is M. E. Francis' home. M. E. Francis is the pen-name of Mrs. Blundell of the ancient Lancashire family of that name. She belongs to a literary family, for her sister, Miss Elinor Sweetman, has published a book of delicate and distinguished poetry; and Mrs. Egerton Castle, another sister, is the part author with her husband of La Bella and Others—a book of successful short stories which Messrs. Cassell published a year or two ago. Mr. Egerton Castle is an authority on such out-of-the-way subjects as fencing and book plates. An intimate taste for these widely different pursuits has a pleasant mixed suggestion of manliness and scholarliness. Dan, a lonely and tragic story, brightened, however, by a charming quality of humor, is one of the books of the season.

Irish novels or sketches are sure of a hearing nowadays, when there is an Irish revival; but a slim yellow book under my hand recalls a time when to write of Ireland, however beautifully, was surely to handicap one's chances of success. The book is Marigold—a reprint by Messrs. Eason of Dublin of some short stories by Miss Rosa Mulholland, now Mrs. Gilbert. Some of these stories appeared in All the Year Round, in the days when Dickens was chief. The great novelist appreciated them fully, as was evidenced by the warm encouragement he gave the young writer and by his choice of her Late Miss Hollingford to accompany his No Thoroughfare in the Tauchnitz series. Rereading them, one is amazed at the strength and delicacy of what must have been childishly young work. In her later work, admirable as it is, Mrs. Gilbert has never excelled, and has, perhaps, scarcely equaled, the beauty of those early stories. They have the romance and idealism of a dreamy child. Sometimes, as in "Molly, the Tramp," the story troubles less to be true to life and character than to end as happily as a fairy tale; but again, as in "Maureen Lacy" or "The Hungry Death," there is a stern realism, not less true because of the exquisite poetry of its pathos. Mrs. Gilbert has not been well advised in interleaving these Irish stories with others of which the interest is less particular. A volume of them published by a good London publishing house should make a great success. Mrs. Gilbert had the great advantage in her very young girlhood of living for a time in Inisbofin, the wild and lonely island off the west coast of Ireland, which is the scene of those Irish stories. I wish she would give us a book of stories of the life there. Mrs. Gilbert is, by the way, sister-in-law to Lord Russell of Killowen, the coming Lord Chief Justice of England. Her sister, Lady Russell, shares her literary gifts, as she might her achievements if she had not been called to a less quiet life. Lord Russell has another link with literature in the person of his brother, the Dublin Jesuit who edits the Irish Monthly and is the author of several volumes of exquisite devotional poetry. How many young Irish writers owe their first help and encouragement to the Irish Monthly! Mr. W. B. Yeats, Miss Dora Sigerson, and Frances Wynne, who died so untimely last year, are a few of the names known to Londoners that occur to me.

Mr. Richard Le Gallienne's Prose Fancies, just issued by Mathews & Lane, has a mournful interest. It is dedicated to his wife—"My Prose for Her Poetry, in Memory of Two Happy Years." Alas! while the volume was in press the sweet and lovely creature, whom in one of the essays he commemorates as "White Soul," passed away. Her death makes this essay, full of prevision, poignant reading. There is some stronger work in the volume than anything I remember in Mr. Le Gallienne's former books. There is a terrible little apologue, "The Devils on the Needle," with which I remember to have been deeply impressed at the time of its appearance, unsigned, in the Speaker. "A Borrowed Sovereign" is charming, in spite of Mr. Le Gallienne's characteristic fault of overaccentuation. "The Apparition of Youth" is another of the good things—good enough to be remembered out of the thousand and one clever things that delight one in the reviews. None of these things are without their quality of wisdom and instruction.

If one would like to read some illuminating and unconventional sermons, I would recommend the twin series of discourses on the immortal Pilgrim's Progress by Dr. Alexander Whyte of St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh. These are named Bunyan Characters, and are issued at half a crown by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier of Edinburgh. Dr. Whyte was one of the Edinburgh worthies treated of by J. M. Barrie in an early booklet of his—An Edinburgh Eleven. One is not surprised at Mr. Barrie's affinity for this earnest and powerful preacher. To explain Bunyan seems superfluous, but Dr. Whyte has illuminated him. He enlarges upon his persons and incidents with illustrations from the enlightened of all countries and all creeds. Every one of us, from the papist to the "lowest" dissenter, may be edified in our common Christianity by these manly and penetrative discourses.

Mr. Barrie, by the way, has been ill, but is now happily recovering and able, one trusts, to enjoy the success of his new play, "The Professor's Love Story," at the Comedy Theatre. One of Mr. Barrie's first friends, Dr. Robertson Nicoll of the Bookman and the British Weekly, has, one is very sorry to know, met with a great bereavement in the death of his wife. Mrs. Robertson Nicoll shared her husband's literary tastes, and was, if I mistake not, a writer of tender devotional verse. No man has done more to help young writers—and his recognition of good things is instantaneous and unerring—than Dr. Nicoll, and the sympathy with his trouble will be great.

An exquisite little book to the sight and touch is Pharais, by Fiona Macleod, published by Frank Murray of Derby. This provincial publisher seems to have eclipsed the London publishers in beauty of outward presentation. Pharais, as befits its looks, is a high-strung, poetical romance of the Western Islands of Scotland. Fiona Macleod is a new name, but judging by this nervous, passionate little book its author will be heard of again in romantic prose.

I want yet again to recommend to your readers Mr. William Canton's Invisible Playmate. It is a book which one has to read reverently to understand, but once understood it is a sacred thing to keep near one's heart. It is ill to prophesy, but I have a sure conviction that this little book will presently be acknowledged as one of the immortal things of literature. The only trouble about it is that it is too terrible, too heartbreaking, for literature. It should rank with the few poignant things in the English tongue, with Shakespeare's

> Of many thousand kisses this poor last
> I lay upon thy lips;

with Patmore's "It was not like your great and gracious ways"—among the immortalities. I think of it side by side with Dr. John Brown's "Marjorie Fleming," unlike as they are; yet both, it seems to me, are destined to live when so much of what is living and thriving around us shall die.

Mr. Howells has been seen in London, where he paid a flying visit to greet his old friend, separated from him for years, Mr. John James Piatt. He will be here later in the year for a visit of a couple of months. Of Mr. Howells all the world speaks well. I have never yet seen him, but from other folks' words I carry an impression of a singularly gracious personality. Mr. Piatt and his gifted wife intend to return to America early this autumn.

Katharine (Tynan) Hinkson.

FICTION.

Claudia Hyde.

Miss Frances Courtenay Baylor is favorably known as the author of some successful stories of Southern life. In this one she transplants an unlucky but very deserving and "likeable" young Englishman to Virginia, where he expects to learn farming, having been tempted by an advertisement in the London Times. He has been cast off by his uncle, from whom he was to inherit a fortune, and in consequence of the change in his prospects he has been jilted by the girl to whom he was betrothed. Poor, friendless, and unhappy, he arrives at the Butterworth farm only to find that it is anything but the place he had reason to expect. However, he makes the best of the situation, and with genuine British pluck does the menial labor required of him and remains a gentleman notwithstanding his environment. On a fortunate Sunday he meets at church a fine Virginia family, and makes the acquaintance of that rare old scholar and courteous man, Mr. Hyde, and the younger daughter, Claudia, who is all that is sweet, helpful, and womanly. The pictures of the daily life in that impoverished home of a cultivated and hospitable Southern family are delightful. The ways of the household, the cares, the small economies, and what was done from morning till night in the house and the garden, the conversation at meals, the gatherings on the porch, are detailed at length. It seems like an inside history, with a love episode to give it zest. The hero and heroine are all that the most exacting novel reader could desire. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co $1.25.

Two Strings to His Bow.

In his new story Rev. Walter Mitchell has expended considerable ingenuity upon an improbable and rather unpleasing plot. At first the Rev. Cresswell Price appears as a "timid, vacillating, slow-minded" man of very unattractive presence. Fearing arrest through his intimacy with a young scoundrel, he decides to disappear. Disguising himself, he becomes a butler. Mr. Mitchell has a supply of coincidences ready for all emergencies. Everything ends prosperously for the vindicated and reinstated clergyman, who has undergone metamorphosis into an effective and agreeable preacher. With the naturalness of his development there is not, perhaps, much fault to be found, except in the matter of degree; but the prevarications into which he and his friends consider themselves forced can hardly be condoned. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Wedding Garment.

The revelations to Swedenborg and spiritualists must yield place to the pleasures and utilities of heaven as described by Louis Pendleton. Even Dante's purgatory is indefinite compared with the exact temptations which are here described. The heaven and the purgatory are essentially modern. In both the doer works out or loses his own salvation. Selfishness, conceit, agnosticism, and atheism are the great transgressions. The doubt which has always surrounded the future disposal of those who marry a second time is happily solved. Each one finds a soul mate, or if not even "engaged" at the time of death one can still fall in love and be married in heaven. If any one could speak with authority, such a book as this would be an unspeakable comfort; but as no one can, we doubt if its philanthropic intent can be of wide benefit. Mr. Pendleton's imaginings are noble, his purpose is benevolent, and the book is well written and sustains the interest of the reader to the end. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Salem Kittredge and Other Stories.

Of these sketches, by Mr. Bliss Perry, most are touched with a pleasant humor and all are cleverly artistic. The longest is that which gives name to the book, but none is neater than the amusing "Number Three," in which we learn how Dan called upon his Sunday-school teacher and prevented her from marrying a missionary. The scenes are chiefly laid in New England and Germany. The persons are real and piquant. Undoubtedly the author's literary creed is expressed in the dream of "An Incorrigible Poet" by the classic Muse, who says: "I love you, my brother of this strange new age, but you must never try to behold me any more. You have your own world, and I am told it is a brave one. Why do you look back?" The stories may be recommended to the hammock lounger. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

The Trespasser.

Mr. Gilbert Parker's latest story is a novel of more than usual interest and strength. The hero, Gaston Belward, is a man whose father ran away from his English home, came to America, and finally married an Indian, Gaston's mother. The story is more than a character study and is almost a race study, showing how the young Gaston, after a life of reckless adventure from the Arctic regions to the equator, goes back to England to claim his father's people and estates; how the rest of his life is one warfare between the high-bred inheritance of his long ancestry and the savage heat of his Indian blood. The author's touch is wonderfully keen and bracing, with the occasional insignificance of detail that makes a story alive. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Flight of the "Swallow."

Emily Malbone Morgan here gives the picture of a courtly French refugee who came to a New England town in its transition period between the old days of colonial stateliness and the new ones of bustle and restlessness. Finding few pupils for the violin, he offered to give dancing lessons. The youth responded, but the elders frowned. In the union church, of which M. de Bion had become a member, there was a party strongly opposed to dancing. For the first time these persons now remembered that his antecedents had not been searched out. Upon his persistence in earning a livelihood by means iniquitous in their eyes he was cut off from active fellowship with the church. Whispers of scandal started from unknown corners. One by one his pupils left him. Upon receiving a foreign letter the old man, who had borne all these insults with dignity, suddenly departed. One day the elder who had been his chief inquisitor was astonished by receiving a letter from "the Swallow," as he had been nicknamed, stating that he had been recalled to France and enriched by a considerable inheritance. A check of $1,000 was inclosed for the benefit of the church which had excluded him. Another letter announced to the gentle seamstress who had befriended him that a sum had been deposited to her credit. The sketch is a gracious one — a sympathetic tribute to a member of the "church misunderstood." — A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 75c.

Belle-Plante and Cornelius.

As a story, this production of Claude Tillier's has slight attraction; but as a study of two contrasting characters it is of interest. Belle-Plante and Cornelius are brothers — one sordid, narrow, base, and calculating, unsusceptible of the higher emotions of humanity, destitute of fine qualities; the other is philosophic, aspiring, full of plans that are wholly impracticable, an absent-minded dreamer, who is often both sentimental and absurd. The reader who finds pleasure in a rugged, straightforward style will probably enjoy this slow, minute narrative of two lives in a French hamlet, complicated by the love entanglement, the intrigues of the priest, and the maneuvers of the scheming father. The translation is by Benjamin R. Tucker. — The Merriam Co. $1.25.

An Interloper.

It is with absolute relief that we open a book so pure and elevated in tone as Frances Mary Peard's An Interloper, after the numberless stories of immoral, morbid, and unwholesome tendency with which the novelists of the day offend the taste and the moral sense. Mme. de Beaudrillart is the "interloper," and is looked down upon by her husband's family as being of bourgeois origin; her moral principles, however, are decidedly above aristocratic standpoints, as represented in the other members of the Beaudrillart family, and the whole story turns on the way in which she influences her husband and elevates him. The book is fairly interesting, and is one which can safely be given to any one to read or left around on the library table with impunity, which is certainly more than one can do with many of the novels recently published. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Up and Down the Nile.

This book of 350 pages, by Oliver Optic, belongs to the All Over the World series, in which it is No. 3. It is four fifths fiction, and of the remaining fifth about one half is direct information and the other half reads as if extracted from the guidebooks and cyclopedia. The voyage proper on the Nile begins on page 300, leaving fifty pages for the river; while three hundred pages have been occupied with the adventures of the party on the Mediterranean, at Alexandria, and in Cairo while getting started. The party in action includes a young millionaire, a lovely girl, a pasha, and a Moorish brigand; and love-making, attempts at kidnapping, and other excitements swell the fiction. In the course of the story some account is given of Alexandria and Cairo, with glimpses of what the river has to show above the latter city; but only very youthful readers are likely to find the method entertaining. For genuine description of the Nile and its scenery the wise young reader will look elsewhere. — Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

Introspection, bad luck, falling in and out of love with other men's wives, and misunderstood daughters are a never-ending source of literary copy to modern story-tellers. Each and all of these subjects form the topic of the various stories in Clara Sherwood Rollins' volume, A Burne-Jones Head, and Other Sketches. The stories are all clever, with the species of fin de siècle smartness so familiar to all novel readers nowadays. Mrs. Rollins' style is good, her plots well considered, and her characters fairly well outlined. With all these good points it is, however, difficult to see why these stories should have been published, and yet, on the other hand, there is no especial reason why they should not be read with mild interest. — Lovell, Coryell & Co. $1.00.

No title could have indicated better than Pastime Stories the character of these three and twenty short tales, by Thomas Nelson Page. They are dedicated to "all good story-tellers who have sweetened life with their humor," and the good laughs which they contain, almost as many in number as there are stories, add the writer's name to that list. The matter has become more or less familiar in the magazine pages; but one reader, at least, has learned to appreciate them better since they came out in book form, and have served to brighten odd half hours in a sick room. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The short stories which Prof. Henry A. Beers has collected in this small volume, entitled A Suburban Pastoral, are nearly all marked by originality and promise. The incidents seem probable enough, at least while one is reading them, and the conversations are natural. The opening story relates the anticlimax that nipped in the bud an opening love affair, and suggests the wonder whether melodrama is essentially more tragic than farce can be. "Edric the Wild" and "The Wine Flower" are Northern legends, very different in conception and character from the other stories. — Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

In spite of its taking title the detective yarn in A Modern Wizard is so poor that it falls almost to the level of the stories in the Police Gazette. The writer aimed at rivaling The Leavenworth Case, but he knows little about the art of constructing a story, and oversteps the line of sensationalism so often as to make his tragic situations simply ludicrous rather than harrowing. The hero of the book, the mesmeric doctor, is a wholly unnatural character, and the modern mixture of crime and hypnotism is revolting and without literary merit. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

A defense of the righteousness of the stage as a profession and its opportunities for kindness constitutes the purpose of the novel, by Florence Trail, entitled Under the Second Renaissance. The heroine's family and her lover hold the career of an actress in abhorrence. She herself is perplexed by the puzzle between affection and her career. Of course all ends well. Several pages are given to the dramatic treatment of Tristam and Isolde, for which the author's previous work as critic and essayist well fitted her. — Charles Wells Moulton. $1.00.

Under the title A Man from Corpus Christi, Dr. A. C. Pierce has related the adventures or misadventures of two bird hunters and a dog in the bottomless bogs of Texas. The story is intended to be funny, and so it is sometimes, if one does not take too much of it at once, and if he does not mind the language, which is "frequent and free." It might be said, as the preface indicates, that the dog is the real hero of the book. He has more lives than any cat, and reappears serenely after the most extraordinary experiences. The "pictographs by no special artist" are very amusing. — Forest and Stream Pub. Co.

The plot of A Prodigal in Love, by Emma Wolf, well constructed as it is, exhibits one of the most extraordinary developments of affection and aberration in its leading characters of which we know. We will not forestall the reader's curiosity. Constance, the sister-mother, is a sincerely noble and attractive type of woman and long lingers in the memory, giving rest and secureness to one's belief in innate goodness. It is well worth while to read the book for her sake alone. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The story of a beautiful, headstrong girl, who chooses for her life's motto, "Je m'amuse," is told in A Common Mistake, by Jeanne M. Howell. She lives up to her motto faithfully, from her girlhood days of ignorant frivolity, through all the excitement of society distractions, forever unsatisfied, until the last scene, where she lies dead from an overdose of chloral. The book is crude and inartistic in many respects, but it is probably a first attempt. — The Merriam Co. 50c.

Mr. James L. Ford's Hypnotic Tales, illustrated by the Puck artists, are out in a new edition, well deserved by their lusty humor. — Geo. H. Richmond & Co. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Old English Ballads.

Readers who have yielded to the fascination of the old English and Scottish ballads will be interested in this collection by Francis Gummere, professor of English in Haverford College. He has aimed to make it representative both in range and quality, and he has certainly succeeded in putting together more of our own favorites than we ever expected to find within the limits of a single volume of moderate size. The opening ballad and the longest is "The Gest of Robin Hood," followed by three other shorter ones of the same cycle. The long introduction, which was first delivered in the shape of lectures at Johns Hopkins University, includes a critical study of the various theories concerning origins. The appendixes contain much that is interesting, and the notes are of such a character as to lead to pleasant and profitable study. For any full study one is, of course, referred constantly to Professor Child, to whom, by the way, the book is dedicated. It is a misfortune that the notes are not connected by page numbers with the poems they elucidate, and it would be an improvement, too, were there an alphabetical list of contents. These ballads, whether stirring, like "The Battle of Otterburn," or pathetic, like "Mary Hamilton" (the most persistently haunting verses that ever were put together), come as a refreshing contrast to the introspective poems of our own age, for which these have often been neglected. Professor Gummere speaks of them truly when he says, "Sincere, strong, rough, these 'canticles of love and woe' still speak the speech of a mass, still feel as a community feels, and touch the heart, not as a whisper of private sympathy, but as a great cry of delight or grief from the crowd." — Ginn & Co. $1.35.

Boethius and Troilus.

The second volume of Professor Skeat's noble edition of Chaucer's complete works contains the translation of Boethius on The Consolation of Philosophy and Troilus and Criseyde, in which there are so many traces of the famous philosopher's thoughts. This is the first edition in which the text of the translation has received proper attention. After noticing other sources to which Chaucer's poem was indebted, Professor Skeat considers particularly his borrowings from Guido delle Colonne's Historia Troiana. The much-debated word Trophee in the Monke's Tale and in Lydgate refers, in all probability, to Guido's book. Not only Troilus and Criseyde, but Chaucer's other writings also have been explored by Dr. E. Köppel and Mr. Rossetti to find marks of Boethius, and Professor Skeat gives the interesting results in full. — Macmillan & Co. $4.00.

Prose Fancies.

Mr. Richard Le Gallienne's work is always clever and amusing if rather full of mannerisms, and his latest volume is no exception to the rule. Of the twenty-five short essays on various subjects that entitled "Life in Inverted Commas" is the cleverest and most entertaining. Mr. Le Gallienne is looking about an omnibus of people and decides that they are all made by what he calls "the stencil process;" none are original, and himself least of all. Some, however, seemed very sure of their originality, especially two young ladies of artistic tendencies. "These ladies wore plagiarized gowns of the most 'original' style, plagiarized hats, glittering plagiarized smiles; and yet they so evidently looked down on every one else in the omnibus. . . . What I especially noticed about them was their plagiarized voices — curious, yearning things, evidently intended to suggest depths of infinite passion, controlled by many a wild and weary past,

> Infinite passion and the pain
> Of finite souls that yearn —

the kind of voice, you know, in which socialist actresses yearn out passages from 'The Cenci,' feeling that they do a fearful thing. The voice began, I believe, with Miss Ellen Terry. With her, though, it is charming; for it is, we feel, the voice of real emotion." This is pleasant fooling, and this whimsical humor runs through the whole volume. Prose Fancies is less recondite than most of Mr. Le Gallienne's books, and will therefore please a larger circle of readers. The volume is excellently gotten up, as are all the publications of Elkin Mathews & John Lane; paper and type are both admirable. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

The Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America.

This substantial work is a series of lectures, by Judge J. F. Dillon, delivered at Yale University in 1892. In considering our law in its old home and in its new, the author discourses philosophically of many of the important topics of law and jurisprudence, such as legal education, trial by jury, the common law in its origin and development, written constitutions, legislation, codification, and legal reform. It is a book to interest especially students of law as a science, but the author's forty years' experience at the bar and on the bench gives it a practical character which the active lawyer will appreciate. Judge Dillon is a vigorous thinker and a good writer, and he touches with power and instruction many subjects which are discussed every day among us. "The absolutely unique feature of the political and legal institutions of the American republic," he says, for instance, "is its written constitutions, which are organic limitations whereby the people, by an act of unprecedented wisdom, have . . . protected themselves against themselves." — Little, Brown & Co. $4.00 net.

The First American Wood Engraver.

A handsome octavo volume, bound in half Russia, contains a good sketch of the life and work of Dr. Alexander Anderson, the son of a New York printer, born in 1775 and dying in 1870, in extreme old age. He studied medicine, but his artistic bent was too strong, and he devoted himself to engraving on wood and copper. The thirty specimens of his work given by his biographer, Mr. Frederic M. Burr of the New York Historical Society, attest his care and skill, while the partial autobiography and the three portraits reveal a worthy and honorable man, who was a true artist with a genuine passion for his work. Mr. Burr has done well to commemorate him so fitly. — New York: Burr Brothers. $4.00.

Periods of European History.

This is the title of a new series of histories, which seems to fill a place still vacant. The space from 476 A.D. to 1893 has been divided into eight periods, each of which is to be treated by an able specialist in the history of the time, such as Professor Tout and Messrs. C. W. Oman and H. Morse Stephens. Mr. Oman's volume, Europe, 476–918, opens the list. It is an exceedingly interesting and trustworthy performance, covering with thorough scholarship a section of time not fully embraced in any other work in English ($1.75). Europe, 1598–1715, by H. O. Wakeman, M.A., is a good companion to Mr. Oman's book; it centers the history around the rise and predominance of France, the great fact of the seventeenth century in Europe ($1.40). Readableness and scholarship are the marks of both these volumes. — Macmillan & Co.

The Gypsy Road.

A writer and a sketcher have united in the production of this book, which in subject, manner, and appearance is decidedly fresh and attractive. The landscape is that of an out-of-the-way part of Central Europe, north and east of Vienna. The subject is a bicycle trip through that country — Galicia, Hungary, Moravia, and Bohemia furnishing the ground chiefly traversed. The illustrations, which are numerous, are of the vignette type and are singularly simple and strong, beautifully done as with pen and ink, so artistic and so expressive are they. The book is very prettily printed, left with rough edges, and clad, as is becoming, in brown linen with dull red trimmings. It is one of those books whose individuality one detects the moment he opens it. The reading bears out the appearance. The style is as unconventional as was the journey it describes. Knowledge, thought, taste, an eye for the picturesque, a sense of humor, a gift of description — all enter into the composition Shall we not say also a talent for spelling, when such proper names as these tax both writer and reader: Selmeczbánya, Kecskés, Cseh, Hlinik, Szturecz, and Zsarnócza? The bicycle was a novelty in this country, and our expeditionists were frequently subject to suspicions which it was not easy to dispel. The roads were often hard, the inns very plain, and the food simple in the extreme; but village intimacies, peasant fellowships, and close observation of architecture, costume, and national habits imparted to the trip an unusual zest. The pictures are extremely effective and the whole book a great success for Mr. G. A. J. Cole. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

The Story of Our Planet.

This large and finely illustrated volume, by T. G. Bonney, professor of geology in University College, London, is not a text-book, but is framed on a plan much like that of Lyell's Principles — a book which has not been revised for twenty-one years. He is not quite so much of a uniformitarian as Lyell, but thinks we can discover in the earth itself "some sign of its beginning and some foreshadowing of its end." The main topics of the geological story are treated freshly and competently, and Professor Bonney is authority enough for his occasional original opinions to deserve respect. The volume belongs to the best class of popular scientific books, and will be especially welcomed by those who dislike the text-book method and style. — Cassell Publishing Co. $5.00.

The Life and Teachings of Jesus.

In this volume Mr. Arthur Kenyon Rogers attempts a critical analysis of the sources of the Gospels, together with a study of the sayings of Jesus. We do not know Mr. Rogers' position either in or out of the ecclesiastical world, but his book is one of the many signs of the times, showing that the discussion of a problem of infinite interest is no longer confined to a small circle of professed champions. The majority of thinking men now no longer take their religious creed upon authority, but demand a reason for what they have been taught. In the work of adjusting faith to knowledge a great army of laymen as well as professional religious teachers are taking part. As far removed from the spirit of Renan, for instance, whom the author thinks spent his time playing at religion, as the east is from the west, so far is the spirit of the author. He is intensely in earnest; he is reverent, while yet severely critical. He discusses the synoptic Gospels, coming to the conclusion, which has been already reached by so many students, that Mark was the original writer, and that the two other synoptists have been more or less influenced by him. The fourth Gospel is discussed by itself. Mr. Rogers comes to the conclusion that the author of this peculiar Gospel takes facts which he has found in the older sketches of Jesus and freely uses and transforms them to suit the purpose which he has in view. He then discusses the credibility of the Gospels, and considers that much of what we seemed to know about Jesus has crumbled away. In studying the life and teachings of Jesus, in the second part of the book, the author's work is more constructive. Throughout his writing there are many passages both interesting and suggestive; and yet we feel in reading a book like this, especially when the writer is very far from being a consummate master of the sources, that, brilliant as his edifice seems, it is not a well-founded superstructure of steel and granite, but only a highly ingenious experiment with the cement and concrete of conjecture. For ourselves we recommend to the student a careful study of the originals for one's own self; for after all a book like this somewhat resembles a novel, the fiction used being in the form of criticism rather than romance. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

Sermons of Courage and Cheer.

All who have ever listened to the Rev. Dr. Brooke Herford, formerly minister of the Arlington Street Church in this city and now of London, will at once confess the appropriateness of the title he has given to this volume. He is a courageous and cheerful preacher in the best sense of these two adjectives, and he helps his hearers to think straighter by his sagacious counsels and to feel stronger and act more generously after contact with such a manly adviser. The titles of these twenty-two brief discourses are often attractive in themselves without being forced; such are "The Perseverance of Sinners" (i.e. in trying to do and be good), "The Gospel for the Unsuccessful," and "Christianity with a 'But.'" The book is full of help and comfort on the common ways of life. — American Unitarian Association. $1.25.

The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ.

At last we have it, just as it ought to come, printed on cheap paper and in paper covers, with an advertisement on the back and the brazen announcement which we are so well accustomed to see in the issues of reprinters. After a vast amount of braying the ass appears, with not so much as a fragment of the lion's skin lying round. It is true we have the preface about this great man, the author, who, after the Turko-Russian war, visited the land of India, the vale of Kashmir, and finally in Ladak in a monastic library found a copy of the writing which speaks loudest just where the four Gospels are most silent. This wonderful manuscript told of "Issa," who is none other than Jesus. It gives a voluble account of his life. Alas for poor Europe and Christendom! While the Buddhists were so rich the Westerns never heard of this life until our traveler and translator, Nicolas Notovitch, swept away the mystery surrounding the doings of Christ from the age of thirteen to twenty-nine. Of course we have a long account of the journey to Tibet and the traveler's adventures. The "Life of St. Issa" occupies the space from pages 98 to 146. How great has been the machinery erected to break this butterfly! One has only to read the author's "epitome" to hear not only the bray but to see the ears, tail, and hoof. For example, after a farrago of nonsense about Chinese history, we are told that the doctrine of Buddha "was written on parchment [sic] in the Pali language," and that the Chinese emperor "one year before Christ procured the sacred books written [sic] by Cakya-Mouni." This clumsy fraud is thoroughly un-Tibetan, un-Buddhistic; it is Frenchy in style and semi-socialistic in tendency, but it is too stupid to be amusing. — Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

The Snake Dance of the Moquis.

The fourth volume of the Journal of American Ethnology and Archæology is a handsome volume, in paper covers, finely printed at the Riverside Press, and fully illustrated with colored plates, photogravures, and woodcuts. Its subject is the exceedingly curious and interesting snake ceremonials at Walpi, in Tusayan, the province in Arizona where the Moquis have their ancient home. J. Walter Fewkes, Ph.D., the editor of the Journal, gives a very detailed account of the long ceremonial, the whole of which, both in public and in private, he witnessed. It has been often described briefly and inaccurately, but this thoroughly scientific exposition of its action and its meaning will supersede all others. It is a document of extreme value in American archæology and ethnology, and issued as it is in a comparatively inexpensive form it should be placed on the shelves of public libraries generally. Dr. Fewkes is the leading specialist in this department of study, which the late Mrs. Hemenway of Boston did so much to explore before it should utterly pass away. Dr. Fewkes' final statement is this:

> The Snake Dance is an elaborate prayer for rain, in which the reptiles are gathered from the fields, intrusted with the prayers of the people, and then given their liberty to bear these petitions to the divinities who can bring the blessing of copious rains to the parched and arid farms of the Hopi.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

On and Off the Saddle.

Dressed in cool buff linen, with three pictures which introduce us to icebergs, Rocky Mountain haunts, and a wagon well loaded with game, we have here just the book for an afternoon under the trees. Mr. Lispenard Rutgers, a man exuberant in health and sensitive to the glories of nature, personally conducts us around the lively parts of the western world. The Yellowstone Park, Alaska, the Yosemite, and Southern California are visited; the rider's glance is comprehensive and his touch suggestive as he sketches before us pictures of life of men and beasts on land and water. Then crossing the boundary which divides the Spanish-American pepper eaters from those who delight more in meat and vegetables, he takes us to the cock pit and the bull fight. We confess that we enjoy the description of bear hunting in the Rocky Mountains more than we do the picture of horses trampled on. No doubt it may be pleasant to some eyes to watch bulls goring horses and tearing their insides out and to see cocks burying their spurs in each other's flesh. Yet we are not altogether certain which is the greater survival of barbarism, the bull fighting or the description of it. It is an agreeable change to the glaciers of the Selkirks in British Columbia. The last chapter describes a trip to Cuba. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

Volume XXXIX of the Dictionary of National Biography extends from Morehead to Myles. Mr. Leslie Stephen writes on J. A. Cotter Morison; Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse on George Morland and Mulready; Mr. James Gairdner on Prof. Henry Morley; Prof. T. F. Tout on Roger Mortimer, first Earl of March, and many members of his family; Canon Venables on Bishop Thomas Morton; Mr. Sidney Lee on Edward Moxon, the publisher; Mr. Thomas Bayne on William Motherwell, the poet; Mr. G. A. Aitken on Peter Anthony Motteux; Dr. Greenhill on Prof. J. B. Mozley; the Rev. Alexander Gordon on Lodowick Muggleton; Mr. J. D. Duff on H. A. J. Munro, editor of Lucretius; Professor Bonney on Sir Roderick Murchison; Dr. Richard Garnett on John Murray "the second," the publisher; Mr. Thomas Seccombe on the latter's son, John Murray "the third;" Miss Fell Smith on Lindley Murray; and Mr. J. M. Rigg on William Murray, Earl of Mansfield, the judge.

The seventh volume in the neat collected edition of Professor Huxley's essays is Man's Place in Nature. To a reprint of this powerful and effective contribution to Darwinism, first published in 1863, have been added three later papers on ethnology. The new preface says: "To my observation human nature has not sensibly changed during the last thirty years. I doubt not that there are truths as plainly obvious and as generally denied as those contained in Man's Place in Nature now awaiting enunciation. If there is a young man of this generation who has taken as much trouble as I did to assure himself that they are truths let him come out with them. . . . 'Veritas prævalebit' — some day; and even if she does not prevail in his time he himself will be all the better and the wiser for having tried to help her. And let him recollect that such great reward is full payment for all his labor and pains." — D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

Part VIII, Section I, of the New English Dictionary on Historical Principles — Crouchmas to Czech — completes Vol. II, devoted to C ($1.00). Another section, issued later — Everybody to Ezod — is the closing part of Vol. III, the part covering D being now in press. E is edited by Henry Bradley, M.A., the good effects of whose coöperation with Dr. Murray are seen in the appearance of more frequent installments of this monumental work. Evolution and its related words are important entries here, and among the many words beginning with "ex" one notes casually the explanation of "the exception from the rule" and the comment on Longfellow's incorrect use of "excelsior" ($1.25). — Macmillan & Co.

A very fitting addition to the Golden Treasury series is the little volume of Selections from the Poems of Arthur Hugh Clough. "The Bothie of Tober-Na-Vuolich" is given entire, and various selections from "Dipsychus" and the "Amours de Voyage." To these are added the best of his earlier and later short poems. Clough's place is very high in the esteem and love of those who know what poetry is entitled to be called both thoughtful and tuneful. His winning countenance appears on the title-page. This selection should spread his reputation wider. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

The wide page, allowing three or four columns of type of good size, the excellent paper, and neat flexible binding of A Harmony of the Gospels for Historical Study, by Prof. W. A. Stevens and E. DeW. Burton, commend their work externally. The fact that it follows the revised version of 1881, that it has none of the devices of the older harmonists to bring about an agreement where none exists, and is characterized by a historical, scientific spirit are internal arguments in its favor. It is a piece of good work that deserves the examination of every student of the Gospels. — Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.50.

The Life Beyond is a little book by George H. Hepworth of New York, formerly a clergyman. He reasons from analogy concerning the sureness of immortality. Paley's celebrated argument for design, drawn from the chance finding of a watch, takes on the form that the pulleys and wires of an automaton chess-player are worked by a real man. An unfinished building is used as proof of the existence of an architect. The book is pleasantly written in the form of a discourse between the master and a pupil. — E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

The bound volume of the Century Magazine (Vol. XLVII) comprises the numbers from November, 1893, to April, 1894. It has 960 pages and 340 illustrations, nearly 100 of which are full-page engravings. The comprehensiveness and variety of a great magazine are always more marked in a bound volume than in any single issue. In music, art, and biography; in essays literary, religious, and social; in fiction, poetry, and popular science, this volume excels its predecessors, difficult as the achievement was. — The Century Co. $3.00.

The papers read at the first of the denominational congresses held at Chicago last year, that of the Jews, have been well printed in a volume called Judaism at the World's Parliament of Religions. The numerous addresses on the theology, ethics, history, political and social relations, and present condition of this venerable mother of religions form a valuable review of Judaism, well fitted to disperse bigotry and insure the sympathy of religions. — Robert Clarke & Co. $2.50.

The second volume of Mr. Henry Craik's volume of English Prose — selections and introductions — covers the sixteenth century to the Restoration, including such names as Lord Bacon, Jonson, Burton, Selden, Hobbes, Browne, Walton, Clarendon, Milton, and Taylor. The selections are well chosen, and the critical matter, by such writers as the late Professor Minto, A. W. Ward, Mr. Saintsbury, Mr. Gosse, J. H. Overton, and the editor, is very judicious. — Macmillan & Co. $1.10.

Acting and Actors: Elocution and Elocutionists, is a comely little volume, which Mr. Alfred Ayres has made up from his contributions to Werner's Magazine and the Dramatic Mirror. Many points in the actor's art are treated lightly but instructively, but the volume would have been much more of a book if Mr. Ayres had wrought his matter over instead of simply reprinting it. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

Sermons for the Church, by the Rev. C. D. Bradlee, is an attractive volume of simple, straightforward discourses on practical subjects, for the most part, addressed "to all of every church who are disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ;" no one will find in them dogmatism to offend, but he will find helpful counsels of righteousness and kindness. — George H. Ellis. $1.25.

A new volume in the Expositor's Bible, and one of the most scholarly and attractive, is Archdeacon Farrar's exposition of The Second Book of Kings. His literary skill and his command of modern scholarship unite to make his homiletic interpretation of the two Books of Kings one of the best contributions to this series. — A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50.

A Symphony of the Spirit is an admirable collection of poems and extracts from Tennyson, Lowell, Browning, and others, made by Mr. George S. Merriam with a view to comforting the bereaved. The elevation and nobility of such verse as this little book holds are far more soothing than the platitudes of most collections in this direction. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller's volume, Our Home Pets, telling "how to keep them well and happy," naturally has birds for its chief subject; but dogs, cats, and monkeys come in for a share of her attention. Her advice is based on experience and, needless to say, it is given in a very palatable manner. There are numerous excellent illustrations. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

In a slender pamphlet volume, entitled Library Classification, the very competent librarian of Amherst College, W. I. Fletcher, A.M., outlines a simple scheme for libraries of moderate size. Classification on the shelves cannot take the place of the exact catalogue, but it is an aid to the full use of a collection of books not to be neglected in its field. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

The delightful little Temple edition of Shakespeare is continued with Measure for Measure and The Comedy of Errors. One has for frontispiece the Stratford Bust and the other the Grammar School. Mr. Gollancz' selections, prefaces, and notes are as felicitous as usual. — Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Athletics for Physical Culture, by Theo. C. Knauffe, covers the full range of outdoor sports and exercises in a general way, giving sensible advice about each. It is finely illustrated from photographs, and is one of the best all-around books in the field of physical culture. —J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $2.00.

Fungi and Fungicides is a practical manual treating the fungous diseases of cultivated plants and the cures for them, by Clarence M. Weed, D. Sc. — The Orange Judd Co. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

"Religious Intolerance in the Republic" receives just condemnation in the July Forum from Mr. F. R. Coudert and Prof. J. B. McMaster, who summarizes the "Riotous Career of the Know-Nothings." Mr. Frederic Harrison's paper on "Carlyle's Place in Literature" is fair and appreciative. Mr. Roosevelt writes of "The Manly Virtues and Practical Politics." Three articles grouped under the heading of "Efforts toward Clear Aims in Education" are by Pres. G. S. Hall, Mr. Thomas Davidson, and Prof. Martha F. Crow. Hon. M. D. Harter offers a plan for "The Money that Would Rule the World," and Mr. Montgomery Schuyler writes down the story of "The Government's Failure as a Builder." Mr. R. De Cordova tells his views and experiences of "The Stage as a Career."

The New England Magazine for July is a varied and attractive number. George S. Boutwell describes "Kossuth in New England," with numerous illustrations of place and persons associated with his visit. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett lovingly sets forth "The Old Town of Berwick" in an article which contains many hints of the lifelikeness of her stories. Mr. W. H. Rideing has a short account of things "In The Country of Lorna Doone." Mr. William Clarke's exposition of "The Life of the London Working Classes" is detailed and valuable, but the general tone does not convince one of his entire trustworthiness as an observer or a guide in action. Rev. C. G. Ames' poem, "The Old-Time Yankee Farming," is a good piece of poetical realism. The editor calls attention to the valuable little book by Professor Borgeaud on Democracy in Old and New England.

In the Contemporary Review for June Lord Farrer gives one of the few severely discriminating reviews of Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution that have appeared. He concludes thus:

> If his theories are at fault — if it is not true that reason and religion are necessarily at war, or that the function of reason is essentially selfish and materialistic, whilst the function of religion is to further the progress of society; if it is false that the interests of the social organism are at variance with the interests of the men and women who compose it; if, in short, Mr. Kidd has not solved the puzzle of human existence, let us thankfully acknowledge that he has touched subjects of the deepest interest and has touched them in an interesting way; that he has called fresh attention to the influence which different religions, and especially the Christian religion, have had on the development of mankind; that he has stimulated inquiry in this fruitful field of research; that he has emphasized the value of character as compared with intellect, and the importance to character of man's relation to the Inscrutable and the Unknown; and finally, that he has given us a view of the progress and aims of modern society which, if not as complete as he supposes, contains elements which are true and important, and which are all the more valuable because his views are animated by a spirit of humanity and reconciliation.

Mr. T. M. Wilson's article on "The Gothenburg System in Norway" will furnish ammunition for its friends in this country. Mr. H. R. Haweis' paper on Maurice, Rev. C. F. Aked's on "The Race Problem in America," and Mr. Lang's on Marlborough, apropos of Lord Wolseley's recent biography, are other contributions of value and interest.

In the Fortnightly Review for June Mr. J. G. Frazer's short paper on "Prof. Robertson Smith" has the most interest on this side of the Atlantic; the other articles are predominantly English in subject or in treatment; Mr. Frazer dwells chiefly on Professor Smith as a historian of religion in general and of the Semitic religions in particular. "His writings are storehouses of original and profound observations and fruitful suggestions."

Mr. G. W. Smalley's article on "Checks on Democracy in America," in the Nineteenth Century for June, emphasizes the profound conservatism of our institutions. Mr. Pater's series of papers on "Some Great Churches of France" is devoted to Vézelay in this issue. Lord Brassey gives an account of "A Recent Run to the East."

NEWS AND NOTES.

— The twelfth annual course of Old South lectures for young people will be given at the Old South Meeting House on Wednesday afternoons at three o'clock, beginning August 1. The subject is "The Founders of New England," and the following is the list of the lectures and lecturers: "William Brewster, the Elder of Plymouth," Rev. Edward Everett Hale; "William Bradford, the Governor of Plymouth," Rev. William Elliot Griffis; "John Winthrop, the Governor of Massachusetts," Hon. Frederic T. Greenhalge; "John Harvard, and the Founding of Harvard College," Mr. William R. Thayer; "John Eliot, the Apostle to the Indians," Rev. James De Normandie; "John Cotton, the Minister of Boston," Rev. John Cotton Brooks; "Roger Williams, the Founder of Rhode Island," Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews; and "Thomas Hooker, the Founder of Connecticut," Rev. Joseph H. Twichell.

The subjects proposed for the Old South essays for the year are as follows: I, "The Relations of the Founders of New England to the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford;" II, "The Fundamental Orders of Connecticut and Their Place in the History of Written Constitutions." The competition for the Old South prizes is open to all graduates of the various Boston high schools this year and last. Circulars with full information may be obtained at the Old South Meeting House.

— The magnificent new edition of the works of Robert Louis Stevenson, announced for publication in Edinburgh in the autumn, will be called the Edinburgh edition, and will be limited to one thousand copies — one hundred for America, the latter being issued by Mr. Stevenson's American publishers, the Scribners. The edition will be printed on hand-made paper, in handsome style, by Constable, and will contain much matter not published hitherto in collected form. The set will consist of twenty volumes, which Mr. Stevenson has arranged in classified groups, so as to form more connected sequences than was possible at the time of production. The first volume will probably appear in October.

— John Fiske, who has recently completed a school history of the United States, had conferred upon him at Harvard's last Commencement the degree of LL.D.

— At the annual meeting of the subscribers to the London Library, held under the presidency of Mr. Leslie Stephen, a new and significant departure was made in the election of Mrs. J. R. Green to fill a vacancy on the committee. Other new members of the committee include Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. W. S. Lilly, and Mr. St. George Mivart.

— Mr. J. G. Cupples, the Boston publisher, has associated with himself as partner Mr. H. W. Patterson. The style of the new firm will be Cupples & Patterson. Mr. Cupples is well known to the book trade and to the buyers of literature throughout the country. The new firm will publish, sell, and import books, and should have before it a long course of prosperity.

— The first prize of $100 offered by the Dominant (Philadelphia) for the best words for a patriotic song has been awarded to Osman C. Hooper, and the second prize of $50 has been awarded to Thomas J. Duggan. The Dominant now offers a prize of $100 for the best musical setting of each poem.

— Editors of newspapers throughout England have been appealed to, through a circular signed by 105 members of the House of Commons, asking them to cease to demoralize the people by reporting sensational cases of immorality or brutality, and in other ways appealing to the sensual nature of man.

— This intelligent note is taken from Vanity Fair: "Five years ago Rudyard Kipling left India to see China, Japan, and America, after which he came to London and got married He has now made his home in Vermont, of Central America, and when he has passed seven years in the study of the people among whom he dwells we may expect to have a great work on that country, which has in it the making of several empires."

— George Moore is now revising and in part rewriting three or four of his short stories, which have already appeared in the periodical press. The new volume, according to the London Athenæum, will probably include a condensed version of A Mere Accident, which was first published as a one-volume novel. It is not often that an author thus cuts down his published work.

— Subscriptions are being received for the lofty granite monolith in the form of an Iona cross which is to be erected to the memory of Tennyson on the highest point of the western end of the Isle of Wight. As a land and sea mark visible for miles from every point this beacon cross will form a fitting memorial. The amounts contributed by subscribers will not be made public, but it is intended to send to England the names of the men and women who acknowledge by their donations the influence that Tennyson has been in their lives. Subscriptions may be sent to Miss Fay Davis, secretary, care of Mrs. James T. Fields, Manchester, Mass. The enterprise is indorsed by such names as Oliver Wendell Holmes, Charles Eliot Norton, William J. Rolfe, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Margaret Deland, Dana Estes, Henry O. Houghton, George M. Mifflin, and many more of equal prominence.

— We hear that Miss Frances Willard, who sailed for America on June 13, will publish in England and America, simultaneously, her autobiography, which she has been contributing to the Woman's Signal. The book, which is to appear in the autumn, will probably bear the name of My Happy Half Century, she being now just fifty years of age. — The Bookman.

— The idea of raising a statue to Renan at Treguier, his birthplace, has given rise to a burst of religious intolerance in the Municipal Council of the town, and a decision has been postponed.

— Ibsen confesses that he cannot write with any inspiration without a tray before him which contains a little bear in wood, a little black devil holding a wax candle, and several rabbits and cats made of copper. "This may appear to you to be ridiculous," said Ibsen, "but so it is. As to the use I make of them, that is my secret, and I shall not divulge it to you or to any one else."

